THE UTILITY of a Dictionary, containing not only a Definition and Explanation of the Terms used in the Science of the ENGLISH LAW, but also a general Summary of the Theory and Practice of the Law itself, having been so fully evinced by the success of Ten Editions of the Work on which the Volumes here presented to the Reader are founded; any observations upon that subject would be superfluous:—Something, however, is requisite to introduce the following Sheets; as due both to the Proprietors and the Editor of this General Law-Dictionary; which is offered to the attention and patronage, not only of THE PROFESSION, but of ALL who wish to obtain a knowledge of the Duties imposed upon them, and the Rights secured to them, by the Laws of their Country.

IT IS NOW more than Four Years since the Proprietors of JACOB'S Law-Dictionary (the last Edition of which was published in the year 1782) applied to the present Editor, to prepare the Work for republication. This he very cheerfully undertook; imagining at first that nothing more could be required than to employ his attention on such Statutes and Reports as the course of time had produced since that Edition: little aware that a thorough Revival of the whole had become absolutely necessary, from the numerous Improvements in our Law; which had by no means been sufficiently attended to, either in that, or even in the preceding Edition.

A CURSORY PERUSAL of Jacob's Dictionary soon convinced the Writer, that, to render the Work really useful to the Profession and the Public, in the present State of the Law, much Labour, Time, and Study must be employed; that unremitting Diligence alone could collect and digest the materials for such a Compilation, and that, strictly keeping in view JACOB'S original Plan, it would demand some Judgment so to arrange, simplify, and methodize the Information obtained, as to preserve the general Character of the Work, and yet to introduce every proper Correction and Improvement.

P R E F A C E.

TO THIS TASK then he seriously applied himself.—He first carefully examined the Text, as it stood in the Tenth Edition.—Here he found much sound Learning on the Origin and Antiquity of our Law, defaced with unskilful Interpolations: Innumerable Statutes, long repealed, detailed at large as Existing Laws,* : The other Statutes quoted throughout the Work, (by continued errors of the Press through various Editions,) incorrectly cited: Except in some few instances, a want of Method, and Poverty of Language, pervading the whole body of the Work: And the Improvements of our Law, during the last Thirty Years and more, either wholly passed over, or very superficially noticed.

HIS NEXT STEP, therefore, was to correct the Errors which appeared.—Solely to perform this was a long and tedious labour: Every Statute quoted has been examined; and it is by no means an exaggeration to say, that many thousand Errors, in this particular alone, have been detected and amended.—To erase whatever was superseded or contradicted by modern Laws or Determinations, was next requisite: And, when thus much was performed, a vast void remained, to be filled up with a Summary of the State of the Law, as at present existing.

IN MANY INSTANCES, where the Law relative to one Subject was scattered through the Book, the whole has been brought together under a single Title, consolidated, re-arranged, and enlarged; and the proper References made from Title to Title †. In some few others, it was found convenient to remove the whole of a Title, as it stood in the former Work; and to supply its place by a New Abridgment of the Law on that particular Subject ‡.—In no case, however, has any alteration been made, without mature consideration, and a sincere wish for the Improvement of the Work, and the Instruction of the Reader.

IN THE NEXT PLACE, The Editor considered himself called upon to introduce many New Titles; some on the Origin and Antiquity of our Law §; and several connected with the Commercial Concerns of the Country ||; which had for the most part been entirely omitted, or at best very slightly referred to, by JACOB or his Continuator.—These Additions, it is believed, do not make less than One Fourth Part of the present Volumes.

* Titles HIGHWAYS, TURNPIKES; and others.

† AWARD, ARBITRATION;—HOMICIDE, MURDER, MANSLAUGHTER;—EXECUTOR, ADMINISTRATOR;—ADVOWSON, PRESENTATION, USURPATION; and very many others.

‡ BANKRUPT, BILL OF EXCHANGE, HIGHWAYS, WILLS, &c.

P R E F A C E.

TO ENABLE HIMSELF to perfect the Plan which his Mind soon formed, in the order above stated, The Editor has applied to all such Publications as seemed more immediately adapted to his purpose.

THE STATUTES have been perused with peculiar care and diligence: Almost all which are material, even to the end of the Session of Parliament in 1796, are introduced; and throughout the Work, it is believed, that none are omitted to be noticed which passed before the Thirty-third year of the present Reign. The long time which the Dictionary has taken in going through the Press, has therefore, it is hoped, on the whole, operated rather to the benefit than the prejudice of All who may have occasion to consult it.

TO THE excellent Series of modern TERM-REPORTS in the Courts of Westminster-Hall, which have appeared within the last ten years:—To the various new Editions of former Reports, and other Law-Books of long-established reputation; in alluding to which, it would be injustice not to particularise The Coke upon Littleton, Peere Williams's Reports, and Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown:—Together with many other smaller Volumes well deserving notice, as including Systems of particular branches of the Law:—To all these recourse has been had; and the Information contained in them has been applied to the present purpose, with a care and attention which, the Editor trusts, have not been totally fruitless.

BUT, above all, THE COMMENTARIES of the learned Blackstone have been fully and freely applied to, and the most material parts of them adopted; sometimes abridged; but more frequently enlarged by Additions from the various sources above alluded to. The Edition last published has been used, whenever the Term of its publication allowed; and many of the new Notes there introduced have been added to the mass of modern intelligence here presented to the Reader.

WHENEVER, in consulting any of the above Authorities, the Writer of this had occasion to question or differ from the positions there laid down, he intended to state his dissent, with modesty and candour.—To Error every Author is liable—Opere in longo fas est. Many mistakes have been silently corrected in all the Books consulted on this occasion. The Editor seeks only that Indulgence which he has bestowed, with a liberality more unbounded than can well be imagined.

P R E F A C E.

SYSTEMATICAL RULES, and their Exceptions, seem in general of more consequence than a multiplied variety of Cases : Rules give the effect of Cases, without the tediousness of their detail. It has been said by a very eminent Lawyer, “ That precedents are frequently rather apt to confound ; that every Case has its own peculiar circumstances, and therefore ought to stand on its own bottom.” On this Maxim chiefly are all the Additions to the Work compiled, and the whole re-digested : The Deviations from it, where they still occur, have frequently arisen, rather from a deference to the names of former Editors, and from a desire of not making alterations which might be thought merely capricious, than from a conviction of the necessity or propriety of such a mode of Compilation.

THE PRINCIPLE therefore of this Dictionary, thus enlarged and improved, is, to convey to the Uninformed a competent general Knowledge of every subject connected with the LAW, TRADE, and GOVERNMENT, of these Kingdoms : To show the Origin, Foundation, Progress, and present State of our POLICY and JURISPRUDENCE.—Information of this nature must interest every Man of liberal Education, in whatever sphere : To Magistrates, whether superior or subordinate, it will be found particularly useful : By Lawyers it will, doubtless, be applied to, as a Digest of Learning previously obtained ; and an Index to further Inquiries on the Theory and Practice of our Law, in all its various branches.

IN ENDEAVOURING to complete an Undertaking of such length and importance, The Editor is fully conscious that many Errors and Inadvertencies must, even yet, have escaped ;—Omissions, he hopes, there are now but few ;—and for the Inconsistencies which must inevitably appear, he relies for pardon on the good sense of all who are competent to judge on a Work so multifarious and extensive.

IT WAS impossible to enter into the great variety of Subjects contained in these Volumes, without being occasionally led into observations, which apply rather to the System of Politics, and the general Theory of Government, than to the confined Question of Law : This Licence was necessarily taken by former Editors of JACOB ; and was used, to some extent, by COWEL in his Interpreter.

THE TRUE INTEREST of Nations would best be consulted by preserving the greatest Harmony between those, whom it seems to be the business and the pleasure of political (at least of party) Writers,—“ more studious to divide than to unite,”—to set at variance. GOVERNMENT has no Rights, and the PEOPLE have no Duties, inconsistent with the true welfare of each other : The reciprocal conditions of their

Friendship

P R E F A C E.

Friendship and Security may be comprised in two words—PROTECTION and OBEDIENCE. It has been the constant wish of The Editor, in compiling the following Sheets, to place in the strongest light every Argument and Decision which may tend to show, what care the Laws and Constitution of GREAT BRITAIN have progressively taken to enforce both those Principles, and to guard Britons against the fatal consequences which must attend a violation of either.

THE INDULGENCE of the Reader is yet a little longer requested, to a few words, which The Editor hopes to be excused for stating, respecting Himself.

ANXIOUS, from very early youth, to become a Member of the Profession to which he has the honour to belong, it was his misfortune to be compelled, by certain untoward circumstances, to enter into that Profession, and into Life, prematurely; without either Education or Experience, sufficient to enable him to perform the Duties imposed upon him by such a situation. He very soon perceived his deficiencies, and endeavoured to supply them by diligent study and observation. A few years brought him near the point at which he aimed: But at the moment when assistance was most wanted, he was disappointed of receiving it; through his own neglect, in omitting to apply to those who were really capable and desirous to have afforded it. He retired, for awhile, from his public practice at the Bar; and betook himself to more silent, but not less laudable, Employments. He found Friends;—where indeed he least expected them! He has since succeeded in life beyond his merits—almost beyond his hopes. His former Literary Efforts have not been thought wholly unworthy approbation; on the present he rests with somewhat more confidence, though with no small portion of fear; since his future fate and pursuits may depend on its success. On the Candour of THE PUBLIC (more particularly of THE PROFESSION) he relies; and whether he shall retain the Pen, or resume the Gown, in public or in private, it shall be his unceasing study to deserve that Encouragement, which seldom fails to await on well-meant Endeavours, and honourable Exertions.

Modern Law Dictionary;

CONTAINING

The PRESENT STATE of the LAW in THEORY and PRACTICE;

With a DEFINITION of its TERMS; and the HISTORY of its RISE and PROGRESS.

ABA

AB, From the word abbot, in the beginning of the name of any place, shows that probably it once belonged to some abbey; or that an abbey was founded there. Blount.

ABACON. A cap of state wrought up in the form of two crowns; worn by our ancient British kings. Chron. Angl. 1463: Spelm Gloss.

ABACTORS, abactores, ab abigendo.] Stealers and drivers away of cattle by herds, or in great numbers. Cowet.

ABACUS. Arithmetick: from the abacus, or table strewed with dust, on which the ancients made their characters and figures. Cowet: Du Fresnoe. Hence ABACISTA. An Arithmetician. Cowet.

ABANDUM, abandonum.] Any thing sequestered, proscribed or abandoned. Abandon, i. e. in bannum res missa; a thing banned or denounced as forfeited and lost; from whence, to abandon, desert, or forsake as lost and gone. See Title Insurance.

ABARNARE, from Sax. Abarnian.] To discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret crime. Leg. Canoni, c. 104.

ABATAMENTUM. An entry by interposition. 1 Inst. 277. See the succeeding articles.

TO ABATE, from the Fr. Abatre.] To prostrate, break down, or destroy; and in law to abate a cattle or fort is, to beat it down. Old Nat. Br. 45: Stat. Westm. 1. c. 17. Abatre maison, to ruin or cast down a house, and level it with the ground; so to abate a nuisance is to destroy, remove, or put an end to it.

To abate a writ, is to defeat or overthrow it, by showing some error or exception. Brit. c. 48.—In the statute de conjunctim scissatis, it is said the writ shall be abated; i. e. disabled and overthrown. Stat. 34 E. 1. ff. 1.—So it is said an appeal shall abate, and be defeated by reason of covin or deceit. Staundf. P. C. 148.—And the justices shall cause the said writ to be abated and quashed. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 2.

The word abate, is also used in contradistinction to disseise; for as he that puts a person out of possession of his house, land, &c. is said to disseise; so he that steps in between the former possessor, and his heir, is said to abate; he is called an abator, and this act of intrusion or interposition is termed an abatement. 1 Inst. 277 a: Kitch. 173: Old Nat. Br. 91, 115.

ABATEMENT. For its least usual meanings see the two preceding articles.

In its present most general signification it relates to writs or plaints; and means, the quashing or destroying the plaintiff's writ or plaint.

A Plea in Abatement is, a plea put in by the defendant, in which he shews cause to the court why he should not be impleaded or sued; or if impleaded, not in the manner and form he then is; therefore praying that the writ or plaint may abate; that is, that the suit of the plaintiff may for that time cease. 1 Inst. 134 b, 277: F. N. B. 115: Cowet & Gilb. H. C. P. 186: Terms de Ley 1.

On this subject shall be considered

I. The various Pleas in Abatement.

1. To the Jurisdiction of the Court.
2. To the Person of the Plaintiff.
 - a. Outlawry.
 - b. Excommunication.
 - c. Alienage.
 - d. Attaint; and other Pleas in Abatement.
3. To the Person of the Defendant.
 - a. Privilege.
 - b. Misnomer.
 - c. Addition.
4. To the Writ and Action.
5. To the Count or Declaration.
6. On Account of;
 - a. The Demise of the King.
 - b. The Marriage
 - c. The Death of the Parties.

II. The Time and Manner of pleading in Abatement; and herein of pleading in Bar or Abatement.

III. The Judgment in Abatement.

ABATEMENT I. 1.—2. c.

I. 1. The courts of Westminster have a superintendancy over all other courts, and may, if they exceed their jurisdiction, restrain them by prohibition; or, if their proceedings are erroneous, may rectify them by writs of error and false judgment. Nothing shall be intended within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, but what is expressly alleged; so that where an action on promise is brought in such inferior court, not only the promise, but the consideration of it (i. e. the whole cause of action) must be alleged to arise within that jurisdiction; such inferior courts being confined in their original creation, to causes arising within the express limits of their jurisdiction; and therefore if a debtor who has contracted a debt out of such limited jurisdiction, comes within it, yet he cannot be sued there for such debt.

There are no pleas to the jurisdiction of the courts at Westminster in transitory actions, unless the plaintiff by his declaration shews that the cause of action accrued within a county palatine, or it be between the scholars of Oxford, or Cambridge. 4 Inst. 213: 1 Sid. 103.

There is a difference between a franchise to demand consuance, and a franchise ubi breve domini regis non currit. For in the first case the tenant or defendant shall not plead it, but the lord of the franchise must demand consuance; but in the other case the defendant must plead it to the writ. 4 Inst. 224. See Titles, Franchise, Consuance, County Palatine.

Where a franchise, either by letters patent or prescription, hath a privilege of holding pleas within their jurisdiction, if the courts at Westminster intrench on their privileges, they must demand consuance; that is, desire that the cause may be determined before them: for the defendant cannot plead it to the jurisdiction. And the reason is, because when a defendant is arrested by the king's writ, within a jurisdiction where the king's writ doth not run, he is not legally conveyed, and therefore he may plead it to the jurisdiction; but the creating a new franchise does not hinder the king's writ from running there as before, but only grants jurisdiction to the lord of the liberty. Bacon's Abr. tit. Courts. (D. 3.)

If the court has not a general jurisdiction of the subject, the defendant must plead to the jurisdiction, for he cannot take advantage of it on the general issue. And in every plea to the jurisdiction another jurisdiction must be stated. Corp. 172.

The pleas to the jurisdiction, are either that the cause of action, or the person of the party, is not the object of the jurisdiction of the court; of the first sort are pleas that the land is held in Ancient demesne, or that the cause of action arose in the County Palatine, or within the Cinque Ports, or other inferior courts, having peculiar local jurisdiction. Of the latter sort is the plea of Privilege; but which is generally considered rather as a plea to the person of the defendant. See this Dictionary under those titles; and post, Division 3. a. of the present head.

2. a. Outlawry may be pleaded in abatement, because the plaintiff having refused to appear to the process of the law, thereby loses its protection; but this is only a disability till the outlawry is reversed, or till he has obtained a charter of pardon. 1 Inst. 128: Lit. § 197: Dy. 23, 222: Off. 49: Br. Nonability, 25.

This disability is only pleadable when the plaintiff sues in his own right; for if he sues in alter droit as executor or administrator, or as mayor with his commonalty, outlawry shall not disable him; because the person or body whom he represents has the privilege of the law. When the plaintiff brings a writ of error to reverse an outlawry, the outlawry in that suit or in any other shall not disable him. The outlawry itself must not be an objection, for that would be exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio; and if a man were outlawed at several men's suits, and one should be a bar to another, he could never reverse any of them. 1 Inst. 128: Doct. Plac. 396, 7.

When outlawry is pleaded in abatement, the plaintiff shall not reply that the outlawry is erroneous, for it is good till reversed. 1 Lutw. 36.

As to the time and manner of pleading outlawry, see post, under Division II. of this title Abatement.

Outlawry in a county palatine cannot be pleaded in any of the courts of Westminster, for the plaintiff is only ousted of his law within that jurisdiction. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 200: Fitz. Coron. 233. It has been suggested, but surely without reason, that outlawry, in the county palatine of Lancaster, may be pleaded in the courts of Westminster; because that county was erected by act of parliament in the time of E. 3; whereas those of Cheshire and Durham are by prescription. 12 E. 4. 16: Doct. Plac. 396.

b. A person excommunicated is disabled to do any judicial act; as to prosecute any action at law; (tho' he may be sued;) be a witness, &c.

Excommunication is a good plea even to an executor or administrator, tho' they sue in alter droit; for an excommunicated person is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses; also it is one of the effects of excommunication, that he cannot be a prosecutor or attorney for any other person, and therefore cannot represent the deceased. 1 Inst. 134: 43 E. 3. 13: Thel. 11.

But in an action brought by officers with their corporation, the defendant shall not plead excommunication in the officers; because a corporation cannot be excommunicated as such; and they sue and answer by attorney. Thel. 11: 30 E. 3. 4: 1 Inst. 134: 4 Inst. 340.

Excommunication is no plea in a qui tam action; the statute giving the informer ability to sue. 12 Co. 61.

When excommunication is pleaded in the plaintiff, he shall not reply that he has appealed from the sentence; for it is in force until repealed, and whilst it is in force he cannot appear in any of the courts of justice; but he may reply that he is absolved, for then his disability is taken away. Bro. Excom. 3: 3 Bulst. 72: 20 II 6. 25: Roll. 226.

When prohibition is brought against a bishop and he pleads excommunication against the plaintiff, and in the excommunication there is no cause thereof shewn, this is not a good plea; for in such case it will be intended, that the excommunication was for endeavouring to hinder the bishop's proceeding, by application to the temporal court; and if such excommunication were allowed, it would destroy all prohibitions. Thel. 10, 11: 28 E. 3. 27: 8 Co. 68.

c. Alienage is a plea in abatement, now discouraged and but seldom used; the following however appears to be still law on the subject.

It may be pleaded in abatement, in an action real, personal or mixed that the demandant or plaintiff is an alien, alien, if he be an alien enemy; and in an action real or mixed, that he is an alien, though he be in amity. But in an action personal it is no plea that he is an alien if he be in amity. 1 Inst. 129 b: Aff. Ent. 11: 9 E. 4. 7: 12lv. 198: 1 Bull. 154: Bro. tit. Denizen. But see 1 Ld. Raym. 282.

Where the defendant pleads that the plaintiff is an alien, in abatement of the writ, it is triable where the writ is brought, and the replication must conclude to the country; but otherwise, it is said, where it is pleaded in bar, that the plaintiff is an alien, the replication must conclude with an averment. Salk. 2: West. 5: Amb. 394.

Where the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was an alien, born at Rouen in the kingdom of France, within the ligeance of the king of France; the plaintiff replied that he was an alien friend, born at Hamburg, within the ligeance of the Emperor, and traversed that he was born at Rouen; Holt inclined that it was an ill traverse and offered an ill issue. Comb. 212. See title Aliens.

d. Attain; It may be pleaded in abatement, that the plaintiff is attainted of treason or felony; or attainted in a præmunire; or that he hath abjured the realm. 1 Inst. 128 a, 129 b, 130 a: Noy. 1: Sbo. 155.

Papish Recusancy, can no longer be considered as pleadable since the stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32. See tit. Papist.

Coverture; It is also pleadable in abatement to the person of the plaintiff that she is a fine covert. 1 Inst. 132 b. and that she is the wife of the defendant. 1 Bro. Ent. 63. And by the defendant that she is herself a fine covert. Lutw. 23: Barnes 334. See tit. Baron and Feme, and post. 6, b.

Joint Actions; Of pleas in abatement for want of proper parties. See Com. Dig. tit. Abatement (E. 8.) (F. 4.) See also tit. Action, Joinder, &c.

A defendant may plead in abatement to the person of the plaintiff, that there never was any such person in reum naturâ. See Com. Dig. tit. Abatement (E. 16.)

3. a. The officers of each court enjoy the privilege of being sued only in those courts to which they respectively belong; because of the duty they are under of attending those courts, and lest their clients' causes should suffer if they were drawn to answer to actions in other courts. 2 Mod. 297: Vaugh. 155: 2 H. 7. 2: 2 Ro. Ab. 272: 1 Lutw. 44, 639. So a baron of the Cinque Ports, is to be impleaded within that jurisdiction. See Com. Dig. tit. Abatement. (D. 3.) and this Dict. tit. Cinque Ports.

But this is to be understood when the plaintiff can have the same remedy against the officer in his own court, as in that where he sues him; for if money be attached in an attorney's hands by foreign attachment in the sheriff's court in London, the attorney shall not have his privilege; because in this case the plaintiff would be remediless. 1 Saund. 67, 8.

So if a writ of entry, or other real action be brought against an attorney of the king's bench, he cannot plead his privilege; for the king's bench hath not cognizance of real actions. 1 Saund. 67.

So if an attorney of the Common Pleas be sued in a criminal appeal, he shall not have his privilege; for his own court hath not cognizance of this action. 38 H. 6. 29 b: 9 E. 4. 35: Cro. Car. 585: 1 Leon. 189: 2 Leon. 156.

This privilege, which the courts indulge their officers with, is restrained to such suits only as they bring in their own right; for if they sue or are sued as executors or administrators, they then represent common persons and are entitled to no privilege. H. b. 177.

So if an officer of one court sue an officer of another court, the defendant shall not plead his privilege; for the attendance of the plaintiff is as necessary in his court as that of the defendant in his; and therefore the cause is legally attached in the court where the plaintiff is an officer. 2 Mod. 298: 2 Lev. 129: 2 Ro. Ab. 275, pl. 4: Moor. 556.

So if a privileged person brings a joint action, or if an action be brought against him and others, he shall not have his privilege; but if the action can be severed without doing any injury, the officer shall have his privilege. Dy. 377: Godb. 10: 2 Ro. Ab. 275: 2 Lev. 129: 1 Vent. 298, 9.

An officer shall not have his privilege against the king. Bro. Superfed. 1: 2 Ro. Ab. 274. But in a qui tam action, at the suit of an informer, he shall have his privilege. Lil. Reg. 7: 3 Lev. 398: Lutw. 193.

If a person who hath the privilege of being sued in another court, be in actual custody of the marshal of K. B. he cannot plead his privilege; but otherwise where he is bailed, and so only legally supposed in custody. 1 Salk. 1: Comb. 390.

The court of K. B. will take notice of the privilege of their own officers; as where a filazer of the king's bench was arrested by writ, he was discharged on common bail; being an immediate officer of the court where his attendance was absolutely necessary. Salk. 544. But where an attorney of the common pleas was sued by bill in the court of K. B. on motion for his being discharged the court denied it and put him to plead his privilege. 1 Mod. Ent. 26. See 1 Wils. 306: 2 Black. Rep. 1085.

After a general imparlance an officer cannot plead his privilege, because by imparling he affirms the jurisdiction of the court, but after a special imparlance he may plead his privilege. Bro. Prio. 25: 22 H. 6. 6, 22, 71: 1 Ro. Rep. 294: 1 Sid. 29: 2 Ro. Ab. 273, 9: Hardr. 365: 1 Lutw. 46: 1 Salk. 1. And now the common practice is to use a special imparlance. See further this Dict. tit. Privilege. Indeed no plea in abatement is good after a general imparlance. 4 Term Rep. 227.

b. Misnomer, is the using one name for another, the misnaming either of the parties. This may be pleaded in abatement by the defendant, whether the misnomer is in his own name, or in that of the plaintiff; and this in christian or surname, name of dignity, name of office or addition. See post. and Com. Dig. tit. Abatement. (E. 18.) (F. 17.)

But though a defendant may by pleading in abatement take advantage of a misnomer, yet in such plea he must set forth his right name, so as to give the plaintiff a better writ. Finch. 363: 9 H. 5, 1.—which is the intent of all pleas in abatement. 4 Term Rep. 227.

Where a defendant comes in gratis, or pleads by the name alledged by the plaintiff, he is elopped to allege any thing against it. Str. 410. Where one is misnamed in a bond, the writ should be in the right name, and the count show that defendant, by such a name made the bond. To a plea of misnomer the plaintiff may reply, that defendant was known by the name in the writ. 1 Salk. 6, 7.

One defendant cannot plead misnomer of his companion, for the other defendant may admit himself to be the person person in the writ. 1 Lutw. 36. The defendant, though his name be mistaken, is not obliged to take advantage of it; and therefore if he be impleaded by a wrong name, and afterwards impleaded by his right name, he may plead in bar the former judgment, and aver that he is the same person. Gill. H. C. P. 218.

Where an indictment for a capital crime is abated for misnomer of the defendant, the court will not dismit him, but cause him to be indicted de novo by his true name. 2 Hawke. P. C. 523. See further this Dist. title Misnomer.

c. Addition, is a title given to a man besides his christian and surname, setting forth his estate, degree, trade, &c. Of estate, as yeoman, gentleman, esquire, &c. Of degree as knight, earl, marquis, duke, &c. Of trade as merchant, clothier, carpenter, &c. There are likewise additions of place of residence as London, York, Bristol, &c. If one be both a duke and earl, &c. he shall have the addition of the most worthy (i. e. superior) dignity. 2 Inst. 669. But the title of duke, marquis, earl, &c. are not properly additions but names of dignity. Terms de Ley 20. The title of knight or baronet is part of the party's name [as is also clarencieux or king at arms, &c.] and ought to be exactly used; but the titles of esquire, gentleman, yeoman, &c. being no part of the names are merely additions. 1 Lil. 34. An earl of Ireland is not an addition of honour here in England, but such person must be called by his christian and surname with the addition of esquire only; so sons of English noblemen, though they have titles given them by courtesy in respect of their families, if they are sued, must be named by their christian and surnames, with the addition of esquire; as, A. B. Esq. commonly called Lord A. 1 Inst. 16 b: 2 Inst. 596, 666.

By the common law, if a man that had no name of dignity was named by his christian and surname in all writs it was sufficient. If he had an inferior name of dignity, as knight, &c. he ought to be named by his christian and surname, with the name of dignity; but a duke, &c. might be sued by his christian name only, and name of dignity, which stands for his surname. 2 Inst. 663, 6. By stat. 1 H. 5. c. 5, it is enacted that in suits or actions where process of outlawry lies, (See 1 Salk. 5,) additions are to be made to the name of the defendant to shew his estate, mystery, and place of dwelling; and that writs not having such additions shall be abated, if the defendant take exception thereto, but not by the court ex officio. See Gro. Jac. 610: 1 Ro. Rep. 780. If a city be a county of itself, wherein are several parishes, addition thereof, as of London is sufficient. But addition of a parish not in a city must mention the county, or it will not be good. 1 Danv. 237.

The name of earl if omitted abates the writ; Dav. Rep. 60 a; and it shall not be amended, Hob. 129: 1 Vent. 154. But if a person is created an earl pending the action, bill, or suit, it shall not abate. See stat. 1 E. 6. c. 7. § 3. But there must be an entry on the roll stating that after the last continuance, ff. on such a day and year, the king by his letters patent created, &c. setting them forth with a profect in calid, &c. which the said defendant doth not deny, &c. 1 Mod. Ent. 31, 32.

If there are two persons father and son, with the same name and addition, in an action brought against the son, he ought to be distinguished by the appellation of the younger, added to his other description, or the writ may be abated; but in an action against the father he need not be distinguished by the appellation of the elder. See 2 Hawke. P. C. 187.

On the whole it is proper to observe as to misnomers and want of addition, that the courts of Westminster will not abate a writ for a trifling mistake; and will in all cases amend, if possible, see title Amendment.

4. The writ being the foundation of the subsequent proceedings, great certainty and exactness is requisite, to the end that no person be arrested or attached by his goods, unless there appear sufficient grounds to warrant such proceedings; so that if the writ vary materially from that in the register, or be defective in substance, the party may take advantage of it. See 5 Co. 12: 9 H. 7. 16: 10 E. 3. 1: Hob. 1, 51, 52, 80: Cartb. 172. But where the writ shall not abate for variance from the register, so that it be equivalent, see Hob. 1, 51, 52.

Where a demand is of two things, and it appears the plaintiff hath action only for one, the writ may not be abated in the whole, but shall stand for that which is good; but if it appear that tho' the plaintiff cannot have this writ which he hath brought for part, he may have another, the writ shall abate in the whole. 11 Reg. 45: 1 Saund. 285.

In case administration be granted, after the action brought, and this appears, the plaintiff's writ shall abate. Hob. 245.

It is a good plea in abatement that another action is depending for the same thing; for whenever it appears on record, that the plaintiff has sued out two writs against the same defendant, for the same thing, the second writ shall abate; and it is not necessary that both should be pending at the time of the defendant's pleading in abatement; for if there was a writ in being at the time of suing out the second, it is plain the second was vexatious and ill, ab initio. But it must appear plainly to be for the same thing; for an assize of lands in one county shall not abate an assize in another county, for these cannot be the same lands. 4 H. 6. 24: 9 H. 6. 12: 5 Co. 61: Doe. Pl. 10.

In general writs, as trespass, assize, covenant, where the special matter is not alledged, and the plaintiff is non-suited before he counts, and the second writ is sued pending the other, yet the former shall not be pleaded in abatement; because it doth not appear to the court that it was for the same thing; for the first writ being general, the plaintiff might have declared for a distinct thing from what he demanded by the second writ; but when the first is a special writ, and sets forth the particular demand, as in a precipe quod reddat, &c. there the court can readily see that it is for the same thing; and therefore though the plaintiff be non-suited before he counts, yet the writ shall abate the second writ, it being apparently brought for the same thing. 5 Co. 61: Doe. Pl. 11, 12. In an action of debt, &c. another action depending in the courts of Westminster for the same matter is a good plea in abatement; but a plea of an action in an inferior court is not good, unless judgment be given. 5 Co. 86: and see 5 Co. 62.

If a second writ be brought tested the same day the former is abated, it shall be deemed to be sued out after the abatement of the first. Allen 34.

If an action pending in the same court, be pleaded to a second action brought for the same thing, the plaintiff may may pray that the record may be inspected by the court, or demand oyer of it, which if not given him in convenient time he may sign his judgment. Dy. 227: Carth. 452, 517.

ABATEMENT I. 5.—6. c.

In action of debt on a judgment, defendant cannot plead a writ of error brought and pending either in bar or abatement; but the court usually stays proceedings on terms till the error is decided. 1 Bac. Abr. 14.

5. After the party suing has declared, the party impleaded may demand oyer of the writ; and then if there be any fault or insufficiency in the count for a cause apparent in itself, or if there be a variance between the count and the writ, or between the writ and a record, specialty, &c. mentioned in the count, the party impleaded ought to shew it by his pleading. Theb. lib. 10. c. 1. § 5: Fitz. Count. 27.

Defendant may plead in abatement of a declaration where the action is by original; but if it be by bill he must plead in abatement of the bill only. 5 Mod. 144. A little variance between the declaration and the bond pleaded will not vitiate the declaration; but uncertainty will abate it. Plowd. 84. The variance of the declaration from the obligation, or other deed on which it is grounded, will sometimes abate the action. Hob. 18, 116: Moor. 645. And if a declaration assign waste in a town not mentioned in the original writ, the writ of waste shall abate. Hob. 48.

Likewise where the declaration is otherwise defective, in not pursuing the writ, or not setting forth the cause of action with that certainty which the law requires, or laying the offence in a different county from that in which the writ is brought. 1 New Abr. 6.

6. a. As to the demise of the king; at common law, all suits depending in the king's courts were discontinued by the death of the king; so that the plaintiffs were obliged to commence new actions, or to have re-summons or attachment on the former process, to bring the defendant in; but to prevent the inconvenience, expence and delay which this occasioned, the stat. 1 E. 6. c. 7, was made.

Proceedings on an information, in nature of a quo warranto, are not abated by the demise of the crown. 2 Stra. 782. Where the king brings a writ of error in quare impedit, it abates by his death. 2 Stra. 543.

b. With respect to the marriage of the parties; coverture is a good plea in abatement, which may be either before the writ sued, or pending the writ. By the first the writ is abated de facto, but the second only proves the writ abatable; both are to be pleaded, with this difference, that coverture, pending the writ, must be pleaded, after the last continuance; whereas coverture before the writ brought, may be pleaded at any time, because the writ is de facto abated. Dougl. Pl. 3: 1 Leon. 108, 109: Vide 2 Ld. Raym. 1525: Comb. 449: Litt. 1639.

If a writ be brought by A. and B. as baron and feme, whereas they were not married until the suit depended, the defendant may plead this in abatement; for though they cannot have a writ in any other form, yet the writ shall abate, because it was false when sued out. Fitz. Brief. 476. If a writ be brought against a feme covert as sole, she may plead her coverture; but if she neglects to do it, and there is a recovery against her as a feme sole, the husband may avoid it by writ of error, and may come in at any time and plead it. Latch. 24: Stile 254, 280: 2 Roll. Rep. 53: If an action be brought in an inferior court against a feme sole, and pending the suit she intermarries, and afterwards removes the cause by habeas corpus; and the plaintiff declares against her as a feme sole, she may plead coverture at the time of suing the habeas corpus; because the proceedings here are de novo; and the court takes no notice of what was precedent to the habeas corpus; but upon motion on the return of the habeas corpus, the court will grant a procedendo. For though this be a writ of right, yet where it is to abate a rightful suit, the court may refuse it; and the plaintiff had bail below to this suit, which by this contrivance he might be ousted of, and possibly by the same means of the debt. 1 Salk. 8.

In ejectment against baron and feme, after verdict for the plaintiff, baron dies between the day of Nisi prius and the day in Bank; adjudged that the writ should stand good against the feme, because it is in nature of a trespass, and the feme is charged for her own act; and therefore the action survives against her. So if the wife had died, the baron should have judgment entered against him. Cro. Jac. 356: Cro. Car. 509: 1 Roll. Rep. 14: Moor 469.

If a feme sole plaintiff, after verdict, and before the day in Bank, takes husband, she shall have judgment, and the defendant cannot plead this coverture, for he has no day to plead it at. Cro. Car. 232: 1 Bulst. 5.

If an original be filed against a feme sole, and before the return she marries, you may declare against her without taking notice of her husband, for her intermarriage is no abatement of the writ in fact, but only makes it abatable. Comb. 449: 1 Roll. Rep. 53.

'Tis now in general held, that if a feme sole commences an action, and pending the same marries, the suit is abated; but that it is otherwise with respect to a feme sole defendant, as she shall not take advantage of her own act. See further, title Baron and Feme.

c. The general rule is, that whenever the death of any party happens pending the writ, and yet the plaintiff is in the same condition as if such party were living, there such death makes no alteration or abatement of the writ. 1 New Abr. 7.

The death of a plaintiff did generally at common law abate the writ before judgment, till the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11; which declares that neither the death of plaintiff or defendant after interlocutory judgment shall abate it, if the action might be originally prosecuted by and against the executors or administrators of the parties: and if there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more die, the writ or action shall not abate, if the cause of action survives to the surviving plaintiff, or against the surviving defendant, but such death being suggested on record the action shall proceed. For the cases previous to this statute, see Cro. Eliz. 652: 1 Inst. 139: Dr. 279: Hard. 151, 164: Stile 299: 3 Mod. 249: Cro. Car. 426: 1 Jun. 367: 1 Rel. Abr. 756: 1 Show. Rep. 186: 1 Vent. 34: 3 Mod. 249.

But in a writ of error, if there be several plaintiffs, and one dies, the writ shall abate, because the writ of error is to set persons in statu quo, before the erroneous judgment given below; and they that are plaintiffs in error were distinct sufferers in the judgment, since there might be different executions issued thereupon, and different representatives were by such judgment affected; and by consequence the survivor cannot prosecute the writ of error for the whole, lest by a collusive persuasion, or by negligence or design he should hurt the representative of the deceased. Bridg. 78: Yelv. 208: 10 Co. 1551: 1 Vent.

ABATEMENT II.

34: 1 Sid. 419. cont. But if any of the defendants in error die, yet all things shall proceed, because the benefit of such judgment goes to the survivor, and he only is to defend it. Sid. 419: Yelv. 208: 1 L. Raym. 439. If there be several persons named as plaintiffs in the writ, and one of them was dead at the time of purchasing the writ, this may be pleaded in abatement; because it falsifies the writ; and because the right was in the survivors, at the time of suing the writ, and the writ not according to the case. 20 Hen. 6. 30: 18 E. 4. 1: 2 H. 7. 16: 1 Brownl. 3, 4: Clift. Ent. 6: Rast. Ent. 126.

By stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8, (made perpetual by 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. § 5,) it is enacted, that the death of either of the parties between verdict and judgment, shall not be allowed for error, so as judgment be entered within two terms after such verdict. See 1 Salk. 8: 2 Ld. Raym. 1415: Sid. 385.—See tit. Amendment.

II. A plea in abatement must be put in within four days after the return of the writ, because the person coming in by the process of the court ought not to have time to delay the plaintiff. Lutw. 1181: 2 Stra. 1192.

But if a declaration be delivered against one in custody, he has the whole term to plead in abatement. Salk. 515.

If the declaration be delivered in the vacation, or so late in term, that defendant is not bound to plead to it that term, he may plead in abatement, within the first four days of next term.

As pleas in abatement enter not into the merits of the cause, but are dilatory, the law has laid the following restrictions on them. First, by the statute of 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. for amendment of the law, no dilatory plea is to be received unless on oath, and probable cause shewn to the court. Secondly, no plea in abatement shall be received after respondeas osten, for then they would be pleaded in infinitum. 2 Saund. 41. Thirdly, they are to be pleaded before imparlance. See Yelv. 112: 1 Lutw. 46, 178: 2 Lutw. 1117: Doct. Pl. 224: 4 Term Rep. 227. 520: Except where antient demesne is pleaded; for this may be done after imparlance, because the lord might reverse the judgment by writ of disceit, and it goes in bar of the action itself. For this see Dyer in marg. 210: Stile 30: Latch. 83: 5 Co. 105: 9 Co. 31. Han. Ent. 103.

A plea in abatement must be signed by counsel, and filed with the clerk of the papers; and without an affidavit annexed to it, judgment may be signed. Impey's Instru. Cler. K B.

With respect to pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, it is to be observed that the defendant must plead in propria persona; for he cannot plead by attorney without leave of the court first had, which leave acknowledges the jurisdiction; for the attorney is an officer of the court; and if he put in a plea by an officer of the court, that plea must be supposed to be put in by leave of the court. 1 New Abr. 2.

The defendant must make but half defence, for if he makes the full defence quando & ubi curia consideraverit, &c. he submits to the jurisdiction of the court. Lutw. 9: 1 Sborv. Rep. 386.

If a plea is pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court, it ought to conclude with a prayer of judgment in this manner, viz. The said defendant prays judgment, whether the court will take any further cognizance of the said plea. 1 Mod. Ent. 34.

Pleas in disability of the plaintiff, may not be pleaded after a general imparlance: 1 Lutw. 19. In pleading outlawry in disability in another court, the ancient way was to have the record of the outlawry itself sub pede sigilli by certiorari and mittimus; (See Doct. Pl. 393: Stam. 103: Fitz. Coron. 233;) but this being very expensive, it is now sufficient to plead the capias uslagatum under the seal of the court from whence it issues; for the issuing of execution could not be without the judgment; and therefore such execution is a proof to the court that there is such a judgment, which is a proof that the defendant's plea of matter of record is proved by a matter of record; and consequently appears to the court not to be merely dilatory; and therefore on shewing such execution, if the plaintiff will plead nul tiel record, the court will give the defendant a day to bring it in. Co. Lit. 128: Doct. Plac. See tit. Outlawry.

Outlawry may be pleaded in bar, after it is pleaded in abatement, because the thing is forfeited, and the plaintiff has no right to recover. 11 H. 7. 11: 2 Lutw. 1604.

Outlawry may be always pleaded in abatement, but not in bar, unless the cause of action be forfeited. Co. Lit. 128. b: Doct. Pl. 395.

In personal actions, where the damages are uncertain, outlawry cannot be pleaded in bar; but in actions on the case, where the debt to avoid the law wager, is turned into damages, there outlawry may be pleaded in bar, for it was vested in the king, by the forfeiture, as a debt certain, and due to the outlaw; and the turning it into damages, whereby it becomes uncertain, shall not divest the king of what he was once lawfully possessed of. 2 Lutw. 1604: 3 Lev. 29: 2 Vent. 282: 3 Leon. 197, 205: Cro. Eliz. 204: Owen 22.

Where excommunication is pleaded, it is not sufficient to shew the writ de excommunicato capiendo under the seal of the court; for the writ is no evidence of the continuance of the excommunication, since he may be absolved by the bishop, and that will not appear in the king's court, because such absolution is not returned into the king's court from whence the significavit is sent.

Alienage may be pleaded either in bar or abatement: In the latter case to an alien in league; in the former to an alien enemy. 1 Inst. 129 b. See ante l. 2. c.

If a plea in abatement be pleaded to the person of the plaintiff, there it must conclude, if he ought to be compelled to answer. 1 Mod. Ent. 34.

In all pleas of abatement which relate to the person, there is no necessity of laying a venue, for all such pleas are to be tried where the action is laid. 1 Bac. Abr. 15.

If it be pleaded to the writ, then the plea concludes with the prayer of judgment of the writ, and that the writ may be quashed. When it is to the action of the writ, there he should shew that the party ought not to have that writ, but by the matter of his plea should intimate to him how he should have a better. Latch. 178. Respondeo non debet is a proper beginning to a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but a plea of ne unques executor, ought to begin with petit judic' de billa 5 Mod. 132, 133. 146: 1 Saund. 283: 2 Saund. 97. 189, 190. 339: Lutw. 44: Sborv. 4.—In a replication to a plea in abatement where matter of fact is pleaded, the plaintiff must pray his damages; but where matter of law is pleaded, the plaintiff must only pray that his writ may be maintained. 1 Ld. Raym. 339. 594: 2 Ld. Raym. 1022.—If one pleads matter of abatement, and concludes in bar, Et petit judicium si actionem actionem habere debet, though he begins in abatement, and the matter be also in abatement, yet the conclusion being in bar, makes it a bar; and the reason is, because you admit the writ by concluding specially against the action. 18 H. 6. 27: 32 H. 6. 17: 36 H. 6. 18: 22 H. 6. 536: 1 Show. 4. 2 Ld. Raym. 1018.—If a man pleads matter in bar, and concludes in abatement, it shall be taken for a plea in bar, from the nature and reason of the thing; for the plaintiff can have no writ if he has not a cause of action, and therefore the court will take the plea to be in bar. 37 H. 6. 24: 36 H. 6. 24: 2 Mod. 6.

The nature of a plea in abatement is to intitle the plaintiff to a better writ; See 4 Term Rep. 227; and it hath been expressly resolved, that where the plea is in abatement, and it is of necessity that the defendant must disclose matter of bar, he shall have his election to take it either by way of bar or abatement. 2 Roll. Rep. 64. Sal-kill v. Shilton. In short, whatever destroys the plaintiff's action, and disables him for ever from recovering, may be pleaded in bar. But the defendant is not always obliged to plead in bar, but may plead in abatement, as in replevin for goods, the defendant may plead property in himself, or in a stranger, either in bar or in abatement, and if the plaintiff cannot prove property in himself, he fails of his action for ever; and it is of no avail to him who has the property if he has it not. 1 Vent. 249. 2 Lev. 92: 1 Salk. 5. 94: Carth. 243.

Where matter of bar may be pleaded in abatement, vide 2 Ld. Raym. 1207, 1208.

If a defendant together with a plea in abatement plead also a plea in bar, or the general issue, he thereby waves the plea in abatement; and the plea in bar or general issue only shall be tried. 2 Hawk. P. C. 277, and the authorities there cited.

III. If issue be taken upon a plea to the writ, judgment against the defendant is peremptory; but if there be a demurrer, the judgment is then, only that the plaintiff answer over. Yelv. 12: Allen 66.

Whatever matters are pleaded in abatement of an appeal or indictment of felony, and found against the defendant, yet he may afterwards plead over to the felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. 277. But in criminal cases, not capital, on demurrer in abatement adjudged against the party, the court will give final judgment, and not respondeas ouster. Ibid. 471.

In appeals of mayhem and all civil actions (except assizes of mort d'ancestor, novel disseisin, nuisance and juris utrum) if a plea in abatement triable by the county be found against the defendant, he shall not be suffered afterwards to plead any new matter, but final judgment shall be given against him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 277; and see the authorities there cited.

Upon a judgment in waste for the damages recovered, the defendant demurs partly in abatement, and partly in bar, the court shall give judgment in chief. Show. 255. In debt, if the defendant pleads in abatement to the writ, to which the plaintiff imparls, and at the day given, the defendant makes default, judgment is final upon the default, though the plea was only in abatement. 10 E. 4. 7: Mod. Cases 5. The judgment for the defendant, on a plea in abatement, is quod breve, or narratio cassetur; if issue be joined on a plea in abatement, and it be found for the plaintiff, it shall be peremptory against the defendant, and the judgment shall be quod recuperet, because the defendant chusing to put the whole weight of his cause upon this issue, when he might have had a plea in chief, is an admittance that he had no other defence, Yelv. 112: 2 Show. 42: Str. 532. and in this case the jury who try that issue shall assess the damages.

If there be two defendants and they plead two several pleas in abatement, and there be issue to one and demurrer to the other, if the issue be found for the defendant the court will not proceed on the demurrer; and se vice versa, for either way the writ is abated, and the other plea becomes useless. Hob. 250: 1 Bac. Abr. 15.

ABATOR, See Abate.

ABATUDA. Any thing diminished.—Moneta abatuda, is money clipped or diminished in value. Cruel: Du Firsiue.

ABBACY, abbatia.] The government of a religious house, and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot; as bishoprick from bishop.

ABBAT, or Abbot; abbas, Lat.—abbé, Fr.—abbud, Sax. by some derived from the Syriac abba, pater.] A spiritual lord or governor, having the rule of a religious house. Of these abbots here in England some were elective, some presentative; and some were mitred, and some were not; such as were mitred had episcopal authority within their limits, being exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan; but the other sort of abbots were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. The mitred abbots were lords of parliament, and called abbots sovereign, and abbots general, to distinguish them from the other abbots. And as there were abbots, so there were also lords priors, who had exempt jurisdiction, and were likewise lords of parliament. Some reckon twenty-six of these lords abbots and priors that sat in parliament. Sir Edw. Coke says, there were twenty-seven parliamentary abbots and two priors. 1 Inst. 97. In the parliament 20 R. 2, there were but twenty-five; but anno 4 Ed. 3, in the summons to the parliament at Winton more are named. And in Monasticon Anglicanum there is also mention of more, the names of which were as follow: abbots of St. Austin Canterbury, Ramsay, Peterborough, Croyland, Evesham, St. Bennet de Hildes, Thornby, Colchester, Leicester, Winchcomb, Westminster, Cirencester, St. Albans, St. Mary York, Shrewsbury, Selby, St. Peter's Gloucester, Malmesbury, Waltham, Thorney, St. Edmunds, Beaulieu, Abingdon, Hyde, Reading, Glastonbury and Osney.—And priors of Spalding, St. John's of Jerusalem, and Lewes.—To which were afterwards added the abbots of St. Austin's Bristol, and of Bardeny, and the priory de Sempringham. See also Spelman's Glossary. These abbots and priories were founded by our ancient kings and great men, from the year 662 to 1133. An abbot with the monks of the same house were called the convent, and made a corporation. Terms de Ley 4.—By stat. 27 H. 8. c. 28, all abbots, monasteries, priories, &c. not above the value of 200l. per ann. were given to the king, who sold the lands at low rates to the gentry. Anno 29 H. 8, the rest of the abbots, &c. made voluntary surrenders of their houses to obtain favour of the king; and anno 31 H. 8, a bill was brought into the house to confirm those surrenders; which passing, completed the dissolution, except the hospitals and colleges, which were not dissolved, the first till the 33d, and the last till the 37th of H. 8; when commissioners were appointed to enter and seize the said lands, &c.

TO ABDICATE, abdicare.] To renounce or refuse any thing. Terms de Ley 5.

ABDICATION, abdicatio.] In general, is where a magistrate or person in office, renounces and gives up the same, before the term of service is expired. And this word is frequently confounded with resignation, but differs from it, in that abdication is done purely and simply; whereas resignation is in favour of some other person. Chamb. Dict. 'Tis said to be a renunciation, quitting and relinquishing, so as to have nothing further to do with a thing; or the doing of such actions as are inconsistent with the holding of it. On king James II's leaving the kingdom, and abdicating the government, the Lords would have had the word desertion made use of; but the Commons thought it was not comprehensive enough, for that the king might then have liberty of returning. The Scots called it a forfeiture (forfeiture) of the crown, from the verb forficacio.—This word was fully canvassed in the Parliamentary Debates, at that time.

ABDITORIUM. An abjutory or hiding place, to hide and preserve goods, plate, or money; and is used for a chest in which reliques are kept, as mentioned in the inventory of the church of York. Mon. Ang. p. 173.

ABREMURDER, abremurdrum.] Plain or downright murder; as distinguished from the less heinous crimes of man-slaughter and chance-medley. It is derived from the Saxon abere, apparent, notorious, and murth, murder; and was declared a capital offence, without fine or commutation, by the laws of Canute, cap. 93; and of Hon. 1. cap. 13. Spelm.

TO ABET, abettare, from the Saxon a, (ad vel usque) and betan or beteren, to stir up or incite.] In our law signifies to encourage or set on; the substantive abetment is used for an encouraging or instigation. Staundf. Pl. Cr. 105. An abettor (abettator) is an instigator or setter on; one that promotes or procures a crime. Old Nat. Br. 21. See Title Accessory.

ABEYANCE, or abbayance, from the Fr. bayes, to expect.] Is what is in expectation, remembrance, and intendment of law. By a principle of law, in every land there is a fee-simple in somebody, or it is in abeyance; that is, though for the present it be in no man, yet it is in expectancy, belonging to him that is next to enjoy the land. 1 Inst. 342. The word abeyance hath been compared to what the civilians call hereditatem jacentem; for as the civilians say lands and goods jacens, so the common lawyers say that things in like estate are in abeyance; as the logicians term it in posse, or in understanding; and as we say in nubibus, that is, in consideration of law. See Plowd. Rep. 547.

If a man be a patron of a church, and presents the thereto, the fee of the lands and tenements pertaining to the rectory is in the parson; but if the parson die, and the church become void, then the fee is in abeyance, until there be a new parson presented, admitted, and inducted; for the patron hath not the fee, but only the right to present, the fee being in the incumbent that is presented. Terms de Ley 6.

If a man makes a lease for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. the fee-simple is in abeyance until J. S.

dies. 1 Inst. 342. If lands be leased to A. B. for life, the remainder to another person for years, the remainder for years is in abeyance, until the death of the lessee for life; and then it shall vest in him in remainder as a purchaser, and as a chattel shall go to his executors. 3 Leon. 23. Where tenant for term of another's life dieth, the freehold of the lands is in abeyance till the entry of the occupant. 1 Inst. 342 b.

Fee-simple in abeyance cannot be charged until it comes in esse so as to be certainly charged or aliened; though by possibility it may fall every hour. 1 Inst. 378.

The necessity there was in the old law, that there should always be some person to do the feudal duties, to fill the possession and to answer the actions which might be brought for the fief, introduced the maxim that the freehold could never be in abeyance. (See 2 Wils. 165.) But it was admitted there were some cases in which the inheritance when separated from the freehold might be so. But this abeyance or suspension of the inheritance could not but be considered with a very jealous eye, and it was agreed that it should be discountenanced and discouraged as much as possible, and allowed upon none but the most urgent occasions.—The chief reasons of this may be found in Blackston's argument in the case of Perry and Biggs; and Mr. Hargrave's observations on the rule in Shelley's case. To these reasons the modern law has added her marked and unremitted odium of every restraint upon alienation; it being clear that no restraint could be more effectual than the admission of a suspension of the inheritance. The same principles have in some degree given rise to the well known rule of law, that a preceding estate of freehold is indispensably necessary for the support of a contingent remainder; and they influence in some degree the doctrines respecting the destruction of contingent remainders. See 1 Inst. 216 a, and 342 b. and the notes there.

As to the abeyance of titles of honour, and their being revived by the royal nomination, see 1 Inst. 165 a; where Lord Coke says, that if an earl of Chesler die, leaving more daughters than one, the eldest shall not of right be a countess, but the king, may for the uncertainty, confer the dignity on which daughter he pleases. And this doctrine, says Mr. Hargrave in his note, is undoubtedly law, though our books furnish little matter on the subject; and there are many instances of an exertion of this prerogative. One of the most remarkable took place in the person of the late Mr. Norborn Berkeley who in 1764 was called to the House of Peers in right of the old barony of Botetourt, after an abeyance of several centuries, and was allowed to sit according to the antiquity of that barony. See Cass. in Dom. Proc. 1764. Another instance was in the case of Sir Francis Dashwood, late Lord De Spencer; for in 1763 he was called to the ancient barony of that name in right of his deceased mother, who was eldest sister and one of the co-heirs of an earl of Westmorland, on whose death that barony had become in abeyance, and being so summoned he took his seat as premier baron in place of Lord Abergavenny, who before possessed that distinction.

ABETTORIA, abettorium. The alphabet. Mat. Westm.—The Irish still call the alphabet abhitten.

ABIGEVUS, for abigeus. The same as Abatir, which see, and Bract. Tract. 1. l. 1. 3. cap. 6. 105. a.

ABILITY to inherit. See title Alien.

ABISHERING or ABISHERSING. Is understood to be quit of ameracements. It originally signified a forfeiture

Seizure or amercement, and is more properly misfaring, misfaring, or misfaring, according to Optman. It hath, since been granted a liberty or freedom; because where ever this word is used in a grant or charter, the persons to whom made, have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and are themselves free from the controul of any within their fee. Rafal's Abr: Terms de Ley 7.

ABJURATION, abjuratio.] A forswearing or renouncing by oath: in the old law it signified a sworn banishment, or an oath taken to forsake the realm for ever. Strandf. Pl. C. l. 2. c. 13.

Formerly in king Edward the Confessor's time, and other reigns down to the 22 H. 8. (in imitation of the clemency of the Roman emperors towards such as fled to the church,) if a man had committed felony here, and he could fly to a church or church-yard before his apprehension, he might not be taken from thence to be tried for his crime; but on confession thereof before the justice, or before the coroner, he was admitted to his oath, to abjure or forsake the realm; which privilege he was to have forty days, during which time any persons might give him meat and drink for his sustenance, but not utter, on pain of being guilty of felony: See Hern's Murd. lib. 1. But at last, this punishment being but a perpetual confinement of the offender to some sanctuary, wherein (upon abjuration of his liberty and free habitation) he would chuse to spend his life, (as appears by the stat. anno 22 H. 8. c. 14.) this privilege was abolished by stat. 2 Jac. 1. cap. 28; and this kind of abjuration ceased. 2 Inst. 69.

As to the effect of abjuration, on the marriage tie, see tit. Baron & Feme.

In its modern and now more usual signification, it extends to the person as well as place; as for a man to abjure the Pretender by oath, is to bind himself not to own any regal authority in the person called the Pretender, nor ever to pay him any obedience, &c. See on this subject, tit. Nonconformists; Oaths, Papists, Recusants, &c.

ABOLITION. A destroying or effacing, or putting out of memory: it also signifies the leave given by the king, or judges, to a criminal accuser to desist from further prosecution. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21.

TO ABRIDGE, abbreviare, from the Pr. abbreviare.] To make shorter in words so as to retain the sense and substance. And in the common law it signifies particularly the making a declaration or count shorter, by severing some of the substance from it: a man is said to abridge his plaint in assize, and a woman her demand in action of dower, where any part is put into the plaint or demand which is not in the tenure of the defendant; for if the defendant pleads non-assize, joint-tenancy, &c. in abatement of the writ, as to part of the lands, the plaintiff may leave out those lands, and pray that the tenant may answer to the rest. See Brook. tit. Abridgment, vide 21 H. 8. c. 3.

ABRIDGEMENT. A large work contracted into a narrow compass. See tit. Books, Literary Property.

ABROGATE, abrogare.] To disannul or take away any thing: to abrogate a law, is to lay aside or repeal it. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 3.

ABSENTMENT, of des absentment. A parliament so called, was held at Wells 10 May, 8 Edm. 8. And mentioned in letters patent, dated 29 Hen. 8. 4 Inst. 354.

ABSOLVE. See Affide.

ABSOLUTIONS, from Rome. See title Papists.
ARSONIARE. A word used by the English Saxons in the oath of fealty, and signifying to harm or avoid. As in the form of the oath among the Saxons recorded by Somer.

ABSQUE HOC. See title Traverse.

ABUTTALS, from the French abutier or abouter, to limit or bound. The buttings and boundings of lands, East, West, North or South, with respect to the places, by which they are limited and bounded. Camden tells us that limits were distinguished by hillocks raised in the lands called Batunges, whence we have the word butting. The sides on the breadth of lands are properly adjacentes, lying or bordering; and the ends in length abuttantes, abutting or bounding. The boundaries and abuttals of corporation and church lands, and of parishes, are preserved by an annual procession. Boundaries are of several sorts; such as inclosures of hedges, ditches and stones in common fields, brooks, rivers, and highways, &c. of manors and lordships.

ACCEPTARE, acceptum. To pay relief to lords of manors. Capitali domino acceptare. Flota, l. 2. c. 50.

ACCEDAS AD CURIAM. A writ to the sheriff where a man hath received false judgment in a hundred court, or court baron. It issues out of the Chancery, but is returnable into B. R. or C. B. And it is the nature of the writ de falso judicio, which lies for him that hath received false judgment in the county court. In the Register of Writs, it is said to be a writ that lies as well for justice delayed, as for false judgment; and that is a species of the writ recedare, the sheriff being to make record of the suit in the inferior court, and certify it into the king's court. Reg. Orig. 9. 56 & F. N. B. 18. Dyer 169.

ACCEDAS AD VICCOMITEM. Where a sheriff hath a writ called Rene delivered to him, but suppresseth it, this writ is directed to the coroner, commanding him to deliver a writ to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 83.

ACCEPTANCE, acceptatio.] The taking and accepting of any thing in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been detected and avoided, were it not for such acceptance had.

As to the effect of acceptance of Rene, See titles Rene, Dea &c.

How far the acceptance of one Estate shall destroy another, See title Estates.

Where the acceptance of money shall discharge a Bond, See title Bond.

How far the acceptance of one thing shall be a good bar to the demand of another.

Where the condition of a bond is to pay money, acceptance of another thing is good. But if the condition is not for money, but a collateral thing, it is otherwise. Dyer 36: 10 Rep. 79. The acceptance of uncertain things, as customs, &c. made over, may not be pleaded in satisfaction of a certain sum due on bond. Cro. Car. 193. If a woman hath title to an estate of inheritance, as dower, &c. she shall not be barred by any collateral satisfaction or recompence: and no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold, without some release, &c. 4 Rep. 1. When a man is entitled to a thing in gross, he is not bound to accept it by parcels; and if a lessor disfrain for rent, he is not obliged to accept part of it; nor in taking of a fine, part of the goods, &c. 3 Salk. 2.

ACCESSARY. I. II.

Debt upon bond conditioned for the obligor to make an assurance of such lands to such uses as in the condition mentioned; the defendant pleaded, that he had made a feoffment of the same lands to other uses than in the condition expressed, which the obligee had accepted; upon demurrer it was adjudged an ill plea; for the obligor ought not to vary from the uses set forth in the condition. 1 Brownl. 60.

Acceptance of a less sum may be in satisfaction of a greater sum, if it be before the day on which the money becomes due. 3 Bullst. 301. See title Payment.

ACCESSARY or ACCESSORY. Accessorius, Particeps criminis. One guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as by command, advice, or concealment, &c.

Abettors and Accomplices also come in some measure under the name, though the former not strictly under the legal definition, of Accessories. An Abettor is one who, stirs up, incites, instigates or encourages, or who commands, counsels or procures, another to commit felony; and in many, indeed in almost all cases, is now considered as much a principal as the actual felon, in some cases more, as in the case of murder. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. l. 2. c. 29. § 7, 8: & c. 33. § 98—103. An Accomplice is one of many equally concerned in a felony, and is generally applied to those who are admitted to give evidence against their fellow criminals, for the furtherance of justice which might otherwise be eluded; and this is done on the ancient principle of law relative to Approvers. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. l. 2. c. 37. § 3, 7, & notes: 4 Comm. 329.

The following extracts from Blackstone's Commentaries, (4 Comm. 34—40 & 323) with some slight additions inserted, seem to be most proper to give the reader a methodized general idea of the subject.—Consult also Hale's Hist. P. C. and Hawk. P. C. for fuller information.

I. Of Principals.—A man may be principal in an offence in two degrees. A principal in the first degree, is he that is the actor, or absolute perpetrator of the crime; and in the second degree, he who is present, aiding and abetting the fact to be done. 1 Hale's P. C. 615—Which presence need not always be an actual immediate standing by, within sight or hearing of the fact; but there may be also a constructive presence, as when one commits a robbery or murder, and another keeps watch or guard at some convenient distance. Foster 350. And this rule hath also other exceptions: for, in case of murder by poisoning, a man may be a principal felon, by preparing and laying the poison, or persuading another to drink it, (Keble 52,) who is ignorant of its poisonous quality, (Foster 349,) or giving it to him for that purpose; and yet not administer it himself, nor be present when the very deed of poisoning is committed. 3 Inst. 138. And the same reason will hold, with regard to other murders committed in the absence of the murderer, by means which he had prepared before-hand, and which probably could not fail of their mischievous effect. As by laying a trap, or pitfall, for another, whereby he is killed; letting out a wild beast, with an intent to mischief; or exciting a madman to commit murder, so that death thereupon ensues: in every of these cases the party offending is guilty of murder as a principal in the first degree. For he cannot be called an accessory, that necessarily presupposes a principal; and the poison, the pitfall, the beast, or the madman cannot be held principals, being only the instruments of death. As therefore he must be certainly guilty either as principal or accessory, and cannot be so as accessory, it follows that he must be guilty as principal: and if principal, then in the first degree, for there is no other criminal, much less a superior in the guilt, whom he could aid, abet, or assist. 1 Hale's P. C. 617: 2 Hawk. P. C. 441, 2.

II. Of Accessories.—An Accessory is he who is not the chief actor in the offence, nor present at its performance, but is some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed. In considering the nature of which degree of guilt, we will, examine 1st. What offences admit of accessories, and what not: 2. Who may be an accessory before the fact: 3. Who may be an accessory after it: 4. How accessories, considered merely as such, and distinct from principals are to be treated: 5. Of accessories or accomplices accusing principals.

1. In high treason there are no accessories, but all are principals: the same acts, that make a man accessory in felony, making him a principal in high treason, upon account of the heinousness of the crime. 3 Inst. 138: 1 Hale's P. C. 613. Besides, it is to be considered, that the bare intent to commit treason is many times actual treason; as imagining the death of the king, or conspiring to take away his crown. And, as no one can advise and abet such a crime without an intention to have it done, there can be no accessories before the fact, since the very advice and abetment amount to principal treason. But this will not hold in the inferior species of high treason, which do not amount to the legal idea of compassing the death of the king, queen, or prince. For in these, no advice to commit them, unless the thing be actually performed, will make a man a principal traitor. Foster 342. In petit treason, murder and felonies with or without benefit of clergy, there may be accessories: except only in those offences, which by judgment of law are sudden and unpremeditated, as manslaughter and the like, which therefore cannot have any accessories before the fact. 1 Hale's P. C. 615. So too in petit larceny, and in all crimes under the degree of felony, there are no accessories either before or after the fact: but all persons concerned therein, if guilty at all, are principals. 1 Hale's P. C. 613. the same rule holding with regard to the highest and lowest offences; though upon different reasons. In treason all are principals, propter odium delicti; in trespass all are principals, because the law, quæ de minimis non curat, does not descend to distinguish the different shades of guilt in petty misdemeanors. It is a maxim that accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis: 3 Inst. 139: and therefore an accessory cannot be guilty of a higher crime than his principal, being only punished as a partaker of his guilt. So that if a servant instigates a stranger to kill his master, this being murder in the stranger as principal, of course the servant is accessory only to the crime of murder, though had he been present and assisting he would have been guilty, as principal, of petty treason, and the stranger of murder. 2 Hawk. P. C. 441, 2.

Though generally an act of parliament, creating a felony, renders (consequentially) accessories before and after, within the same penalty, yet the special penning of the act of parliament in such cases sometimes varies the case. Thus the statute of 3 Hen. 7. c. 2, against taking away maidens, &c. makes the offence and the procuring and abetting, abetting, yea and wittingly receiving also, to be all equally principal felonies, and excluded of clergy. 1 Hale's P. C. 614.

In what cases accessaries are excluded from clergy, see tit. Felonies without Clergy.

2. Sir Matthew Hale (5 Hale's P. C. 615, 616) defines An accessory before the fact to be one, who being absent at the time the crime was committed, doth yet procure, counsel, or command another to commit a crime. Herein absence is necessary to make him an accessory: for if such procurer, or the like, be present he is guilty of the crime as principal. If A. then advises B. to kill another, and B. does, in the absence of A. now B. is principal, and A. is accessory in the murder. And this holds though the party killed be not in rerum naturâ at the time of the advice given. As if A. the reputed father, advises B. the mother of a bastard child, unborn, to strangle it when born, and she does so, A. is accessory to the murder. Dyer 186. And it is also settled, (Foster 125,) that whoever procureth a felony to be committed, though it be by the intervention of a third person, is an accessory before the fact. It is likewise a rule, that he who in anywise commands or counsels another to commit an unlawful act is accessory to all that ensues upon that unlawful act, but is not accessory to any act distinct from the other; as if A. commands B. to beat C. and B. beats him so that he dies, B. is guilty of murder as principal, and A. as accessory; but if A. commands B. to burn C.'s house, and he in so doing commits a robbery, now A. though accessory to the burning, is not accessory to the robbery, for that is a thing of a distinct and unsequential nature. 1 Hale's P. C. 617. But if the felony committed be the same in substance with that which is commanded, and only varying in some circumstantial matters; as if, upon a command to poison A. he is stabbed or shot, and dies, the commander is still accessory to the murder, for the substance of the thing commanded was the death of A. and the manner of its execution is a mere collateral circumstance. 2 Hawth. P. C. 443. By stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, benefit of clergy is taken away from accessaries before the fact to burglary, by commanding, counselling, &c.

3. An accessory after the fact may be, where a person, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon. 1 Hale's P. C. 618. Therefore to make an accessory ex post facto, it is in the first place requisite that he knows of the felony committed. 2 Hawth. P. C. 446. In the next place, he must receive, relieve, comfort, or assist him. And, generally, any assistance whatever given to a felon, to hinder his being apprehended, tried, or suffering punishment, makes the assister an accessory. As furnishing him with a horse to escape his pursuers, money or victuals to support him, a house or other shelter to conceal him, or open force or violence to rescue or protect him. 2 Hawth. P. C. 444, 5. So likewise to convey instruments to a felon to enable him to break gaol, or to bribe the gaoler to let him escape, makes a man an accessory to the felony. And by stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7, the receiving a pirate or any vessel or goods piratically taken renders the receivers accessory to the piracy. But to relieve a felon in gaol with cloaths or other necessaries, is no offence: for the crime imputable to this species of accessory is, the hindrance of public justice, by assisting the felon to escape the vengeance of the law. 1 Hale's P. C. 624. To buy or receive stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, falls under none of these descriptions; it was therefore at common law a mere misdemeanor, and made not the receiver accessory to the theft, because he received the goods only, and not the felon. 1 Hale's P. C. 620. To remedy this the stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9; & 1 Anne, c. 9, were passed against such receivers; and now by the stat. 5 Anne, c. 31, and 4 Geo. 2. c. 11, all such receivers are made accessaries (where the principal felony admits of accessories) Foster 73; and may be transported for fourteen years; and in the case of receiving linen goods stolen from the bleaching-grounds, are by stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 27, declared felons without benefit of clergy.

The felony must be complete at the time of the assistance given; else it makes not the assistant an accessory. As if one wounds another mortally, and after the wound given, but before death ensues, a person assists or receives the delinquent, this does not make him accessory to the homicide; for till death ensues, there is no felony committed. 2 Hawth. P. C. 447. But so strict is the law where a felony is actually complete, in order to do effectual justice, that the nearest relations are not suffered to aid or receive one another. If the parent assists the child or the child his parent, if the brother receives the brother, the master his servant, or the servant his master, or even if the husband relieves his wife, who may have any of them committed a felony, the receivers become accessories, ex post facto. 3 Inst. 108: 2 Hawth. P. C. 320. But a feme covert cannot become an accessory by the receipt and concealment of her husband; for she is presumed to act under his coercion, and therefore she is not bound, neither ought she to discover her lord. 1 Hale's P. C. 621.

4. The general rule of the ancient law is, that accessories shall suffer the same punishment as their principals; if one be liable to death, the other is also liable. 3 Inst. 188. Why, then, it may be asked, are such elaborate distinctions made between accessories and principals, if both are to suffer the same punishment? For these reasons; 1st, To distinguish the nature and denomination of crimes, that the accused may know how to defend himself when indicted: the commission of an actual robbery being quite a different accusation from that of harbouring the robber. 2dly, Because, though by the ancient common law the rule is as before laid down, that both shall be punished alike, yet now by the statutes relating to the benefit of clergy, a distinction is made between them; accessories after the fact being still allowed the benefit of clergy in all cases (except horse-stealing, stat. 31 Eliz. c. 12; and stealing of linen from bleaching-grounds, stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 27) which is denied to the principals, and accessories before the fact, in many cases; as among others in petit treason, murder, robbery, and wilful burning. 1 Hale's P. C. 615. And perhaps if a distinction were constantly to be made between the punishment of principals and accessories, even before the fact, the latter to be treated with a little less severity than the former, it might prevent the perpetration of many crimes, by increasing the difficulty of finding a person to execute the deed itself; as his danger would be greater than that of his accomplices, by reason of the difference of his punishment. Beccar. c. 37. 3dly, Because no man formerly could be tried as accessory till after the principal was convicted, or at least he must have been tried at the same time time with him, though that law is now much altered 4thly, Because, though a man be indicted as accessory and acquitted, he may afterwards be indicted as principal; for an acquittal of receiving or counselling a felon is no acquittal of the felony itself: but it is a matter of some doubt, whether if a man be acquitted as principal, he can be afterwards indicted as accessory before the fact; since those offences are frequently very nearly allied, and therefore an acquittal of the guilt of one may be an acquittal of the other also. 1 Hale's P. C. 625, 626: 2 Hawk. P. C. 529, 530: Foster 361. But it is clearly held, that one acquitted as principal may be indicted as accessory after the fact; since that is always an offence of a different species of guilt, principally tending to evade the public justice, and is subsequent in its commencement to the other. Upon these reasons the distinction of principal and accessory will appear to be highly necessary, though the punishment is still much the same with regard to principals and such accessories as offend before the fact is committed.

By the old common law, the accessory could not be arraigned till the principal was attainted, unless he chose it, for he might waive the benefit of the law; and therefore principal and accessory might and may still be arraigned and plead, and also be tried together. But otherwise if the principal had never been indicted at all, had stood mute, had challenged above thirty-five jurors peremptorily, had claimed the benefit of clergy, had obtained a pardon, or had died before attainer, the accessory in any of these cases could not be arraigned: for non confititur whether any felony was committed or no, till the principal was attainted; and it might so happen that the accessory should be convicted one day, and the principal acquitted the next, which would be absurd. However, this absurdity could only happen, where it was possible that a trial of the principal might be had subsequent to that of the accessory; and therefore the law still continues that the accessory shall not be tried so long as the principal remains liable to be tried hereafter. But by stat. 1 Ann. c. 9, if the principal be once convicted, and before attainer, (that is, before he receives judgment of death or outlawry) he is delivered by pardon, the benefit of clergy, or otherwise; or if the principal stands mute, or challenges peremptorily above the legal number of jurors, so as never to be convicted at all; in any of these cases in which no subsequent trial can be had of the principal, the accessory may be proceeded against, as if the principal felon had been attainted; for there is no danger of future contradiction. And upon the trial of the accessory, as well after as before the conviction of the principal, it seems to be the better opinion, and founded on the true spirit of justice, that the accessory is at liberty (if he can) to controvert the guilt of his supposed principal, and to prove him innocent of the charge, as well in point of fact, as in point of law. Foster 365, &c. By the stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 24, the accessory is indictable in that county where he was accessory, and shall be tried there, as if the felony had been committed in the same county; and the justices before whom the accessory is, shall write to the justices, &c. before whom the principal is attainted, for the record of the attainer. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 623.

Where the principal is not attainted, but discharged by being burnt in the hand only, the accessory after the fact ought to be discharged without burning in the hand, on being put to his book. Cro. Car. 566, pl. 3.

Where there are two principals, the attainer of one of them gives sufficient foundation to arraign the accessory. Jenk. Cent. 76.

5. The old doctrine of approvements, when one criminal appealed or accused his accomplices in order to obtain his pardon is now grown into disuse; but is fully provided for in the case of coining, robbery, burglary, house-breaking, horse-stealing and larceny, (from shops, warehouses, stables and coach-houses) by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8: 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23: & 5 Ann. c. 31: which enact, that if any such offender, being out of prison, shall discover two who have committed the like offences, he shall on their conviction, in cases of burglary or house-breaking, receive the reward of 40 l. given to persons apprehending such felons; and in general be entitled to a pardon of all capital offences, excepting only murder and treason, and of them also in cases of coining; but under stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 28. the pardon extends only to offences by coinage. And in cases of stealing iron, lead or other metals, the accomplice convicting receivers shall (under stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30) be pardoned all such offences. It is usual also for justices of peace to admit accomplices to other felonies, to be witnesses against their fellows; on an implied confidence that, in case of a complete discovery without prevarication or fraud, they shall receive a pardon; but to which they are not entitled of right. Leach's Hawk. l. 2. c. 37. § 7, and notes: 3 Comm. 330.

ACCOLA. An husbandman who came from some other parts or country to till the lands, ex quod adveniens terram colat. And is thus distinguished from Incola, viz. Accola non propriam, propriam colit Incola terram. Du Fresne.

ACCOLADE, from the Fr. accoler, collum amplecti.] A ceremony used in knighthood by the king's putting his hand about the knight's neck.

ACCOMPLICE. See Accessory.

ACCOMPT. See Account.

ACCORD. Fr.] Is an agreement between two or more persons, where any one is injured by a trespass, or offence done, or on a contract, to satisfy him with some recompence; which accord, if executed and performed, shall be a good bar in law, if the other party after the accord performed, bring an action for the same trespass, &c. Terms de Ley.

- I. In what cases
 - II. In what manner
- } Accord may be pleaded.

I. When a duty is created by deed in certainty, as by bill, bond, or covenant to pay a sum of money, this duty accruing by writing, ought to be discharged by matter of as high a nature; but when no certain duty arises by deed, but the action is for a tort or default, &c. for which damages are to be recovered, there an accord with satisfaction is a good plea. 6 Rep. 43. In accord, one promise may be pleaded in discharge of another, before breach; but after breach, it cannot be discharged without a release in writing. 2 Mod. 44. Accord with satisfaction upon a covenant broken, is a good plea in satisfaction and discharge of the damages. Lutw. 359. And accord made before the covenant broken, hath been adjudged a good bar to an action of covenant, as it may be in satisfaction of damage to come. 1 Danv. Abr. 546.

ACCOUNT.

If a contract without deed is to deliver goods, &c. there money may be paid by accord in satisfaction; but if one is bound in an obligation to deliver goods, or to do any collateral thing, the obligee cannot by accord give money in satisfaction thereof: though when one is bound to pay money, he may give goods or any other valuable thing in satisfaction. 9 Rep. 78: 1 Inst. 212. Where damages are uncertain, a lesser thing may be done in satisfaction, and in such case an accord and satisfaction is a good plea; but in action of debt on a bond, there a lesser sum cannot be paid in satisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 88. Accord with satisfaction is a good plea in personal actions, where damages only are to be recovered; and in all actions which suppose a wrong vi & armis, where a capias and exigent lie at the common law, in trespass and ejectment, detinue, &c. accord is a good plea: So in an appeal of maihem. But in real actions it is not a good plea. 4 Rep. 1, 9, 70: 9 Rep. 77. Of late it hath been held, that upon mutual promises an action lies, and consequently, there being equal remedy on both sides, an accord may be pleaded without execution, as well as an arbitrament. Raym. 450: 2 Jones 158. Acceptance of the thing agreed on in these accords is the only material thing to make them binding. Hob. 178: 5 Mod. 86.

Accord executed only is pleadable in bar, and executory not. 1 Mod. 69. See Com. Dig. title Accord (C) Also in pleading it, it is the safest by way of satisfaction, and not of accord alone. For if it be pleaded by way of accord, a precise execution thereof in every part must be pleaded: but, by way of satisfaction, the defendant need only alledge, that he paid the plaintiff such a sum, &c. in full satisfaction of the accord, which the plaintiff received. 9 Rep. 80. The defendant must plead, that the plaintiff accepted the thing agreed upon in full satisfaction, &c. And if it be on a bond, it must be in satisfaction of the money mentioned in the condition, and not of the bond; which cannot be discharged but by writing under hand and seal. Cro. Jac. 254, 650. See further Com. Dig. tit. Accord. See tit. Acceptance, Award, Bond, Estate, Lease, Rent, Payment.

ACCOUNT or ACCOMPT; computus.] Is a writ or action which lies against a bailiff or receiver to a lord or others, who by reason of their offices and businesses are to render acompt, but refuse to do it. F. N. B. 116.

This action is now seldom used; but the most liberal, extensive and beneficial action is for money had and received by defendant to plaintiff's use, which will lie in almost (if not in every) case where one hath money of another's in his hands, which he ought to pay him. This form of action is equivalent to a bill in equity. An action on the case on infinimul computassent is also usual for the balance of a settled account. The action of account however lies in the following cases.

If a person receives money due to me upon an obligation, &c. I may either have an action of acompt against him as my receiver; or action of debt, or on the case, as owing me so much money as he hath received. 1 Lill. 33. If I pay money in my own wrong to another, I may bring an action against him for so much money received to my use; but then he may discharge himself by alledging it was for some debt, or to be paid over by my order to some other person, which he hath done, &c. 1 Lill. 30. But if a man have a servant, whom he orders to receive money, the master shall have acompt against him, if he were his receiver. Co. Lit. 172. If money be received by a man's wife to his use, action of acompt lies against the husband, and he may be charged in the declaration as his own receipt. Co. Lit. 295. Account does not lie against an infant; but it lies against a man or woman, that is guardian, bailiff, or receiver, being of age and dis-covert; and though an apprentice is not chargeable in this action, for what he usually receives in his master's trade, yet upon collateral receipts he shall be charged as well as another. Co. Lit. 172: Roll. Abr. 117: 3 Leon 92.

As to other actions of acompt, they will not lie of a thing certain; if a man delivers 10*l.* to merchandize with, he shall not have account of the 10*l.* but of the profits, which are uncertain: and this is one reason why this action will not lie for the arrears of rent. 1 Darv. Abr. 215. Action of account may be brought against a factor that sells goods and merchandizes upon credit, without a particular commission so to do, though the goods are bona peritura. 2 Mod. 100. If there are two demands in a declaration, to which the defendant pleads an acompt stated, the plaintiff can never after resort to the original contract, which is thereby merged and discharged in the acompt: if A. sells his horse to B. for 10*l.* and there being divers other dealings between them, they come to an acompt upon the whole, and B. is found in arrear 5*l.* A. must bring his infinimul computassent for it; but if there be only one debt betwixt the parties, entering into an acompt for that would not determine the first contract. 1 Mod. Rep. 206: 2 Mod. 44. It has been held, that mutual demands on an acompt are not extinguished by settling it, and promise to pay the balance; wherefore assumpsit lies for the original debt. Fitzgib. 44. A man having received of another 100*l.* to be employed in merchandize abroad, covenants at his return to acompt to him; this doth not alter the case, but notwithstanding the covenant, action of acompt may be brought. 2 Bulst. 256. And if I deliver to another person goods or money beyond sea, to be delivered again to me in England at a certain place, and he delivers it not, -I may be relieved by this action. F. N. B. 18.

Acompt may be brought against the following persons:

If a man makes one his bailiff of a manor, &c. he shall have a writ of acompt against him as bailiff; where a person makes one receiver, to receive his rents or debts, &c. he shall have acompt against him as receiver, and if a man makes one his bailiff and also his receiver, then he shall have acompt against him in both ways. Also a person may have a writ of acompt against a man as bailiff or receiver, where he was not his bailiff or receiver; as if a man receive money for my use, I shall have an acompt against him as receiver; or if a person deliver money unto another to deliver over unto me, I shall likewise have acompt against him as my receiver: so if a man enter into my lands to my use, and receive the profits thereof I shall have acompt against him as bailiff. 9 H. 6: 36 H. 6: 10 R. 2: Fitz. Acompt. 6.

A judgment in acompt, as receiver, is no bar to action of acompt as bailiff; but 'tis said a bailiff cannot be charged as receiver, nor a receiver as bailiff; because then he might be twice charged. 2 Lev. 127: 1 Darv. Abr. 220, 221. The heir may have writ of acompt before or after his full age, against a guardian in socage; and if he sue the guardian for profits of his lands taken before before he is fourteen years old, he must charge him as guardian; but if it be for taking the profits after that age, there he must sue him as bailiff. Lit. 124: F. N. B. 118. Where an heir sues a stranger that doth intermeddle with his land, he shall charge him in account as guardian. F. N. B. 13.

A man devises lands to be sold by his executors, and the money thence arising to be distributed amongst his daughters; action of account lies in this case, for the daughters against the executors. Jenk. Cent. 215: 2 Roll. Abr. 285. An action of account lies against a bailiff, not only for what profits he hath made and raised, but also for what he might have made and raised by his care and industry, his reasonable charges and expences deducted. Co. Lit. 172. In this instance the action of account may be preferable to that for money had and received.—One merchant may have account against another, where they occupy their trade together; and if one charges me as bailiff of his goods ad mercandizandum, I must answer for the increase, and be punished for my negligence; but if he charges me as receiver ad computandum, I must be answerable only for the bare money or thing delivered. F. N. B. 117: Co. Lit. 272: 2 Leon. Ca. 245.

If a bailiff or receiver make a deputy, action of account will not lie against the deputy, but against him. 1 Leon. 32.

Statutes.—In the writ of account the process by the common law was summons, attachment, and distress infinite. The statute of Marlbridge (52 H. 3. c. 23) gave attachment by the body, if the bailiff had no lands by which he might be distrained. 2 Inst. 380.—By the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. §. 1.) c. 11, if the accountant be found in arrearages the auditors that are assigned to him have power to award him to prison.—In the process of outlawry, &c. the stat. 13 E. 3. c. 23, gives an action of account to the executors of a merchant; the statute 25 Ed. 3. c. 5, to executors of executors; the statute of 31 Ed. 3. c. 11, to administrators: and by the statute 3 and 4 Ann. c. 16, actions of account may be brought against the executors and administrators of every guardian, bailiff and receiver, and by one jointenant, tenant in common, his executors and administrators against the other as bailiff, for receiving more than his share, and against their executors and administrators; and the auditors appointed by the court may examine the party on oath.

It may be proper to say something concerning the Plea and Judgment in account; and though the order may seem somewhat irregular, it will be necessary first to explain the nature of the judgment, which being rightly understood, the distinctions as to the method of pleading will be more easily conceived.

The usual judgment is quod computet, on which the defendant is taken by capias ad computandum; but there are two judgments in this writ; for if the defendant cannot avoid the suit by plea, judgment is first given, That he do account; and having done this before the auditors, there is another judgment entered, that the plaintiff shall recover of the defendant so much as is found in arrears. 11 Rep. 40. The first judgment is but an award of the court, like a writ to enquire of damages; and these two judgments depend one upon another; for if judgment be to account, and the party die before he hath accounted, the executor cannot proceed in the action, but it must be begun again; and no writ of error will lie upon the first till after the second judgment. Ibid.

With respect to the plea, the following distinctions are to be noticed:

What may be pleaded in bar to the action, shall not be allowed to be pleaded before the auditors. Cro. Car. 82, 161. Some pleas are in bar of the account, and others in discharge before auditors; and some pleas will be allowed before auditors, that will not be in bar to the account, Dyer 21: 11 Rep. 8. In account the plaintiff declared of the receipt of money by the hands of a stranger; the defendant pleaded a gift of the money afterwards by the plaintiff; this was a good plea as well in bar of the action, as before auditors. Winch. 9.

The pleas in this action are, quod nunquam fuit receptor; quod plene computavit, &c. It is no plea by an accountant that he was robbed; unless he alleges it was without his default and negligence, and then it will be a good plea. Co. Lit. 89. That the defendant never was bailiff, is the general bar; and it is a good plea in bar, by claiming a property in the things to be accounted for. 29 E. 3. 47. A defendant, as receiver, cannot wage his law, where he receives the money by another's hands: 'tis otherwise where he received it of the plaintiff himself. 1 Cro. 919.

It may be proper to add, that the process in account is summons, pone and distress; and, upon a nihil returned, the plaintiff may proceed to outlawry. The statute of Limitations, 21 J. 1. c. 16, doth not bar a man who is a merchant from bringing action of account for merchandise at any time; but all other actions of account are within the statute.

In Chancery upon an account of fifteen or twenty years standing, the defendant may be allowed to prove, on his own oath, what he cannot otherwise make proof of; but here the particulars must be named, as to whom the money was paid, for what, and when, &c. 1 C. Rep. 146. And a defendant shall be discharged upon his oath of sums under 40s; though it is held a plaintiff shall not so charge another, or be allowed any thing in equity on his oath. 2 C. Cas. 249: 1 Vern. 283. See Outb. Vide Comyn's Digest, tit. Accounts.—Kydd's Com. Dig. Introduction to that title.

ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL. An officer in the court of Chancery, appointed by act of parliament, to receive all money lodged in court. He is to convey the money to the Bank, and take the same out by order; and he is only to keep the account with the Bank; for the Bank is to be answerable for all money received by them, and not the Accountant-General, &c. stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. No fees shall be taken by this officer or his clerks, on pain of being punished for extortion; but they are to be paid salaries. The Accountant-General 650*l.* per annum, out of interest made of part of the suitors' money. See title Chancery.

Counterfeiting the hand of the Accountant-General is felony without clergy, by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. sec. 9.

ACCOUNTS PUBLIC. By statute 25 Geo. 3. c. 52, the patents formerly granted to Lord Soules and Lord Mount Stuart as auditors of the imprest are vacated, and the annual sum of 7000*l.* each is made payable to them during their respective lives. § 1. 3.

Under this act his Majesty appoints five commissioners by letters patent; two of whom are to be comptrollers of the army accounts; salaries are granted to each, paid out of

of the aggregate fund, not exceeding in the whole 4000*l*. These are filed. The Commissioners for auditing the public accounts; and hold their offices quandiu se bene gesserint, (except the comptrollers of army accounts who continue commissioners so long only as they are comptrollers) Before they act they take an oath before the chancellor of the exchequer "faithfully, impartially and truly to execute the powers and trusts vested in them." § 4.

The Treasury appoint officers, clerks, &c. for making up and preparing for declaration the public accounts of the kingdom, with salaries; and allow for all charges out of the aggregate fund to an amount not exceeding 6000*l*. per annum, which is in lieu of all fees and perquisites. § 5.

The commissioners under this act are ~~vested~~ with all the powers, and subject to the same duties and controul as the auditors of the imprest formerly were; except as altered by the act. The commissioners administer oaths to the officers and clerks for the performance of their duties. § 8; and to accountants. § 12, 13. For their mode of proceeding see the act.

ACCROCHE, from the Fr. accrocher, to hook or grapple unto.] It signifies to encroach, and is mentioned in the statute 25 Ed. 3. c. 8, to that purpose. The French use it for delay; as accrocher un proces, to stay the proceedings in a suit.

ACCUSATION, accusatio] The charging any person with a crime. By Magna Charta no man shall be imprisoned or condemned on any accusation, without trial by his peers, or the law. None shall be vexed upon any accusation, but according to the law of the land: and no man may be molested by petition to the king; &c. unless it be by indictment, or presentment of lawful men, or by process at common law. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. R. 5. c. 4: 28 Ed. 3. c. 3. None shall be compelled to answer an accusation to the king, without presentment, or some matter of record. Stat. 42 Ed. 3. c. 3. See stat. 38 E. 3. c. 9. By statute 5 and 6 E. 6. c. 11. § 12; and 1 P. and M. c. 10, 11, in treason there must be two lawful accusers. As to self accusation, see tit. Evidence. See tit. Malicious Prosecution.

ACEMANNES - CEASTER, Acemanni Civitas.] BATH. q. v.

ACEPHALI. The levellers in the reign of king Hen. 1; who acknowledged no head or superior. Leges Hen. 1; Du Cange.

ACETIAM BILLÆ:—*And also to a bill to be exhibited for 20*l*. debt, &c.*] Words in, or a clause of, a writ, where the action requires bail. The stat. 13 Car. 2. R. 2. c. 2, which enjoins the cause of action to be particularly expressed in the writ or process which holds a person to bail, hath ordained the adding of this clause in writs to the usual complaints of trespass, which latter gives cognizance to the court, while that of debt authorises the arrest. This ought not to be made out against a peer of the realm, or upon a penal statute; or against an executor or administrator, or for any debt under 10*l*. in the superior courts. Nor in any action of account, action of covenant, &c. unless the damages are 10*l*. or more; nor in action of trespass, or for battery, wounding or imprisonment; except there be an order of court for it, or a warrant under the hand of one of the judges of the court out of which the writ issues. 1 Lill. Abr. 13. See North's Life of Lord keeper Guildford, fol. 99, 100.

Impey's Instructor Clericalis, K. B. and C. P. and this Dictionary tit. Arrest, Bail.

ACHAT, Fr. Abet.] A contract or bargain. Parveyors by stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 2, were called Achators.

ACHERSET, An ancient measure of corn, conjectured to be the same with our quarter or eight bushels.

ACHOLITE, Acholitus.] An inferior church servant, who next under the subdeacon, followed or waited on the priest and deacons, and performed the meaner offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT-MONEY, Is a sum paid in some parts of England by the copyhold tenants on the death of their landlords, as an acknowledgment of their new lords; in like manner as money is usually paid on the attornment of tenants.

ACQUIETANDIS PLEGIIS, A writ of justicies, lying for the surety against a creditor, who refuses to acquit him after the debt is satisfied. Reg. of Writs. 158.

ACQUIETANTIA DESHIRIS ET HUNDREDIS, To be free from suits and services in shires and hundreds.

ACQUIETARE, quietum reddere.] To acquit. Dr. Wilk. Gloss. It also sometimes signifies to pay. Mon. Angl. tom. 1, fol. 199.

ACQUITTAL, from the French word Acquitter, and the Latin compound Aequi etare.] To free or discharge. It signifies in one sense to be free from entries and molestations of a superior lord for services issuing out of lands; (See Termes de la Ley;) and in another signification (the most general) it is taken for a deliverance and setting free of a person from the suspicion of guilt; as he that on trial is discharged of a felony, is said to be acquittatus de felonid; and if he be drawn in question again for the same crime, he may plead auter-foits acquit; as his life shall not be twice put in danger for the same offence. 2 Inst. 385.

Acquittal in fact, is when a person is found Not guilty of the offence by a jury, on verdict, &c. But in murder, if a man is acquitted, appeal may be brought against him. 3 Inst. 273.

If one be acquitted on an indictment of murder, supposed to be done at such a time; and after indicted again in the same county, for the murder committed at another time: here, notwithstanding that variance, the party may plead auter-foits acquit, by averring it to be the same felony; so where a person is indicted a second time, for robbery upon the same person, but at another vill, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. Where a man is discharged on special matter found by the grand jury, yet he may be indicted de novo seven years afterwards, and cannot plead this acquittal; as he may upon the special matter found by the petty jury, and judgment given thereon. Ibid. 246. See also Leach's Hawkins, c. 25. § 64.

If a person is lawfully acquitted on a malicious prosecution, he may bring his action, &c. for damages, after he hath obtained a copy of the indictment; but it is usual for the judges of gaol delivery to deny a copy of an acquittal to him who intends to bring an action thereon, when there was probable cause for a criminal prosecution. Cartb. Rep. 421. See Leach's Hawkins, c. 23. § 142, &c. By stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1, if either principal or accessory be acquitted on an indictment for murder, the court may remit him to prison, or bail him, at their discretion till the year and day (for appeal) be passed.

ACQUITTANCE. Acquittancia.] Signifieth a discharge in writing, of a sum of money, or debt due; as, where a man is bound to pay rent, reserved upon a lease, &c. and the party to whom due, on receipt thereof, gives a writing under his hand witnessing that he is paid; this will be such a discharge in law, that he cannot demand and recover the sum or duty again, if the acquittance be produced. Terms de Ley 15: Dyer 6, 25, 51. An acquittance is a discharge and bar in the law to actions, &c. And if one acknowledges himself to be satisfied by deed, it may be a good plea in bar, without any thing received; but an acquittance, without seal, is only evidence of satisfaction, and not pleadable.

'Tis observed, that a general receipt or acquittance in full of all demands, will discharge all debts, except such as are on specialty, viz. bonds, bills, and other instruments sealed and delivered; on which account those can be destroyed only by some other specialty of equal force, such as a general release, &c. There being this difference between that and the general acquittance. See Cro. Jac. 650.

But in some cases a court of equity will order accounts to be opened, even after an acquittance in full of all demands.

And now, in the superior courts of law, the producing an acquittance will not bar the action, if the plaintiff can by any means shew a mistake, and that he has not been paid, or paid so much as the acquittance is for.

In some cases payment may be refused, unless an acquittance is given. Thus the obligor is not bound to pay money upon a single bond, except an acquittance be given him by the obligee; nor is he obliged to pay the money before he hath the acquittance. But in case of an obligation with a condition, it is otherwise; for there one may aver payment. And by stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16, if an action of debt is brought upon a single bill, and the defendant hath paid the money, such payment may be pleaded in bar of the action.

A servant may give an acquittance for the use of his master, where such servant usually receives his master's rents, &c. and a master shall be bound by it. Co. Lit. 112. The manner of tender and payment of money shall be generally directed by him who pays it, and not by him who receives it; and the acquittance ought to be given accordingly.

ACRE, from the German Acker, Ager.] A quantity of land, containing in length 40 perches, and in breadth four perches; or in proportion to it, be the length or breadth more or less. By the customs of various countries, the perch differs in quantity, and consequently the acre of land. It is commonly about 16 feet and a half, but in Staffordshire it is 24 feet. According to the statute 24 Hen. 8. c. 14, concerning the sowing of flax, it is declared that 160 perches make an acre, which is 40 multiplied by four; and the ordinance of measuring land, 33 Ed. 1. §. 6, agrees with this account. The word acre formerly meant an open ground or field; as castle-acre, wolf-acre, &c. and not a determined quantity of land.

ACRE, or ACRE-FIGHT; an old sort of duel fought by single combatants, English and Scotch, between the frontiers of their kingdoms, with sword and lance; this duelling was also called camp-fight, and the combatants, champions, from the open-field that was the place of trial.

ACTILIA, Military utensils. See Castle.

ACTION, Actio,] Is the form of a suit given by law for recovery of that which is one's due; or it is a legal demand of a man's right. Co. Lit. 285. The learned Bracton thus defines it, Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur. Actions are either criminal or civil; criminal to have judgment of death, as appeals of death, robbery, &c. or only to have judgment for damage to the party, fine to the king and imprisonment, as appeals of maihem, &c. Co. Lit. 284: 1 Inst. 40. Civil actions are such as tend only to the recovery of that which by reason of any contract, &c. is due to us; as action of debt, upon the case, &c. 2 Inst. 61.

Under criminal actions may be classed actions penal; which lie for some penalty or punishment on the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary. Bract.

Actions upon statute, brought upon the breach of any statute, where an action is given to the person injured that lay not before; as where one commits perjury to the prejudice of another, the party that is injured may have a writ upon the statute. Such action is now obsolete.

Actions popular, given on the breach of some penal statute, which every man hath a right to sue for himself and the king, by information, action, &c. And because this action is not given to one especially, but generally to any that will prosecute, it is called action popular; and from the words used in the process, (qui tam pro domino rege sequitur quam pro se ipso, who sues as well for the king as for himself,) it is called a qui tam action. See title Information.

Civil Actions are divided into real, personal, and mixed. Action real is that action whereby a man claims title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in fee, or for life: and these actions are possessory, or ancestral; possessory, of a man's own possession and seisin; or ancestral of the possession or seisin of his ancestor.

Action personal is such as one man brings against another, on any contract for money or goods, or on account of any offence or trespass; and it claims a debt, goods, chattels, &c. or damages for the same.

Action mixed is an action that lieth as well for the thing demanded, as against the person that hath it; in which the thing is recovered, and likewise damages for the wrong sustained: it seeks both the thing whereof a man is deprived, and a penalty for the unjust detention. But detinue is not an action mixed, notwithstanding the thing demanded and damages for withholding it be recovered; for it is an action merely personal, brought only for goods and chattels.

In a real action, setting forth the title in the writ, several lands held by several titles may not be demanded in the same writ; in personal actions several wrongs may be comprehended in one writ. 8 Rep. 87. A bar is perpetual in personal actions, and the plaintiff is without remedy, unless it be by writ of error or attain: but in real actions, if the defendant be barred, he may commence an action of a higher nature, and try the same again. 5 Rep. 33. Action of waste sued against tenant for life, is in the realty and personality; in the realty, the place wasted being to be recovered, and, in the personality, as treble damages are to be recovered. Co. Lit. 284.

Many personal actions die with the person. Real actions survive. If lessee for years commit waste, and dies, action of waste may not be had against his executor or administrator, for waste done by the deceased. And where a keeper of a prison permits one in execution to escape, and afterwards dieth, no action will lie against his executors.

tors. This must be understood, of that kind of keeper, to whom the prison actually belongs, as the marshal, the warden of the Fleet, &c. not of a gaoler who acts as servant to a sheriff, &c. for in such case, the death of the gaoler, is not any bar to an action against the sheriff, to whom in fact, the prison actually belongs. Co. Lit. 33. Action of debt lies not against executors upon a contract for the eating and drinking of the testator. 9 Rep. 87. But an action on the case on promises will lie against an executor or administrator on the promises of their testator or intestate. An executor cannot bring an appeal of larceny from the testator, for it is a mere personal action. H. P. C. 184: S. P. C. 50. And an appeal of death is a personal action given to the heir; and like others shall therefore die with the person. 2 Hawk. P. C. 244.

In all actions merely personal arising ex delicto, for wrongs actually done or committed by the defendant, as trespass, battery, and slander, the action dies with the person. 4 Inst. 315; and it never shall be revived either by or against the executors or other representatives. For neither the executors of the plaintiff have received, nor those of the defendant committed, in their own personal capacity, any manner of wrong or injury. But in actions arising ex contractu, by breach of promise and the like, where the right descends to the representatives of the plaintiff, and those of the defendant have assets to answer the demand, though the suits shall abate by the death of the parties, yet they may be revived against, or by, the executors, (March 14,) being indeed rather actions against the property than the person. 3 Comm. 302.

Again, actions are either local or transitory. Actions real and mixed, ejectment, waste, trespasses quare clausum fregit, &c. are to be laid in the same county where the land lieth: personal and transitory actions, as debt, detinue, assault and battery, &c. may be brought in any county. Co. Lit. 282. Except against justices and officers of corporations and parishes, (under stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12,) or against officers acting under particular acts of parliament; which frequently direct actions against them, to be laid in the respective counties, where the facts happen. Actions transitory may be laid in any county, although the statute 6 R. 2, enacted, That writs of debt, account, &c. should be commenced in the county where the contracts were made; for that statute was never put in use; and yet generally actions have been laid in the county where the cause of them was arising, except as above. If the cause of action arise in two counties, an action may be brought in either county; but if a nuisance be erected in one county, to the damage of a man in another, the assize must be brought in confinio comitatum. Mich. 8 Ann. B. R. By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. all suits on penal statutes shall be laid in the county where the offence was committed. See tit. Venue.

Actions likewise are said to be perpetual and temporary: Perpetual, those which cannot be determined by time; and all actions may be called perpetual that are not limited to time for their prosecution: Temporary actions are those that are expressly limited: and since the statute of limitations, (21 Jac. 1. c. 16,) all actions seem to be temporary; or not so perpetual, but that they may in time be prescribed against; a real action may be prescribed against within five years, on a fine levied, or recovery suffered. See tit. Limitation of Actions.

Actions are also joint or several; joint, where several persons are equally concerned, and the one cannot bring the action, or cannot be sued, without the other; several, in case of trespass, &c. done, where persons are to be severally charged, and every trespass committed by many is several. 2 Leon. 77.

As to joining several matters in one action the following is to be observed.

In personal actions, several wrongs may be joined in one writ; but actions founded upon a tort, and on a contract, cannot be joined, for they require different pleas and different process. 1 Keb. 847: 1 Pent. 366. So where there is a tort by the common law, and a tort by statute, they may not be joined; though where several torts are by the common law, they may be joined, if personal. 3 Salk. 203.

Trover and assumpsit may not be joined; but in an action against a common carrier, the plaintiff may declare in case upon custom of the realm, and also upon trover and conversion: for not guilty answers to both. 1 Danv. Abr. 4. Debt upon an averciement, and upon a mutuatus, may be joined in one declaration. Will. p. 1. 248. So case for a miscefeasance and negligence may be joined with a count in trover, in the same declaration. 1b. per. 2. 319. Two counts may be joined in the same declaration, where there is the same judgment in both. 1b. 321. And any action may be joined, where the plea of not guilty goes to all. 8 Rep. 47. But, it seems, ejectment and battery cannot be joined; for alter-verdict, where several damages were found, the plaintiff was allowed to release those for the battery, and had judgment for the ejectment. 1 Danv. 3. If this is law, it shews that causes of action cannot in every instance be joined, where the same plea will go to the whole. The doctrine in Danvers, seems to be law, for supposing, ejectment, assault, and battery, &c. joined in one action, and a general verdict on not guilty for the plaintiff; a new execution on such a judgment must be framed. Indeed the joining two such actions, seems rather absurd. Although persons may join in the personality, they shall always sever in actions concerning the realty; and waste being a mixed action, favouring of the realty, that being more worthy, draws overs the personality with it. 2 Mod. 62. A person cannot, as administrator, &c. join an action for the right of another, with any action in his own right; because the costs will be entire, and it cannot be distinguished how much he is to have as administrator, and how much for himself. 1 Salk. 10. See a variety of cases, well selected and digested on this subject. Com. Dig. tit. Action.

It remains now to consider,

I. By whom, and against whom, Actions may be brought.

II. What particular Actions are adapted to particular Cases.

It may be previously observed that an action does not lie before a cause of action accrued; and if it be not pleaded in abatement, yet if it appears on the record, it may be moved in arrest of judgment; 2 Lev. 197: Carib. 114: vide Sho. 147; or assigned for error; Cro. Eliz. 325. See further Kyl's Com. Dig. tit. Abatement, (G. 6.) and Action, (E.)

In some cases, certain things are required by act of parliament to be done by the plaintiff, previous to the commencement of an action, or he cannot recover; as in actions against justices of the peace, a month's notice must be given by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44.—vide Morgan's Vade Mec. 20.

ACTION II.

I. In all actions there must be a person able to sue; the party sued must be one sueable for the thing laid; and the plaintiff is to bring his right and proper action which the law gives him for relief. 1 Shep. Abr. 20. There are three sorts of damages or wrongs, either of which is a sufficient foundation for an action. 1. Where a man suffers damages in his fame and credit. 2. Where one has damage to his person, as by battery, imprisonment, &c. which respects his liberty. 3. Where a person suffers any damage in his property. Curb. Rep. 416.

A man attainted of treason or felony, convict of recusancy, an outlaw, excommunicated person, convict of præmunire, an alien enemy, &c. cannot bring an action, till pardon, reversal, absolution, &c. But executors or administrators, being outlawed, may sue in the right of the testator or intestate, though not in their own right. A feme covert must sue with her husband; and infants are to sue by guardian, &c. Co. Lit. 128. Actions may be brought against all persons, whether attainted of treason or felony, a convict recusant, outlawed or excommunicate, &c. and a feme covert must be sued with her husband. A fine facinus, or any writ to which the defendant may plead, or by which the plaintiff may recover, is an action, 6 Rep. 3: Salk. 5. See tit. Abatement.

II. There are various kinds of actions, suited to different cases, as actions of COVENANT, DEBT, DETINUE, TRESPASS, TROVER, &c. which see under their respective titles.

But where the law has made no provision, or rather, where no general action could well be framed before hand, the ways of injuring, and methods of deceiving being so various, every person is allowed to bring a special action on his own case. 1 New Abr. 44: Co. Lit. 56. a: 6 Mod. 53, 54.

This action is, in practice, become the most universal of any; as most of the other actions may, under particular circumstances, be resolved into this, which it will be necessary, therefore, to consider somewhat largely.

Action upon the case is a general action given for redress of wrongs and injuries, done without force, and not particularly provided against by law, in order to have satisfaction for damage; and (by stat. 19 H. 7. c. 9,) in actions upon the case, the like process is to be had as in actions of trespass or debt. It is called action on the case, because the whole cause or case, as much as in the declaration (except time and place) is set down in the writ; and there is no other action given in the case, save only where the plaintiff hath his choice to bring this or another action. Formerly, all actions were sued in the court of Common Pleas, and there the foundation of the suit is, a writ, called an original, whereupon the capias is grounded, and which original contains the nature of the plaintiff's complaint at large; and it is the same where suits are commenced in B. R. by original out of Chancery.

In all cases, where a man has a temporal loss, or damage by the wrong of another, he may have an action upon the case to be repaired in damages. But the particular damage must be specially alleged.

This action, as hath been intimated, lies in a great variety of instances, which are particularly enumerated in COMMUN'S Digest. Of these the chief are,

1. Action on the case for Words, which is brought for words spoken or written which affect a person's life, reputation, office, or trade, or tend to his loss of preferment, in marriage or service, or to his disinherittance, or which occasion him any particular damage. This action therefore will lie for charging another with any capital or other crime. To say of another he is a traitor, action lies. 1 Bulstr. 145. But if one call another a seditious, traitorous knave, no action lieth; because the words imply an intention only, and not an unlawful act. 4 Rep. 19. Nor to say of a man he deserves to be hanged; nor to call another a rogue generally, or say he will prove him to be a rogue; though it will lie to say a man is a rogue on record. 4 Rep. 15: Danv. 92. Words which charge a person with being a murderer, highwayman, or thief, in express terms, are held actionable. 1 Rel. Abr. 47. Though for saying such a one would have taken his purse on the highway, or have robbed him, an action lies not; for nothing is shewn to be done in order thereto. Cro. Eliz. 250. Likewise to say a man was in gaol for stealing any thing is not actionable, for the words do not affirm the theft. Danv. 140. But to say, I think A. B. committed such a felony; or, I dreamt he stole a horse, &c. these words are actionable. Dal. 144: 1 Danv. 105. If a felony be done, and common fame is, that such a person did it, although one may charge or arrest him on suspicion of that felony; yet a man may not affirm that he did the same, for he may be innocent all the while, and therefore affirming it hath been held actionable. Hob. 138, 203, 381.

It was heretofore held, that no action would lie for words importing a charge of murder, without an averment that the person said to be killed was dead; but the latter and better opinion is, that the party shall be intended to be dead, unless the contrary appears in the pleadings. 1 Vent. 117: Cro. Jac. 489: Sid. 53: Cro. Eliz. 560, 823. Though quare if the party is proved alive? So words accusing of sodomy. 1 Sid. 373.

When such words are spoken of another maliciously, for which, if true, the party spoken of might be punished criminally, action lies; as, to say of a person, he hath perjured himself; or that he would prove him perjured; or that he was forsworn in the court of Chancery, Common Pleas, &c. are actionable; but not to call a person forsworn man, unless it be said in a court of record. 3 Inst. 163: Danv. 87, 89. To say a man hath forged an obligation, &c. and he will prove it; this is actionable. Danv. 130.

Some writers make a difference, where the subsequent words are introduced by the word and; as, you are a thief, and have stolen, &c. which are additional, and shall not correct; and the word for; as you are a thief, for you have, &c. Hob. 386: Style 115: Godb. 89. The words, He is a maintainer of thieves, and keeps none but thieves in his house, will not support an action, unless it be averred that he knew them to be thieves. Cro. Eliz. 746.

To say an alehouse-keeper keeps a bawdy-house, action lies. Cro. Eliz. 582. Though to say of an inn-keeper, that he harbours rogues, &c. is not actionable; for his inn is common to all guests. 2 Roll. Rep. 136. To say of another he hath the French pox, action will lie. Cro. Jac. 430: See Noy, 151. To call a man a whore-master, or a woman whore, no action lies; for these are merely spiritual offences. Danv. Abr. 80. But calling a woman whore in London, is actionable, as she is liable to be punished aided by the custom of the city. See Com. Dig. action upon the case for Detraction. (D. 10.)

Words likewise are actionable which tend to the disgrace or detriment of a person in office, or of a man in the exercise of his profession or trade.

Calling an officer in the government, &c. Jacobites, hath been held actionable; not of a private person. 7 Mod. Ca. 107. To say a justice of peace doth not administer justice, is actionable. Com. Plin. 352. And so for other disgrace in his office. But words relating to a man's office, must have a plain and direct meaning, to charge him with some crime that is punishable; and be spoken of his office, or otherwise they are not actionable. 6 Mod. 200. Thus the plaintiff, being a justice of peace, the defendant said Mr. Stutely coveteth and bideth felony, and is not worthy to be a justice of peace; actionable, for though his office is not named, the words necessarily refer to it. 4 Rep. 16: See 1 Leon. 335: 1 Vent. 50.

Slander, &c. brought by a doctor of the civil law, who was also a justice of peace and chancellor of the bishoprick of Norwich, for these words, he is not fit to be a chancellor or a justice of peace, he is a knave, a rascal, and a villain, he is not fit to practice, he ought to have his gown pulled over his ears; actionable. 2 Lutw. 1288.

The defendant spoke to an officer, (viz.) *You have cozened the State of 20,000*l.* and I will prove it, for you have received 25,000*l.* of the office, and not compounded for it, and have feigned in words in the order of your commission*; actionable. Style 436.

In offices of profit, for such words as impute the want either of understanding, ability, or integrity to execute them, this action lies. But in offices of honour, words that impute want only of ability, are not actionable; as to say of a justice of peace, He a justice of peace! he is an ass, and a beetleheaded justice: the reason is, because a man cannot help his want of ability, as he may his want of honesty; otherwise where words impute dishonestly or corruption a Salk. 695. But if special damage can be proved, it is actionable; and indeed in every case, where special damage can be proved, an action will lie.

As to words tending to the disgrace or detriment of a man in his profession or trade; where the words are disgracing to a man's profession, they also must appear to be spoken precisely of it; for to say a person hath cozened one in the sale of certain goods, is not actionable; unless you shew that the party lived by such selling. 1 Roll Abr. 62.

To say of a doctor in divinity, Doctor S. is robbing the church; and at another time Doctor S. hath robbed the church; actionable. Cro. Car. 301, 417.

In case, &c. in which the plaintiff declared, that he was instituted and inducted into a parsonage in, &c. and that he executed the office of a pastor in that church for the space of four years, and that the defendant said of him, You are a drunkard, a whore-master, a common sweaver, and a common liar, and you have preached false doctrine, and deserve to be degraded; after a verdict for the plaintiff, it was objected, that the words are not actionable, because they import no civil or temporal damage to the plaintiff; but adjudged actionable; for, if true, he may be degraded, and so lose his freehold. Allen, 63.

These words spoken of a preaching parson, Parrot is an adulterer, and had two children by B.G.'s wife, and I will prove it, is actionable; for it is a probação of adultery, and punishable in that court. Cro. Car. 502.

To say of a counsellor, that he is no lawyer; that they are fools who come to him for law, and that he will get nothing by the law, action lies. 1 Daru. 113. And it is the same to say, he hath disclosed secrets in a cause.

To call a doctor of physic fool, ass, empirick, and mountebank, or say he is no scholar, are actionable. Cro. Car. 270. So to say of a schoolmaster, pat not your son to him, for he will come away as very a duncie as he went Skil. 71. Where one says of a midwife, that many have perished for her want of skill, an action will lie. Cro. Car. 211. If one calls a merchant bankrupt, action lies 1 Leon. 336. And to call a trading person bankrupt, or knave, is actionable. 1 Daru. 90. Also if one say of a merchant, that he is a beggarly fellow, and not able to pay his debts; or say of a person that he is a runaway and dares not shew his face, by reason whereof he is disgraced and injured in his calling, these are actionable. Raym. 184.

Words tending to the loss of preferment in marriage, &c. are actionable. Thus to say that a woman hath a bastard, or is with child; or that a certain person hath had the use of her body, whereby she loses her marriage action lies, i. e. by reason of the special damage. If a man is in treaty with a woman to marry, and another tell him, she is under a pre-contract; this doth not imply a scandal, but yet, if false, an action will lie if she loses her marriage by means of those words. To say of a man that he lay with a certain woman, &c. by which he loses his marriage, is actionable; for in these cases there is a temporal damage. 1 Daru. 81.

As to words tending to a person's disinherittance, if one says of another that has land by descent, that he is a bastard; action upon the case, lies, as it tends to his disinherittance. Co. Ent. 28. But to say of a son and heir apparent, that he is a bastard, action lies not until he is disinherited, or is prejudiced thereby. 1 Daru. 83. To slander the title of another person to his lands is actionable; but the words must be false, and be spoken by one that neither hath, nor pretendeth title to the land himself; and who is not of counsel to him that pretends right. 4 Rep. 17. If a man shall pretend title to the land another hath in possession, and hath no colour of title to it; and shall say he hath such a deed or conveyance of it, where in truth he hath none, or if he hath any, it is a counterfeit and forged deed, and he knows it to be so; in this case the words may be an action; but if there be any colour for what is said, they will not be actionable. Cro. Jac. 163: Tilv. 80, 88. And the party of whom the words are spoken must have, or be likely to have, some special damage by the speaking of them; as that he is hindered in the sale of his lands, or in his preferment in marriage, &c. without which it is said action doth not lie. 1 Cro. 99: Cro. Jac. 213, 397: Poph. 187: 2 Bull. 90. The affirming that another hath title to the land, where actionable, see 4 Rep. 175.

If A. says, that B. said that C. did a certain scandalous thing, C. shall have action against A. with averment that B. never said so, whereby A. is the author of the scandal. Supposing B. did not in fact say so. Cro. Jac. 406. See 1 Roll Abr. 64.

It is to be observed in general, that though scandalous words are spoken before a man's face, or behind his back, by way of affirmation, or report, when drunk, or sober; and although they are spoken in any other than the English language, if they are understood by the hearers, they are actionable; also words may be actionable in one county, which are not so in another, by the different construction, &c. 4 Rep. 14: Hob. 165, 236. But if the defendant can make proof of the words, he may, in an action for damages, plead a special justification. Co. Ent. 26. The words to maintain this action must be direct and certain, that there may be no intendment against them; but as some words separate, without others joined with them, are not actionable; so some words that are actionable may be qualified by the precedent or subsequent words, and all the words are to be taken together. 4 Rep. 17: 1 Cro. 327: Moor Ca. 174, 331. vide 4 Rep. 20: Hob. 126. Where words spoken are somewhat uncertain, they may by apt averments be made certain and actionable. 2 Bull. 227. So by the pleadings of the parties, and verdict of a jury for the plaintiff. Cro. Jac. 107. The thing charged by the words must be that which is possible to have been done; for if it be of a thing altogether and apparently impossible, no action lies. 4 Rep. 16. No action will lie for words spoken in pursuit of a prosecution in an ordinary course of justice; as where a lawyer, in pleading his client's cause, utters words according to his instructions; as saying of one he is a bastard, when this is to defend the party's own title where he himself doth claim to be heir of the land that is in question, these words will not bear an action. Cro. Jac. 90: 4 Rep. 13.

In this action the nature of the words must be set forth with the manner of speaking them, when and where spoken, and before whom, and the damage thereby to the plaintiff; that his credit was, and how, impaired, with the aggravating circumstances; but it matters not whether the plaintiff doth in his declaration set forth all the circumstantial words as they are spoken; so as to shew the very words that are actionable, and the substance of them, &c.

There is no branch of the law in which the decided cases are so contradictory to each other, and the decisions so frequently irreconcilable to their avowed principles, as this action on the case for words; many cases in the old authors are certainly not law, and the fairest observation on the subject is that "what words are actionable or not, will be more satisfactorily determined by an accurate application of the general principles, on which such actions depend, than by a reference to adjudged cases, especially those in old Authors." See the case of Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177; where the principles are well explained.

2. Action on the case likewise lies upon an Assumpsit or undertaking; and such action is founded on a contract either express or implied by law, and the verdict gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92: Moor 657. See tit. Assumpsit.

3. It has been premised, that a special action on the case lies in all instances wherein no general action could be framed; it will be necessary therefore to point out some of those particular cases in which it is most peculiarly applicable.

It was formerly held, that if my fire, by misfortune, burnt the goods of another man, for this wrong he should have action on the case against me; and if my servant put a candle or other fire in any place in my house, and this burnt my house and the house of my neighbour, action on the case lay for him against me: 1 Danv. 10: But this action is now destroyed by stat. 6 Ann. c. 31. See tit. Fire, Waste.

Action on the case likewise lies against Carriers and others upon the custom of England. See tit. Carrier.

A common Inn-keeper is chargeable for goods stolen in his house. See tit. Inns and Inn-keeper.

This action lies for Deceit in contracts, bargains, and sales; if a vintner sells wine, knowing it to be corrupt, as good and not corrupt, though without warranty, action lies. Danv. 173. So if a man sells a horse, and warrants him to be sound of his limbs, if he be not, action on the case lies. A person warrants a horse, wind and limb, that hath some secret disease known to the seller, but not to the buyer, this action may be brought; though if one sell a horse and warrant him sound, and he hath at the time visible infirmities, which the buyer may see, action on the case will not lie. Yelv. 114: Cro. Jac. 675. Where one sells me any wares or commodities, and is to deliver that which is good, but delivers what is naught; or sells any thing by false or deceitful weights and measures, with or without warranty, action on the case lies; and so where a man doth sell corrupt victuals, as bread, beer, or other thing for food, and knows it to be unwholesome. Dyer 75: 4 Rep. 18: Cro. Jac. 270. Yet if the buyer or his servant shall see and taste the victuals, &c. and like and accept the same, no action can be maintained. 7 H. 4. 16. Nor will case lie upon a warranty of what is out of a man's power, or of a future thing; as that a horse shall carry a man thirty miles a day, or the like. Finch 188. If a man sells certain packs of wool, and warrants that they are good and merchantable, if they are damaged, action on the case lies against him. 1 Danv. 187. The bare affirmation by the seller of a particular sort of diamond, without warranting it to be such, will not maintain an action. Cro. Jac. 4. 106. But where a man hath the possession of a personal thing, the affirming it to be his own is a warranty that it is so; though it is otherwise in case of lands, where the buyer at his peril is to see that he hath title. 1 Salk. 210. If a person sells to another cattle or goods, that are not his own, action on the case lies; so if he warrants cloth to be of such a length, that is deficient of it. See tit. Deceit.

For Neglect or Malefeasance; as if a taylor, &c. undertakes to make a suit of clothes, and spoils them, action lies: and if a carpenter promises to repair my house before a certain day, and doth not do it, by which my house falls: or if he undertakes to build a house for me, and doth it ill, action on the case lies. 1 Danv. 32. If a surgeon neglects his patient, or applies unwholesome medicines, whereby the patient is injured, this action lieth. And if a counsel retained to appear on such a day in court, doth not come, by which the cause miscarries, action lies against him: so if after retainer, he become of counsel to the adversary against the plaintiff. 11 H. 6. 18.

Where a smith promises to shoe my horse well, if he pricks him, action on the case lies; and so when he refuses to shoe him, on which I travel without, and my horse is damaged. For stopping up a water-course or way; by knocking down a party wall; stopping of ancient lights; and for any private nuisance to a man's water, light, or air, whereby a person is damaged, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 427: Fab. 259.

Where any one perfonates another, for cheating at gaming, where a surety is not saved harmless, Id. 2 Inf. 195.

If I lend another my horse to ride so far; and he rides further, or forward and backward, or doth not give him meat, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 141. And where one lends me a horse for a time; if he take him from me within that time, or disturb me before I have done what I hired him for, action on the case lies: and though I ride the horse out of the way in my journey, he may not take him from me. 8 Rep. 146. See tit. Bailment. This action lies for keeping a dog accustomed to bite sheep, if the owner knew the vicious quality of the dog. But not for a man's dog running at my sheep, though he kills them, if it be without his consent, and he did not know that the dog was accustomed to bite sheep. Vide 1 Danv. Abr. 19: Hist. 171.

Action on the case will lie against a Gaoler for putting irons on his prisoner; or putting him in the stocks, or not giving sufficient sustenance to him, being committed for debt. F. N. B. 83. The master may in many cases have this action against his servant, steward, or bailiff, for any special abuse done to him, and for negligence, &c. Also it lies for taking or enticing away my servant, and retaining him; or threatening a servant, whereby I lose his service. Lane 68: Cro. Eliz. 777: 1 Shep. Abr. 58, 59. A servant is trusted with goods and merchandize consigned to him by a merchant, to pay the customs for them, and dispose of them to profit; if he deceive the merchant, and have allowance for it on his account, and to defraud the king, lands some of the goods without paying the customs, by which they are forfeited, action on the case lieth. Lane 65: Cro. Jac. 266.

If I trust one to buy a lease or other thing for me, and he buyeth it for himself, or doth not buy it, this action lies against him; but if he doth his endeavour it sufficeth. Bro. 117. Where a man is disturbed in the use of a seat in the church, which he hath had time out of mind; a steward is hindered in the keeping of his courts; a keeper of a forest disturbed in taking the profits of his office; a bailiff in distraining for an amercement, or the like; action on the case will lie. Bendl. 89: Lib. Intr. 5: Moor 987. An action on the case lies for him in reversion, against a stranger, for damage to his inheritance, though there be a term in esse. 3 Lev. 360. Also if a lessor comes to the house he has demised, to see if it be out of repair, or any waste be done, and meets with any disturbance therein; or if one disturbs a parson in taking his tithes, this action lies. Cro. Jac. 478: 2 Inf. 650. And for setting up a new mill on a river, to the prejudice of another who hath an ancient mill, an action will lie. Lib. Intr. 9.

Action on the case likewise lies for and against commoners, &c. for injuries done in commons. Sy. 164: Sid. 106: Cro. Jac. 165: 2 Inf. 474. See tit. Common.

Action on the case may likewise be brought for malicious prosecutions: where a suit is without ground, and one is arrested, action on the case lies for unjust vexation: And for falsely and maliciously arresting a person for more than is due to the plaintiff, whereby the defendant is imprisoned, for want of bail; or if it be on purpose to hold him to bail, action on the case will lie, after the original action is determined. 1 Lev. 360: 2 Balk. 15. An action likewise lies against sheriffs for default in executing writs; permitting escapes, &c.

Actions on the case likewise lie for conspiracy, escape and rescue, nuisances, &c. which see under the several titles. And for a general abridgment of the law on this subject, see Cow. Dig. tit. Actions.

ACTION PREJUDICIAL, (otherwise called preparatory, or principal) is an action which arises from some doubt in the principal; as in case a man sues his younger brother for lands descended from his father, and it is objected against him that he is a bastard; now this point of bastardy is to be tried before the cause can any further proceed: and therefore it is termed prejudicialis, quia prius judicanda. Bract. lib. 3. c. 4. numb. 6: Cowel.

ACTION OF A WRIT, is a phrase of speech used, when one pleads some matter, by which he shews the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ he brought, yet it may be that he may have another writ or action for the same matter. Such a plea is called a plea to the action of the writ; whereas, if by the plea it should appear that the plaintiff hath no cause to have an action for the thing demanded, then it is called a plea to the action. Cowel; Termes de la Ley.

ACTIONARE, i. e. In jus vocare, or to prosecute one in a suit at law. Tiborn's Chron.

ACTO, Action, Aketon, Fr. Hauqueton.] A coat of mail. Du Fresno.

ACTON BURNEL. The statute of 11 Ed. 1. ann. 1283, ordaining the statute merchant: it was so termed from a place named Acton-Burnel, where it was made; being a castle formerly belonging to the family of Burnel, and afterwards of Lovel, in Shropshire. Cowel: Termes de la Ley.

ACTOR. The proctor or advocate in civil courts or causes. Actor dominicus, was often used for the lord's bailiff or attorney. Actor ecclesie was the ancient forensick term for the advocate or pleading patron of a church. Actor villa was the steward or head bailiff of a town or village. Cowel.

ACTS DONE, Are distinguished into acts of God, the acts of the law, and acts of men. The act of God shall prejudice no man: as where the law prescribeth means to perfect or settle any right or estate; if by the act of God the means, in some circumstances, become impossible, no party shall receive any damage thereby. Co. Lit. 123: 1 Rep. 97. As in an action on the case a bargeman may justify, by pleading that there were several passengers in his barge, and a sudden tempest arising, all the goods in the barge were thrown overboard to save the lives of the passengers. See tit. Carrierr.

The acts of the law are esteemed beyond the acts of man: and when to the perfection of a thing divers acts are required, the law hath most regard to the original act. 8 Rep. 78. The law will construe things to be lawfully done, when it standeth indifferent whether they should be lawful or not: but whatsoever is contrary to law is accounted not done. Co. Lit. 42: 3 Rep. 74. Our law doth favour substantial more than circumstantial acts; and regards deeds and acts more than words: and the law doth not require unnecessary things. Plowd. 10.

As to acts of men; that which a man doth by another, shall be said to be done by himself; but personal things cannot be done by another. Co. Lit. 153. A man cannot not do an act to himself, unless it be where he hath a double capacity; no person shall be suffered to do any thing against his own act; and every man's acts shall be construed most strongly against himself. 1 Inst. 140. But if many join in an act, and some may not lawfully do it, it shall be adjudged the act of him who might lawfully do the same. Dyer 192. Acts that men are forced by necessity and compulsion to do, are not regarded: and an act done between persons shall not injure a stranger not party or privy thereto. Plow. 17: 6 Rep. 16.

Where mutual acts are to be done, who is to do the first act, see tit. Condition.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT. See tit. Statute.

ACTUARY, actuarius.] A clerk that registers the acts and constitutions of the Convocation.

AD CREDULITARE. To purge one's self of an offence by oath. Legis Inc. c. 36.

ADDITION. The title or estate, and place of abode given to a man besides his name. See tit. Abatement. I. 3. (c.)

ADELING, Ethling or Edling, from the Saxon ædelan, noble or excellent.] A title of honour amongst the Anglo-Saxons; properly belonging to the king's children; it being usual for the Saxons to join the word king to the paternal name, signifying a son, or the younger. King Edward the Confessor having no issue, and intending to make Edgar, his nephew, the heir of the kingdom, gave him the title and title of Adeling. It was also used among the Saxons for the nobles in general. Spelm. Gloss. Lamb.

ADEMPTION. A taking away of a legacy. See Legacy.

AD INQUIRENDUM. A judicial writ commanding enquiry to be made of any thing relating to a cause depending in the king's courts. It is granted upon many occasions for the better execution of justice. Reg. Judic. See tit. Writ of Inquiry.

ADJOURNMENT, adjournamentum. Fr. adjournement.] A putting off until another time or place. As adjournment in eyre, (by stat. 2 E. 3. c. 11. & 25 E. 3. c. 18.) is an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre will sit again. A court, the parliament, and writs, &c. may be adjourned; and the substance of the adjournment of courts is to give licence to all parties that have any thing to do in court to forbear their attendance, till such a time. Every last day of the term, and every eve of a day in term, which is not dies juridicus, or a law day, the court is adjourned. 2 Inst. 26. The terms may be adjourned to some other place, and there the King's Bench and other courts at Westminster be held: and if the king puts out a proclamation for the adjournment of the term, this is a sufficient warrant to the keeper of the Great Seal to make out writs accordingly; and proclamation is to be made, appointing all persons to keep their day, at the time and place to which, &c. 1 And. 279: 1 Lev. 176. Though by Magna Charta the court of Common Pleas is to be held at Westminster, yet necessity will sometimes supersede the law, as in the case of a plague, a civil war, &c. In the first year of Charles I. a writ of adjournment was delivered to all the justices, to adjourn two returns of Trinity term: and in the same year Michaelmas term was adjourned until crastino animum to Reading; and the king by proclamation signified his pleasure, that his court should be there held. Cro. Car. 13, 27. In the 17th of Charles II. the court of B. R. was adjourned to Oxford, because of the plague; and from thence to Winchester; and afterwards to Westminster again. 1 Lev. 176, 178.

On a foreign plea pleaded in assise, &c. the writ shall be adjourned into the Common Pleas to be tried; and after adjournment, the tenant may plead a new plea pursuant to the first; but if he pleads in abatement a plea triable by the assise, on which it is adjourned, he cannot plead in bar afterwards, &c. 1 Danv. Adv. 249. The justices of assise have power to adjourn the parties to Westminster, or to any other place; and by the express words of Magna Charta, (cap. 12.) they may adjourn, &c. into C. B. before the judges there. Dyer 132.

If the judges of the court of King's Bench, &c. are divided in opinion, two against two, upon a demurrer or special verdict (not on a motion) the cause must be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber, to be determined by all the judges of England. 3 Mod. 156: 5 Mod. 335.

ADIRATUS, Strayed, lost. See Brati. l. 3. tract. 2. c. 32.

AD JURA REGIS. A writ brought by the king's clerk presented to a living, against those that endeavour to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title. Reg. of Writs, 61.

AD LARGUM, At large: It is used in the following and other expressions: title at large, assise at large, verdict at large; to vouch at large, &c.

ADLEGIARE, or alcier in Fr.] To purge himself of a crime by oath. See the laws of king Alfred, in Brompt. Chron. cap. 4 & 13.

ADMEASUREMENT, Writ of, admesuratio.] Is a writ brought for remedy against such persons as usurp more than their share. It lies in two cases; one is termed admeasurement of dower, (admesuratio dotis), where a man's widow after his decease holdeth from the heir more land, &c. as dower, than of right belongs to her: and the other is admeasurement of pasture, (admesuratio pasturæ), which lies between those that have common of pasture, where any one or more of them surcharge the common. Reg. Orig. 156, 171. In the first case the heir shall have this writ against the widow whereby she shall be admeasured, and the heir restored to the overplus; and in the last case it may be brought against all the other commoners, and him that surcharged; for all the commoners shall be admeasured. Termes de Ley. 23. See tit. Common and Dower.

ADMINICLE, adminiculum.] Aid, help, or support. See stat. 1. E. 4. c. 1.

ADMINISTRATOR, Lat] He that hath the goods of a man dying intestate committed to his charge by the Ordinary, for which he is accountable when thereunto required. For matters relating to this title, and to Administration in general, see tit. Executor.

ADMINISTRATRIX, Lat] She that hath goods and chattels of an intestate committed to her charge, as an administrate.

ADMIRAL. Admiratus, admirallus, admiralis, capitaneus or custos maris, from the French amiral, or from the Saxon, æn mearl, over all the sea; and in ancient time the office of the admiralty was called custodia maritimæ Angliæ. Co. Lit. 260. Many other fanciful derivations are recapitulated in Spelman's Glossary, and see Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty.—The term appears to have been first used temp. E. 1. and the first Admiral of England, by name, was Richard Fitz Alan Earl of Arunel 10 Ric. 2.] A High Officer or magistrate, having the government of the king's navy; and (in his court of Admiralty) the determining of all causes belonging to the sea and offences committed thereon.—The office is now usually executed by Commissioners who, by stat. 2 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2., are declared declared to have the same authorities jurisdictions and powers as the Lord High Admiral, who is usually understood by this term in law, not adverting to the naval distinctions.

Under this head therefore shall be included all that relates as well to such ADMIRAL as to the COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

The warden of the Cinque Ports has the jurisdiction of Admiral within those ports exempt from the admiralty of England, 4 Inst. 223; 2 Inst. 556; 2 Jon. 67; 1 Jenk. 85. It appears that antiently the Admirals of England had jurisdiction of all causes of merchants and mariners, happening not only upon the main sea, but in all foreign parts within the king's dominions, and without them, and were to judge them in a summary way, according to the laws of Oleron and other sea laws. 4 Inst. 75. In the time of king Ed. 1. and king John, all causes of merchants and mariners, and things arising upon the main sea, were tried before the lord Admiral: but the first title of Admiral of England, expressly conferred upon a subject, was given by patent of king Rich. 2. to the earl of Arundel and Surry. In the reign of Ed. 3. the court of admiralty was established, and Ric. 2. limited its jurisdiction.

By the statute 13 Rich. 2. c. 5, it is enacted, that upon complaint of encroachments made by the admirals and their deputies, the admirals and their deputies shall meddle with nothing done within the realm, but only with things done upon the sea. For the construction of this statute, see 2 Bulstr. 323; 3 Bulstr. 205; 13 Co. 52.

By stat. 15 Ric. 2. c. 3, it is declared, that all contracts, pleas and quarrels, and other things done within the bodies of counties by land or water, and of wreck, the admiral shall have no cognisance, but they shall be tried, &c. by the law of the land; but of the death of a man, and if mayhem done in great ships, being in the main stream of great rivers beneath the points near the sea, and in no other place of the same river, the admiral shall have cognisance, and also to arrest ships in the great shotes, for the great voyages of the king and the realm, sacred to the king his forfeitures; and shall have jurisdiction in such shotes during such voyages, only saving to lords, &c. their liberties.

By the statute 2 Hen. 4. c. 11, reciting the 13 R. 2. c. 5, it is enacted, that he that finds himself aggrieved against the form of the statute, shall have his action by writ grounded upon the case against him that so pursues in the admiralty, and recover double damages against him, and he shall incur the pain of tol. if he be attainted.

By stat. 27 H. 8. c. 4, All offences of piracy, robbery, and murder done on the sea, or within the admiral's jurisdiction, shall be tried in such places of the realm as shall be limited in the king's commissions, directed to the lord admiral and his lieutenant and deputies and other persons to determine such offences after the common course of law, as if the same offences had been done on land.

By the statute 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15, "all treasons, felonies, robberies, and murders, &c. upon the sea, or within the admiralty jurisdiction, shall also be tried in such shires and places in the realm, as shall be limited by the king's commission, as if done on land, and the consequences of the offences are the same. See 3 Inst. 111, 112. But in cases which would be manslaughter at land the jury is always directed to acquit. Foster 288.

It was held, Telv. 134, That by force of this statute, accessories to robbery, &c. could not be tried; but this is remedied by 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7; by which their aiders and comforters, and the receivers of their goods are made accessories, and to be tried as pirates by 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15; also the said statute 11 & 12 W. 3. directs how pirates may be tried beyond sea, according to the civil law, by commission under the great seal of England.—See title Piracy.

By the statute 5 Eliz. cap. 5, several offences in the act mentioned, if done on the main sea, or coasts of the sea, being no part of the body of any county, and without the precinct jurisdiction and liberties of the cinque-ports, and out of any haven and pier, shall be tried before the admiral or his deputy, and other justices of oyer and terminer, according to the statute of 28 H. 8. c. 15.

By the statute 1 Ann. cap. 9, captains and mariners belonging to ships, and destroying the same at sea, shall be tried in such places as shall be limited by the king's commission, and according to 28 H. 8. c. 15. The statute 10 Ann. cap. 10, directs how the trial shall be had of officers and soldiers, that either upon land out of Great Britain, or at sea, hold correspondence with a rebel enemy. See tit. Piracy, Treason.

And by the statute 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11, all persons who shall commit any offence for which they ought to be adjudged pirates, felons, or robbers, by 11 & 12 W. 3. may be tried and judged for every such offence according to the form of 28 H. 8. c. 15, and shall be excluded from the benefit of clergy.

The jurisdiction of the lord admiral therefore is confined to the main sea, or coasts of the sea, not being within any county. Thus, the admiralty hath cognisance of the death or maim of a man, committed in any ship riding in great rivers, beneath the bridges thereof, next the sea: but by the common law, if a man be killed upon any arm of the sea, where the land is seen on both sides, the coroner is to enquire of it, and not the admiral; for the county may take cognisance of it; and where a county may inquire, the lord admiral hath no jurisdiction. 3 Rep. 107.

All ports and havens are infra corpus comitatus, and the admiral hath no jurisdiction of any thing done in them: between high and low water mark, the common law and admiral have jurisdiction by turns; one upon the water and the other upon the land. 3 Inst. 113. By the statutes for disciplining the navy, every commander, officer and soldier of ships of war, shall observe the commands of the admiral, &c. on pain of death or other punishment. See tit. Navy.

Under these statutes the lord admiral hath power to grant commissions to inferior vice-admirals, &c. to call courts martial, for the trial of offences against the articles of war; and these courts determine by plurality of voices, &c. See tit. Navy.

The Admiralty is said not to be a court of record, by reason it proceeds by the Civil law. 4 Inst. 135. But the admiralty has jurisdiction where the common law can give no remedy; and all maritime causes, or causes arising wholly upon the sea, it hath cognisance of. Fide as to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, 1 Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty. The admiralty hath jurisdiction in cases of freight, mariners wages, breach of charter-parties, though made within the realm; if the penalty be not demanded: and likewise in case of building, mending, saving, and victualling ships, &c. so as the suit be against the ship, and and not against the parties only. 2 Cro. 216. Mariners' wages are contracted on the credit of the ship, and they may all join in suits in the admiralty; whereas at common law they must all sever: the master of a ship contracts on the credit of the owners, and not of the ship; and therefore he cannot prosecute in the admiralty for his wages. 1 Salk. 33. It is allowed by the common lawyers and civilians, that the lord admiral hath cognizance of seamens wages, and contracts, and debts for making ships; also of things done in navigable rivers, concerning damage done to persons, ships, goods, annoyances of free passage, &c. And of contracts, and other things done beyond sea, relating to navigation and trade by sea. Wood's Inst. 218. But if a contract be made beyond sea, for doing of an act or payment of money within this kingdom; or the contract is upon the sea, and not for a marine cause, it shall be tried by a jury; for where part belongs to the common law, and part to the admiral, the common law shall be preferred. And contracts made beyond sea may be tried in B. R. and a fact be laid to be done in any place in England, and so tried here. 2 Bulfr. 322.

Where a contract is made in England, and there is a conversion beyond sea, the party may sue in the admiralty, or at common law. 4 Leon. 257. An obligation made at sea, it has been held, cannot be sued in the admiral's court, because it takes its course, and binds according to the common law. Hob. 12. The court of admiralty can not hold plea of a matter arising from a contract made upon the land, tho' the contract was concerning things belonging to the ship: but the admiralty may hold plea for the seamens wages, &c. because they become due for labour done on the sea; and the contract made upon land, is only to ascertain them. 3 Lev. 60. Though where there is a special agreement in writing, by which seamen are to receive their wages, in any other manner than usual; or if the agreement at land be under seal, so as to be more than a parol contract, it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 31. See Hob. 79.

If the master pawns the ship on the high sea out of necessity for tackling or provision, without the consent of the owners, it shall bind them; but 'tis otherwise where the ship is pawned for the master's debt: the master can have no credit abroad, but upon the security of the vessel; and the admiralty gives remedy in these cases. 1 Salk. 35. The master hath a right to hypothecate the ship, for any debt, incurred on her account. Vide Co. Lit. 134, 140. Tho' the agreement is made, and the money lent at land. 1 Lord Raym. 152. Benson v. Jefferies. Sale of goods (taken by piracy) in open market, is not binding by the admiralty law, the owner may therefore retake them; but at common law the sale is binding, of which the admiralty must take notice. 1 Roll. Abr. Vide 2 Vent. 308.

If a ship is taken by pirates upon the sea, and the master, to redeem the ship, contracts with the pirates to pay them 50*l.* and pawns his person for it, and the pirates carry him to the isle of S. and there he pays it with money borrowed, and gives bond for the money, he may sue in the admiralty for the 50*l.* because the original cause arose upon the sea, and what followeth was but accessory and consequential. Hard. 183.

If goods delivered on ship-board are imbezilled, all the mariners ought to contribute to the satisfaction of the party that lost his goods, by the maritime law, and the cause is to be tried in the admiralty. 1 Lill. 368. By the custom of the admiralty, goods may be attached in the hands of a third person, in causa maritima & civili, and they shall be delivered to the plaintiff, after defaults, on caution to restore them, if the debt, &c. be disproved in a year and a day; and if the party refuse to deliver them, he may be imprisoned grossus, &c. March Rep. 204.

The court of admiralty may cause a party to enter into bond in nature of caution or stipulation, like bail at common law; and if he render his body, the sureties are discharged; and execution shall be of the goods, or of the body, &c. not of the lands. Guth. 260: 1 Sbep. Abr. 129: See 1 Salk. 33: T. Rep. 75: 2 Lord Ray. 1286: Fitz. 197.

A person in execution, on judgment in the admiral's court, upon a contract made on the land in New England was discharged, being out of the admiralty jurisdiction. 3 Cro. 603: 1 Cro. 685. And where sailors' cloaths were bought in St. Katherine's parish near the Tower, London, which were delivered in the ship; on a suit in the admiralty for the money, prohibition was granted; for this was within the county: so of a ship lying at Blackwall, &c. Owen 122: Hughes's Abr. 113. But the admiralty may proceed against a ship, and the sails and tackle, when they are on shore, although alledged to be detained at land; yet upon alledging offer of a plea, claiming property therein, and refusal of the plea, on this suggestion a prohibition shall be had. 1 Shew. 179.

If there be a war with the Dutch, and an Englishman, having letters of mark, takes an Offender for a Dutch ship, and brings it into a haven, and libels against it to have it condemned as a prize; but sentence be given that it is no prize; the Offender may libel in the admiralty against the captain, for the damage the ship received while it lay in the port; for the original taking being at sea, the bringing it into the port, in order to have it condemned, is but a consequence thereof. 1 Lev. 243: 1 Sid. 367.

If an English ship takes a French ship, the French being in enmity with us, and such ship is libelled against, and after due notice on the exchange, &c. declared a lawful prize, the king's proctor may exhibit a libel in the admiralty court, to compel the taker (who converted the lading to his own use) to answer the value of the prize to the king; although it was objected, that by the first sentence the property was vested in the king, and that this second libel was in nature of an action of trover, of which the court of admiralty cannot hold plea. Carth. 399.—[This must be understood of a capture without the authority of letters of marque or reprisal.]

If the owner of a ship victuals it and furnishes it to sea, with letters of reprisal, and the master and mariners when they are at sea commit piracy upon a friend of the king, without the notice or assent of the owner, yet by this the owner shall lose his ship by the admiralty law, and our law ought to take notice thereof. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. But see 1 Roll. Rep. 285.

By the civil law, and custom of merchants, if the ship be cast away, or perish through the mariners' defaults, they lose their wages; so if taken by pirates, or if they run away; for if it were not for this policy, they would forsake the ship in a storm, and yield her up to enemies in any danger. 1 Sid. 179: 1 Mod. 93: 1 Vent. 146.

The admiralty court may award execution upon land; tho' not hold plea of any thing arising on land. 4 Inst.

ADMIRAL.

141. And upon letters missive or request, the admiralty here may award execution on a judgment given beyond sea, where an Englishman flies or comes over hither, by imprisonment of the party, who shall not be delivered by the common law. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. When sentence is given in a foreign admiralty, the party may libel for execution of that sentence here; because all courts of admiralty in Europe are governed by the civil law. Sid. 418. Sentences of any admiralty in another kingdom are to be credited, that ours may be credited there, and shall not be examined at law here; but the king may be petitioned, who may cause the complaint to be examined; and, if he finds just cause, may send to his ambassador where the sentence was given, to demand redress, and, upon failure thereof, will grant letters of marque and reprisal. Raym. 473.

If one is sued in the admiralty, contrary to the statutes 13 R. 2. stat. 1. c. 5; & 15 R. 2. c. 3, he may have a superfedeas, to cause the judge to stay the proceedings, and also have action against the party suing. 10 Rep. 75. A ship being privately arrested by admiralty process only, and no suit, it was adjudged a prosecution within the meaning of the statutes; and double damages, &c. shall be recovered. 1 Salk. 31, 32.

By stat. 8 Eliz. c. 5, if an erroneous judgment is given in the admiralty, appeal may be had to delegates appointed by commission out of chancery, whose sentence shall be final. See 4 Inst. 339. But from the prize court (see post) appeal lies to commissioners consisting of the privy council. Doug. 614. Appeals may be brought from the inferior admiralty courts to the lord high admiral: but the lord warden of the cinque ports hath jurisdiction of admiralty exempt from the admiralty of England. A writ of error doth not lie upon a sentence in the admiralty, but an appeal. 4 Inst. 135, 339. There are also vice-admiralty courts in the king's foreign dominions, from which (except in case of prizes) appeals may be brought before the courts of admiralty in England, as well as to the king in council. 3 Comm. 69.

The Admiral, of right, had anciently a tenth part of all prize goods, but which is taken away by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 4; which vests the property of all ships taken, and condemned as prize in the admiralty courts, in the admirals, captains, sailors, &c. being the captors, according to proportions to be settled by the king's proclamation. This statute also enables the admiralty to grant letters of marque. (See tit. Privateers.) For the mode of proceeding in condemning prizes, see the st. & Doug. 614: 4 Term Rep. 382, as to the commissioners of Appeal.

By the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 3, his majesty's commission to all the privy councillors then and for the time being, and to the lord chief baron of the court of exchequer, the justices of the king's bench and common pleas, and barons of the said court of exchequer, then and for the time being, for hearing and determining appeals from sentences in causes of prizes pronounced in the courts of admiralty, in any of his majesty's dominions, declared valid, although such chief baron, justices and barons are not of the privy council. But no sentence shall be valid, unless the major part of the commissioners present be of the privy council. See Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty.

ADMISSION, admissio.] Is properly the ordinary's declaration that he approves of the parson presented to serve the cure of any church. Co. Lit. 344. a. When a patron of a church has presented to it, the bishop upon examination admits the clerk by saying admitto te habilem. Co. L. 344. a. Action on the case will not lie against the bishop, if he refuse to admit a clerk to be qualified according to the canons (as for any crime or impediment, illiterature, &c.) but the remedy is by writ quare non admiste, or admittendo clerico brought in that county where the refusal was. 7 Rep. 3. As to the causes of refusal by the ordinary to admit to a benefice, see tit. Parson; Quare impedit.

ADMITTANCE. See Copyhold.

ADMITTENDO CLERICO. Upon the right of presentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, or on assize of darrein presentment, the execution is by this writ; directed, not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring them to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. 3 Comm. 412; Reg. Orig. 31, 33. See tit. Parson & Quare Impedit.

If a person recovers an advowson, and six months pass; yet, if the church be void, the patron may have a writ to the bishop; and if the church is void when the writ comes to the bishop, the bishop is bound to admit his clerk. Vide Hut. 24; Hob. 152, 4; 2 Inst. 273, and 3 Com. Dig. Where a man recovers against another than the bishop, this writ shall go to the bishop; and the party may have an alias and a pluries, if the bishop do not execute the writ, and an attachment against the bishop, if need be. New Nat. Br. 84. In a quare impedit betwixt two strangers, if there appears to the court a title for the king, they shall award a writ unto the bishop, for the king.

ADMITTENDO IN SOCIUM. A writ for associating certain persons to justices of assize. Reg. Orig. 206. knights and other gentlemen of the county are usually associated with judges, in holding their assizes on the circuits.

ADNICHILED, from the Latin nihil, or nichil.] Annulled, cancelled, or made void. Stat. 28 Hen. 8.

AD QUOD DAMNUM. A writ to enquire whether a grant intended to be made by the king will be to the damage of him or others. F. N. B. 221, 2; and it ought to be issued before the king grants certain liberties; as a fair, market, &c. which may be prejudicial to others: it is directed to the sheriff, Terms de Ley 25.

Stat. 27 Ed. 1. stat. 2. § 1, ordains, that such as would purchase new parks shall have writs out of chancery to enquire concerning the same. In like manner they shall do that will purchase any fair, market, warren, or other liberty. § 4.

This writ is likewise used to enquire of lands given in mortmain to any house of religion, &c. And it is a damage to the country, that a freeholder who hath sufficient lands to pass upon assizes and jury, should alien his lands in mortmain, by which alienation his heir should not have sufficient estate after the death of the father to be sworn in assizes and juries. F. N. B. 221.

The writ of ad quod damnum is also had for the turning and changing of ancient highways; which may not be done without the king's licence obtained by this writ, on inquisition found that such a change will not be detrimental to the public. Terms de Ley 26; Vaugh. Rep. 341. Ways turned without this authority are not esteemed highways, so as to oblige the inhabitants of the hundred to make amends for robberies; nor have the subjects an interest therein to justify going there. 3 Cro. 267. If any one change an highway without this authority, he may stop the way at his pleasure. See tit. Highway.

The river Thames is an highway, and cannot be diverted without an ad quod damnum; and to do such a thing ought to be by patent of the king. Noy 105.

If there be an ancient trench or ditch coming from the sea, by which boats and vessels used to pass to the town, if the same be stopped in any part by outrageousness of the sea, and a man will sue to the king to make a new trench, and to stop the ancient trench, &c. they ought first to sue a writ of ad quod damnum; to enquire what damage it will be to the king or others. F. N. B. 225. E.

And if the king will grant to any city the assise of bread and beer, and the keeping of weights and measures, an ad quod damnum shall be first awarded, and when the same is certified, &c. then to make the grant. F. N. B. 225. E.

It appears by the writs in the register, that in ancient times, upon every grant, confirmation, &c. or licence made by the king, a writ ad quod damnum was to be first awarded, to enquire of the truth thereof; and what damage the king might have by the same; but now the practice is contrary; and in the patents of common grants of licence, a dispensation by non obstante is inserted.

ADRECTARE, addressare, i. e. ad rectum ire, restituer.] To do right, satisfy, or make amends. Geru. Doctores. anno 1170.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT. A writ of entry, that lay for the lessor or his heirs, where a lease has been made of lands or tenements, for term of life or years; and after the term is expired, the lands are withheld from the lessor by the tenant, or other person possessing the same. F. N. B. 201.

Now by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, tenants wilfully holding over, after demand and notice in writing for delivering possession, shall pay double the yearly value. See tit. Ejectment.

ADVENT, adventus.] A time containing about a month preceding the feast of the nativity (the advent or arrival) of our Saviour. It begins from the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew's day, being the 30th of November, or next to it, and continues to the feast of Christ's nativity, commonly called Christmas. Our ancestors shewed great reverence and devotion to this time, in regard to the approach of the solemn festival: for in adventu domini nulla assisa debet capi. But the statute West. 1. (3 E. 1.) c. 51, ordained that, notwithstanding the usual solemnity and times of rest, it should be (in respect of justice and charity, which ought to be times to be regarded) to take assises of novel disseisin, and ancestor, &c. in the time of Advent, Septuagesima, and Lent. This is also one of the seasons, from the beginning of which to the end of the octaves of the Epiphany, the solemnizing of marriages is forbidden, without special licence, as we may find from these old verses,

*Conjugium adventus prohibet, Hilarique relaxat;
Septuagena vetat, sed Paschæ octava reducit;
Rogatio vetitat, concedit Trina potestas.*

AD VENTREM INSPICIENDUM. See Ventre, Inspiciendo.

ADVERTISEMENTS. Under stat. 9 Anne, c. 6. § 5; and 10 Anne, c. 26. § 109, 100*l.* penalty is imposed on all persons (the latter particularly mentioning Printers) publishing the keeping of any office for illegal insurances on marriage, &c. or offices established under the pretence of improving small sums. The several penalties also imposed under the Lottery acts, (see this Dictionary, tit. Lottery.) extend to printers and publishers of news-papers in setting the advertisements of illegal lottery adventurers; and to distributors of hand-bills, &c. 4 Term Rep. 414; and several printers of papers who had incurred such penalties ignorantly, were indemnified by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 61.

By stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. s. 1, any person publicly advertising a reward with no questions asked, for the return of things stolen or lost, or making use of words in such advertisement, purporting that such reward shall be given without seizing, or making enquiry after, the person producing such thing so stolen or lost, or promising in any such advertisement to return to any person, who may have bought, or advanced money upon such thing the money so paid or advanced, or any reward for the return of such thing; and any person (such as the printers of news-papers, &c.) printing or publishing such advertisement shall forfeit 50*l.*

By stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 49, any person advertising or causing to be advertised any public entertainment or meeting for debating on the Lord's day to which persons are to be admitted by money or tickets sold, and any person printing or publishing any such advertisement, shall forfeit 50*l.* for each offence. § 3.

AD VITAM AUT CULPAM. An office is expressed to be so held, which is to determine only by the death or delinquency of the possessor; or which, in other words is held quandiu se bene gesserit. See stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 7, on Scotch Jurisdictions.

ADULTERY, adulterium, quasi ad alterius thorum; Anno 1 Hen. 7. cap. 7, and in divers old authors termed advoltery.] The sin of incontinence between two married persons; or if but one of the persons be married, it is nevertheless adultery: but in this last case it is called single adultery, to distinguish it from the other, which is double. This crime is severely punished by the laws of God, and the ancient laws of the land: (See the laws of King Edmund, c. 4: Laws of Canute, par. 2. c. 6, 50: Leg. H. 1. c. 12.) the Julian law, among the old Romans, made it death; but in most countries at this time the punishment is by fine, and sometimes banishment: in England it is punished ecclesiastically by penance, &c. It is a breach of the peace, and as such anciently indictable, but not now. Salk. 552. The usual mode of punishing adulterers at present is by action of crim. con. (as it is commonly expressed,) to recover damages; which are assessed by the jury, in proportion to the heinousness of the crime, and are frequently very heavy and severe.

Before the stat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 1. which makes malicious maiming felony, it was a question, whether cutting off the privy members of a man, taken in adultery with another man's wife, was felony or not? And it is now held that such provocation may justify the homicide of the adulterer by the injured husband, in the moment of injury. 1 Hale 488. See tit. Baron & Feme. III.

ADVOCATE. The patron of a cause assisting his client with advice, and who pleads for him: it is the same in in the Civil and Ecclesiastical law, as a counsellor at the common law. The ecclesiastical, or church advocate, was originally of two sorts; either an advocate of the causes and interest of the church, retained as a counsellor and pleader of its rights; or an advocate, advocatus, an Advowee or Avowee. Blount: Fleta lib. 5. c. 14: Britt. c. 29. Both these offices at first belonged to the founders of churches and convents, and their heirs, who were bound to protect and defend their churches, as well as to nominate or present to them.—But when the patrons grew negligent in their duty, or were not of ability or interest in the courts of justice, then the religious began to retain law advocates, to solicit and prosecute their causes. Vide Spelman.

ADVOCATIONE DECIMARUM, A writ that lies for tithes, demanding the fourth part, or upwards, that belong to any church. Reg. Orig. 29.

ADVOW, or Avow, advocate.] To justify or maintain an act formerly done, see Avowry; it also signifies to call upon or produce; antiently when stolen goods were bought by one, and sold to another, it was lawful for the right owner to take them wherever they were found, and he in whose possession they were found, was bound advocate, i. e. to produce the seller to justify the sale; and so on till they found the thief. Afterwards the word was taken for any thing which a man acknowledged to be his own, or done by him, and in this sense it is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 5. par. 4.

ADVOWSON, Advocatio.] The right of presentation to a church or benefice: and he who hath this right to present is styled patron: because they that originally obtained the right of presentation to any church, were maintainers of, or benefactors to, the same church: it being presumed that he who founded the church will avow and take it into his protection, and be a patron to defend it in its just rights. When the Christian religion was first established in England, kings began to build cathedral churches, and to make bishops: and afterwards, in imitation of them, several lords of manors founded particular churches on some part of their own lands, and endowed them with glebe; reserving to themselves and their heirs a right to present a fit person to the bishop, when the same should become void. See 2 Comm. 21—3.

Under this head shall be considered,

- I. The several kinds of advowson.
- II. How advowsons may lapse.
- III. How they may be gained by usurpation.
- IV. Of the right of presentation.

For the law relating to appropriations and impropriations of benefices, see tit. Appropriation.

I. Advowsons are of two kinds; appendant, and in gross: Appendant, is a right of presentation dependant upon a manor, lands, &c. and passes in a grant of the manor as incident to the same; and when manors were first created, and lands set apart to build a church on some part thereof, the advowson or right to present to that church became appendant to the manor. Advowson in gross is a right subsisting by itself, belonging to a person, and not to a manor, lands, &c. So that when an advowson appendant is severed by deed or grant from the corporeal inheritance to which it was appendant, then it becomes an advowson in gross. Co. Lit. 121, 122.

If he that is seised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, grants one or two acres of the manor, together with the advowson; the advowson is appendant to such acre; especially after the grantee hath presented. Watson's Compleat Incumbent, c. 7.

But this feoffment of the acre with the advowson ought to be by deed, to make the advowson appendant; and the acre of land and the advowson ought to be granted by the same clause in the deed; for if one, having a manor with an advowson appendant, grant an acre parcel of the said manor, and by another clause in the same deed grants the advowson; the advowson in such case shall not pass as appendant to the acre; but if the grant had been of the intire manor, the advowson would have passed as appendant. So if a husband, seised in right of his wife of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, doth alien the manor by acres to divers persons, saving one acre; the advowson shall be appendant to that acre. Or if a lessee for life of a manor to which an advowson belongs, alien one acre, with the advowson appendant, the advowson is thereby appendant to that acre. Watf. c. 7.

The right of advowson, tho' appendant to a manor, castle or the like, may be severed from it in other ways, and being severed, becomes an advowson in gross; and this may be effected divers ways: as, 1. If a manor or other thing to which it is appendant is granted, and the advowson excepted. 2. If the advowson is granted alone, without the thing to which it was appendant. 3. If an advowson appendant is presented to by the patron, as an advowson in gross. Gibb. 757.

A disappendency may also be temporary; that is, the appendancy, tho' turned into gross, may return; as, 1. If the advowson is excepted in a lease of a manor for life; during the lease, it is in gross, but when the lease expires it is appendant again. 2. If the advowson is granted for life, and another enfeoffed of the manor with the appurtenances; in such case at the expiration of the grant it shall be appendant; and so in other cases.

But with respect to the king, by the statute of prærogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 15, When the king gives or grants land or a manor with appurtenances; without he make express mention in his deed or writing, of advowson, the king reserveeth to himself such advowsons, albeit that among other persons it hath been observed otherwise.

Yet when he restoreth, as in case of the restitution of a bishop's temporalities; then advowsons pass without express mention, or any words equivalent thereto. 10 Co. 64.

The law, in the case of a common person, is thus set down by Rolle, out of the antient books: If a man seised of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, aliens that manor, without saying with the appurtenances (and even without naming the advowson) yet the advowson shall pass; for 'tis parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 60.

An advowson being an inheritance incorporeal, and not lying in manual occupation, cannot pass by livery; but may be granted by deed, or by will, either for the inheritance, or for the right of one or more turns, or for as many as shall happen within a time limited.

But this general rule, with regard to advowsons in gross, next avoidances, and the like, is to be understood with two limitations.

First, That it extends not to ecclesiastical persons of any kind or degree, who are seised of advowsons in the right of their churches; nor to masters and fellows of colleges, colleges, nor to guardians of hospitals, who are seised in right of their houses; all these being restrained (the bishops by the 1 Eliz. cap. 19, and the rest by the 13 Eliz. cap. 10.) from making any grants but of things corporeal, of which a rent or annual profit may be reserved; and advowsons and next avoidances, which are incorporeal and lie in grant, cannot be of that sort; and therefore such grants, however confirmed, are void against the successor; though they have been adjudged to be good against the grantors (as bishop, dean, mailer, or guardian) during their own times.

Secondly, A grant of the next avoidance may be assigned before the avoidance happens. 2 Rel. Ab. 45, &c. But an avoidance cannot be granted by a common person after it is fallen: while the church is absolutely void. Mo. 89: Dy. 129 b. : 26 a. : 283 a. : & see 2 Wiff. 197; and a grant of the advowson made after the church is actually fallen vacant is equally void; not as is said in the old books, because it is a chose in action; but because such grants might (indeed inevitably would) encourage simony. 2 Burr. 1510, 1. See tit. Simony, and see Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Advowson.

If two have a grant of the next avoidance, and one release all right and title to the other while the church is void: such release is void. But the king's grant of a void turn hath been adjudged to be good. 3 Leon. 196: Dy. 283, a. : Hob. 140.

If one be seised of an advowson in fee, and the church doth become void, the void turn is a chattel; and if the patron dieth before he doth present, the avoidance doth not go to his heir, but to his executor. Watf. c. 9.

But if the incumbent of a church be also seised in fee of the advowson of the same church, and die; his heir, and not his executors, shall present; for altho' the advowson doth not descend to the heir at the death of the ancestor, and by his death the church become void, so that the avoidance may be said in this case to be severed from the advowson before it descend to the heir, and vested in the executor; yet both the avoidance and descent to the heir happening at the same instant, the title of the heir shall be preferred as the more ancient and worthy. Watf. c. 9. fo. 72. See Watkins on Deceaseds, p. 62: 3 Lrv. 47.

Tenant by the curtesy may be of an advowson, when the wife dies before avoidance. 1 Inst. 29. a.

By last will and testament, the right of presenting to the next avoidance, or the inheritance of an advowson, may be devised to any person; and if such devise be made by the incumbent of the church, the inheritance of the advowson being in him, it is good, tho' he die incumbent; for altho' the testament hath no effect but by the death of the testator, yet it hath an inception in his lifetime. And so it is, tho' he appoint by his will who shall be presented by the executors, or that one executor shall present the other, or doth devise that his executors shall grant the advowson to such a man. Watf. c. 10.

Advowsons are either presentative, collative, or donative.

An advowson presentative is, where the patron does present or offer his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in his church.

This may be done either by word or writing. The king may present by word, or in writing under any seal, who otherwise cannot do any legal act, but by matter of record; or by letters patent under the great seal. But where a corporation aggregate doth present, it must be under seal. The presentation to a vicarage doth of common right belong to the parson. If a feme covert hath title to present, the presentation must be by husband and wife and in both their names, except in case of the queen consort. Wood's Inst. 155, &c.

A guardian by focage or by nurture cannot present to a vacant living in right of the infant heir, or in his name, because he can make no benefit of it, or account for it, though it is sometimes practised, and made good by time. Therefore the infant shall present of whatsoever age. Vide Co. Lit. 17 b. If a common patron presents first one clerk, and then another, the bishop may institute which he pleases; unless he revokes the presentation of one of them before he is admitted by the bishop. If there is a right of nomination in one, and a right of presentation in another, to the same benefice; he that has the right of nomination is the true patron, and the other is obliged to present the clerk which is nominated. 1 Inst. 156.

An advowson collative is that advowson which is lodged in the bishop; for collation is the giving of a benefice by a bishop, when he is the original patron thereof, or he gains a right by lapse.

Collation differs from institution in this; that institution is performed by the bishop upon the presentation of another, and collation is his own act of presentation; and it differeth from a common presentation, as it is the giving of the church to the parson; and presentation is the giving or offering the parson to the church. But collation supplies the place of presentation and institution; and amounts to the same as institution, where the bishop is both patron and ordinary. 1 Lit. Ab. 273.

A bishop may either neglect to collate, or he may make his collation without title; but such a wrongful collation doth not put the true patron out of possession; for after the collatee of the bishop is instituted and inducted, the patron may present his clerk; collation in this case being to be intended only as a privisional incumbency to serve the church. 1 Inst. 344.

Where a bishop gives a benefice as patron, he collates by writ jure pleno; when by lapse, jure devoluto. The collation by lapse is in right of the patron. F. N. B. 31. See post, Lapse II.

An advowson donative is, when the king or other patron (in whom the advowson of the church is lodged) does, by a single donation in writing, put the clerk into possession, without presentation, institution, or induction. Donatives are either of churches parochial, chapels, prebends, &c. and may be exempt from all ordinary jurisdictions, so that the ordinary cannot visit them, and consequently cannot demand procurations. If the true patron of a church or chapel donative doth once present to the ordinary, and his clerk is admitted and instituted, it becomes a church presentative, and shall never have the privilege of a donative afterwards. Yet if a stranger presents to such a donative, and institution is given, all is void. 1 Inst. 153.

The right of donation descends to the heir (the ancestor dying seised, where the church became void in his lifetime) and not to the executor; which it would had it been a presentative benefice. 2 Wilson 150, 1.

There is not any case in the books to exclude the heir of a donative from his turn in this case. And a patron of a donative can never be put out of possession by an usurpation. Id. ibid.

II. A Lapse is a title given to the ordinary, to collate to a church, by the neglect of the patron to present to it within six months after avoidance. Or a lapse is a devolution of a right of presenting from the patron to the bishop; from the bishop to the archbishop; from the archbishop to the king. The term in which the title by lapse commences from one to the other successively is six months, or half a year according to the calendar, not accounting twenty-eight days to the month, as in other cases, because this computation is by the Ecclesiastical law; and because tempus semestre, in the Stat. of West. 2. chap. 5, is intended of half a year, the whole year containing 365 days; which being divided, the half year for the patron to present is 182 days. The day in which the church becomes void is not to be reckoned as part of the six months. Wood's Inst. 160: Hob. 30: 4 Rep. 17: 6 Rep. 62.

Where a patron presents his clerk before the bishop hath collated, the presentation is good, notwithstanding the six months are past, and shall bar the bishop, who cannot take any advantage of the lapse: and so if the patron makes his presentation before the archbishop hath collated, although twelve months are past; but if the bishop collates after twelve months, this bars not the archbishop. 2 Roll. Ab. 369: 2 Inst. 273. If a bishop doth not collate to benefices of his own gift, they lapse at the end of six months to the archbishop; and if the archbishop neglects to collate within six months to a benefice of his gift, the king shall have it by lapse. Dr. & Stud. c. 36. And if a church continues void several years by lapse, the successor of the king may present. Cro. Car. 258. But if the king hath a title to present by lapse, and he suffers the patron to present, and the presentee dies, or resigns before the king hath presented, if the presentation is real, and not by covin, he hath lost his presentation; for lapse is but for the first and next turn, and by the death of the incumbent, a new title is given to the patron; though it hath been adjudged that the king in such case may present at any time as long as that presentee is incumbent. 2 Cro. 216: Moor 244. When the patronage of the church is litigious, and one party doth recover against the other in a quare impedit, if the bishop be not named in the writ, and six months pass while the suit is depending, lapse shall incur to the bishop: if the bishop be named in the writ, then neither the bishop, archbishop, or king can take the benefice by lapse: and yet it is said, if the patron within the six months brings a quare impedit against the bishop, and then the six months pass without any presentation by the patron, lapse shall incur to the bishop. 2 Roll. Ab. 365: 6 Rep. 52: 1 Inst. 344: Hob. 270.

Where the bishop is a disturber, or the church remains void above six months by his fault, there shall be no lapse. 1 Inst. 344. A clerk presented being refused by the bishop for any sufficient cause, as illiterature, ill life, &c. he is to give the patron notice of it, that another may be presented in due time, otherwise the bishop shall not collate by lapse; because he shall not take advantage of his own wrong, in not giving notice to the patron as he ought to do by law. Dyer 292. And if an avoidance is by resignation, which must necessarily be to the bishop, by the act of the incumbent, or by deprivation, which is the act of the law; lapse shall not incur to the bishop, till six months after notice given by him to the patron: When the church becomes void by the death of the incumbent, &c. the patron must present in six months without notice from the bishop, or shall lose his presentation by lapse. Dyer 293, 327: 1 Inst. 135: 4 Rep. 75. And it is expressly provided, by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12, that no title conferred by lapse shall accrue upon any deprivation ipso facto, but after six months' notice of such deprivation, given by the ordinary to the patron.

In the cases of deprivation and resignation where the patron is to have notice before the church can lapse, the patron is not bound to take notice from any body but the bishop himself, or other ordinary, which must be personally given to the party, if he live in the same country; and such notice must express in certain the cause of deprivation, &c. If the patron live in a foreign county, then the notice may be published in the parish church, and affixed on the church door. Cro. Eliz. 119: Dyer 328. And this notice must be given, even though the patron himself prosecute the incumbent to deprivation. 6 Rep. 29.

There are avoidances by act of parliament, wherein there must be a judicial sentence pronounced to make the living void: if a man hath one benefice with cure, &c. and take another with cure, without any dispensation to hold two benefices, in such case the first is void by the statute 21 H. 8. c. 13; if it was above the value of 8*l.* During an avoidance, it is said that the house and glebe of the benefice are in abeyance: but by the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, the profits arising during the avoidance are given to the next incumbent towards payment of the first fruits; tho' the ordinary may receive the profits to provide for the service of the church, and shall be allowed the charges of supplying the cure, &c. for which purpose the churchwardens of the parish are usually appointed.

If a clerk is instituted to a benefice of the yearly value of 8*l.* and before induction accepts another benefice with cure, and is instituted, the first benefice is void by the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13: for he who is instituted only, is properly said to have accepted a benefice within the words of the act. 4 Rep. 78.

But if he is induced into a second benefice, the first is void in facto & jure, and not voidable only, quoad, the patron, and until he presents another; and in such case the patron ought to take notice of the avoidance at his peril, and present within the six months. Cro. Car. 258.

In cases where there ought to be notice, if none is given by the bishop or archbishop in a year and a half, whereby lapse would come to the king if it had been given: here the lapse arises not to the king, where no title arose to the inferior ordinary. Dyer 340. And it has been adjudged, that lapse is not an interest, like the patronage, but an office of trust reposed by law in the ordinary; and the end of it is, to provide the church a rector, in default of the patron: and it cannot be granted over; for the grant of the next lapse of a church, either before it falls, or after, is void. F. N. B. 34. Also if lapse incurs, and then the ordinary dies, the king shall present, and not the ordinary's executors, because it is rather an administration, than an interest. 25 E. 3. 4. A lapse may incur against an infant or feme covert, if they do not present within six months. 1 Inst. 246. But there is no lapse against the king, who may take his own time; and plenary shall be no bar against the king's title, because because nullum tempus occurrit regi. 2 Inst. 273: Dyer 351. By presentation and institution, a lapse is prevented; though the clerk is never inducted: and a donative cannot lapse either to the ordinary or the king. 2 Inst. 273: See 2 Comm. 276, and 4 Comm. 102.

III. The Usurpation of a church benefice is when one that hath no right presents to the church; and his clerk is admitted and instituted into it and hath quiet possession six months after institution before a quare impedit brought. It must commence upon a presentation, not a collation, because by collation the church is not full; but the right patron may bring his writ at any time to remove the usurper. 1 Inst. 227: 6 Rep. 30.

No one can usurp upon the king; but an usurpation may dispossess him of his presentation; so as he shall be obliged to bring a quare impedit. 3 Salk. 389. One coparcener or joint-tenant cannot usurp upon the other; but where there are two patrons of churches united, if one presents in the other's turn, it is an usurpation. Dy. 259. A presentation which is void in law, as in case of simony or to a church that is full, makes no usurpation. 2 Rep. 93.

In this case of usurpation the patron lost, by the common law, not only his turn of presentation, but also the perpetual inheritance of the advowson; so that he could not present again upon the next avoidance, unless in the mean time he recovered his right, by a real action, viz. a writ of right of advowson. 3 Comm. 243. See further tit. Darrein Presentation: Quare impedit.

But bishops in ancient times, either by carelessness or collusion, frequently instituting clerks upon the presentation of usurpers, and thereby defrauding the real patrons of their right of possession, it was in substance enacted by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 5. § 2, "that if a possessory action be brought within six months after the avoidance, the patron shall (notwithstanding such usurpation and institution) recover that very presentation;" which gives back to him the seisin of the advowson. Yet still if the true patron omitted to bring his action within six months, the seisin was gained by the usurper, and the patron, to recover it, was driven to the long and hazardous process of a writ of right. To remedy which it was farther enacted by statute 7 Anne, c. 18, "that no usurpation shall displace the estate or interest of the patron, or turn it to a mere right; but that the true patron may present upon the next avoidance, as if no such usurpation had happened." So that the title of usurpation is now much narrowed, and the law stands upon this reasonable foundation: that if a stranger usurps my presentation, and I do not pursue my right within six months, I shall lose that turn without remedy, for the peace of the church, and as a punishment for my own negligence; but that turn is the only one I shall lose thereby. Usurpation now gains no right to the usurper, with regard to any future avoidance, but only to the present vacancy; it cannot indeed be remedied after six months are past; but during those six months, it is only a species of disturbance. 3 Comm. 244.

IV. Advowsons were formerly most of them appendant to manors, and the patrons parochial barons; the lordship of the manor, and patronage of the church were seldom in different hands till advowsons were given to religious houses; but of late times the lordship of the manor and the advowson of the church have been divided; and now not only lords of manors, but mean persons have, by purchase, the dignity of patrons of churches, to the great prejudice thereof. By the common law the right of patronage is a real right fixed in the patrons or founders, and their heirs, wherein they have as absolute a property as any other man hath in his lands and tenements: for advowsons are a temporal inheritance, and lay fee; they may be granted by deed or will, and are assets in the hands of heirs or executors. Co. Lit. 119. A recovery may be suffered of an advowson; a wife may be endowed of it; a husband tenant by the curtesy; and it may be forfeited by treason or felony. 1 Rep. 56: 10 Rep. 55. If an advowson descends to coparceners, and the church after the death of their ancestors, becomes void, (by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) stat. 1. c. 5,) the eldest sister shall first present. And when coparceners, jointenants, &c. are seized of an advowson, and partition is made, to present by turns; by stat. 7 Anne, c. 18, each shall be seized of their separate estate.

Presentation is properly the act of a patron offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in a church or benefice of his gift, which is void. 2 Lit. Abr. 351.

An alien-born cannot present to a benefice in his own right; for if he purchases an advowson, and the church becomes void, the king shall present after office found that the patron is an alien. 2 Nels. 120. And by stat. 7 R. 2. c. 12, no alien shall purchase a benefice in this realm, nor occupy the same, without the king's licence, on pain of a præmunire.

Papists are disabled to present to benefices, and the Universities are to present, &c. But a Popish recusant may grant away his patronage to another, who may make presentation, where there is no fraud: See stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5 § 18, 19: 1 W. & M. c. 26: 12 Anne, c. 14: Ed. 1 Jon. 19. But by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 5, Grants of advowsons by papists are void, unless made for a valuable consideration to a protestant purchaser, and only for the benefit of protestants; and devises of advowsons, by papists are also void.

All persons who have ability to purchase or grant, have likewise ability to present to vacant benefices: but a dean and chapter cannot present the dean; nor may a clergyman who is patron present himself, though he may pray to be admitted by the ordinary, and the admission shall be good.

Coparceners are but as one patron, and ought to agree in the presentation of one person; if they cannot agree, the eldest shall present first alone, and the bishop is obliged to admit his clerk, and afterwards the others in their order shall prefer their clerks; jointenants and tenants in common, must regularly join in presentation, and if either present alone, the bishop may refuse his clerk; as he may also the clerk presented by the major part of them; but if there are two jointenants of the next avoidance, one may present the other, and two jointenants may present a third, but not a stranger.

If a rector is made bishop, the king shall present to the rectory unless he grant to the bishop, before he is consecrated, a dispensation to hold it with his bishoprick; but if an incumbent of a church is made a bishop, and the king presents or grants that he should hold the church in commendam which is quasi a presentation, a grantee of the next avoidance or presentation hath lost it, the king having the next presentation. See 2 Str. 841, that this presentation is not confined to the life-time of the bishop promoted.

promoted. If the king present to a church by lapse, where he ought to present pleno jure, and as patron of the church, such a presentation is not good; for the king is deceived in his grant, by mistaking his title, which may be prejudicial to him; the presenting by lapse entitling only that presentation: The lord chancellor presents to the king's benefices under 201. Ec. 2 Rel. Ab. 354: 3 Inst. 156: Co. Lit. 186: 2 Nels. Ab. 1288, 1290: 2 Lil. 351.

The king may repeal a presentation before his clerk is inducted; and this he may do by granting the presentation to another, which, without any farther signification of his mind, is a revocation of the first presentation. Dyer 290, 360.

If two patrons present their clerks to a church, the bishop is to determine who shall be admitted by a ius patronatus, &c. Moor 499.

A clerk may be refused by the bishop, if the patron is excommunicate, and remains in contempt 40 days. 2 Ro. Ab. 355. As to refusal for the insufficiency of the clerk presented, see tit. Parson.

If the bishop refuses to admit the clerk presented, he must give notice of his refusal, with the cause of it, forthwith; and on such notice the patron must present another clerk, within six months from the avoidance, if he thinks the objection against his first clerk contains sufficient cause of refusal; but if not, he may bring his quære impedit, against the bishop. 2 Ro. Ab. 364. See ante, Lapse II.

If a defendant, or any stranger, presents a clerk pending a quære impedit, and afterwards the plaintiff obtains judgment, he cannot, by virtue of that judgment, remove him, who was thus presented; but he is to bring a scire facias against him to shew cause quære executionem non habet; and then, if it be found that he had no title, he shall be removed. The way to prevent such a presentation, is to take out a nd admittas to the bishop; and then the writ quære incumbra lies, by virtue whereof the incumbent shall be removed, and put to his quære impedit, let his title be what it will; but if a nd admittas be not taken out, and another incumbent should come in by good title pendente lite, he shall hold it. Sid. 93: Cro. Jac. 93.

When a bishop hath a presentation in right of his bishoprick, and dies, neither his executor, nor heir, shall have the void turn, but the king; in whose hands are the temporalities; and he hath a right to present on an avoidance after the seizure, on death of the bishop.

Tenant in tail of an advowson, and his son, and heir joined in the grant of the next presentation, tenant in tail died; this grant was held void as to the son and heir, because he had nothing in the advowson at the time he joined with his father in the grant. Hob. 45.

If a presentation itself bears date while the church is full of another clerk, it is void; and where two or more have a title to present by turn, one of them presents, his clerk is admitted, instituted and inducted, and afterwards deprived, he shall not present again, but that presentation shall serve his turn: though where the admission and institution of his clerk is void, there the turn shall not be served; as if after induction he neglects to read the thirty-nine articles, &c. his institution is void by the stat. 13 Eliz. and the patron may present again, F. N. B. 33: 5 Rep. 102.

The right of presenting to a church, may pass from one seized of the same by the patron's acknowledging of a statute, &c. which being extended, if the church becomes void, during the consue's estate, the consuee may present. Owen 49.

Where a common person is patron, he may present by parol, as well as by writing to the bishop; Co. Lit. 120. A presentation doth not carry with it the formality of a deed; but it is in the nature of a letter missive by which the clerk is offered to the bishop; and it passeth no interest, as a grant doth, being no more than a recommendation of a clerk to the ordinary to be admitted. But where a plaintiff declared upon a grant of the next presentation, and on oyer of the deed it appeared to be only a letter written by the patron to the father of the plaintiff, that he had given his son the next presentation; adjudged that it would not pass by such letter, without a formal deed. Owen 47.

Right of presentation may be forfeited in several cases; as by attainder of the patron, or by outlawry, and then the king shall present: and if the outlawry be reversed where the advowson is forfeited by the outlawry, and the church becomes void after, the presentation is vested in the crown; but if at the time of the outlawry, the church was void, then the presentation was forfeited as a chattel, and on reversing the same, the party shall be restored to it. By appropriation without licence from the crown, right of presentation may be forfeited; tho' the inheritance in this case is not forfeited, only the king shall have the presentation in nature of a disfranchisement, till the party hath paid a fine for his contempt. By alienation in fee of the advowson by a grantee for life of the next avoidance, a presentation is forfeited; and after such alienation the grantor may present, but then he must enter for the forfeiture of the grantee, in the life-time of the incumbent, to determine his estate before the presentation vests in him on the incumbent's death. And by simony it may be likewise forfeited and lost. Moor 269: Plowd. 259: 2 Roll. Ab. 352: stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. § 5: See Simony, &c.

ADVOWSON OF THE MOIETY OF THE CHURCH, advocatio medietatis ecclesie.] Is where there are two several patrons and two several incumbents in one and the same church, the one of the one moiety, the other of the other moiety thereof. Co. Lit. 17 b. — Medietas advocacionis, a moiety of the advowson, is where two must join in the presentation, and there is but one incumbent. But see stat. 7 Anne, c. 18, mentioned in tit. Advowson IV.

ADVOWSON OF RELIGIOUS HOUSES. Where any persons founded any house of religion, they had thereby the advowson or patronage thereof, like unto those who built and endowed parish churches. And sometimes these patrons had the sole nomination of the abbot, or prior, &c. either by investiture or delivery of a pastoral staff: or by direct presentation to the diocesan; or if a free election were left to the religious, a compé d'essire, or licence for election, was first to be obtained of the patron, and the elect confirmed by him. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 147, 163.

AERIE, aeria accipitrum.] An airy of goshawks, is the proper term for hawks, for that which of other birds we call a nest. And it is generally said to come from the French word aire, a hawk's nest. Sjelman derives it from Sax. eghe, an egg, softened into eye, (used to express a brood of pheasants;) and thence eyrie, or as above aerie, a place a place or repository for eggs. The liberty of keeping these eries of hawks was a privilege, granted to great persons: and the preserving the eries in the king's forests was one sort of tenure of lands by service.

ESTIMATIO CAPITIS, pretium hominis] King Abelstane ordained that fines should be paid for offences committed against several persons according to their degrees and quality, by estimation of their heads. Cress. Ch. Hist. 834: Leg. Hen. 1.

ETATE PROBANDA.] A writ that lay to enquire, whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry, was of full age to receive his lands into his own hands. It was directed to the escheator of the county; but is now disused, since wards and liveries are taken away by the statute. Reg. Orig. 294.

AFFEERERS, afferatores, from the Fr. affer, to affirm,] Are those who in courts-leet upon oath, settle and moderate the fines and amercements; and they are also appointed for moderating amercements, in courts-baron. See tit. Lect.

AFFIANCE, from the Latin Affidare, i. e. fidem dare.] The plighting of troth between a man and a woman, upon agreement of marriage. Lit. foli. 39.

AFFIDARE, To plight one's faith, or give or swear fealty, i. e. fidelity. Affidari to be mustered and enrolled for soldiers. M. S. Dom. de Farndon 22, 55.

AFFIDATIO DOMINORUM, An oath taken by the lords in parliament, anno 3 Hen. 6. Rot. Parl.

AFFIDATUS, A tenant by fealty.

AFFIDAVIT, An oath in writing; and to make affidavit of a thing, is to testify it upon oath. An affidavit, generally speaking, is an oath in writing, sworn before some person who hath authority to administer such oath: and the true place of habitation and true addition of every person who shall make an affidavit, is to be inserted in his affidavit. 1 Lill. Abr. 44, 46. Affidavits ought to set forth the matter of fact only, which the party intends to prove by his affidavit; and not to declare the merits of the cause, of which the court is to judge. 21 Car. I. B. R. The plaintiff or defendant (having authority to take affidavits) may take affidavits in any cause depending; yet it will not be admitted in evidence at the trial, but only upon motions. 1 Lill. 44. When an affidavit hath been read in court, it ought to be filed, that the adverse party may see it, and take a copy. Pasch. 1655. An affidavit taken before a master in Chancery will not be of any force in the court of King's Bench, or other courts, nor ought to be read there; for it ought to be made before one of the judges of the court wherein the cause is depending, or a commissioner in the country, appointed for taking affidavits. Sty. 455: By Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 5. The judges, &c. of the courts at Westminster by commission may empower persons in the several counties of England to take affidavits concerning matters depending in their several courts, as masters in Chancery extraordinary used to do. Where affidavits are taken by commissioners in the country according to the statute 29 Car. II. and 'tis expressed to be in a cause depending between two certain persons, and there is no such depending, those affidavits cannot be read, because the commissioners have no authority to take them; (and for that reason the party cannot be convicted of perjury upon them); but if there is such a cause in court and affidavits taken concerning some collateral matter, they may be read. Salk. 461.

Affidavits are usually for certifying the service of process, or other matters touching the proceedings in a cause; or in support of, or against motions, in cases, where the court determines matters, &c. in a summary way.

If a person exhibits a bill in equity for the discovery of a deed, and ~~proves~~ belief thereupon, he must annex an affidavit to his bill, that he has no such deed in his possession, or that it is not in his power to come at it; for otherwise he takes away the jurisdiction of the common law courts, without shewing any probable cause why he should sue in equity. 1 Chan. Ca. 11, 231: 1 Vern. 59, 180, 247.

But if he seeks discovery of the deed only, or that it may be produced at a trial at law, he need not annex such affidavit to his bill; for it is not to be presumed that in either of these cases he would do so absurd a thing, as exhibit a bill, if he had the deed in his possession. 1 Vern. 180, 247.

In bills of interpleader, the party who prefers it must make affidavit that he does not collude with either of the other parties. 1 New Abr. 66.

An affidavit must set forth the matter positively, and all material circumstances attending it, that the court may judge whether the deponent's conclusion be just or not. 1 New Abr. 66.

And therefore on motion to put off a trial for want of a material witness, it must appear that sufficient endeavours were made use of to have him at the time appointed, and that he cannot possibly be present, though he may on further time given. 7 Mod. 121: Comb. 421, 422.

There being one affidavit against another relating to a judgment, the matter was referred to a trial at law upon a feigned issue, to satisfy the conscience of the court as to the fact alledged. Comberb. 399.

See Stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 7. for taking and swearing affidavits to be made use of in any of the courts of the county palatine of Lancaster.

The Stat. 12 Geo. I. c. 29. requires the cause of action to be sol. to hold to special bail; and both the statute and the established rules of the court require a positive affidavit to be made of the debt; and not couched in words of reference, except in the case of executors, assignees, &c. 1 Term Rep. 83: 4 Term Rep. 176. and they must swear to their belief of the debt.

The affidavit must be made by a person competent to be a witness, therefore a person convicted of felony is not admissible. 5 Mod. 74: Salk. 261. Nor a pick-pocket returned from transportation. Barnes 79. Affidavits made by illiterate persons should be perfectly explained to them. See 4 Term Rep. 284.

Where there is a good cause of action and a proper affidavit, defendant may be held to bail; and the court (of K. B.) will not go out of the affidavit or prejudge the cause, by entering into the merits. 1 Salk. 100. Plaintiff therefore must stand or fall by his affidavit, it being the constant and uniform practice not to receive a supplemental or explanatory affidavit on the part of plaintiff; nor a counter or contradictory one on the part of defendant. 2 Str. 1157: 1 Wils. 335.

But in C. P. where the first affidavit is defective, yet it is allowed to be supplied by another, on shewing cause against a common appearance. Barnes 100: 2 Wils. 224: 2 Black. Rep. 850.

AFFINAGE, Fr. affinage.] Refining of metal, purgatio metalli; hence, fine and refine.

To AFFIRM, affirmare.] To ratify or confirm a former law or judgment: so is the substantive affirmance used stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. And the verb itself by West. Symbol. part 2. tit. Fines &c. 1. c. 7. cap. 20. See also the next word.

AFFIRMATION, An indulgence allowed by law to the people called Quakers, who in cases where an oath is required from others, may make a solemn affirmation that what they say is true. See Quakers.

AFFORARE, To affeer (which fee); to set a value or price on a thing. Du Cange.

AFFORATUS, Appraised or valued, as things vendible in a fair or market. Cartular. Glasston. M. S. fol. 58.

AFFORCIAMENT, afforciamentum.] A fortress, strong hold, or other fortification. Pryn. Animad. on Coke, fol. 184.

AFFORCIARE, To add, to increase or make stronger. Bar. lib. 4. c. 19. viz. in case of disagreement of the jury, let the assize be increased.

AFFOREST, afforestation.] To turn ground into a forest. Chart. de Forest. c. 1. When forest ground is turned from forest to other uses, it is called disafforested. Vide Forest.

AFFRAY, Is derived from the Fr. word effrayer, to affright, and it formerly meant no more; as where persons appeared with armour or weapons not usually worn, to the terror of others. See stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. But now it signifies a skirmish or fighting between two or more, and there must be a stroke given, or offered, or a weapon drawn, otherwise it is not an affray. 3 Inst. 158. An affray is a public offence to the terror of the king's subjects; and so called, because it affrighteth and maketh men afraid. 3 Inst. 158.

From this last definition it seems clearly to follow, that there may be an assault, which will not amount to an affray; as where it happens in a private place, out of the hearing or seeing of any, except the parties concerned; in which case it cannot be said to be to the terror of the people.

Also it is said, that no quarrelsome or threatening words whatsoever shall amount to an affray; and that no one can justify laying his hands on those who shall barely quarrel with angry words, without coming to blows; yet it seemeth that the constable may at the request of the party threatened, carry the person who threatens to beat him before a justice in order to find sureties.

Also, it is certain, that it is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge; or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight; as by dispersing letters to that purpose, full of reflections, and insinuating a desire to fight. See on this subject Leach's Hawkins, i. cap. 63, & ii. cap. 10. § 17; c. 13. § 8; c. 14. § 8.

But admitting that bare words do not, in the judgment of law, carry in them so much terror as to amount to an affray, yet it seems certain, that in some cases there may be an affray, where there is no actual violence; as where a man arms himself with dangerous and unusual weapons, in such a manner as will naturally cause a terror to the people; which is said to have been always an offence at the common law, and is strictly prohibited by statute 2 Ed.

VOL. I.

3. c. 3. See tit. Riding armed. To make an affray in any of the king's inferior courts of justice is highly punishable. 3 Inst. 141: 12 Co. 71.

As to the power of constables and others in cases of affray, see this Dictionary, tit. Constable III. 1.

A justice of peace may commit affrays, until they find sureties for the peace. And there is no doubt but that a justice of peace may and must do all such things to that purpose, which a private man or constable are either enabled or required by the law to do: but it is said, that he cannot without a warrant authorize the arrest of any person for an affray out of his own view; yet it seems clear, that in such case he may make his warrant to bring the offender before him, in order to compel him to find sureties for the peace. See Leach's Hawkins, P. C. i. cap. 63.

It is inquirable in the court leet; and punishable by justices of peace in their sessions, by fine and imprisonment. And it differs from assault, in that it is a wrong to the public; whereas assault is of a private nature. Lamb. lib. 2. yet indictment lies, as being a breach of the public peace.

AFFREIGHTMENT, affretamentum.] The freight of a ship, from the French fret, freight. Pat. 11. Hen. 4. See Charter-party.

AFFRI, vel Affra, Bullocks, or horses or beasts of the plough.—Mon. Angl. par. 2. f. 291. And in the county of Northumberland, the people to this day call a dull or slow horse, a false avel or affri. Spelm. Gloss.

AFRICAN COMPANY. In the ninth year of King William III. the trade to a great portion of Africa, was in the hands of The Royal African Company, which under a charter from Charles II. enjoyed an exclusive trade from the port of Sallee, in South Barbary to the Cape of Good Hope, both inclusive, with all the islands near adjoining to those coasts. A new arrangement of this trade was made by stat. 9 & 10. W. III. c. 26; by which the trade was opened; but this act continued in force only 13 years; and not being renewed, the whole trade reverted again to the exclusive claim of the company.

This African trade was put on a new footing by stat. 23 Geo. II. c. 31; which made it lawful for all the king's subjects freely to trade between the port of Sallee in South Barbary and the Cape of Good Hope. Thus was the trade taken out of the hands of the Royal African Company. The act then goes on to provide, that all persons trading to that coast between Cape Blanco and the Cape of Good Hope, should be a body corporate by the name of The Company of Merchants trading to Africa; the admission to which company was made very easy, namely by the payment of only 40*s*. The trade between the port of Sallee and Cape Blanco was left open to all persons whatsoever. By stat. 25 Geo. II. c. 40, (see stat. 24 Geo. II. c. 49) all the forts castles and factories on the coast, from the port of Sallee to the Cape of Good Hope, belonging to the old company, were transferred to, and vested in the new company; for the like purpose of protecting and facilitating the trade. By stat. 4 Geo. III. c. 20, the fort of Senegal lately ceded by France to Great Britain was in like manner vested in the new company.

The fort of Senegal had been ceded to France by the peace of 1763, and the French King guaranteed to Great Britain the possession of Fort James and the river Gambia both lying between the fort of Sallee and Cape Rouge. On that occasion it was thought more beneficial for the trade, trade, that the forts, settlements and factories between those ports which, by stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 44, (repealing the above act of 4 Geo. 3. c. 20) had been vested in the King, should be reverted in the company; this was accordingly done by stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 65. The same freedom of trading there was, notwithstanding, continued to all the king's subjects.

By stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 11, 12. which regards this trade, some regulations were made as to importing from Gibraltar, merchandize the produce of the Emperor of Morocco's dominions.

AFRICAN SLAVE-TRADE. See this Dict. tit. Slaves.

AGALMA. The impression or image of any thing on a seal. Chart. Edg. Reg. pro Westmonast. Eccl. anno 698.

AGE, ætas, Fr. âge.] In common acceptation signifies a man's life from his birth to any certain time, or the day of his death: it also hath relation to that part of time wherein men live. But in the law it is particularly used for those special times which enable persons of both sexes to do certain acts, which before through want of years and judgment they are prohibited to do. As for example; a man at twelve years of age ought to take the oath of allegiance to the king: at fourteen, which is his age of discretion, he may consent to marriage, and chuse his guardian: and at twenty-one he may alien his lands, goods and chattels: a woman at nine years of age is dowable; at twelve she may consent to marriage; at fourteen she is at years of discretion, and may chuse a guardian; and at twenty-one she may alienate her lands, &c. Co. Lit. 78.

There are several other ages mentioned in our ancient books, relating to aid of the lord, wardship, &c. now of no use. Co. Lit. The age of twenty one is the full age of man or woman; which enables them to contract and manage for themselves, in respect to their estates, until which time they cannot act with security to those who deal with them; for their acts are in most cases either void or voidable. Perk.

Fourteen is the age by law to be a witness; and in some cases a person of nine years of age hath been allowed to give evidence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 27. None may be a member of parliament under the age of twenty-one years; and no man can be ordained priest till twenty-four; nor be a bishop till thirty years of age. See tit. Infant; also tit. Baron & Feme; Dower; Pleading.

AGE PRIER, ætatem precari, or ætatis precatio.] Is when an action being brought against a person under age for lands which he hath by descent, he by petition or motion shews the matter to the court, and prays that the action may stay till his full age, which the court generally agrees to. Terms de Ley 30. See Parol Demurrer.

AGENFRIDA. The true lord or owner of any thing. Leg. Ine. c. 50. apud Brompt. c. 45.

AGENHINE. See Third-Night-Avon-binde.

AGENT AND PATIENT. When the same person is the doer of a thing, and the party to whom done: as where a woman endows herself of the best part of her husband's possessions, this being the sole act of herself to herself, makes her agent and patient. Also if a man be indebted unto another, and afterwards he makes the creditor his executor, and dies, the executor may retain so much of the goods of the deceased as will satisfy his debt; and by this retainer he is agent and patient, that is, the party to whom the debt is due, and the person that pays the same. But a man shall not be judge in his own cause, quia iniquum est aliquem sue rei esse judicem. 8 Rep. 118, 138.

AGILD, free from penalties, not subject to the customary fine or imposition. Sax. a gild, sine multa. Leges Aluredi, cap. 6.

AGILER. From the Sax. a gilt. (without fault) an observer or informer. Blount.

AGILLARIUS, Anciently an hey-ward, herd-ward or keeper of cattle in a common field, sworn at the lord's court by solemn oath.—There were two forts, one of the town or village, the other of the lord of the manor. Corvel. See Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 534, 576.

AGIST, (from the Fr. giste, a bed or resting place) Signifies to take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather up the money due for the same. Chart. de Foresta. 9 H. 3. c. 9. The officers appointed for this purpose are called agisters, or gift-takers, and are made by the king's letters patent: there are four of them in every forest wherein the king hath any pawnage. Mantw. Forest-Laws, c. 11 to 80. They are also called agistors, to take account of the cattle agisted.

AGISTMEN [agistamentum] Is where other men's cattle are taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week: it is so called, because the cattle are suffered agiste, that is, to be levant and couchant there: and many great farms are employed to this purpose. 2 Inst. 643. Our graziers call cattle which they thus take into keep gismen; and to gise or juice the ground, is when the occupier thereof feeds it not with his own stock, but takes in the cattle of others to agist or pasture it. Agistment is likewise the profit of such feeding in a ground or field; and extends to the depasturing of barren cattle of the owner, for which tithes shall be paid to the parson. There is agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea. Terræ agistatæ are lands whose owners are bound to keep up the sea-banks. Spelm. in Remuy-Marsb. See tit. Tithes.

AGITATIO ANIMALIUM IN FORESTA. The drift of beasts in the forest. Leg. Forest.

AGIUS, Gr. i. e. holy. Mon. Angl. p. 15, 17.

AGNUS DEI. A piece of white wax in a flat oval form, like a small cake, stamped with the figure of the lamb, and consecrated by the pope. By stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, Agnus Dei, crosses, &c. are not permitted to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of præmunire.

AGREEMENT, agreementum, aggregatio mentium.] A joining together of two or more minds in any thing done, or to be done. Plowd. 17. The joint consent of two or more parties to a contract or bargain; or rather, the effect of such consent.

On this subject free use has been made of the new edition (1793) of "A Treatise of Equity," vol. 1, with the very copious and useful marginal notes and references, by Mr. Fonblanque. The Editor of this Dictionary had only an opportunity, on the present occasion, of applying to the first volume of that very useful performance. The subject seems to divide itself in the following manner:

- I. Who may be parties to, or bound by an agreement.
- II. The various kinds of agreements; and of the assent and disagreement of parties.

AGREEMENT I—III.

III. Of the operation of the statute of frauds; and herein evidence to explain agreements.

IV. Of compelling the performance of agreements; and herein of fraud in making them.

I. A person non compos is not capable of entering into any agreement. See tit. Idiots and Lunatics.

Also an infant, for the same reason, is generally incapable of contracting, except for necessities; &c. See tit. Infant.

A wife during the intermarriage is incapable of entering into any agreement in pair, being under power of her husband. See tit. Baron and Feme.

The ancestor seized in fee may by his agreement bind his heir; therefore if A. agrees to sell lands, and receives part of the purchase money, but dies before a conveyance is executed, and a bill is brought against the heir, he will be decreed to convey, and the money shall go to the executor; especially if there are more debts due than the testator's personal estate is sufficient to pay. 2 Vern. 215: Abr. Eq. 265. But if tenant in tail agrees to convey, or bargains and sells the lands for valuable consideration, without fine or recovery, and dies before the fine or recovery be levied or suffered, the issue is not bound either in law or equity; for equity cannot set aside the statute de donis; which says, 'That voluntas donatoris observetur; nor can the court set up a new manner of conveyancing, and thereby supersede fines and recoveries; for thereby the king would lose the perquisites by fines, or the writs of entry and fines for alienation. Hob. 203: 1 Chan. Ca. 171: 1 Lev. 239: 2 Vent. 350. Yet

If there be tenant in tail in equity as of a trust, or under an equitable agreement, and he for valuable consideration bargains and sells the land without fine or recovery, this shall bind his issue, because the statute de donis doth not extend to it, being an entail in equity and a creature of the court. 1 Chan. Ca. 234: 2 Chan. Ca. 4: 1 Vern. 13 440: 2 Vern. 33, 583, 72

II. On this head shall be considered,

1st, An Agreement executed already at the beginning; as where money is paid for the thing agreed, or other satisfaction made. 2dly, An agreement after an act done by another; as where one doth such a thing, and another person agrees to it afterwards, which is executed also: and 3dly, An agreement executory, or to be performed in futuro. This last sort of agreement may be divided into two parts; one certain at the beginning, and the other when, the certainty not appearing at first, the parties agree that the thing shall be performed upon the certainty known. Terms de Ley 31. See tit. Condition; Contract; Covenant.

Every agreement ought to be perfect, full and compleat, being the mutual consent of the parties; and should be executed with a recompence, or be so certain as to give an action or other remedy thereon. Plowd. 5. Any thing under hand and seal which imports an agreement will amount to a covenant: and a proviso, by way of agreement, amounts likewise to a covenant; and action may be brought upon them. 1 Lev. 155.

If any estate in possession or reversion be made to me, I must agree to it, before it will be settled; for I may refuse, and so avoid it: a release, deed, or bond, is made and delivered to another to my use, this will vest in me without any agreement of mine; but, if I disagree to it, I make the deed void. Dyer 167. And regularly where a man hath once disagreed to the party himself, he can never after agree: and obligation being made to my use, and tendered to me, if I refuse it, and after agree again and will accept it; now this agreement afterwards will not make the obligation good, that was void by the refusal. Co. Lit. 79: 5 Rep. 119.

An agreement may be as well in the party's absence, as in his presence; but a disagreement must be to the person himself to whom made. 2 Rep. 69. When an estate is made to a feme covert, it is good, till disagreement, without any agreement of the husband: though a new estate granted to the wife where she hath an estate before, as by the taking of a new lease, and making a surrender in law, will not vest till the husband agree to it. Hob. 204.

That an assent on the part of the person who takes, is also essential to all conveyances and contracts; for where a man is to be vested with an interest, his acceptance is necessary; See 2 Ventr. 198: 2 Salk. 618: 2 Leon. p. 72. pl. 97: 5 Vin. Ab. 508. pl. 1. See Thompson v. Leach, 2 Ventr. 198, in which this subject is very elaborately discussed by Ventr. 198, 199. See also Butler and Baker's case, 3 Co. 26.

III. Besides the bare words of an agreement, the common law, to prevent imposition, ordained certain ceremonies where an interest was to pass; and therefore appointed livery for things corporeal, and a deed for things incorporeal. Yet in equity where there was a consideration, the want of ceremonies was not regarded. However, in former times, courts of equity were very cautious of relieving bare parol agreements for lands, not signed by the parties nor any money paid; (2 Freem. 216;) although they would sometimes give the party satisfaction for the loss he had sustained. And now by the stat. of 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, commonly called the Statute of Frauds, if an agreement be by parol, and not signed by the parties, or somebody lawfully authorized by them, (Pre. Ch. 402,) if such agreement be not confessed in the answer, it cannot be carried into execution. But where, in his answer, the defendant allows the bargain to be complete, and does not insist on any fraud, there can be no danger of perjury; because he himself has taken away the necessity of proving it. (Pre. Ch. 208, 374: 1 Vex. 221, 441: Amb. 586.) So if it be carried into execution by one of the parties, (2 Vern. 455: Pre. Chan. 519: 2 Freem. 268: Amb. 586: 2 Str. 783: Bunb. 65, 94: 9 Mod. 37: 1 Vex. 82, 221, 297, 441: 3 Atk. 4: 1 Bro. Rep. 404: 2 Bro. Rep. 566. MSS. 4th July, 1786,) as by delivering possession, and such execution be accepted by the other, he that accepts it must perform his part; for where there is a performance, the evidence of the bargain does not lie merely upon the words, but upon the fact performed: See 2 Bro. Rep. 566. And it is unconscionable, that the party that has received the advantage, should be admitted to say, that such contract was never made. So, if the signing by the other party, or reducing the agreement into writing, be prevented by fraud, it may be good. Pre. Ch. 526: 5 Vin. Ab. 521. pl. 31: 1 Vern. 296. And although parol agreements are bound by the statute, and agreements are not to be part parol, and part in writing; yet a deposit, or collateral security for the performance of the written agreement, is not within the purview of the statute 2 Vern. 617: 1 Bro. Rep. 269: 19th April, 1785, MSS. See Treatise of Equity, i. 164—175.

It was determined, very soon after the passing of the statute of frauds, that an agreement signed by one of the parties, should be binding on the party signing it. 2 Ch. Ca. 164: And in Sir James Lowther v. Carill, 1 Vern. 221, the court appears to have thought, that one of the parties making alterations in the draft, and sending it to the other to execute, who did execute it, would bring the case out of the statute. But the authority of this latter decision seems to be done away by Lord Macclesfield's decree in Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. Wms. 770; by which his lordship held, that unless in some particular cases, where there has been an execution of the contract, by entering upon and improving the premises, the party's signing the agreement is absolutely necessary for completing it; and that to put a different construction upon it would be to repeal it; and his lordship therefore held, that the defendant having altered the draft with his own hand, was not a signing to take it out of the statute; though the vendor afterwards executed the conveyance, and caused it to be registered. But this question received more particular consideration in the case of Stokes v. Moore, at Serjeant's Inn Hall, March 1, 1786, in which case the court delivered their opinions that the signature required by the statute is to have the effect of giving authenticity to the whole of the instrument; and where the name is inserted in such a manner as to have that effect, it did not much signify in what part of the instrument it was to be found; as in the formal introduction to a will. [Thus, "This is the last will and testament of me A. B."—written with the testator's own hand has been deemed a sufficient signing.] But it could not be imagined, that a name inserted in the body of an instrument, and applicable to particular purposes, could amount to such an authentication as the statute required; [Thus, in notes of an agreement, "Mr. A. to do so and so," tho' written by A. himself, not a sufficient signing:] upon which, as well as upon another ground, the bill was dismissed. See Mr. Cox's note (1) to Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. Wms. 770.

If a defendant confesses the agreement charged in the bill, there is certainly no danger of fraud or perjury in decreeing the performance of such agreement. But it is of considerable importance to determine whether the defendant be bound to confess or deny a merely parol agreement not alleged to be in any part executed; or if he do confess it, whether he may not insist on the statute, in bar of the performance of it? See Treatise of Equity, p. 168. note (d) where this subject is very accurately and ably discussed. To allow a statute, having the prevention of frauds for its object, to be interposed in bar of the performance of a parol agreement, in part performed, were evidently to encourage one of the mischiefs which the legislature intended to prevent. It is therefore an established rule, that a parol agreement, in part performed, is not within the provisions of the statute. See Whitchurch v. Bewis, 2 Bro. Rep. 566.

As to what acts amount to a part performance, the general rule is, that the acts must be such as could be done with no other view or design than to perform the agreement, and not such as are merely introductory, or ancillary to it. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 386: Whitbread v. Brockhurst, 1 Bro. Rep. 412. The giving of possession is therefore to be considered as an act of part performance. Stewart v. Denton, MSS. 4th July, 1786; but giving directions for conveyances, and going to view the estate, are not. Clerk v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12: Whaley v. Bagnal, 6 Bro. P. C. 45. Payment of money is also said to be an act of part-performance; Lacon v. Martins, 3 Atk. 4. But it seems that payment of a sum, by way of earnest, is not; Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560: Lord Pengall v. Rofs, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 46. pl. 12: Simmons v. Cornelius, 1 Ch. Rep. 128: But see Foll v. Smith, 3 Ch. Rep. 16, and Avon. 2 Freem. 128.

In the case of Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 561, it is said, that "where a man on promise of a lease to be made to him, lays out money in improvements, he shall oblige the lessor afterwards to execute the lease; because it was executed on the part of the lessee." This dictum is sanctioned by the spirit of equity, and seems to do away the decisions which require, even under the circumstance of premises being improved, an averment of its being part of the parol agreement that it should be reduced into writing.

A letter not only takes an agreement in consideration of marriage out of the statute, but also, agreements respecting lands, &c. Ford v. Compton, 2 Bro. Rep. 32: Tawney v. Crowther, 2 Bro. Rep. 318. But whenever a letter is relied on as evidence of an agreement, it must be stamped before it can be read. Ford v. Compton. It must also distinctly furnish the terms of the agreement. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560: Strat. 426: Clark v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12; or it must at least refer to some written instrument, in which the terms are set forth; Tawney v. Crowther. It must likewise appear, that the other party accepted such terms, and acted in contemplation of them.

Where an agreement in writing is executed, it were not only against the express provisions of the statute of frauds, but also against the policy of the common law, to allow of parol evidence, for the purpose of adding to, or varying the terms of the agreement. 2 Atk. 383: 3 Atk. 8: Bunb. 65: 3 Wils. 275. But if it be alledged, that some material part of the agreement was omitted, by fraud, or that the intention of the parties was mistaken and misapprehended by the drawers of the deed, in such cases, it seems, evidence will be admissible, even tho' the agreement be executed. 2 Atk. 203: 2 Vern. 98: 2 Vern. 547: 2 Ch. Ca. 180: a fortiori, such evidence will be admissible where the agreement is executory. 3 Atk. 388: 1 Vez. 456. It may be material to observe, where evidence dehors the deed is admitted to shew what was the consideration of the agreement, that the consideration to be proved must be consistent with the consideration stated. 3 Term Rep. 474: Fulbeck's Parallel, p. 9. And if the deed specify the consideration to have been a sum of money, evidence is not admissible, in order to superadd another consideration, as natural love and affection, &c. 2 P. Wms. 204: 1 Vez. 128: Nor, if the consideration fail, can evidence be admitted to support the conveyance as a gift. 2 Vez. 627: 1 Atk. 194: 3 Bro. Rep. 156; and though the deed specify a particular consideration and other considerations, generally, no consideration but that expressed shall be intended. Cro. Eliz. 343: but qu. whether other considerations might not be proved.

IV. It has been said that where the contract is good at law, equity will carry it into execution; but this proposition is too generally stated; for though equity will enforce the specific performance of fair and reasonable contracts, where the party wants the thing in specie, and cannot have it in any other way; yet, if the breach of the contract can be, or was intended to be, compensated in damages, courts of equity will not interpose. See Errington v. Annisley, 2 Bro. Rep. 341; Cudd v. Rutter, 1 P. Wms. 570; Copper v. Harris, Bumb. 135.

It is assuredly a general rule, that courts of equity will, under certain circumstances, enforce the specific performance of agreements, for the non-performance of which the party would be entitled to damages at law: but as the decreeing of specific performance is in the discretion of the court, it must not be considered as an universal rule; for if the plaintiff's title be involved in difficulties which cannot be immediately removed, equity will not compel the defendant to take a conveyance; though perhaps, he might at law be subject to damages for not completing his purchase. See Marlow v. Smith, 2 P. Wms. 198; Shapland v. Smith, 1 Bro. Rep. 75; Cooper v. Deane 21st July 1792. MSS.

Qu. Whether courts of equity will decree an agreement entered into by letter, if a deed appear to have been afterwards framed, (but not executed,) varying the terms expressed in the letter? See Coke v. Mafcall, 2 Vern. 34. Or if the terms be varied by parol. See Jordan v. Saxvins, 3 Bro. Rep. 388. And as a letter setting forth the terms of an agreement, takes the agreement out of the statute, it being a sufficient signing; so, it seems, it is a sufficient signing, if a person, knowing the contents, subscribe the deed as a witness only. Welford v. Braxley 3 Atk. 503.

In the civil law, counter-letters, and all secret acts which make any change in agreements, are of no manner of effect with respect to the interest of a third person. 1 Vern. 240, 348, 475: 2 Vern. 466: 1 P. Wms. 768: 2 P. Wms. 375: 1 Bla. Rep. 363: for this would be an infidelity contrary to good manners and the public interest. In cases of this nature it is not necessary that the fraud respect an article expressly contracted for; but any representation, misleading the parties contracting, on the subject of the contract, is within the principle which governs this class of cases. See 1 Bro. Rep. 543. and stated in Mr. Cox's note to Roberts v. Roberts 3 P. Wms. 74.

The principle of the rule there laid down, though it has been most frequently applied to agreements in fraud of marriage, extends to every other species of agreements; therefore, where a tradesman compounding his debts, privately agreed with some of his creditors to pay them the whole of their debts, by which they were induced to appear to accept of the composition; such private agreement was held to be a fraud on the other creditors, 2 Vern. 71, 602: 1 Atk. 105; and it seems that such fraud is now relievable at law, 2 Term Rep. 763: The case of Lewis v. Chase, 1 P. Wms. 620, is however irreconcilable with this principle; it may therefore be material to observe, that it is very much shaken, if not over-ruled, by several subsequent cases, particularly Smith v. Bromley, Doug. 670. But though private agreements in fraud of third persons, be void, yet if a bond or note be given by A. the more effectually to enable B. to bring about a match, &c. such bond or note may be recovered upon at law, Montefiori v. Montefiori. 1 Bla. Rep. 303. And a conveyance of land for such purpose, notwithstanding a defeasance, will be sustained in equity, 13 Vin. Ab. 525: 2. Bro. P. C. 88.

AID, See tit. Taxes; Teuurey I. 8. II. 6.

AID-PRAYER, auxilium petere.] A word made use of in pleading, for a petition in court to call in help from another person that hath an interest in the thing contested; this gives strength to the party praying in aid, and to the other likewise, by giving him an opportunity of avoiding a prejudice growing towards his own right. As tenant for life, by the curtesy, for term of years, &c. being impleaded, may pray in aid of him in reversion; that is, desire the court that he may be called by writ to alledge what he thinks proper for the maintenance of the right of the person calling him, and of his own. F. N. B. 50.

Aid shall be granted to the defendant in ejectione firmæ, when the title of the land is in question: lessee for years shall have aid in trespass; and tenants at will: but tenant in tail shall not have aid of him in remainder in fee; for he himself hath the inheritance. Danv. Abr. 292. In a writ of replevin, the avowry being for a real service, aid is granted before issue; and in action of trespass after issue joined, if there be cause, it shall be had for the defendant, tho' never for the plaintiff. Jenk. Cent. 64: Fitz. Abr. 7. There ought to be privity between a person that joins in aid and the other to whom he is joined; otherwise joinder in aid shall not be suffered. Danv. 318. There is a prayer in aid of patrons, by parsons, vicars, &c. And between coparceners, where one coparcener shall have aid of the other to recover pro rata. Co. Lit. 341. b. And also servants, having done any thing lawfully in right of their masters shall have aid of them. Terms de Ley 34.

AID OF THE KING, auxilium regis.] Is where the king's tenant prays aid of the king, on account of rent demanded of him by others. A city or borough, that hold a fee-farm of the king, if any thing be demanded against them which belongs thereto, may pray in aid of the king: and the king's bailiffs, collectors, or accountants shall have aid of the king. In these cases the proceedings are stopp'd till the king's counsel are heard to say what they think fit, for avoiding the king's prejudice: and this aid shall not in any case be granted after issue; because the king ought not to rely upon the defence made by another, Jenk. Cent. 64: Terms de Ley 35. See stats. 4 Ed. 1. c. c. 1, 2: 14 Ed. III. st. 1. c. 14: & 1 H. 4. c. 8: See also Com. Dig. tit. Aide.

AILE, or aid of the French aieul, avus.] A writ which lies where a man's grandfather being seised of lands and tenements in fee simple the day that he died, and a stranger abateth or entreth the same day, and dispossesses the heir of his inheritance. F. N. B. 222. See tit. Affise of Mort d'ancestor.

AL or ALD; from Saxon, ald, age.] This syllable in the beginning of the names of places denotes antiquity; as Aldborough, Aldworth, &c.—Blount.

ALANERARIUS, A manager and keeper of dogs, for the sport of hawking, from alanus, a dog, known to the ancients. Du Fresnoy. But Mr. Blount renders it a fault-coner.

ALBA, the alb.] A surplice or white sacerdotal vest anciently used by officiating priests.

ALBA FIRMA. When quit-rents, payable to the Crown by freeholders of manors, were reserved in silver, or white money, they were anciently called albin rents, or blanch farms; reditus albi; in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, &c. which were called reditus nigri, or black male. 2 Inst. 19: & vide 2 Inst. 10, where it seems used for a species of tenure. See tit. Black firmes.

In Scotland this kind of small payment is called blench-bolding, or reditus albi firmæ. 2 Crown 47.

ALBERGELUM, [alberga] An habergeon; a defence for the neck. Hoveden 611.

ALBINATUS IUS. Is the droit d'arbanne in France, whereby the king at the death of an alien, is entitled to all he is worth, unless he has peculiar exemption. Com. m. 372. Albinatus is derived from alibi natus, Spelm. Gloss. 24. This was repealed by the laws of France in June 1791.

ALBUM, see Albi Firma.

ALDER, the first; as alder best, is the best of all; alder liefest, the most dear.

ALDERMAN, Sax. calderman, Lat. aldermannus.] Hath the same signification in general as senator, or senior but at this day, and long since, they are called aldermen who are associates to the civil magistrates of a city or town corporate. See Spelm. Gloss. 25. An alderman ought to be an inhabitant of the place, and resident where he is chosen; and if he removes he is incapable of doing his duty in the government of the city or place, for which he may be disfranchised. Mod. Rep. 36. Alderman Langham was a freeman of the city of London, and chosen alderman of a ward, and being summoned to the court of aldermen he appeared, and the oath to serve the office was tendered to him, but he refused to take it, in contempt of the court, &c. whereupon he was committed to Newgate; and it was held good. March. Rep. 179.

The aldermen of London, &c. are exempted from serving inferior offices; nor shall they be put upon assizes, or serve on juries, so long as they continue to be aldermen. 2 Crown 585. See tit. London.

In Spelman's Glossary we find that we had anciently a title of aldermannus totius Angliæ; mentioned in an inscription on a tomb in Ramsay abbey. And this officer was in nature of Lord Chief Justice of England. Spelm. Alderman was one of the degrees of nobility among the Saxons, and signified an earl; sometimes applied to a place, it was taken for a general, with a civil jurisdiction as well as military power; which title afterwards was used for a judge, but it literally imports no more than elder.

There was likewise aldermannus hundredi, (the alderman of the hundred,) which dignity was first introduced in the reign of Hen. 1. De Fresne. Cowel.

ALÆ ECCLESIAE, The wings or side-issles of the church; from the French, Les ailes de l'Eglise.

ALECENARIUM, A sort of hawk called a lanner. See Putura.

AL EHOUSES, Are to be licensed by justices of peace, who take recognizances of alehouse keepers not to suffer disorders in their houses, and they have power to put down alehouses, &c. But the act is not to restrain selling of ale in fairs. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 25. Alehouse keepers are liable to a penalty of 20s. for keeping alehouses without license; not exceeding 40s. nor under 10s. for selling ale in short measure; and 10s. for permitting tippling, &c. and persons retailing ale or beer, alehouse keepers, &c. shall sell their ale by a full ale quart or pint, according to the standard in the Exchequer, marked from the said standard; and sub commissioners, or collectors of excise, are to provide substantial ale quarts and pints in every town in their divisions; and mayors and chief officers to mark measures, or forfeit 5*l.* by statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 9: and see Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 7: 1 Car. 1. c. 4: 3 Car. 1. c. 4: 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 15. See tit. Inns; Brewers.

By the stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 41, Justices on granting licences are to take recognizances in 10*l.* with sureties in the like sum for the maintaining good order. Licences to be granted to none, not licenced the preceding year, unless they produce certificates of their good character. Licence only to extend to that place for which it was granted. Licences to be granted on the first of September, or within twenty days after, yearly, and to be for one yearly only; penalty for selling ale, &c. without a licence, by this and subsequent acts, first offence 40s. second offence 4*l.* third offence 6*l.*

As to licences see the above statutes and Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 12: 5 Geo. 3. c. 4: 30 Geo. 3. c. 38: and lastly 32 Geo. 3. c. 59; by which last act no person can sell wine by retail to be drunk in his own house, who has not also an ale licence. See tit. Drunkennes.

ALIER SANS JOUR, [Fr.] To go without day; viz. to be finally dismissed the court, because there is no further day assigned for appearance. Kitch. 146.

ALE-SILVER, A rent of tribute annually paid to the lord mayor of London, by those that sell ale within the liberty of the city. Antiq. Purvey. 183.

ALESTAKE, A may-pole called alestake, because the country people drew much ale there; but it is not the common may-pole, but rather a long stake drove into the ground, with a sign on it, that ale was to be sold.

ALE-TASTER, Is an officer appointed in every court leet, sworn to look to the assize and goodness of ale and beer, &c. within the precincts of the lordship. Kitch. 46. In London there are ale comers, who are officers appointed to taste ale and beer, &c. in the limits of the city.

ALFEI, [Sax. Alfeib.] A cauldron or furnace, wherein boiling water was put for a criminal to dip his arms in up to his elbow, and there hold it for some time. Du Cange. See tit. Ordeal.

ALIAS, A second or further writ, issued from the courts at Westminster, after a capias, &c. sued out without effect.

ALIAS DICTUS, Is the manner of description of a defendant, when sued on any specialty; as a bond, &c. where after his name, and common addition, then comes the alias dict. and describes him again by the very name and addition, whereby he is bound in the writing. Dyer 50: Jenk. Cent. 119. See Misnomer.

ALIEN, [Alienus, Alienigena.] Generally speaking, one born in a foreign country, out of the allegiance of the king. Under this head shall be briefly introduced the present state of the law, in particular, as to I. Aliens, II. Denizens, III. Naturalized Subjects, IV. Of the general effect of the Laws on Aliens.

I. An ALIEN born may purchase lands or other estates, but not for his own use, for the king is thereupon entitled pled to them. 1 Inst. 2. and the notes there. But under the stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 14, aliens are enabled to lend money on the security of mortgages of estates in the West India Colonies, and may have every remedy to recover the money lent, except foreclosing the mortgage and obtaining possession of the land; which is positively prohibited by the statute. Nor shall a woman alien, wife of a natural born subject, be endowed. 7 Rep. 25. a: 1 Inst. 31. b. but see the note there contra. Nor a Jewess wife of a husband converted to the Christian religion. Id. ib. See this Dict. tit. Dower. An alien may however acquire a property in goods, money, and other personal estate, or may hire a house for his habitation. 7 Rep. 17. For personal estate is of a transitory or moveable nature, and this indulgence is necessary for the advancement of trade. Aliens also may trade as freely as other people, only they are subject to certain higher duties at the Custom House; and there also some obsolete statutes, (1 Ric. 3. c. 9: 14 H. 8. c. 2: 21 H. 8. c. 16: 22 H. 8. c. 13: 32 H. 8. c. 10:) prohibiting alien artificers to work for themselves in this kingdom, and making void all leases of houses or shops to aliens, [see tit. Artificers]; but it is generally held that these were virtually repealed by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 7, prohibiting the importation of some foreign manufactures; see however 1 Inst. 2. in note. Also an alien may bring an action concerning personal property; and may make a will and dispose of his personal estate. Lutro. 34. These rights of aliens must be understood of alien friends only; for alien enemies have no rights, no privileges, unless by the king's special favour during the time of war. 1 Comm. 372. and see Cro. Eliz. 683: Stin. 370.

Where it is said that an alien is one born out of the king's dominions or allegiance, this must be understood with some restrictions. The common law was absolutely so, with only a very few exceptions; so that a particular act of parliament, (stat. 29 Car. 11. c. 6,) was necessary after the restoration to naturalize children of English subjects born in foreign parts during the troubles. This maxim of law proceeded on a general principle that every man owes natural allegiance where he is born, and cannot owe two such allegiances at once. Yet the children of the king's ambassadors born abroad were always held to be natural born subjects. 7 Rep. 11. § 18. the father owing no feudal allegiance to the foreign prince; and representing the king of England; and by the stat. 25 E. 3. st. 2, it is declared to be the law of the crown of England, that the king's children wherever born are of ability to inherit the crown; and to encourage foreign commerce it is enacted by the same statute, that all children born abroad, provided both their parents were at the time of the child's birth in allegiance to the king, and the mother had passed the seas by her husband's consent, might inherit as if born in England. See Cro. Car. 601: Mar. 91: Jenk. Cent. 3.

By several more modern statutes (7 Ann. c. 5: 10 Ann. c. 5: 4 Geo. 2. c. 21: and 13 Geo. 3. c. 21,) these restrictions are still further taken off; so that all children born out of the king's allegiance, whose fathers (or grandfathers by the father's side) were natural born subjects, though their mothers were aliens, are now deemed to be natural born subjects themselves to all intents and purposes, unless their said ancestor were attainted, or banished beyond sea for high treason; or were at the birth of such children in the service of a prince at enmity with Great Britain. See stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. [The issue of an English woman by an alien, born abroad is an alien. 1 Vent. 421: 4 Term Rep. 400, solemnly decided.] But grand-children of such ancestors shall not be privileged in respect of the aliens duty, except they be protestants and actually reside within the realm; nor shall be enabled to claim any estate or interest, unless the claim be made within five years after the same shall accrue.

The children of aliens born here in England, are, generally speaking, natural-born subjects, and entitled to all the privileges of such. 1 Comm. 373.

II. A DENIZEN is an alien born, but who has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters patent to make him an English subject; a high and incommunicable branch of the royal prerogative. 7 Rep. 25. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and natural-born subject, and partakes of both of them. He may take lands by purchase or devise, which an alien may not; but cannot take by inheritance. 11 Rep. 67; for his parent through whom he must claim, being an alien had no inheritable blood; and therefore could convey none to the son. And upon a like defect of hereditary blood the issue of a denizen born before denization cannot inherit to him; but his issue born after may, to the exclusion of that born before. 1 Inst. 8: Paugh. 285. But by stat. 11 & 12 Wil. 3. c. 6, all persons being natural-born subjects may inherit as heirs to their ancestors, though those ancestors were aliens. See also stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39, by which this statute of Wil. 3. is restrained to persons in being at the death of the ancestor; and divests the estate from daughters in favour of after-born sons. Both these acts are extended by stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 52, to Scotland.

A Denizen is not excused from paying the alien's duty and some other mercantile burthens. See stat. 22 H. 8. c. 8. And no denizen can be of the privy council, or either house of parliament, or have any office of trust civil or military, or be capable of any grant of lands, &c. from the crown. Stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2.

III. NATURALIZATION cannot be performed but by act of parliament; for by this an alien is put in the same state as if he had been born in the king's allegiance; except only that he is (by the stat. 12 Wil. 3.) incapable, as well as a denizen, of being a member of the privy council or parliament, holding offices, grants, &c. No bill for naturalization can be received without such disabling clause in it; (stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4.) nor without a clause disabling the person from obtaining any immunity in trade thereby, in any foreign country; unless he shall have resided in Great Britain for seven years next after the commencement of the session in which he is naturalized; (stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 84;) neither can any person be naturalized or restored in blood unless he hath received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper within one month before the bringing in of the bill; and unless he also takes the oaths of allegiance and supremacy in the presence of the parliament. (stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 2.) But these provisions have been usually dispensed with by special acts of parliament previous to bills of naturalization of any foreign princes or princesses. See statutes 4 Ann. c. 1: 7 Geo. 2. c. 3: 9 Geo. 2. c. 24: 4 Geo. 3. c. 4. &c.

These are the principal distinctions between Aliens, Denizens, and Natives; distinctions which it hath been frequently endeavoured within the present century to lay almost almost totally aside by one general naturalization-act for all foreign protestants. An attempt which was once carried into execution by stat. 7 Ann. c. 5; but this after three years' experience was repealed by stat. 10 Ann. c. 5; except the clause for naturalizing the children of English parents born abroad. However, every foreign seaman who in time of war serves two years on board an English ship by virtue of the king's proclamation, is by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 3, ipso facto naturalized, under the like restrictions as in stat. 12 H. 3. c. 2. And all foreign Protestants and Jews, upon their residing seven years in any of the American colonies, without being absent above two months at a time, and all foreign Protestants serving two years in a military capacity there, or being three years employed in the whale fishery, without afterwards absenting themselves from the king's dominions for more than one year, and none of these falling within the incapacities declared by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. (viz. attain, &c.) shall, on taking the oath of allegiance and abjuration, or in some cases an affirmation to the same effect, be naturalized to all intents and purposes as if they had been born in this kingdom; except as to sitting in parliament or the privy council, and holding offices or grants of land, from the crown, in Great Britain or Ireland. See statutes 13 Geo. 2. c. 7: 20 Geo. 2. c. 44: 22 Geo. 2. c. 45: 2 Geo. 3. c. 25: 13 Geo. 3. c. 25: 20 Geo. 3. c. 20. They therefore are admissible to all other privileges, which Protestants or Jews born in this kingdom are entitled to. What those privileges are with respect to Jews in particular was the subject of very high debate about the time of the famous Jew bill; stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 26; which enabled all Jews to prefer bills of naturalization in parliament without receiving the sacrament as ordained by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 2: but this act continued only a few months, and was then repealed by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 1.

IV. An alien enemy coming into this kingdom, and taken in war, shall suffer death by the martial law; and not be indicted at the common law, for the indictment must conclude contra ligeantiam suam, &c. and such was never in the protection of the king. Molloy de Jur. Marit. 417. Aliens living under the protection of the king, may have the benefit of a general pardon. Hob. 271. No alien shall be returned on any jury, nor be sworn for trial of issues between subject and subject, &c. but where an alien is party in a cause depending, the inquest of jurors are to be half denizens, and half aliens: but in cases of high treason, this is not allowed. 2 Inst. 17. See stat. 27 E. 3. c. 8, that where both parties are aliens the inquest shall be all aliens. and stat. 28 E. 3. c. 13. as to trials between denizens and aliens; see also 1 Com. Dig. tit. Alien. (C. 8.)

Tho' aliens are subject to the laws, and in enormous offences (as murder, &c.) are liable in the ordinary course of justice, yet it may be too harsh to punish them on a local statute.—Thus, a French prisoner indicted for privately stealing from a shop was acquitted of that by the direction of the judge, and found guilty of the larceny only. Forst 183.

A very great influx of Frenchmen into England having been caused in the years 1792 and 1793 by the troubles in France, and there being cause to suspect that some of them were sent here for dangerous and unjustifiable purposes, an act was passed, stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 4, commonly called the Alien-Bill, compelling the masters of ships arriving from foreign parts, under certain penalties, to give an account at every port of the number and names of every foreigner on board to the custom-house officers appointing justices and others to grant passports to such aliens; and giving the king power to restrain and to send them out of the kingdom on pain of transportation, and on their return, of death. The same act also directs an account to be delivered of the arms of aliens, which, if required, are to be delivered up, and aliens were not to go from one place to another in the kingdom without passports. This act was in the first instance temporary; and tho' opposed in both houses, was proved by circumstances of a very serious nature, to have been absolutely necessary.

By the various acts of parliament above mentioned, most, if not all of the niceties of the old law relative to aliens are obviated and reduced to plain and intelligible rules. See 1 Comm. 366—375: 1 Inst. 2 and 8, and the notes there; and 7 Rep. Calvin's case. As to descents between aliens collaterals, Collingswood v. Paec, 1 Vent. 413: 1 Sid. 193. As to pleading alienage, see tit. Abatement. And for further matter on the whole of the subject, Com. Dig. tit. Alien.

ALIENATION, from alienare, to alien.] A transferring the property of a thing to another: it chiefly relates to lands and tenements; as to alien land in fee, is to sell the fee-simple thereof, &c. And to alien in mortmain, is to make over lands or tenements to a religious house or body politic. Fines for alienations are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, except fines due by particular customs of manors. All persons who have a right to lands may generally alien them to others: but some alienations are forbidden: as an alienation by a particular tenant, such as tenant for life, &c. which incurs a forfeiture of the estate. Co. Lit. 118. For if lessee for life, by livery, alien in fee, or make a lease for the life of another, or gift in tail, it is a forfeiture of his estate: so if tenant in dower, tenant for another's life, tenant for years, &c. do alien for a greater estate than they lawfully may make. Co. Lit. 233, 251. Conditions in feoffments, &c. that the feoffee shall not alien, are void. Co. Lit. 206: Hob. 261. And it is the same where a man possessed of a lease for years, or other thing, gives and sells his whole property therein, upon such condition: but one may grant an estate in fee, on condition that the grantee shall not alien to a particular person, &c. And where a reversion is in the donor of an estate, he may restrain an alienation by condition. Lit. 361: Wood's Inst. 141. Estates in tail, for life, or years, where the whole interest is not parted with, may be made with condition not to alien to others, for the preservation of the lands granted in the hands of the first grantee.

ALIMONY, alimonia, Nourishment or maintenance.] In a legal sense, it is taken for that allowance which a married woman sues for and is entitled to, upon separation from her husband. Terms de Ley 38. See tit. Baron and Feme.

ALLAUNDS, ab alanis, Scythiæ gente, Hare-hounds.

ALLAY. Lat. allaya.] The mixture of other metals with silver or gold. This allay is to augment the weight of the silver or gold, so as it may defray the charge of coinage, and to make it the more fusile. A pound weight of standard gold, by the present standard in the mint, is twenty-twenty-two carats fine, and two carats allay: and a pound weight of right standard silver consists of eleven ounces two-penny weight of fine silver, and eighteen penny weight of allay. Lorowies's Essay upon Coins, pag. 19. & 9 H. 5. ft. 1. c. 11.

ALLEGIANCE, allegiantia, formerly called ligeance, from the Latin alligare & ligare; i. e. ligamen fidei.] The natural and lawful and faithful obedience which every subject owes to his prince. It is either perpetual, where one is a subject born; or where one hath the right of a subject by naturalization, &c. or it is temporary, by reason of residence in the king's dominions. To subjects born, it is an incident inseparable; and as soon as born, they owe by birth-right obedience to their sovereign; and it cannot be confined to any kingdom, but follows the subject wheresoever he goeth. The subjects are hence called liege people, and are bound by this allegiance to go with the king in his wars, as well within as without the kingdom. 1 Infl. 129 a: 2 Infl. 741. 7 Co. 4. Calwin's Case.

By the common law, all persons above the age of twelve years were required to take the oath of allegiance in courts-leet.

And there are several statutes requiring the oath of allegiance and supremacy, &c. to be taken under penalties: justices of peace may summon persons above the age of eighteen years to take these oaths. 1 Eliz. cap. 1: 1 W. & M. c. 1, 8. 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 22. For the other statutes respecting allegiance see 5 Eliz. c. 1. sect. 5: 3 Jac. 1. c. 4: 7 Jac. 1. c. 6: 25 Car. 2. c. 2: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 24 & 27: 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 6: 1 Ann. c. 22: 6 Ann. c. 14: 8 Ann. c. 15: 1 Geo. 1. c. 13: 2 Geo. 2. c. 31: 6 Geo. 3. c. 53. And see title OATHS, and Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Allegiance. By the stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. if any natural born subject be withdrawn from his allegiance and reconciled to the pope or see of Rome, or shall promise obedience to any other Prince or State, he, his procurers, counsellors, aiders and maintainers, shall incur the guilt of High Treason.

ALLEGIARE, to defend or justify by due course of law. Leges Alured. cap. 4. Spelm.

ALLER, This word is used to make what is added to signify superlatively; as aller good is the greatest good. See Alder. Alder sans jour, see Aler.

ALLEVIARE, to levy or pay an accustomed fine. Convel.

ALLOCATION, allocatio.] In a legal sense, an allowance made upon account in the Exchequer; or more properly a placing or adding to a thing.

ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA, A writ for allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office; directed to the lord treasurer, and barons of the Exchequer, upon application made. Reg. Orig. 206.

ALLOCATO COMITATU, A new writ of exigent allowed, before any other county court holden, on the former not being fully served; or complied with, &c. Fitz. Exig. 14.

ALLODIAL. This is where an inheritance is held without any acknowledgement to any lord or superior; and therefore is of another nature from that which is feudal. Allodial lands are free lands, which a man enjoys without paying any fine, rent, or service to any other. Allodium. In Domesday book it signifies a free manour; and alodarii Lords Paramount. Kent: Co. Litt. 1, 5. & see 2 Comm. 45, &c. And this Dist. tit. Tenure.

VOL. I.

ALLUMINOR, from the Fr. allumer, to enlighten.] One who anciently illuminated, coloured or painted upon paper or parchment, particularly the initial letters of ancient charters and deeds. The word is used stat. 1 R. 3. c. 9.

ALMANACK, Is part of the law of England, of which the courts must take notice, in the returns of writs, &c. but the almanack to go by is that annex'd to the Book of Common Prayer. Mod. Caf. 41, 81. See tit. Year.

The diversity of fixed and moveable feasts was condemned per tot. cur. for we know neither the one nor the other but by the almanacks, and we are to take notice of the course of the moon. 6 Mod. 150, 160: Pasch. 3 Ann. B. S. C. accordingly; per cur.

Whether such a day of the month was on a Sunday or not, and so not a dies juridicus, is triable by the country or the almanack. Dyer 182. pl. 55. But,

It was said that the court might judicially take notice of almanacks, and be informed by them; and cited Robert's case in the time of Lord Catline; and Coke said, that so was the case of *Galley v. ALMARIA, for armaria: The archives or as they are sometimes stiled muniments of a church or library.—Gerrard. Dorch. in R. 2.

ALMNER, or ALMONER, elemosynarius.] An officer of the king's house, whose business it is to distribute the king's alms every day. He ought to admonish the king to bestow his alms, especially upon saints' days and holidays; and he is likewise to visit the sick, widows that are poor, prisoners and other necessitous people, and to relieve them under their wants; for which purpose he hath the forfeitures of deadlands, and the goods of felos de se, allowed him by the king. Fluta, lib. 2. cap. 22. The lord almoner has the disposition of the king's dish of meat, after it comes from the table, which he may give to whom he pleases; and he distributes four-pence in money, a two-penny loaf of bread, and a gallon of beer; or instead thereof three-pence daily at the court gate to twenty four poor persons of the king's parish, to each of them that allowance. This officer is usually some bishop.

ALMSFEORH, or almesfeob, Saxon for alms money: It has been taken for what we call Peter-Pence, first given by Ina king of the West Saxons, and anciently paid in England on the first of August. It was likewise called rome-feob, rome-feot, and beorhtþening. Selden's Hist. Tithes 217.

ALMUTIUM. A cap made with goats or lambs' skins, the part covering the head being square, and the other part hanging behind to cover the neck and shoulders. Monasticon tom. 3. p. 36: W. Thorn. 1330.

ALNAGE Fr. aulnage.] A measure, particularly the measuring with an ell.

G

ALNAGER,

ALNAGER, or aulnager, Fr. alner, Lat. ulniger.] Is properly a measure by the ell; and the word aulne in French, signifieth an ell. An aulnager was heretofore a public sworn officer of the king's, whose place it was to examine into the assise of cloths made throughout the land, and to fix seals upon them; and another branch of his office was to collect a subsidy or aulnage duty granted to the king. He had his power by stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 4. c. 1. and several other ancient statutes; which appointed his fees, and inflicted a punishment for putting his seal to deceitful cloth, &c. viz. a forfeiture of his office, and the value. 27 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 4: 3 R. 2. c. 2. There were afterwards three officers belonging to the regulation of cloathing, who bear the distinct names of searber, measurer, and aulnager; all which were formerly comprised in one person. 4 Inst. 31: Cowel.

By 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 20. Alnage duties are taken away.

ALNETUM, A place where alders grow; or a grove of alder trees. Domesday-Book.

ALOVERIUM, A purse. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 82. par. 2.

ALTARAGE, altaragium.] The offerings made upon the altar, and also the profit that arises to the priest by reason of the altar, obventio altaris. Mich. 21 Eliz. It was declared that by altarage is meant tithes of wool, lambs, colts, calves, pigs, chickens, butter, cheese, fruits, herbs, and other small tithes with the offerings due: the case of the vicar of West-Haddon in Northamptonshire. But the word altarage at first is thought to signify no more than the casual profits arising to the priest, from the people's voluntary oblations at the altar; out of which a portion was assigned by the parson to the vicar: since that, our parsons have generally contented themselves with the greater profits of glebe, and tenths of corn and hay; and have left the small tithes to the officiating priests: and hence it is that vicarages are endowed with them. Terms de Ley 39. 2 Cro. 516.

It seems to be certain, that the religious, when they allotted the altarage in part, or in whole to the vicar or chaplain, did mean only the customary and voluntary offerings at the altar, for some divine office or service of the priest, and not any share of the standing tithes, whether predial or mixt. Kenn. Paroch. Antiq. Gloss.

In the case of Franklyn and the master and brethren of St. Cross, T. 1721, it was decreed, that where altaragium is mentioned in old endowments, and supported by usage, it will extend to small tithes, but not otherwise. Bomb. 79.

ALTERATION, alteratio, Is the changing of a thing: and when witnesses are examined upon exhibits, &c. they ought to remain in the office, and not to be taken back into private hands, by whom they may be altered. Hob. 254.

ALTO & BASSO, Ponere se in arbitrio in alto & basso, means the absolute submission of all differences.

AMABYR, vel AMVALBYR, A custom in the honour of Clun, belonging to the earls of Arundell: Pretium virginis domino solvendum LL eccl. Gul. Howeli Dñi, regis Walliæ. This custom Henry earl of Arundel released to his tenants, Anno 3 & 4 P. & M.

AMBACTUS, A servant or client. Cowel.

AMBASSADOR, legatus.] A person sent by one Sovereign [Power] to another with authority by letters of credence to treat on affairs of state. 4 Inst. 153. And ambassadors are either ordinary, or extraordinary; the ordinary ambassadors are those who reside in the place whither sent; and the time of their return being indefinite, so is their business uncertain, arising from emergent occasions; and commonly the protection and affairs of the merchants is their greatest care: the extraordinary ambassadors are made pro tempore, and employed upon some particular great affairs, as condolences, congratulations, or for overtures of marriage, &c. Their equipage is generally very magnificent; and they may return without requesting of leave, unless there be a restraining clause in their commission. Molloy 144.

An agent represents the affairs only of his master; but an ambassador ought to represent the greatness of his master, and his affairs. Ibid. By the laws of nations, none under the quality of a sovereign prince can send any ambassador; a king that is deprived of his kingdom and royalty, hath lost his right of legation. No subject, though ever so great, can send or receive an ambassador; and if a viceroy does it, he will be guilty of high treason: the electors and princes of Germany have the privilege of sending and reception of ambassadors; but it is limited only to matters touching their own territories, and not of the state of the empire. It is said there can be no ambassador without letters of credence from his sovereign, to another that hath sovereign authority: and if a person be sent from a king or absolute potentate, though in his letters of credence he is termed an agent, yet he is an ambassador, he being for the Public. 4 Inst. 153.

Ambassadors may, by a precaution, be warned not to come to the place where sent; and if they then do it, they shall be taken for enemies; but being once admitted, even with enemies in arms, they shall have the protection of the laws of nations, and be preserved as princes. Moll. 146. If a banished man be sent as an ambassador to the place from whence he is banished, he may not be detained or molested there. 4 Inst. 153. But if he be not received or admitted as ambassador, he has no privilege as such; and an ambassador may be refused in respect of him by whom sent; or in respect of the person sent; as if he is notoriously flagitious; or if he be disagreeable to the state to which he is sent. An ambassador ought not however to be refused without cause.—See Grotius and Molloy, cited Com. Dig. tit. Ambassador. The killing of an ambassador has been adjudged high treason. 3 Inst. 8. Some ambassadors are allowed, by concession, to have jurisdiction over their own families; and their houses permitted to be sanctuaries; but where persons who have greatly offended fly to their houses, after demand and refusal to deliver them up, they may be taken from thence. Ambassadors cannot be defended when they commit any thing against the state, or the person of the king with whom they reside. 4 Inst. 152. An ambassador, guilty of treason against the king's life, may be condemned and executed; but for other treasons, he shall be sent home, with demand to punish him, or to send him back to be punished. 4 Inst. 152. 1 Roll. Rep. 185.

If a foreign ambassador commits any crime here, which is contra jus gentium, as treason, felony, &c. or any other crime against the law of nations, he loseth the privilege of an ambassador, and is subject to punishment as a private alien; and he need not be remanded to his sovereign, but — of courtesy. Danv. Abr. 327. But if a thing be only malum prohibitum by an act of parliament, private law, or custom of the realm, and it is not contra jus gentium, an ambassador shall not be bound by them. 4. 153. And it is said ambassadors may be excused of against the state where they reside, (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations) because it doth not appear whether they have it in mandatis; and then they are excused by necessity of obedience. Bar. Max. 26.

By the civil law, the person of an ambassador may not be arrested; and the moveable goods of ambassadors, which are accounted an accession to their persons, cannot be seised on, as a pledge, nor for payment of debts, though by leave of the king or state where they are resident; but on refusal of payment, letters of request are to go to his master, Sc. Molloy 157. Danv. 328. The law of nations touching ambassadors in its full extent, is part of the law of England; and the act 7 An. c. 12, is only declaratory. Barbui's Case, Rep. temp. Ld. Talb. 281; and see 3 Burr. 1748.

By our statute law, (stat. 7 An. c. 12.) An ambassador, or public minister, or his domestic servants, registered in the secretary's office, and thence transmitted to the sheriff's office of London and Middlesex, are not to be arrested; if they are, the process shall be void, and the persons suing out and executing it shall suffer such penalties and corporal punishments as the lord chancellor or either of the chief justices shall think fit. Also the goods of an ambassador, shall not be distrained. Stat. ibid. See 1 Comm. 254. The persons claiming privilege as servants of an ambassador, must be such as are really and bona fide retained and registered in that capacity; and the act itself expressly prohibits its extension to merchants and traders liable to the statutes of bankruptcy. See Fitzgib. 200: Str. 797: 1 Will. 20, 78, 9: 3 Will. 33: 2 Str. 797: 2 Ld. Raym. 1524: 3 Burr. 1676: 4 Burr. 2016, 7: and Com. Dig. tit. Ambassador.

AMBIDEXTER, Lat. One that plays on both sides. In a legal sense, it is taken for a juror or embracer, who takes money of the parties for giving his verdict; see tit. Juries. Stat. 5 Ed. III.

AMBRA, Sax. amber, Lat. ambrona.] A vessel among the Saxons; it contained a measure of salt, butter, meal, beer, &c. Leg. Inq. West. Sax.

AMBRY, The place where the arms, plate, vessels, and every thing which belonged to housekeeping were kept; and probably the ambry at Westminster is so called, because formerly set apart for that use: or rather the aumroy, from the Latin elemosynaria, an house adjoining to an abbey, in which the charities were laid up for the poor.

AMENABLE, Fr. amener. To bring or lead unto: or amenable, from the Fr. Main, a hand. Signifies tractable, that may be led or governed: and in our books it is commonly applied to a woman, that is governable by her husband. Cowel Interp. It also, in the modern sense, signifies to be responsible, or subject to answer, &c. in a court of justice.

AMENDMENT, emendatio.] The correction of an error committed in any process, which may be amended after judgment; and if there be any error in giving the judgment, the party is driven to his writ of error; though where the fault appears to be in the clerk who writ the record, it may be amended. Terms de Ley 39.

At common law there was little room for amendments, which appears by the several statutes of amendments and jo-fails, and likewise by the constitution of the courts; for, says Britten, the judges are to record the parols [or pleas] deduced before them in judgment; also, says he, Ed. 1. granted to the justices to record the pleas pleaded before them, but they are not to erase their records, nor amend them, nor record against their inrollment, nor any way suffer their records to be in warrant to justify their own misdoings, nor erase their words, nor amend them, nor record against their inrollment. This ordinance of Ed. 1. was so rigidly observed, that when justice Hengham, in his reign, moved with compassion for the circumstances of a poor man who was fined 13 s. 4 d. erased the record, and made it 6 s. 8 d. he was fined 800 marks, with which, it is said, a clock-house at Westminster was built, and furnished with a clock; but as to the clock, it has been denied by authors of credit, clocks not being in use till a century afterwards. Notwithstanding what is mentioned above, there were some cases that were amendable at common law.

Original writs are not amendable at common law, for if the writ be not good, the party may have another; judicial writs may and have been often amended. 8 Rep. 157.

Whatever at common law might be amended in civil cases, was at common law amendable in criminal cases, and so it is at this day: resolved by Helt Ch. J. Powell and Powis J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Though awarding of process on the roll might be amended at Common law the same term, because it was the act of the court; yet if any clerk at common law issued out an erroneous process on a right award of the court, that was never amended in any case at the common law. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Anciently all pleas were ore tenus at the bar; and then if any error was spied in them, it was presently amended. Since that custom is changed, the motion, to amend, because all in paper, succeeded in the room of it; and it is a motion that the court cannot refuse: but they may refuse it if the party desiring it refuse to pay costs, or the amendment desired should amount to a new plea. 10 Mod. 88.

Mistakes are now effectually helped by the statutes of amendment and jo-fails; the latter so called, because when a pleader perceived any slip in the form of his proceeding, and acknowledges such error, (jeo faile or j'a faillé); he is at liberty by those statutes to amend it, which amendment is seldom actually made, but the benefit of the act is attained by the courts overlooking the exception, 2 Str. 1011. These statutes are in the whole 12 in number, and are here recapitulated chronologically, by which all trifling exceptions are so thoroughly guarded against, that writs of error cannot since be maintained, but for some material mistake assigned. 3 Comm. 407; which see, and Buller's Ni. Pri. (Ed. 1793) 320. and for a more extended view of the cases, in which amendments may or may not be made, See Cris. Dig. tit. Amendment.

By stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 6. no process shall be annulled or discontinued, by the misprision of the clerk in mistaking in writing one syllable or one letter too much or too little; but it shall be amended.

The judges afterwards construed this statute so favourably, that they extended it to a word; but they were not so well agreed, whether they could make these amendments, as well after as before judgment; for they thought their authority was determined by the judgment; therefore by stat. 9 H. 5. c. 4. it is declared that the judges shall have the same power, as well after as before judgment, as long as the record in process is before them. Gibb. H. C. B. 110.

This statute is confirmed by statute 4 Hen. 6. c. 3. with an exception, that it shall not extend to process on out-lawry, or to records or processes in Wales. But according to 2 Sund. 40. this last exception, and the like exception in 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. seem to be annulled by the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 20. by which it is enacted, that the laws of England shall be used, practised and executed in Wales.

Though the foregoing statutes gave the judges a greater power than they had before, yet it was found that they were too much cramped, having authority to amend nothing but process, which they did not contrive in a large signification, so as to comprehend the whole proceedings in real and personal actions, and criminal and common pleas, but confined it to the mejne process and jury process; 8 Co. 157 a. And therefore, to enlarge the authority of the courts, the statute 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. gives power to amend what they shall think in their discretion to be the misprision of their clerks in any record, process, and plea, warrant of attorney, writ, pannel, or return. Gibb. H. C. P. 110.

There are only two statutes of amendments, viz. the 14 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 6. and 8 H. 6. c. 12 & 15. the rest are reckoned to be statutes of jeofails, and not of amendments; per Powell J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14 Mich. 3 Ann. B. R. in the case of The Queen v. Tatham.—And ibid. he held that the 8 H. 6. was only to enlarge the subject-matter of 14 Ed. 3. and that 14 E. 3. extends only to process out of the roll, viz. writs that issue out of the record, and not to proceedings in the roll itself: but that the 14 Ed. 3. extends not to the king, because of these words, (challenge of the party) and that the statute 8 H. 6. has always been construed in limitation of the act of Ed. 3. and the exception in the statute of H. 6. was only ex abundanti cautela; and all judges and sages of the law in all ages have taken it not to extend to the crown; and the cases on the other side are not to be relied upon.

Farther by stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. "The king's justices, before whom any misprision shall be found, be it in any records and processes depending before them, as well by way of error as otherwise, or in the returns of the same, by sheriffs, coroners, bailiffs of franchises, or any other, by misprision of the clerks of any of the said courts, or of the sheriffs, coroners, their clerks, or other officers, clerks, or other ministers whatsoever, in writing one letter or one syllable too much or too little, shall have power to amend the same."

As these statutes only extended to what the justices should interpret the misprision of their clerks, and other officers, it was found by experience, that many just causes were overthrown for want of form, and other failings, not aided by this statute, though they were good in substance; and therefore the statutes of jeofail were made. Gibb. H. C. B. 111.

By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 30. it is enacted, "That if the jury have once passed upon the issue, though afterwards there be found a jeofail in the proceedings, yet judgment shall be given according to the verdict." The stat. 18 Eliz.

c. 14. ordains, "That after verdict given in any court of record, there shall be no stay of judgment, or reversal, for want of form in a writ, count, plaint, &c. or for want of any writ original or judicial; or by reason of insufficient returns of sheriffs, &c." By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 13. "If a verdict shall be given in any court of record, the judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for variance in form between the original writ or bill and the declaration, &c. or for want of averment of the party's being living, so as the person is proved to be in life; or for that the venue facias is in part mis-awarded; for misnomer of jurors, if proved to be the persons returned; want of returns of writs, so as a pannel of jurors be returned and annexed to the writs; or for that the return-officer's name is not set to the return, if proof can be made that the writ was returned by such officer, &c."

The stat. 16 and 17 Car. 2. c. 8. (called by Twissden), an omnipotent act, 1 Vent. 100; and made perpetual by stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 4. enacts, "That judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict in the courts of record at Westminster, &c. for default in form; or for that there are not pledges to prosecute upon the return of the original writ, or because the name of the sheriff is not returned upon it, for default of alledging and bringing into court of any bond, bill or deed, or of alledging or bringing in letters testamentary, or of administration; or for the omission of et & armis, or contra pacem, mistaking the Christian name or surname of either party, or the sum of money, day, month or year, &c. in any declaration or pleading, being rightly named in any record, &c. proceeding; nor for want of the averment of hinc paratus est verificari, or for not alledging pro ut patet per recordum, for that there is no right venue, if the cause was tried by a jury of the proper county or place; nor shall any judgment after verdict, by confession, cognovit actionem, &c. be reversed for want of misericordia et clemencia, or by reason that either of them are entered, the one for the other, &c. but all such defects, not being against the right of the matter of the suit, or whereby the issue or trial is altered, shall be amended by the judges; though not in suits of assault, of felony, indictment, and infractions, on penal statutes, which are excepted out of the act.

By stat. 4 and 5 Ann. c. 16. all the statutes of jeofails shall extend to judgments entered by confession, nil dicir, or non sum informatus in any court of record, and no such judgment shall be reversed, nor any judgment or writ of inquiry of damages thereon shall be stayed for any defect which would have been aided by those statutes, if a verdict had been given, so as there be an original writ filed, &c.—By stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. § 7. this act and all other statutes of jeofails are extended to writs of mandamus and informations in the nature of a quo warranto. The statutes of amendment and jeofails not being construed to extend to criminal proceedings, or on penal statutes in general. Pall. N. P. 325: 2 Mod. 144. But a mandamus may not be amended after return. 4 Term Rep. 587. The stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. ordains, "That, after verdict given, judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for defect in form or substance in any bill or writ, or for variance therein from the declaration, or any other proceedings."

An action for a false return of a member of parliament on the stat. 7 and 8 H. 3. for double damages, is remedial, tho' founded on a law that is penal so within the statutes of jeofails. 1 Wils. 125.

AMENDMENT.

By the foregoing statutes (from 14 E. 3. c. 6; to 8 H. 6. c. 15,) the faults and mistakes of clerks are in many cases amendable: the misprision of a clerk in matter of fact is amendable; though not in matter of law. Palm. 258. If there be a mistake in the legal form of the writ, it is not amendable: there is a diversity between the negligence and ignorance of the clerk that makes out writs; for his negligence (as if he have the copy of a bond, and do not pursue it), this shall be amended; but his ignorance in the legal course of original writs is not amendable. 8 Rep. 159. A party's name was mistaken in an original writ; and it appearing to the court that the surfitor's instructions were right, the writ was amended in court; and they amended all the proceedings after. 2 Vent. 152: Cro. Car. 74. If a thing which the plaintiff ought to have entered himself, being a matter of substance, be totally omitted, this shall not be amended; but otherwise it is, if omitted only in part and misentered. Danv. Abr. 346. By the common law a writ of error, returned and filed, could not be amended; because it would alter the record: but now by stat. 5 Geo. 1. the writs of error, wherein there shall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the court where returnable.

In an assumpsit, the defendant pleads Not Guilty, thereupon issue is joined, and found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment, tho' it is an improper issue in this action; for as there is a deceit alledged, Not Guilty is an answer thereto, and it is but an issue misjoined, which is aided by statute 4 Geo. Eliz. 407. If in debt upon a single bill, the defendant pleads payment, without an acquittance, and issue is joined and found for the plaintiff, tho' the payment without acquittance is no plea to a single bill, he shall have judgment, because the issue was joined upon an affirmative and a negative, and a verdict for the plaintiff. Mich. 37 and 38 Eliz. 5 Rep. 43. An ill plea and issue may be aided by the Statute of jeofails, after a verdict: and if an issue joined be uncertain and confused, a verdict will help it. Cro. Car. 316: Hob. 113. The statutes likewise help when there is no original, and where there is no bill upon the file, it is aided after verdict by statute, but when there is an original, which is ill, that is not aided. Cro. Jac. 185, 480: Cro. Car. 282. The statute of jeofails 15 and 17 Car. 2, helps a mis-trial in a proper county, but not where the county is mistaken. 1 Mod. 24.

When the award of a writ of enquiry on the roll is good, the writ shall be amended by the roll. Carth. 70. The court cannot amend to make a new writ; or to alter a good writ, and adapt it to another purpose, &c. only when the writ is bad and vicious on the face of it. Mod. Caf. 263, 316. Annals 367.

With respect to declarations, a declaration grounded on an original writ may not be amended, if the writ be erroneous: though if it be on a bill of Middlesex or a lettrat, it is amendable. 1 Lill. Abr. 67.

A plaintiff may amend his declaration in matter of form after a general issue pleaded, before entry thereof, without payment of costs: if he amend in substance, he is to pay costs, or give imparlance; and if he amend after a special plea, though he would give imparlance, he must pay costs. 1 Lill. 58. A declaration in ejectment, laid the demise before the time; this was not amendable, for it would alter the issue, and make a new title in the plaintiff. 1 Salk. 48. The plaintiff declared on the statute of Winton for a robbery done to himself, when it should have been of his servants; he had leave to amend. 3 Lev. 347. If a defendant pleads a plea to the right, or in abatement, the plaintiff may amend his declaration; but not where he demurs, for this fault may be the cause of the demurrer. 1 Salk. 50. A demurrer may be amended after the parties have joined in demurrer, if it be only in paper. Style 48. Where a plea shall be amended, when in paper, or on record, &c. see the statute 4 Geo. II. c. 26.

As to the amendments of records, &c. an issue entered upon record, with leave of the court may be amended; but not in a material thing, or in that which will deface the record. 1 Lill. Abr. 61. A record may be amended by the court in a small matter, after issue joined, so as the plea be not altered. Danv. Abr. 338. If on a writ of error a record is amended in another court in affirmance of the judgment, it must be amended in the court where judgment was given. Hardr. 505. Where the record of nisi prius does not agree with the original record, it may be amended after verdict, provided it do not change the issue: but a record shall not be amended to attain the jury, or prejudice the authority of the judge. A general or special verdict may be amended by the notes of the clerk of assize in civil causes; but not in criminal actions. 1 Salk. 47. The issue roll shall be amended by the imparlance roll, which is precedent; but a roll may not be amended after verdict, when there is nothing to amend it by; tho' surplusage may be rejected, and so make it good. Cro. Car. 92: 1 Sid. 135.

In an action on the statute of usury, a verdict was given for the plaintiff, and taken on one of the counts, in the declaration.—The other counts being found for defendant.—Motion in arrest of judgment.—The principal cause was, the christian name of one of the persons mentioned in that count (rightly named, in that count, before) was mistaken in the issue roll, which had been carried in, whereby the count was rendered absurd, and bad. The court gave leave to file a right bill, (the proceedings being by bill), and afterwards amended the issue roll, by the bill.—The nisi prius roll was right.—Gardner qui tam v. Brown B. R. Trin. T. 15 Geo. 3. This was done, as an amendment at common law.

A mistake of the clerk in entering a judgment; as where it was that the defendant recovered, instead of the plaintiff, &c. was ordered to be amended. Cro. Jac. 631: Hutt. 41. A judgment may be amended by the paper book signed by the master. 1 Salk. 40. At common law, the judges may amend their judgments of the same term; and by statute of another term. 8 Rep. 156: 14 E. 3. If judgments are not well entered, on payment of costs they will be ordered to be so: when judgments are entered, 'tis said the defects therein being the act of the court, and not the misprision of the clerk, are not amendable. Glib. 104. Mistakes in returns of writs, fines and recoveries, made by mutual assent of parties may be amended. 5 Rep. 45. Judgment shall not be void after verdict, for that an original waste form, or varies from the record in point of form, which are amendable. 5 Rep. 45. After verdict given in any court of record, there shall be no stay of judgment for want of form in any writ, or insufficient returns of theriffs, variance in form between between the original writ and declaration, &c. stat. 32 H. 8. 18 Eliz. Vide 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. The postea may be amended by the judge's notes. 1 Will. 33: 2 Stra. 1197. S. C. As to amendments in informations by the attorney general, see 4 Term Rep. 457, 8.

Amendments are usually made in affirmance of judgments; and seldom or never to destroy them: and where amendments were at common law, the party was to pay a fine for leave to amend. 3 Salk. 29.

AMERCIAMENT, amerciamentum, (from the Fr. merci) signifies the pecuniary punishment of an offender against the king or other lord in his court, that is found to be in miseriordia, i. e. to have offended, and to stand at the mercy of the king or lord. The author of Terms de Ley saith, that amerciament is properly a penalty assessed by the peers or equals of the party amerced, for the offence done; for which he putteth himself at the mercy of the lord. Terms de Ley 40. And by the statute of Magna Charta, c. 14. a freeman is not to be amerced for a small fault, but proportionable to the offence, and that by his peers. 9 H. 3. c. 4. Amerciements are a more merciful penalty than a fine; for which if they are too grievous, a release may be sued by an ancient writ founded on Magna Charta, called moderata misericordia. See New Nat. Brev. 167: F. N. B. 76. The difference between amerciements and fines, is this; fines are said to be punishments certain, and grow expressly from some statute; but amerciements are such as are arbitrarily imposed. Kitch. 78. Also fines are imposed and assessed by the court: amerciements by the country; and no court can impose a fine, but a court of record: other courts can only amerce. 8 Rep. 39, 41.

A court-leet can amerce for public nuisances only. 1 Sams. 135. For a fine and all amerciements in a court-leet, a distress is incident of common right; but for amerciament in a court baron, distress may not be taken but by prescription. 11 Rep. 45. When an amerciament is agreed on, the lord may have an action of debt, or distress for it, and impound the distress, or sell it at his pleasure; but he cannot imprison for it. 8 Rep. 41, 45. Vide the case of the Duke of Bedford v. Allcock, B. R. 1 Will. 248. See tit. Lect.

There is also amercement in pleas in the courts of record, when a defendant delays to tender the thing demanded by the king's writs, on the first day. Co. Lit. 116. And in all personal actions without force, as in debt, detinue, &c. if the plaintiff be nonsuited, barred, or his writ abate for matter of form, he shall be amerced: but if on judicial process, founded on a judgment and record, the plaintiff be nonsuited, barred, &c. he shall not be amerced. 1 Nelf. Abr. 206. And an infant, if nonsuited, is not to be amerced: Jenk. Cent. 258. The capias pro fine is taken away by 5 W. & M. c. 12.

The amercement of the sheriff, or other officer of the king, for misconduct, is called amerciament royal. Terms de Ley. Amerciements are likewise in several other cases. See tit. Fines for Offences.

AMESSE, see Amictus.

AMI, vide Amicus.

AMICIA, see amictum.

AMICIUS. The uppermost of the six garments worn by priests, tied round the neck, and covering the breast and heart—Amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus et planctus.—These were the six garments of priests.

AMICUS CURIÆ. If a judge is doubtful or mistaken in matter of law, a stander-by may inform the court, as amicus curiæ. 2 Co. Inst. 178. In some cases, a thing is to be made appear by suggestion on the roll by motion; sometimes by pleading, and sometimes as amicus curiæ. 2 Keb. 548. Any one as amicus curiæ may move to quash a vicious indictment; for if there were a trial and verdict, judgment must be arrested. Comberb. 13. A counsel urged, that he might, as amicus curiæ, inform the court of an error in proceedings, to prevent giving false judgment; but it was denied, unless the party was present. 2 Show. Rep. 297.

AMITTERE LEGEM TERRÆ, or LIBERAM LEGEM. To lose and be deprived of the liberty of swearing in any court: as to become infamous, renders a person incapable of being an evidence. Vide Glanvill, lib. 2. And see the statute 5 Eliz. cap. 9. against perjury. So a man that is outlawed, &c. is said to lose his law, i. e. is put out of the protection of the law, as least so far as relates to the suing in any of his majesty's courts of justice, though he may be sued.

AMMOBRAGIUM. A service, suggested by Spelman to be the same as Chevaage; which see.

AMNESTY, amnestia, oblivio.] An act of pardon or oblivion, such as was granted at the restoration by king Charles II.

AMNITUM INSULÆ. Isles upon the West coast of Britain. Blount.

AMORTIZATION, amortizatio, Fr. amortissement.] An alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain, viz. to any corporation or fraternity, and their successors, &c. And the right of amortization is a privilege or licence of taking in mortmain. In the statute de libertatibus perquirendis; an. 27 Ed. 1. st. 2, the word amortissement is used.

AMORTISE, Fr. amortir.] To alien lands in mortmain.

AMPLIATION, amplatio.] An enlargement; in law a referring of judgment, till the cause is further examined.

AMY, amicus.] In law prochein amy is the next friend to be trusted for an infant. And infants are to sue by prochein amy (i. e. next friend) or guardian, and defend by guardian. Alien amy is a foreigner here subject to some prince in friendship with us.

AN, JOUR & WASTE. See Year, Day and Waste.

ANCESTOR, anteceſſor, or predeceſſor.] One that has gone before in a family: but the law makes a difference between what we commonly call an ancestor and a predecessor; the one being applied to a natural person and his ancestors, and the other to a body politic and their predecessors. Co. Lit. 78. b.

ANCESTREL. What relates to or hath been done by one's ancestors; as homage ancestrel, &c.

ANCHORAGE, ancoragium.] A duty taken of ships for the use of the haven where they cast anchor. Mss. A. 15. Trevor, Arm. The ground in ports and havens belonging to the king, no person can let any anchor fall thereon, without paying therefore to the king's officers.

ANCIENTS. Gentlemen of the inns of court. In Gray's inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, such as have gone through, or are past their readings, are termed ancients: the inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks; and from the ancients one is yearly chosen the principal or treasurer.

ANCIENT DEMESNE, or domain; vetus patrimonium domini.] Is a tenure whereby all the manors belonging to the crown in the days of St. Edward and William, called the Conqueror, were held. The number and names of all manors, after a survey made of them, were written in the book of Domesday; and those which by that book appear to have at that time belonged to the crown, and are contained under the title terra regis, are called ancient demesne. Kitch. 98. The lands which were in the possession of Edward the Confessor, and were given away by him, are not at this day ancient demesne, nor any others, except those writ down in the book of Domesday; and therefore, whether such lands are ancient demesne or not, is to be tried only by that book. 1 Salk. 57: 4 Inst. 269: Hob. 188: 1 Brownl. 43. F. N. B. 16. D.

But if the question is, whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demesne, this shall be tried by a jury. For 'parcel or not parcel' is matter of fact, 9 Rep. case of the abbot of Strata Marcella, Salk. 56. 774. and see 2 Burr. 1046.

Fitzherbert tells us, that tenants in ancient demesne had their tenures from ploughing the king's lands, and other works towards the maintenance of the king's freehold, on which account they had liberties granted them. F. N. B. 14, 228. And there were two sorts of these tenures and tenants; one that held their lands freely by charter; the other by copy of court-roll, according to the custom of the manor. Brit. c. 66. The tenants holding by charter cannot be impleaded out of their manor; for if they are, they may abate the writ by pleading their tenure: they are free from toll, for all things bought and sold concerning their substance and husbandry. And they may not be impanelled upon any inquest. F. N. B. 14.

If tenants in ancient demesne are returned on juries, they may have a writ de non posendis in assis, &c. and attachment against the sheriff. 1 Rep. 105. And if they are disturbed by taking duties of toll, or by being distrained to do unaccustomed services, &c. they may have writs of Monstraverunt, to be discharged. See F. N. B. 14: New Nat. Br. 32, 35: 4 Inst. 269. These tenants are free as to their persons; and their privileges are supposed to commence by act of parliament; for they cannot be created by grant at this day. 1 Salk. 57.

Lands in ancient demesne are extendible upon a statute merchant, l. ap. l. or elegit. 4 Inst. 270. No lands ought to be accounted ancient demesne but such as are held in socage; and whether it be ancient demesne or not, shall be tried by the book of Domesday. A lessee for years cannot plead in ancient demesne: nor can a lord in action against him plead ancient demesne, for the land is frank-fee in his hands. Danv. Abr. 660.

In real actions, ejectment, replevin, &c. ancient demesne is a good plea; but not in actions merely personal. Danv. 658. If in ancient demesne a writ of right close be brought, and prosecuted in nature of a formedon; a fine levied there by the custom, is a bar: and if this judgment be reversed in C. B. that court shall only adjudge, that the plaintiff be restored to his action in the court of ancient demesne; unless there is some other cause, which takes away its jurisdiction. Jenk. Cent. 87. Dyer 373.

See the statutes 9 H. 4. c. 5. & 8 H. 6. c. 26. to prevent depriving lords in ancient demesne of their jurisdiction by collusion.

A fine in the king's courts will change ancient demesne to frank-fee at common law; so if the lord enfeoffs another of the tenancy; or if the land comes to the king, &c. 4 Inst. 270. See Fine. But if the lord be not a party, he may have a writ of disseisin, and avoid the fine or recovery; for lands in ancient demesne were not originally within the jurisdiction of the courts of Westminster; but the tenants thereof enjoy this amongst other privileges, not to be called from the business of the plough by any foreign litigation. 1 Rol. Abr. 327. If the lord be party, then the lands become frank-fee, and are within the jurisdiction of the courts of Westminster, for the privilege of ancient demesne being established for the benefit of lord and tenant, they may destroy it at pleasure. 2 Rol. Abr. 324: 1 Salk. 57.

With respect to pleading, it is to be observed, that in all actions wherein, if the demandant recover, the lands would be frank-fee, ancient demesne is a good plea. 1 Rol. Abr. 322.

Therefore in all actions real, or where the realty may come in question, ancient demesne is a good plea; as assise, writ of ward of land, writ of account against a bailiff of a manor, writ of account against a guardian, &c. See 4 Inst. 270: 1 Rol. Abr. 322, 323.

In replevin ancient demesne is a good plea, because by intentment the freehold will come in question. Godb. 64. 1 Bulst. 108.

In an ejectione firmæ ancient demesne is a good plea; for by common intentment the right and title of the land will come in question; and if in this action it should not be a good plea, the ancient privileges of those tenants would be lost, inasmuch as most titles at this day are tried by ejectment. Hob. 47: 1 Bulst. 108: Hetl. 177: Cro. Eliz. 826.

But in all actions merely personal, as debt upon a lease, trespass, quare clauum fregit, &c. ancient demesne is no plea. Hob. 47: 5 Co. 105. For further matter see Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Ancient Demesne.

ANCIENTY, Fr. Ancienté, Lat. Antiquitas.] Eldership or seniority. This word is used in the stat. of Ireland, 14 Hen. 3.

ANDENA, A swath in mowing: it likewise signifies as much ground as a man can stride over at once.

ANELACIUS, A short knife or dagger. Mat. Paris 277.

ANFELDTYHDE, or according to Sommer, Anfealtible, A simple accusation; for the Saxons had two sorts of accusations, viz. simplex and triplex: that was called single, when the oath of the criminal and two more was sufficient to discharge him; but his own oath, and the oaths of five more were required to free him à triplici accusatione. Blount. See Leg. Adelsani, cap. 19. apud Brompton.

ANGARIA, Fr. Angaire; interpreted Personal Service.] A troublesome vexatious duty or service which tenants were obliged to pay their lords; and they performed it in their own persons. Impressing of ships. Blount. See also Spelman & Cowel; the former of whom gives some fanciful derivations under this word, and v. Penangaria. It seems that it may be easily and rationally derived from Angor. Lat.

ANGELICA VESTIS, A monkish garment which laymen put on a little before their deaths, that they might have the benefit of the prayers of the monks. It was from them called angelicus, because they were called angeli, who by their prayers cum te saluti succurrant. And the word succurrendum, in our old books, is understood of one who had put on the habit, and was near death. Monasticon, 1 tom. p. 632.

ANGEL, An ancient English coin value 10s.

ANGILD, Angeltun] The bare single valuation or compensation of a criminal; from the Saxon. Ang one, and gild payment, mulct, or fine. Tessild was the double mulct or fine; and trigild the triple, according to the rated ability of the person. Laws of I. a. c. 20: S. d. m.

ANALOPPE, A single tribute or tax. The words anblote and anset are mentioned in the laws of William the Conqueror; and their sense is, that every one should pay according to the custom of the country, his part and share, as foot and let, &c. Leg. H. 1. c. 64.

ANIENS, Fr.] Void, being of no force. F. N. B. 214.

ANNALES, Yearlings, or young cattle from one to two years old.

ANNATIS, Annates.] This word has the same meaning with first tithes, stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. The reason of the name is, because the rate of the first-fruits paid for spiritual livings, is after the value of one year's profit.

ANNEALING OF TILE, stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 4. From the Saxon, Annelan, Accendere, signifies the burning or hardening of tile.

ANNIENTED, from the Fr. Annéti.] Abrogated, frustrated, or brought to nothing. Lit. f. 741.

ANNIVERSARY DAYS, Dies Anniversarii.] Solemn days appointed to be celebrated yearly in commemoration of the death or martyrdom of saints; or the days whereon, at the return of every year, men were wont to pray for the souls of their deceased friends, according to the custom of the Roman Catholics, mentioned in the statute of 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. This was in use among our ancient Saxons, as may be seen in Lib. Ramef. f. 134. The anniversary, or yearly return of the day of the death of any person, which the religious registered in their etiquet or martyrology, and annually observed in gratitude to their founders and benefactors, was by our forefathers called a year day and a mind-day, i. e. a memorial day.

ANNI NUBILES, see tit. Age.

ANNO DOMINI, The computation of time from the incarnation of our Saviour; which is generally inserted in the dates of all public writings, with an addition of the year of the king's reign, &c. The Romans began their era of time from the building of Rome; the Græcians computed by Olympiads, and the Christians reckon from the birth of Jesus Christ.

ANNOISANCE, ANNOYANCE, or Noissance, Nuisance, thus termed in stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. Vide titles Nuisance and Highways.

ANNUA PENSIONE, An ancient writ for providing the king's chaplain unprovided with a pension. It was brought where the king had due to him an annual pension from an abbot or prior, for any of his chaplains whom he should nominate, (being unprovided of livings) to demand the same of such abbot or prior. Terms de la Ley 43: Reg. Orig. 165, 307.

ANNUALE, ANNUALIA. A yearly stipend annually assigned to a priest for celebrating an anniversary, or for saying continued masses one year, for the soul of a deceased person.

ANNUITY, Annuitus relictus; A yearly payment of a certain sum of money, granted to another for life, for years, or in fee, to be received of the grantor or his heirs, so that no freehold be charged therewith; whereof a man shall never have assise or other action, but a writ of annuity. Terms de Ley 44: Reg. Orig. 158: Co. Lit. 144. b.

To make a good grant of an annuity, no particular technical mode of expression is necessary. For if a man grants an annuity to another, to be received out of his assise, or to be received out of a bag of money, or to be received of a stranger, yet this is sufficient to charge his person, and the subsequent words shall be rejected. 1 Roll. Abr. 227.

If a man grant a rent out of land, in which he has nothing, provisô that he be not charged for this in a writ of annuity, it shall be a good annuity; for the proviso, being repugnant, is void. Co. Lit. 145 a: 2 Bull. 149. See 6 Co. 58 b.

If a man grant a rent charge out of his land, the grantee has an election to take it as a rent; or as an annuity. Lit. f. 219: 2 Bull. 148.

The treatise called Dorior and Stadout, dial. 1. cap. 3, shews several differences between a rent and an annuity, viz. that every rent is issuing out of land; but an annuity chargeth the person only, as the grantor and his heirs, who have assise by descent.

If no lands are bound for the payment of an annuity, a distress may not be taken for it. Dor. 65.

But if an annuity issue out of land, (which of late it often doth) the grantee may bring a writ of annuity, and make it personal, or an assise, or distrain, &c. so as to make it real. Co. Lit. 144. And if the grantee take a distress, yet he may afterwards have a writ of annuity, and discharge the land, if he do not avow the taking, which is in nature of an action. 1 Inst. 145. But if the grantee of a rent bring an assise for it, he shall never after have writ of annuity; he having elected this to be a rent; so if the grantee of an annuity avow the taking of a distress in a court of record. Danco. Abr. 486. And if the grantee purchase part of the land out of which an annuity is issuing, he shall never after have a writ of annuity. Co. Lit. 148.

Where a rent-charge, issuing out of lands, granted by tenant for life, &c. determines by the act of God; as an interest was vested in the grantee, it is in his election to make it a rent-charge, and so charge the lands therewith, or a personal thing to charge the person of the grantor in annuity. 2 Rep. 36. A. seised of lands in fee, he and B. grant an annuity or rent-charge to another; this prima facie is the grant of A. and confirmation of B. But the grantee may have a writ of annuity against both. If two men grant an annuity of 20 l. per ann. although the persons be several, if the deed of grant be not for them severally, yet the grantee shall have but one annuity against them. Co. Lit. 144.

When a man recovers in a writ of annuity he shall not have a new writ of annuity for the arrears due after the recovery, but a scire facias upon the judgment, the judgment being always executory. 2 Rep. 37. No writ of annuity lieth for arrears only when an annuity is determined, but for the annuity and arrears, Co. Lit. 285. Though, if a rent-charge be granted out of a lease for years, it hath been adjudged that the grantee may bring annuity when the lease is ended. Moor, cap. 450. Where an annuity is granted to one for life, during the term he shall have writ of annuity; and when that is determined, then his executors may have action of debt: for the realty is resolved into the personality. 4 Rep. 49. New Nat. Br. 287.

If the annuitant of an annuity payable half yearly, since the last term of payment, die before the half year is completed, nothing is due for the time he lives. 3 Atk. 260. So if a grant be made to A. for life to be paid at the feast of Easter or within 20 days after, and he die after Easter within 20 days, it has been said his executor shall not have it, for the last day was the time of payment. Dal. 1.

Upon a rent created by way of reservation, no writ of annuity lies. Darv. 483. Writ of annuity may not be had against the grantor's heir, unless the grant be for him and his heirs; and there must be assets to bind the heir, by grant of annuity by his ancestor, when he is named. Co. Lit. 144: 1 Roll. Abr. 226. But it is otherwise in case of the grant of a rent out of land, or a grant of a rent whereof the grantor is seised, for this charges the land, but an annuity charges the person only. Br. Charge, pl. 54.

An annuity granted by a bishop, with confirmation of dean and chapter, shall bind the successor of the bishop. New Nat. Br. 340. If the king grant an annuity, it must be expressed by whose hands the grantee shall receive it, as the king's bailiff, &c. or the grant will be void; for the king may not be sued, and no person is bound to pay it, if not expressed in the patent. New Nat. Br. 341. If, where an annuity is granted pro decimis, the grantor is disturbed of his tithes, the annuity ceaseth; and so it is where any annuity is granted to a person pro consilio, and the grantee refuseth to give counsel; for where the cause and consideration of the grant amounts to a condition, and the one ceases, the other shall determine. Co. Lit. 204.

There are now very few, if any, grants of annuities, without a covenant for payment, expressed or implied; and therefore, where a distress can't be made, or is not approved of, the grantee may bring an action of covenant, and recover the arrears in damages, with costs of suit. And that action is now usually brought, real actions and writs of annuity being much out of use.

ANNUITIES FOR LIFE. To guard against the fraudulent and oppressive practices of usurious money-lenders, exercised on young heirs and other necessitous persons entitled to property in expectancy, the legislature found it necessary to interpose by the following act.

By stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 26, a memorial of every deed, bond, or other assurance, whereby any annuity or rent-charge shall be granted for life, or for term of years, or greater estate determinable on lives, shall within 20 days of the execution (exclusive of the day of execution: 5 Term Rep. 283), be enrolled in Chancery; such memorial to contain the date of the deed, the name of all the parties, and for whom any of them are trustees, and of all the witnesses; and to set forth the annual sum to be paid, and the name of the person for whose life the annuity is granted, and the consideration; otherwise every such deed and assurance shall be void. § 1, 2.

In every deed, &c. whereby any annuity shall be granted, the consideration really (which shall be in money only) and also the name of the person by whom, and on whose behalf the consideration shall be advanced shall be set forth in words at length, otherwise such deed shall be void. § 3.

If any part of the consideration shall be (directly or indirectly) returned to, or retained by the party advancing the same, or if the consideration or any part shall be in goods, the annuitant may apply to the court in which any action is brought, to stay proceedings, and the court may order the assurance to be cancelled, and any judgment to be vacated. § 4.

All contracts for the purchase of any annuity with any infant under 21 years of age shall be utterly void; notwithstanding any attempt to confirm the same on the infant's coming of age. And all persons soliciting infants to grant annuities, or advancing money to them on condition of their granting annuities when of age, or engaging them by oath or promise not to plead infancy. And solicitors or brokers demanding gratuities for procuring money (beyond 10s. per cent.) shall all be judged guilty of misdemeanors, and liable to fine, imprisonment, and corporal punishment. § 6, 7.

This act does not extend to any annuity given by will or marriage settlement, or for the advancement of a child; nor to any secured on lands of equal annual value whereof the grantor is seised in fee simple or fee tail in possession, or secured by actual transfer in the funds, the dividends being of equal value with the annuity; nor to any voluntary annuity without pecuniary consideration; nor to annuities granted by corporations, or under act of parliament; nor where the annuity does not exceed 10l. unless there be more than one to the same grantor, nor in trust for the same person. § 8.

A deed not registered according to the directions of the above act, is absolutely void and not merely voidable. 2 Term Rep. 603. See also 4 Term Rep. 463, 494, 500, 694, 790, 814.

Notes given as part of the consideration (which if actually given bonâ fide are to be understood as money) must be circumstantially set out in the memorial, that the court may see whether a full consideration was given or not. 3 Term Rep. 288.—The redemption of a former annuity, at a higher price than it was purchased at, is a good consideration. 5 Term Rep. 283.

If the security be set aside for want of complying with the formalities of the act, the consideration, if fair and legal, may be recovered back by the grantee in action of assumpsit, against the person actually receiving such consideration money, but not against a surety. 1 Term Rep. 732: 2 Term Rep. 366.

How far the act extends to annuities granted previous to its passing, see 1 Term Rep. 267, 8.

ANNUITIES PUBLIC, see tit. National Debt.

ANSEL, or Ansil. See Ansil weight.

ANTEJURAMENTUM, and Præjuramentum. By our ancestors called juramentum calumniæ; in which both the accuser and the accused were to make this oath before any trial or purgation, viz. the accuser was to swear that he would prosecute the criminal; and the accused was to make oath on the very day that he was to undergo the ordeal, that he was innocent of the crime of which he was charged. Leg. Athelstan, apud Lambard 23. If the accuser failed to take this oath, the criminal was discharged; and if the accused did not take his, he was intended tended to be guilty, and not admitted to purge himself. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 66.

ANTISTITUTUM, A word used for 'monastery in our old histories. Blount.

ANTITHETARIUS, Signifies where a man endeavours to discharge himself of the fact of which he is accused, by recriminating and charging the accuser with the same fact. This word is mentioned in the title of a chapter in the laws of Cnutus, cap. 47.

APATISATIO, An agreement or compact made with another. Upton. lib. 2. c. 12.

APORIARE, To bring to poverty. Walsingham in R. 2. In another sense, to shun or avoid.

APOSTARE, To violate: apostare leges, and apostatare leges, wilfully to break or transgress, to apostatise from the laws. See Leg. Edw. Confessoris, c. 35.

APOSTATA CAPIENDO, A writ that formerly lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, broke out again, and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order; it was directed to the sheriff for the apprehension of the offender, and delivery of him again to his abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71, 267.

APOTHECARIES, are exempted from serving offices. See tit. Constable, Churchwarden. Their medicines are to be searched and examined by the physicians chosen by the college of physicians, and if faulty shall be burnt, &c. 32 Hen. 8. c. 40: 1 M. Stat. 2. c. 9. And apothecaries to the army are to make up their chests of medicines at Apothecaries' Hall, there to be openly viewed, &c. under the penalty of 40*l.* See Physicians.

APPARATOR, or APPARITOR, A messenger that serves the process of the spiritual court. His duty is to cite the offenders to appear; to arrest them; and to execute the sentence or decree of the judges, &c. See Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 5.

If a monition be awarded to an apparitor, to summon a man, and he upon the return of the monition avers that he had summoned him, when in truth he had not, and the defendant be thereupon excommunicated; an action on the case at common law will lie against the apparitor for the falsehood committed by him in his office, besides the punishment inflicted on him by the ecclesiastical court for such breach of trust. Hy. Paring. 70: 2 Bulst. 264.

APPARATOR COMITATUS, An officer formerly called by this name; for which the sheriffs of Buckinghamshire had a considerable yearly allowance; and in the reign of queen Elizabeth, there was an order of court for making that allowance; but the custom and reason of it are now altered. Hale's Sher. Acco. 104.

APPARLEMENT, from the Fr. Parcillement, i. e. in like manner.] A resemblance or likelihood; as apparlement of war. Stat. 2 R. 2. ft. 1. c. 6.

APPARURA, Furniture and implements. Carrucarum apparura is plough tackle, or all the implements belonging to a plough. Blount.

APPEAL, Is used in two senses.

1. It signifies the removal of a cause from an inferior court or judge to a superior. From the French verb neutral, APPELLER, of the same signification. As relative to this sense see the proper titles in this Dictionary. It may be well also in this place to observe the difference between an appeal from a court of equity, and a writ of error from a court of law. First, the former may be brought upon any interlocutory matter; the latter upon nothing but only a definitive judgment. Secondly, that on writs of error the House of Lords pronounces the judgment; on appeals it gives direction to the court below to rectify its own decree. 3 Comm. 55.

2. When spoken of as a criminal prosecution, it denotes an accusation by a private subject against another for some heinous crime; demanding punishment on account of the particular injury suffered, rather than for the offence against the publick. And in this sense it is derived from the French verb actives, APPELLER, to call upon, summon or challenge one. 4 Comm. 312. Or the accusation of a felon at common law by one of his accomplices, which accomplice was then called an approver. (See tit. Accessory) Co. Lit. 287. See also Briat. lib. 3: Brit. c. 22, 25: Staundf. lib. 2. c. 6.

CRIMINAL APPEALS are either capital or not capital—But of the latter sort appeals de pace, de plagis, de imprisonment, and of mayhem, are now become obsolete being turned into actions of trespass long since. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 235. of the last however a few words shall be said hereafter. Capital appeals are either of Treason or Felony. The latter may be subdivided into 1. Appeals of Death, or as they are otherwise called Appeals of Murder. 2. Appeals of Larceny or Robbery. 3. Appeals of Rape. 4. Appeals of Assault, which last are now entirely obsolete. 1 Inst. 288 a. and see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23.

This private process for the punishment of publick crimes, probably had its original in those times, when a private pecuniary satisfaction, or weregild was constantly paid to the party injured, or his relations to expiate enormous offences. As therefore during the continuance of this custom, a process was certainly given, for recovering the weregild by the party to whom it was due; it seems that when these offences by degrees grew no longer redeemable, the private process was still continued in order to insure the infliction of punishment upon the offender, though the party injured was allowed no pecuniary compensation. 4 Comm. 313, 4.

It was also anciently permitted (as above hinted) for one subject to appeal another of high Treason, either in the courts of common law (Britt. c. 22.) or in parliament; or, for treasons committed beyond the seas, in the court of the high constable and marshal. The cognizance of appeals in the latter still continues in force; and so late as 1631, there was a trial by battle awarded in the court of chivalry on such appeal of treason; [By Donald Lord Rae against David Ramsay. Rushw. vol. 2. part 2. p. 112.] But the cognizance of appeals for treason in the common law courts was virtually abolished by stat. 5 E. 3. c. 9: & 25 E. 3. [stat. 5. c. 4.] (1 Hale P. C. 349, 359:) and in Parliament expressly by stat. 1 H. 4. c. 14. See 4 Comm. 314.

On this subject Mr. Kyd the ingenious editor of Comyns's Digest makes the following useful remark.—It does not appear that the appeal of treason is taken away by this statute (1 H. 4. c. 14.) or any other. The stat. 5 E. 3. c. 9. only says, that none shall be attached, &c. against the form of the great charter and the laws of the land. The stat. 25 E. 3. [stat. 5.] c. 4. goes a little farther and says "that none shall be taken by petition or suggestion to the king or to his council, but by indictment or presentment, or by process made by writ original at the common law." It is conceived that a writ of appeal is a writ original; (2 Hawk. 232: 5 Burr. 2643:) therefore if an appeal of treason was part of the common law, these these statutes do manifestly not take it away. The stat. 1 H. 4. c. 14. applying only to appeals in parliament. See Com. Dig. tit. Appeal (A. 1.)

However, as there has been no instance of any such appeal, before any court of common law, either since the making the stat. 1 H. 4. c. 14, nor for many years before, the law relating to such appeals seems wholly obsolete at this day. Leach Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 23. § 29.

An Appeal of Felony may be brought for crimes committed either against the parties themselves or their relations. The crimes against the parties themselves are Larceny, Rape, Maim, and Assault. The only crime against one's relation, for which an appeal can be brought is that of killing him; either by murder or manslaughter. 4 Comm. 314. (But this seems an unguarded assertion in the learned commentator, as an appeal is given to the husband, next of kin, &c. by stat. in case of Rape. See post. III. Appeal of Rape.)

Appeal of Death cannot be brought by every relation, but only by the wife for the death of her husband, Magna Charta c. 34. or by the heir male for the death of his ancestor; which heirship was also confined by an ordinance of king Henry the First to the four nearest degrees of blood. M. r. c. 2. § 7. It is given to the wife on account of the loss of her husband; therefore if she marries again before or pending her appeal, it is lost and gone; (2 Inst. 68, 317). or if she marries after judgment, she shall not demand execution. (2 Hawk. P. C. 213. by which it seems that the Court may award execution ex officio—sed dubitatur). The heir must also be heir male, and such a one as was the next heir by the course of the common law at the time of the killing of the ancestor (H. P. C. 182.) But this rule has three exceptions. 1st. If the person killed leaves an innocent wife, she only and not the heir shall have the appeal. 2d. If there be no wife, and the heir be accused of the murder, the person who next to him would have been heir male, shall bring the appeal. 3d. If the wife kill her husband the heir may appeal her of the death (1 Lev. 325: 1 Inst. 33.) And by the stat. of Glocester 6 E. 1. c. 9. all appeals of death must be sued within a year and a day after the completion of the felony by the death of the party; which seems to be only declaratory of the old common law. 4 Comm. 314, 5.

These several appeals may be brought previous to any indictment; and if the appellee be acquitted thereon he cannot be afterwards indicted of the same offence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 35. § 15. [But if the appellant does not prosecute his appeal, or if he release to the appellant, the appellee may be indicted. 3 Inst. 131: Staudf. 147. 8.] But if a man be acquitted on an indictment for murder, or found guilty and pardoned by the king, still he ought not (in strictness) to go at large, but be imprisoned or let to bail till the year and day be past, by virtue of stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1. in order to be furthering to answer an appeal for the same felony, though if he has been found guilty of manslaughter, or on indictment, and has had the benefit of clergy and suffered the judgment of the law, he cannot afterwards be appealed. 4 Comm. 315.

If the defendant on an indictment is convicted of manslaughter, and allowed his clergy, some of the books say the heir may lodge an appeal immediately before clergy had: and others say clergy ought to be granted, and that it is unreasonable an appeal should interpose presently to prevent judgment. 3 Inst. 131. If a person, immediately after the verdict of manslaughter, put in an appeal of murder, and before the appeal is arraigned, the defendant demands his benefit of clergy; this is a good bar to appeal; and praying of clergy, is having of clergy, though the court delay calling the party to judgment, &c. 1 Salk. 60, 62: Kel. 93. But formerly it was held, that the court might delay the calling a convict to judgment, and thereby hinder him from his clergy, and make him liable to an appeal, especially if the appeal were depending: and where the record of a conviction of manslaughter is erroneous, or insufficient, &c. the offender cannot plead the conviction and clergy had therein, in bar of an appeal or second indictment, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 12, 14.

If the appellee be acquitted, the appellor (by stat. Westm. 2: 13 E. 1. c. 12,) shall suffer one year's imprisonment and pay a fine to the king, besides damages to the party; and if the appellor be incapable to make restitution in damages, his abettors shall do it for him, and also be liable to imprisonment. This provision as was foreseen by the author of Fleta (lib. 1. c. 34. § 48.) proved a great discouragement to appeals; so that thenceforward they ceased to be in common use. 4 Comm. 316.

If the appellee be found guilty, he shall suffer the same judgment, as if he had been convicted by indictment; but with this remarkable difference; that on an indictment the king may pardon and remit the execution; but on an appeal, being the suit of a private subject, to make atonement for the private wrong, the king can no more pardon it than he can remit the damages recovered in an action of battery. 4 Comm. 316. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 35: Jenk. 160. pl. 4. [But by the express provision of stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. an accomplice convicting two others guilty of robbery shall have the king's pardon, which shall be a good bar to an Appeal of Robbery.]

The punishment of the offender may however be remitted and discharged by the concurrence of all parties interested in the appeal. 1 Hale P. C.

Having said thus much on the subject of appeals in general, the following miscellaneous matter may serve for further elucidation. I. Appeals of Death; II. Appeals of Maim; III. Appeals of Rape; IV. Appeals of Robbery.—The student who wishes for the most ample information on this subject must apply to Hawkins P. C. vol. ii. and Com. Dig. tit. Appeal.

I. For the proceedings on an appeal of Death, see the case of Bigby widow v. Kennedy, 5 Burr. 2643; where they are detailed much at length and with great exactness.

At the common law, a woman as well as a man might have an appeal of death of any of her ancestors, and therefore the son of a woman shall at this day have an appeal, if he be heir at the death of the ancestor, for the son is not disabled, but the mother only; for the statute of Mag. Ch. c. 34. says propter appellum feminæ. 2 Inst. 68. the husband shall not have appeal for the death of his wife, but the heir only. Darro. Ab. 1. 488.

The judges are so far bound to take notice of this statute, that if a woman brings an appeal of death of her father, or of any other besides her husband, they ought ex officio to abate it, tho' the defendant takes no exception to it. 2 Hawk. P. C. cap. 23. f. 42.

A feme shall have appeal where she shall have no dowry, as where she elopes from her baron. Br. Appeal. pl. 17. cites 50 E. 3. 15. per Ingleby.

APPEAL II.

The wife is to be a wife de facto to be intitled to appeal; 2 Inst. 68, 317. Where a woman has judgment in appeal, of the death of her husband, she cannot have execution if she do not personally pray it: a judge went to a woman great with child, to know if she would have execution? She said, Yes, and the appellee was hanged. Jenk. Cent. 137.

An idiot, or a person born deaf and dumb, or one attainted of treason or felony, or outlawed in a personal action, so long as such attainder or outlawry continues in force, cannot bring any appeal whatsoever. H. P. C. 183: 2 Hawkt. P. C. c. 23. § 30.

The appellant is to commence his appeal in person; but he may proceed by attorney, having a special warrant of attorney filed. 1 Salk. 60. The appeal must be brought in a year and a day after the death of the person murdered: and the count must set forth the fact, and the length and depth of the wound, the year, day, hour, place where done, and with what weapon, &c. And that the party died in a year and a day. 2 Inst. 665; 3 Inst. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9. principal and accessaries before and after are to be joined in appeal. Danv. Abr. 493. And this is to be observed, though the accessory is guilty in another county. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1.

An appeal is prosecuted two ways; either by writ, or bill: appeal by writ is when a writ is purchased out of chancery by one for another, to the intent he may appeal a third person of some felony committed by him, finding pledges that he shall do it: appeal by bill is where a man of himself gives up his accusation in writing, offering to undergo the burden of appealing the person therein named. Bracton.

This appeal may be brought by bill before the justices in the King's Bench; before justices of goal delivery, and commissioners of oyer and terminer, &c. or before the sheriff and coroner, in the county court: but the sheriff and coroner have only power to take and enter the appeal and count, for it must be removed by certiorari into B. R.

In appeal by original, principals and accessaries are generally charged alike without distinction, till the plaintiff counts: but 'tis otherwise in appeals by bill. Danv. 494.

There is but one appeal against the principal and accessory: if the principal is acquitted, it shall acquit the accessory; and both shall have damages against the appellant on a false appeal, or the accessory may bring a writ of conspiracy. 2 Inst. 383.

If the defendant in appeal is attaint, or acquit: or the plaintiff nonsuit after appearance, which is peremptory, no other appeal lies. H. P. C. 188. If there be an indictment and appeal depending at the same time against the same person, the appeal shall be tried first, if the appellant be ready. Kel. 107. Otherwise the king would destroy the suit of the party. Jenk. 160. pl. 4.

The case of other appeals than of murder, as of robbery, rape, &c. are not within stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1; and therefore auterfois acquit, upon an indictment within the year, stands at common law a good bar to an appeal of robbery, or any offence other than murder or manslaughter; and yet the judges at this day never forbear to proceed upon an indictment of robbery, rape, or other offence, though within the year, because appeals of robbery especially are very rare, and of little use, since the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 12, gives restitution to the prosecutor as effectually as upon an appeal. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 250.

A charter of pardon is no bar of an appeal; and if the party be outlawed, &c. in appeal, and the king pardon him, a scire facias shall issue against the appellant, who may pray execution, notwithstanding such pardon; but if returned sci. fac. and he appears not, then the appellee shall upon the pardon be discharged. H. P. C. 251. A peer in appeal of murder shall not be tried by his peers, but by a common jury; though he shall upon an indictment for murder. Vide stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1. directing appeals before the sheriff and coroners, or at king's bench, or gaol delivery; and stat. 1 H. 4. c. 14. (mentioned before) that no appeals are to be pursued in parliament.

And where appeal of death is brought, the defendant cannot justify se defendendo; but must plead not guilty, and the jury are to find the special matter. Bro. App. 122. 3 Salk. 37.

The court ex officio will quash the writ for apparent faults appearing on the face of the writ; as where the sense is defective for want of a material word, or where it wants those words of art which the law has appropriated for the description of the offence. 2 Hawkt. P. C. c. 23. § 57.

Also the court will abate the writ when the declaration varies from the writ in some material point, either as to the reign of the king, or as to the county wherein the fact is laid, &c. 2 Hawkt. P. C. c. 23. § 98.

A release of all manner of actions, or of all actions criminal, or of all actions concerning pleas of the crown, or of all appeals, or of all demands, is a good bar of any appeal; but a release of all personal actions does not bar an appeal of felony, being an action of an higher nature. Cro. Jac. 283; Yelv. 204; 2 Hawkt. P. C. c. 23. § 155.

If the appellee pleads a special plea, which does not amount to a confession of the fact, he must at the same time plead over to the felony, except in special cases; as where such plea would be prejudicial to him, or where his plea declines the jurisdiction of the court. 2 Hawkt. P. C. c. 23. § 137; Carth. 56.

In appeal of murder brought by the wife for the death of her husband; the appellee pleaded, that she was never lawfully married to her husband, but did not plead over to the felony; adjudged, that this plea being to be tried by the ordinary upon his certificate, whether the marriage was lawful or not, in such case the defendant need not plead over to the felony; but where the plea is triable by the common law, he must plead over to the felony. Cro. Eliz. 224.

II. Appeal of Maibem, Is the accusing one that hath married another: but this being generally no felony, it is in a manner but an action of trespass; and nothing is recovered by it but damages. In an action of assault and battery, the court may increase damages, on view of the maibem, &c. And though maibem is not felony, in appeals and indictments of maibem, the words felonice maibemavit are necessary. 3 Inst. 63. Bracton calls appeal of maibem appellum de plagis & maibemio, and writes a whole chapter upon it. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 24. In an appeal of maibem, the defendant pleads that the plaintiff had brought an action of trespass against him, for the same wounding, and had recovered, and damages given, &c. and this was a good plea in bar of the appeal; because in both actions damages only are to be recovered. 4 Rep. 43. And where there is a recovery in assault and battery, battery, &c. the jury give damages according to the hurt, which was done, and it shall be intended a maibem at that time; and therefore appeal of maibem, doth not lie. Hob. 94: 1 Leon. 318. In appeal of maibem, the appellant ought not to plead in abatement of the writ, and likewise over to the maibem; if he doth, he will lose the benefit of his plea to the writ. Moor 457: See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 16—28.

III. Appeal of Rape, Lies where a rape is committed on the body of a woman. 3 Inst. 30. A feme covert, without her husband, may bring appeal of rape: and stat. 6. R. 2. c. 6. gives power where a woman is ravished, and afterwards consents to it, for a husband, or a father, or next of kin, there being no husband, to bring appeal of rape: also the criminal, in such case, may be attainted at the suit of the king. 3 Inst. 131: 6 R. 2. cap. 6.

If a woman be ravished by her next of kin, and consents to him, and has neither husband nor father, the next of kin to him shall have the appeal; for he has disabled himself by the rape, whereby he becomes a felon. 2 Inst. 434—Hale's Hist. P. C. 632. S. P. cites 28 H. 6. Corone 459—2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 64. S. P.

If there be no husband, nor father, then the appeal is given to the heir, whether male or female. Hale's P. C. 180.

This statute, as to the husband, shall be construed strictly, and be intended of a husband in possession, tho' there be good cause of divorce; for he is her husband till a divorce be had. See Br. Parliament, pl. 89. cites 11 H. 4. 13, 14: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 62. says, that ne unques accouple, &c. is a good plea, and shall be tried by the bishop's certificate, who, if the marriage were unlawful by reason of a pre-contract, ought to certify against the appellant.

The statute of Westm. 1. c. 13. which reduced the crime of rape to a trespass, enacts that appeal of rape shall be brought within forty days, but by stat. Westm. 2. c. 34. which makes this offence felony, no time is limited for the prosecution; so that it may be brought in any reasonable time. H. P. C. 186. Appeal of rape is to be commenced in the county where committed; and if a woman be assaulted in one county, and ravished in another, the appeal of rape lies in that county where she was ravished. H. P. C. 186. It is held, that though formerly the defendant might have his clergy, 'tis taken away by the stat. 18 Eliz. c. 17: Dyer 201. See further on this subject, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 58—73.

IV. Appeal of Robbery, or Larceny. A remedy given by the common law, where a person is robbed of his goods, &c. to have restitution of the goods stolen: as they could not be restored on indictment at the king's suit, this appeal was judged necessary. 3 Inst. 242. If a man robbed make fresh pursuit after, and apprehend and prosecute the felon, he may bring appeal of robbery at any time afterwards. Staudf. 62.

An infant shall have an appeal of robbery. St. P. C. 60. b. cap. 9.

Appeal of felony lies against a feme covert without her baron. St. P. C. 62. cap. 11.

So it lies against an infant; and so of all others who may commit felony. St. Pl. C. 62. cap. 11.

A woman at this day may have an appeal of robbery, &c. for she is not restrained thereof. 2 Inst. 68.

APPEARANCE.

Adjudged, that an appeal of robbery may be brought by the party robbed twenty years after the offence committed, and that he shall not be bound to bring it within a year and a day, as he must do in appeal of murder: 4 Leon. 16.

But the courts of law would now scarce permit a prosecution after such a length of time, unless good cause could be shewn why it had not been sooner commenced, as that the offender had fled the kingdom, and was but just returned, &c.

If one man robs several persons, every one of them may have appeal: likewise if the robber be attainted at the suit of one, he shall be tried at the suit of the rest, so as their appeals were commenced before the attainer. Danv. Abr. 494. In appeal of robbery, the plaintiff must declare of all the things whereof he is robbed, or they shall be forfeited to the king; for the appellant can have restitution for no more than is mentioned in his appeal. 3 Inst. 227. By the Year-book 21 Ed. 1. 16, restitution of goods was granted upon an outlawry, in appeal of robbery; but a person having preferred an indictment against a robber, and afterwards an appeal, on which he was outlawed, the plaintiff moved to have restitution of his goods, and it was denied. 2 Leon. 108.

If the count or declaration in appeal of burglary be sufficient, and the defendant is convicted at the suit of the party upon the appeal; he shall not be again impeached for the same offence at the king's suit. 4 Rep. 39. By stat. 21 H. 8. c. 11, the like restitution of stolen goods may be had on indictments after attainer, as on appeals: and appeals of robbery are now much out of use. See further 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 44—57; and this Dict. tit. Robbery.

APPEAL TO ROME. At the reformation in the reign of H. 8. the kingdom entirely renounced the authority of the see of Rome; and therefore by the several statutes 24 H. 8. c. 12. and 25 H. 8. c. 19 and 21, to appeal to Rome from any of the king's courts, (which tho' illegal before, had at times been connived at); to sue to Rome for any licence or dispensation; or to obey any process from thence are made liable to the pains of præmunire; and by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1, to defend the pope's jurisdiction in this realm is a præmunire for the first offence, and high treason for the second. See tit. Papists.

Where an appeal in an ecclesiastical cause is made before the bishop, or his commissary, it may be removed to the archbishop; and if before an archdeacon, to the court of arches, and from the arches to the archbishop; and when the cause concerns the king, appeal may be brought in fifteen days from any of the said courts to the prelates in convocation. St. 24 H. 8. c. 12 — and the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19, gives appeals from the archbishop's courts to the king in chancery, who thereupon appoints commissioners finally to determine the cause; and this is called the court of delegates: there is also a court of commissioners of review; which commission the king may grant as supreme head, to review the definitive sentence given on appeal in the court of delegates.

APPEARANCE, In the law signifieth the defendant's filing common or special bail, when he is served with copy of, or arrested on any process out of the courts at Westminster: and there can be no appearance in the court of B. R. but by special or common bail. There are four ways for defendants to appear to actions; in person, son, or by attorney; by persons of full age: and by guardians, or next friend, by infants. Show. 165.

By the common law, the plaintiff or defendant, demandant or tenant, could not appear by attorney without the king's special warrant by writ or letters patent, but ought to follow his suit in his own proper person; by reason whereof there were but few suits. Co. Lit. 128: 2 Inst. 249. But it is now the common course for the plaintiff or defendant, in all manner of actions where there may be an attorney, to appear by attorney, and put in his warrant without any writ from the king for that purpose. And therefore, generally, in all actions real, personal, and mixt, the demandant or plaintiff, tenant or defendant, may appear by attorney. F. N. B. 26.

But in every case, where the party stands in contempt, the court will not admit him to appear by attorney, but oblige him to appear in person. As if he comes in by a cepi corpus upon an exigent. F. N. B. Or, if he be outlawed. 2 Co. 462, 616.

But by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. Persons outlawed in any case, except for treason or felony, may appear by attorney to reverse the same without bail; except where special bail shall be ordered by the court.

In all cases where process issues forth to take the party's body, if a common appearance only, and not special bail is required, there every such party may appear in court in his proper person, and file common bail. 1 Lill. Abn. 85: Hil. 22 Car. B. R.

In a capital criminal case the party must always appear in person, and cannot plead by attorney: also in criminal offences, where an act of parliament requires that the party should appear in person; and likewise in appeal, or on attachment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 1.

On an indictment, information or action, for any crime whatsoever under the degree of capital, the defendant may, by the favour of the court, appear by attorney; and this he may do as well before plea pleaded, as in the proceeding after, till conviction. 1 Lev. 146: Kirkw. 165: Dyer 346: Co. Jac. 462.

But, when defendant has filed common or special bail for himself, any person may deliver or file a declaration against him by the bye, at any time during the term wherein the process against the defendant is ret. sedente curia; and the practice has been, that the plaintiff, at whose suit the process is, might declare against the defendant, in as many actions as he thinks fit, before the end of the next term, after the ret. of the process. *Impey's Pract. Attornies subscribing warrants to appear, are liable to attachment, upon non-appearance. And where an attorney promises to appear for his client, the court will compel him to appear and put in common bail, in such time as is usual by the course of the court; and that although the attorney say he hath no warrant for appearance: nor shall repealing a warrant of attorney, to delay proceedings, excuse the attorney for his not appearing, who may be compelled by the court. See Impey's Pract. K. B. 189, cites R. M. 1654. The defendant's attorney is to file his warrant the same term he appears, and the plaintiff the term he declares, under penalties by stat. 4 and 5 Ann. c. 16.

An attorney is not compellable to appear for any one, unless he take his fee, or back the warrant; after which the court will compel him to appear. 1 Salk. 87.

If an attorney appears, and judgment is entered against his client, the court will not set aside the judgment, tho' the attorney had no warrant, if the attorney be able and responsible; for the judgment is regular, and the plaintiff is not to suffer when in no default; but if the attorney be not responsible or suspicious, the judgment will be set aside; for otherwise the defendant has no remedy, and any one may be undone by that means. 1 Salk. 86.

APPENDANT, appendens.] Is a thing of inheritance, belonging to another inheritance that is more worthy. As an advowson, common, court, &c. may be appendant to a manor, a manor, common of fishing, appendant to a freehold: land appendant to an office: a seat in a church to a house, &c. But land is not appendant to land, both being corporeal, and one thing corporeal may not be appendant to another that is corporeal; but an incorporeal thing may be appendant to it. Co. Lit. 121: 4 Rep. 86: Danv. Abr. 500. A forest may be appendant to an honour; and waifs and estrays to a leet. Co. Lit. 367. And incorporeal things, advowsons, ways, courts, commons, and the like, are properly parcel of and appendant to corporeal things; as houses, lands, manors, &c. Plowd. 170: 4 Rep. 38.— If one disseise me of common appendant belonging to my manor, and during the disseisin I sell the manor; by this the common is extinct for ever. 4 E. 3. 21: 11 Rep. 47. Common of estovers cannot be appendant to land; but to a house to be spent there. Co. Lit. 120. By the grant of a messuage, the orchard and garden will pass as appendant.

Appendants are ever by prescription, and this makes a distinction between appendants and appurtenances, for appurtenances may be created in some cases at this day; as if a man at this day grant to a man and his heirs, common in such a moor for his beasts, levant or couching upon his manor; or if he grant to another common of estovers or turbary in fee-simple, to be burnt or spent within his manor; by these grants, these commons are appurtenant to the manor, and shall pass by the grant thereof; in the civil law it is called adjunctum. Co. Lit. 121 b.

A way may be quasi appendant to a house, &c. and as such pass by grant thereof. Cro. Jac. 150.

APPORTIONMENT, apportionamentum.] Is a dividing of a rent, &c. into parts, according as the land out of which it issues is divided among two or more. If a stranger recovers part of the land, a lessee shall pay, having regard to that recovered, and what remains in his hands. Where the lessor recovers part of the land or enters for a forfeiture into part thereof, the rent shall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 148. If a man leases three acres, rendering rent, and afterwards grants away one acre, the rent shall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 144. Lessee for years leases for years, rendering rent, and after devises this rent to three persons, this rent may be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 505. If a lessee for life or years under rent, surrenders part of the land, the rent shall be apportioned:

but where the grantee of a rent-charge purchases part of the land, there all is extinct at law. Moor 231. But he shall have relief in equity. Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity i. 379. A rent-charge, issuing out of land, may not be apportioned: nor shall things entire, as if one holds lands by service to pay yearly to the lord, at such a feast, a horse, &c. Co. Lit. 149. But if part of the land, out of which a rent-charge issues, descends to the grantee of the rent, this shall be apportioned. Danv. 507.

A grantee of rent releases part of the rent to the grantor, this doth not extinguish the residue, but it shall be apportioned: for here the grantee dealeth not with the land, only the rent. Co. Lit. 148. On partition of lands out of which a rent is issuing, the rent shall be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 507. And where lands held by lease rendering rent are extended upon elegit, one moiety of the rent shall be apportioned to the lessor. Ibid. 509. If part of lands leased is surrounded by fresh water, there shall be no apportionment of rent; but if it be surrounded with the sea, there shall be an apportionment of the rent. Dyer 56.

The stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 15, has in certain cases altered the law as to the apportioning of rents, in point of time; it being thereby enacted, "That if any tenant for life shall happen to die before, or on the day on which any rent was reserved or made payable upon any demise or lease of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, which determined on the death of any such tenant for life, that the executors or administrators of such tenant for life, shall and may, in an action on the case, recover, of and from such under-tenant or under-tenants of such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or if before such day, then a proportion of such rent, according to the time such tenant for life lived, of the last year, or quarter of a year, or other time in which the said rent was growing due as aforesaid, making all just allowances, or a proportionable part thereof respectively."

Before this statute, the rent, by the death of a tenant for life, was lost; for the law would not suffer his representative to bring an action for the use and occupation, much less if there was a lease, and the remainder-man had no right, because the rent was not due in his time; nor could equity relieve against this hardship by apportioning the rent. 1 P. Wms. 392. The legislature having, however, by the above statute, interposed in favour of tenants for life, its provisions have, by an equitable construction, been extended to tenants in tail. Amb. Rep. 198: 2 Bro. C. Rep. 659.

But though the executor of tenant for life is now intitled to an apportionment of the rent, yet the dividends of money directed to be laid out in lands, and in the mean-time to be invested in government securities, and the interest and dividends to be applied, as the rents and profits would in case it were laid out in land, were held not to be apportionable, though tenant for life died in the middle of the half year. 3 Atk. 502: Amb. Rep. 279: 2 Faz. 672: and the authority of the case on the will of Lord C. J. Holt, 3 Vin. Abr. 18. pl. 3. was denied. But where the money is laid out in mortgage till a purchase could be made, the interest is apportionable, 2 P. Wms. 176. This distinction, however, may be referred to interest on a mortgage being in fact due from day to day, and

and so not properly an apportionment: whereas the dividends accruing from the publick funds are made payable on certain days, and therefore not apportionable; and upon the principle of this distinction the Master of the Rolls decreed an apportionment of maintenance-money, it being for the daily subsistence of the infant. 2 P. Wms. 501. See also Mr. Cox's note (1). And the principle extending to a separate maintenance for a feme covert, such apportionment has, in such case, been allowed at law. 2 Black. R. 1016. 2. Whether equity would not apportion dividends of money in the funds, directed to be applied for the maintenance of an infant, or secured by the husband as a separate provision for his wife, as it would be difficult for them to find credit for necessaries, if the payment depended on their living to the end of a quarter? That equity will not in general apportion dividends, see 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 99.

As to apportionment of fines paid on renewal of leases by tenant for life, see 1 Bro. Ch. Rep. 440: 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 243. and the cases there referred to.

In what cases eviction of part of the land is a ground for apportionment, see Co. Litt. 148. See Foulknap's Treat. of Equity 376.

A man tenches part of the land where he hath common appendant, the common shall be apportioned: of common appurtenant it is otherwise, and if by the act of the party, the common is extinct. 8 Rep. 79. Common appendant and appurtenant may be apportioned on alienation of part of the land to which it is appendant or appurtenant. Wood's Inst. 197. If where a person has common of pasture fans number, part of the land descends to him, this being intire and uncertain cannot be apportioned: but if it had been common certain, it should have been apportioned. Co. Litt. 149.

APPORTUM, from the Fr. [apport.] Signifies properly the revenue or profit which a thing brings in to the owner: and it was commonly used for a corody or pension. It hath also been applied to an augmentation given to an abbot out of the profits of a manor for his better support.

APPRENDRE, [Fr.] A fee or profit apprendre, is fee or profit to be taken or received. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 8.

APPRENTICE, apprenticius, [Fr. apprenti, from apprendre to learn.] A young person bound by indentures to a tradesman or artificer, who upon certain covenants is to teach him his mystery or trade.

It will be proper under this head to consider.

I. Who may be bound apprentices, and in what manner; and who are compellable to receive them.

II. How they are to be provided for and governed during their apprenticeship, and in what manner they are to be assigned, &c.

III. What trades may not be exercised without having served an apprenticeship.

IV. For what offences they are punishable, and how.

APPRENTICE I.

Of apprentices acquiring settlement, see tit. Settlement. [For more full matter relative to apprentices, particularly parish apprentices, see Mr. Conft's edition of Bott's Poor Laws.]

I. It seems clearly agreed, that by the common law infants, or persons under the age of twenty-one years, cannot bind themselves apprentices, in such a manner as to intitle their masters to an action of covenant, or other action against them for departing from their service, or other breaches of their indentures; which makes it necessary, according to the usual practice, to get some of their friends to be bound for the faithful discharge of their offices, according to the terms agreed on. 11 Co. 89 b. 2 Inst. 379, 580: 3 Leon. 63: 7 Mod. 15. And notwithstanding stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. enacts, that although persons bound apprentices shall be within age at the time of making their indentures, they shall be bound to serve for the years in their indentures contained, as if they were at full age at the time of making of them; it hath been held, that although an infant may voluntarily bind himself an apprentice, and, if he continue an apprentice for seven years, he may have the benefit to use his trade; yet neither at the common law, nor by any words of the above mentioned statute, can a covenant or obligation of an infant, for his apprenticeship, bind him; but if he misbehave himself, the master may correct him in his service, or complain to a justice of peace, to have him punished according to the statute: but no remedy lieth against an infant upon such covenant. Cro. Car. 179: Cro. Jac. 194. S. P.

But if any one entices an apprentice from his master's service, or harbours him after notice, the master may maintain a special action on the case, against the person so doing. Vide 1 Salk. 380.

By the custom of London, an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London, by indenture with proper covenants; which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age. Moor 134: 2 Bulst. 192: 2 Rol. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271: 2 Keb. 687. But a waterman's apprentice is not, within the custom of London, to bind himself being under twenty-one. 6 Mod. 69.

A freeman's widow may take a maid apprentice for seven years, and enrol her as a youth; if she be above fourteen years old: and if an exchange woman, that hath a husband free of London, take such apprentice, she shall be bound to the husband; and may be made free, at the end of the apprenticeship, if she be then unmarried. Lex Londonen. 48.

By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. sect. 35. The justices may compel certain persons under age to be bound as apprentices, and on refusal may commit them, &c. And by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, and 18 Geo. 3. c. 47. churchwardens and overseers of the poor may bind out the children of the poor to be apprentices, with the consent of two justices; if boys till 21, if girls till that age or marriage. And if any person refuse to accept a poor apprentice, he shall forfeit 10l. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. § 5. Also justices of peace and churchwardens, &c. may put out poor boys apprentice to the sea-service. Stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 6. and 4 Ann. c. 19. And by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 3. apprentices bound out by publick charities are regulated. See title Chimney-Sweepers.

APPRENTICE II.

As to the manner of their being bound;

By the statute 5 Eliz. c. 4. sect. 25, an apprentice must be bound by deed indented; and this must be complied with for all purposes except for the obtaining a settlement.

Indentures must also be enrolled in all towns corporate under stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5, and 5 Geo. 2. c. 46; and in London, by the custom, in the chamberlain's office there.

In London, if the indentures be not enrolled before the chamberlain within a year, upon a petition to the mayor and aldermen, &c. a scire fac shall issue to the master, to shew cause why not enrolled; and if it was through the master's default, the apprentice may sue out his indentures, and be discharged: otherwise if through the fault of the apprentice, as if he would not come to present himself before the chamberlain, &c. for it cannot be enrolled, unless the apprentice be in court and acknowledge it. 2 Roll. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271.

Indentures are likewise to be stamped, and are chargeable with several duties by act of parliament.

By stat. 8 Ann. c. 9, made perpetual by stat. 9 Ann. c. 21, a duty of 6*d.* in the pound under 50*l.* and 12*d.* in the pound for sums exceeding it, given with apprentices (except poor apprentices) is granted. And if the full sum agreed be not inserted, or the duty not paid, indentures shall be void, and apprentices not capable of following trades; and the masters are liable to 50*l.* penalty.

But there are several statutes allowing further time to pay the duties and stamp indentures, thro' neglect omitted, &c. And acts of indemnity of this nature are usually passed every two or three years.

The payment of the duties on apprentice-fees is enforced by several acts, 18 Geo. 2. c. 22; 20 Geo. 2. c. 45; the former of which provides, that if the apprentice shall pay the duties, on the neglect of the master, he may recover back the apprentice fee; and the latter, that if no suit is commenced, and the master shall pay double duties within two years after the end of the apprenticeship, the indentures shall be valid, or the apprentice may pay them, and in such case recover double the apprentice-fee, by action, from his master.

The stats. 5 Eliz. c. 4 & 5 direct who shall take apprentices, and direct that every cloth worker, fuller, shoarman, weaver, taylor, or shoe-maker, taking three apprentices, shall have one journeyman, and for every other apprentice above three, also one journeyman. f. 33.—Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17, allows only two apprentices at a time to butters and felt makers; (except a son apprentice?);—and stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 5, allows only two to Notwich-weavers, who must then have also two journeymen.

As by the stat. of 5 Eliz. c. 4, the justices of the peace, have a power of imposing an apprentice on a master, in consequence thereof an indictment lies for disobedience to their orders, either in not receiving, or receiving and after turning off, or not providing for such apprentice; for tho' an act of parliament prescribe an easier way of proceeding by complaint; yet that does not exclude the remedy by indictment. 6 Mod. 163: 1 Salk. 381.

The justices of peace may discharge an apprentice not only on the default of the master, but also on his own default; for in such case it is but reasonable that the contracts, which were made by their authority, should be dissolved by the same power. Skin. 108: 5 Mod. 139: 2 Salk. 471.

VOL. I.

And under the said stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, justices, or the Sessions, may hear and determine disputes between masters and apprentices; and the Sessions may discharge the apprentice, and vacate the indentures, or correct the apprentice.

An order of justices on the master to return money is good, tho' it is not averred that he had any with the apprentice; for the order being to return money, is as necessary a proof of the receipt of it, as if it had been expressly alleged: and the court held, that the justices had jurisdiction to oblige the master to refund. Trin. 7 Geo. 2. in B. R. The King v. Amies; tho' an order of this nature has been quashed. Batt. (by Const) i. 513.

By the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19, Any two justices, upon complaint of any apprentice put out by the parish, or with whom no more than 5*l.* was paid, of any mis-usage, refusal of necessary provisions, cruelty, or other ill treatment by his master, may summon the master to appear before them; and upon proof of the complaint on oath, to their satisfaction, (whether the master be present or not, if service of the summons be proved,) to discharge such apprentice by warrant or certificate, for which no fee shall be paid: and on complaint of the master against any such apprentice, touching any misdemeanor, miscarriage, or ill behaviour, the justices may punish the offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to be corrected and kept to hard labour, not exceeding a calendar month; or otherwise by discharging such offender. Either party may appeal to the Sessions, and the determination there is to be final. By 31 G. 2. c. 11, This act is extended to servants in husbandry, though hired for less than a year.

By stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, Apprentices (with whom less than 10*l.* premium is paid) absented themselves during their apprenticeship, shall serve an equal time beyond their term.—In London, apprentices are all under the controul of the chamberlain, whose jurisdiction is saved in the several statutes.—The stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 57, makes some additional regulations as to the punishing and relieving parish apprentices.

With regard to the assigning of apprentices, it hath been held, that an apprentice is not assignable. He cannot be bound nor discharged without deed. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7. Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R.

But though an apprentice is not assignable, yet such assignment amounts to a contract between the two masters, that the child should serve the latter. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7: Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R. Caster v. Eccles Parish.

By the custom of the city of London, also an apprentice may be turned over from one master to another; and if the master refuse to make the apprentice free at the end of the term, the chamberlain may make him free: in other corporations, there must be a mandamus to the mayor, &c. to make him free in such case. Danc. Abr. 421: Wood's Inst. 51.

But it hath been held, that tho' justices of peace have a jurisdiction of discharging apprentices, and may bind them to other masters, that they cannot turn them over; and therefore an order that an apprentice, whose master was dead, should serve the remainder of his time with his master's widow's second husband, was quashed; because the justices have nothing to do about turning over an apprentice: and tho' he applied to them, that could not give them a jurisdiction. Comb. 324.

APPRENTICE III.

It seems agreed, that, if a man be bound to instruct an apprentice in a trade for seven years, and the master dies, that the condition is dispensed with, being a thing personal; but if he be bound further, that in the mean time he will find him in meat, drink, and cloathing and other necessaries, here the death of the master doth not dispense with the condition, but his executors shall be bound to perform it as far as they have assets. 1 Sid. 216: 1 Krb. 761, 820: 1 Lev. 177.

But if a person is bound apprentice by a justice of peace, and the master happens to die before the term expired, the justices have no power to oblige his executor, by their order, to receive such apprentice and maintain him; for by this method the executor is deprived of the liberty of pleading plene administravit, (which he may do, in case covenant be brought against him,) and must maintain the apprentice, whether he hath assets or not. Carth. 231: 1 Salk. 66: 1 Show. 405. It is said, however, that the executor or administrator may bind him to another master for the remaining part of his time. Burn.

But it is said, that in this case of the master's dying, by the custom of London the executor must put the apprentice to another master of the same trade. 1 Salk. 66. per Holt Ch. J.

By stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 57, in case of the death (§ 3) or insolvency (§ 8) of the master or mistress of a parish-apprentice (with a premium not exceeding 5*l.*) the justices, shall by indorsement on the indenture, direct the apprentice to serve another master, &c. and so toties quoties. And masters, &c. of apprentices under stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30, may with consent of two justices assign them.

Whatever an apprentice gains is for the use of his master; and whether he was legally bound or no, is not material, if he was an apprentice de facto. Salk. 68. For enticing an apprentice to embezzle goods, indictment will lie. 1 Salk. 380. A master may be indicted for not providing for, or for turning away, an apprentice. If a master gives an apprentice license to leave him it cannot afterwards be recalled. Mod. Caf. 70. If an apprentice marries, without the master's privity, that will not justify his turning him away, but he must sue his covenant. 2 Vern. 492. By the custom of the city of London a freeman may turn away his apprentice for gaming. Ibid. 241. Though if a master turns an apprentice away on account of negligence, &c. equity may decree him to refund part of the money given with him. 1 Vern. Rep. 450. As no apprentice can be made without writing; so none may be discharged by his master, but by writing under his hand, and with the allowance of a justice of peace, by statute. Dult. 121.

III. As to the exercising of trades.

By the common law no man may be prohibited to work in any lawful trade, or in more trades than one, at his pleasure. 11 Co. 53.

So that without an act of parliament no man may be restrained, either from working in any lawful trade; or using divers mysteries or trades; therefore an act of parliament made to restrain any person herein, must be taken strictly, and not favourably as acts made in affirmance of the common law. Burn.

It is enacted by the 5 Eliz. cap. 4. sect. 31, "That it shall not be lawful to any person or persons, other than such as now do lawfully use or exercise any art, mystery, or manual occupation, to set up, occupy, use or exercise any craft, mystery or occupation, now used or occupied within the realm of England or Wales, except he shall have been brought up therein seven years, at the least, as an apprentice; nor to set any person on work in such mystery, art or occupation, being not a workman at this day, except he shall have been apprentice, as is aforesaid; or else having served as an apprentice, as is aforesaid, shall or will become a journeyman, or hired by the year; upon pain that every person willingly offending, or doing the contrary, shall forfeit and lose for every default forty shillings for every month."

It hath been ruled, that there are many trades within the general words and equity of this act, besides those which are particularly enumerated therein; yet it seems agreed, and hath frequently been adjudged, that in every indictment, &c. it must be alleged, that it was a trade at the time of making the statute, for the words thereof are, any craft, mystery or occupation, now used, &c. from whence it seems to follow, that a new manufacture, which to all other purposes may be called a trade, is yet not a trade within this statute. 2 Salk. 611: Palm. 528: 1 Sid. 175.

Also it seems agreed, that the act only extends to such trades as imply mystery and craft, and require skill and experience; that therefore merchants, husbandmen, gardeners, &c. are not within the statute; and on this foundation it hath been held, that a bemp-dresser is not within the statute, as not requiring much learning or skill, and being what every husbandman doth use for his necessary occasions. 8 Co. 130: 2 Bull. 190: Cro. Car. 499.

It is clearly agreed, that the following the common trade of a brewer, baker or cook, is within the statute, as unskilfulness herein may be very prejudicial to the lives and healths of his majesty's subjects; but it is at the same time agreed, that the exercising of any of these trades in a man's own house or family, or in a private person's house, is not within the restraint of the statute. 11 Co. 54 a: Cro. Car. 499: Hob. 183, 211: Moor 885: 8 Co. 129: Palm. 542: Lit. Rep. 251: Bridg. 141.

It hath been held, that this statute doth not restrain a man from using several trades, so as he had been an apprentice to all; wherefore it indemnifies all petty chapmen in little towns and villages, because their masters kept the same mixed trades there before. Carth. 163.

A man may exercise as many trades as he hath worked at, or served as an apprentice to, for seven years. 2 Wilf. 168.

It hath been resolved, that there is no occasion for any actual binding, but that the following a trade for seven years, is a sufficient qualification within the statute. 1 Salk. 67: 2 Salk. 613.

By stats. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 11, and 5 Eliz. c. 4, Aliens and denizens are restrained to use any handicraft or trade therein mentioned, unless they have served seven years apprenticeship within the realm, under the penalty of 40*l.* per month. Hutt. 132. But it hath been adjudged, that if an apprentice serve seven years beyond sea, he shall be excused from the penalties of the statute. 5 Eliz. c. 4. And so if he serves seven years, tho' he was never bound. 1 Salk. 76.

So it hath been held, that serving five years to a trade out of England and two in England, is sufficient to satisfy the statute; but that there must be a service of a full time; and therefore serving five years in any country, where where by the law of the country more is not required, will not qualify a man to use the trade in England. Ca. in Law and Eq. 70.

By the statute 31 Eliz. cap. 5. sect. 7, It is enacted, "That all suits for using a trade without having been brought up in it, shall be sued and prosecuted in the general quarter sessions of the peace, or assizes in the same county where the offence shall be committed; or otherwise inquired of, heard and determined in the assizes, or general quarter sessions of the peace in the same county where such offence shall be committed, or in the leet within which it shall happen."

In the construction of this statute it hath been held, that it restrains not a suit in the king's bench or exchequer, for such offence happening in the same county where these courts are sitting; for the negative words of the statute are not, that such suits shall not be brought in any other court, but that they shall not be brought in any other county; and the prerogative of these high courts shall not be restrained without express words. Cro. Jac. 178: Hob. 184: 1 Salk. 373.

But where the offence is in a different county, such suits in these, or any other courts out of the proper county seem to be within the express words of the statute. Hob. 184, 327: Cro. Jac. 85.

Infants voluntarily binding themselves apprentice, and continuing seven years, shall have the benefit of their trades; but a bond for their service shall not bind them. Cro. Car. 179. See the several statutes enabling soldiers and mariners to exercise trades.

IV. As to their punishment for particular offences, it is to be observed, That

At common law, a servant or apprentice, without any regard to age, may be guilty of felony in feloniously taking away the goods of their master, tho' they were goods under their charge, as a shepherd, butler, &c. and may at this day for any such offence be indicted, as for felony at common law; but at common law, if a man had delivered goods to his servant to keep, or carry for him, and he carried them away animo furandi; this was considered only a breach of trust, but not felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 505, 666.

But now by the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 7, It is enacted, that servants guilty of a breach of trust in embezzling money, goods, &c. delivered to them to the value of 40 s. or above, are guilty of felony; with a proviso nevertheless, that the act do not extend to apprentices, nor to persons under the age of eighteen years.

By stat. 12 Ann. st. 1. cap. 7, clergy is taken from persons stealing in any house or out-house, to the value of 40 s. except as to apprentices under the age of fifteen years robbing their masters. 1 Hale's P. C. 666, 667: See 1 Hawth. P. C. c. 33. § 11—16.—See tit. Servants.

APPROPRIATION, appropriatio, from the Fr. appropriier.] The annexing of an ecclesiastical benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house, bishoprick, college, or spiritual person, to enjoy for ever; in the same way as impropriation is the annexing a benefice to the use of a lay person or corporation; that which is an appropriation in the hands of religious persons being usually called an impropriation in the hands of the laity. See Com. Dig. tit. Advowson. (D. E.) It is computed that there are in England 3845 impropriations.

This contrivance seems to have sprung from the policy of monastic orders. At the first establishment of parochial clergy, the tithes of the parish were distributed in four parts—one for the bishop; one to maintain the fabrick of the church; a third for the poor; and the 4th for the incumbent. The Sees of the bishops becoming amply endowed, their shares sunk into the others; and the monasteries inferring that a small part was enough for the officiating priests, appropriated as many benefices, as they could by any means obtain, to their own use; undertaking to keep the church in repair, and to have it constantly served. But in order to compleat such appropriation effectually, the king's licence and consent of the bishop must first be obtained; because they might both, some time or other have an interest by lapse in the benefice; if it were not in the hands of a corporation which never dies. The consent of the patron is also necessarily implied, because the appropriation could originally be made to none but to such spiritual corporation as is also the patron of the church; the whole being indeed nothing else but an allowance for the patrons to retain the tithes and glebe in their own hands, without presenting any clerk. Powd. 496—500.

When the appropriation is thus made, the appropriators and their successors are perpetual parsons of the church; and must sue and be sued in all matters concerning the rights of the church by the name of parsons. Hob. 307.—An appropriation cannot be granted over. Ibid.

This appropriation may be severed and the church become disappropriate two ways. 1st. If the patron or appropriator present a clerk who is instituted and inducted to the parsonage; for such incumbent is to all intents and purposes complete parson; and the appropriation being once severed can never be reunited again, unless by a repetition of the same solemnities. Co. Litt. 46: 7 Rep. 13. And, when the clerk so presented is distinct from the vicar, the rectory thus vested in him becomes what is called a sine-cure; because he has no cure of souls, having a vicar under him to whom that cure is committed; though this is not the only mode of creating sine-cures. See 2 Burn's Ecc. Law 347. Also if the corporation to which the benefice is annexed is dissolved the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law. 1 Comm. 386.

In this manner may appropriations be made at this day; and thus were most, if not all, now existing, originally made. At the dissolution of the monasteries by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 28, and 31 H. 8. c. 13, the appropriations belonging to those religious houses (being more than one third of all the parishes in England) would at common law have been disappropriated; had not a clause been inserted in those statutes to give them to the king, in the same manner as the alien priories had before been. 2 Iust. 584.—and from hence have sprung all the lay impropriations or secular parsonages in the kingdom; they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the crown. See 1 Comm. 384, &c.: 11 Rep. 11: Gilf. 719.—See also tit. Parson, Vicar.

APPROPRIARE COMMUNIAM, to inclose or appropriate any parcel of land, that was before open common, and thus to discommon it.

APPROVE, approbare] To augment a thing to the utmost: to approve land is to make the best benefit of it, by increasing the rent, &c. 2 Iust. 474.

APPROVEMENT, Is where a man hath common in the lord's waste, and the lord makes an inclosure of part of the waste for himself, leaving sufficient common with egress and regress for the commoners. Reg. Jud. 8, 9. See tit. Common.

The word Approvement is also used for the profits of the lands themselves. Crompt. Just. 152. And the statute of Merton 20 H. 3. c. 4. makes mention of land newly approved. F. N. B. 71. Approvement is also the same with improvement.

APPROVER, or PROVER, approbator.] One that confessing felony committed by himself, appealed or accused others to be guilty of the same crime. See tit. Accessory, II. 5. He is called approver because he must prove what he hath alleged; and that proof was anciently by battle, or the country, at the election of him appealed: and the form of this accusation you may find in Crompt. Just. 250: See also Bracton, lib. 3: Staunf. Pl. Cor. 52. If a person indicted of treason or felony, not disabled to accuse, upon his arraignment, before any plea pleaded, and before competent judges, confesseth the indictment, and takes an oath to reveal all treasons and felonies that he knoweth of; and therefore prays a coroner to enter his appeal, or accusation against those that are partners in the crime contained in the indictment; such a one is an approver. 3 Inst. 129: H. P. C. 192.

When a person hath once pleaded not guilty, he cannot be an approver. 3 Inst. 129. And persons attainted of treason or felony shall not be approvers; their accusation will not then be of such credit as to put a man upon his trial. 2 Hawk. 205. Vide 5 H. 4. cap. 2, as to characters of pardon.

Infants under age of discretion may not be approvers: and it being in the discretion of the court to suffer one to be an approver, this method of late hath seldom been practised. See tit. Accessory II. 5; tit. Appeal; and Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 24.

APPROVERS. In old statutes, bailiffs of lords in their franchises are called their approvers: and approvers in the marches of Wales were such as had licence de vendere & abster beasts, &c. But by the statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 12, approvers are such as are sent into counties to increase the farms of hundreds, &c. held by sheriffs. Such persons as have the letting of the king's demesnes, in small manors, are called approvers of the king (approbatores regis) stat. 51 H. 3. ft. 5. And in the stat. 1 Ed. 3. ft. 1. c. 8, sheriffs are called the king's approvers.

APPRUARE, To take to his own use or profit. stat. IV. 2. c. 20.

APPURTENANCES, pertinentia derived from the French apartenir, to belong to.] Signify things both corporeal and incorporeal appertaining to another thing as principal: as hamlets to a chief manor; and common of pasture, piscary, &c. Also liberties and services of tenants. Erit. cap. 39. If a man grant common of estovers to be burnt in his manor, these are appurtenant to the manor; for things appurtenant may be granted at this day. Co. Lit. 121. Common appurtenant may be to a house, pasture, &c. Out-houses, yards, orchards, and gardens are appurtenant to a messuage; but lands cannot properly be said to be appurtenant to a messuage. 1 Lill. Ab. 91. And one messuage cannot be appurtenant to another. Ibid. Lands cannot, in the true sense of the words cum pertinentiis, be appurtenant to the house; but the word pertinent may be taken in the sense of usually letten or occupied with the house. Plowd. 170. See Civ. El. 704. contra; but it seems now settled that lands will not pass by the word appurtenances, but only such things which do properly belong to the house. Palm. 375: Godb. 352. S. C.: Cro. Car. 57: Mutt. 85. S. C.: Litt. Rep. 8. S. C.

Lands, a common, &c. may be appurtenant to a house; though not a way. 3 Salk. 40. Grant of a manor, without the words cum pertinentiis, 'tis said will pass all things belonging to the manor. Owen's Rep. 31. Where a person hath a messuage, &c. to which estovers are appurtenant, and it is blown down or burnt by the act of God; if the owner re-edify it, in the same place and manner as before, he shall have the ancient appurtenances. 4 Rep. 86. A turbary may be appurtenant to a house; so a seat in a church, &c. but not to land; for the things must agree in nature and quality. 3 Salk. 40: Vide tit. Appendant, and see Pl. Com. 103. b, 104. b, 170: Allo vide Com. Dig. (1 V.) tit. Appendant and Appurtenant.

AQUAGE, aquagium, quasi aque agium, i. e. aqueductus & aquægangium.] A water-courle.—In some instances used for toll paid for water carriage. See Ewage.

ARACE, arabl. To raise or erase from the French arracher, evellere, Blount.

ARATIA, Arable grounds, Corwel.

ARAO, In arabo conjurare, i. e. To make oath in the church, or some other holy place; for according to the Riparian laws, all oaths were made in the church upon the relics of saints. Spelm.

ARATRUM TERRÆ, As much land as can be tilled with one plough.—Aratura terræ is the service which the tenant is to do for his lord in ploughing his land. See Arura.

ARBITRATION, ARBITRATOR, and ARBITRAMENT. See tit. Award.

ARCA CYROGRAPHICA, five cyrographorum Judeorum. This was a common chest with three locks and keys, kept by certain Christians and Jews; wherein all the contracts, mortgages, and obligations belonging to the Jews were kept, to prevent fraud; and this by order of K. Rich. I. Howden's Annals, p. 745.

ARCHERY, A service of keeping a bow, for the use of the lord to defend his castle.—Co. Litt. sect. 157.

ARCHBISHOP, archiepiscopus.] The chief of the clergy in his province. See title Bishops.

ARCHDEACON, archidiaconus.] Is one that hath ecclesiastical dignity, and jurisdiction over the clergy and laity next after the bishop throughout the diocese, or in some part of it only. Archdeacons had anciently a superintendant power over all the parochial clergy in every deanery in their precincts; they being the chiefs of the deacons; though they have no original jurisdiction, but what they have got is from the bishop, either by prescription or compulsion; and Sir Simon Degg tells us, that it appears an archdeacon is a mere substitute to the bishop; and what authority he hath is derived from him, his chief office being to visit and inquire, and episcopo nunciare, &c. In ancient times archdeacons were employed in servile duties of collecting and distributing alms and offerings; but at length, by a personal attendance on the bishops, and a delegation to examine and report some causes, and commissions to visit the remoter parts of the dioceses, they became, as it were, overseers of the church; and by degrees advanced into considerable dignity and power.

Lanfranc,

Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, was the first prolate in England who instituted an archdeacon in his diocese, which was about the year 1075. And an archdeacon is now allowed to be an ordinary, as he hath a part of the episcopal power lodged with him. He visits his jurisdiction once every year: and he hath a court, where he may inflict penance, suspend, or excommunicate persons, prove wills, grant administrations, and hear causes ecclesiastical, &c. subject to appeal to the bishop of the diocese under stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. It is one part of the office of an archdeacon to examine candidates for holy orders, and to induct clerks within his jurisdiction, upon receipt of the bishop's mandate. 2 Cro. 556: 1 Lev. 193: Wood's Inst. 30.

Archdeacons are commonly given by bishops, who do therefore prefer to the same by collation: but if an archdeaconry be in the gift of a layman, the patron doth present to the bishop, who institutes in like manner as to another benefice; and then the dean and chapter do induct him, that is, after some ceremonies place him in a stall in the cathedral church to which he belongeth, whereby he is said to have a place in the choir. Walf. c. 15.

Archdeacons, by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. are to read the Common Prayer and declare their assent thereunto, as other persons admitted to ecclesiastical benefices; and also must subscribe the same before the ordinary; but they are not obliged by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12, to subscribe and read the thirty-nine articles; for altho' an archdeaconry be a benefice with cure, yet it is not such a benefice with cure as seems to be intended by that statute, which relates only to such benefices with cure as have particular churches belonging to them. Walf. c. 15. And they are to take the oaths at the sessions, as other persons qualifying for offices.

The judge of the archdeacon's court (where he doth preside himself) is called the official. Wood's Inst. 30.

Where the archdeacon hath a peculiar jurisdiction, he is totally exempt from the power of the bishop, and the bishop cannot enter there, and hold court; and in such case, if the party who lives within the peculiar be sued in the bishop's court, a prohibition shall be granted: for the statute intends that no suit shall be per saltum: but if the archdeacon hath not a peculiar, then the bishop and he have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may commence his suit either in the archdeacon's court or the bishop's, and he hath election to choose which he pleaseth: and if he commence in the bishop's court, no prohibition shall be granted; for if it should, it would confine the bishop's court to determine nothing but appeals, and render it incapable of having any causes originally commenced there. L. Raym. 123.

An archdeacon is a ministerial officer, and cannot refuse a churchwarden elected by the parish. Rex v. Martin Rice, L. Raym. 138.

ARCHES COURT, curia de arcubus.] The chief and most ancient consistory court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury for the debating of spiritual causes. It is so called from the church in London, commonly called St. Mary Le Bow, (de Arcubus) where it was formerly held; which church is named Bow Church from the steeple which is raised by pillars, built arcwise, like so many bent bows. Coxvel.

The judge of this court is styled the Dean of the Arches, or Official of the Arches court: he hath extraordinary jurisdiction in all ecclesiastical causes, except what belong to the prerogative court; also all manner of appeals from bishops or their chancellors or commissaries, deans and chapters, archdeacons, &c. first or last are directed hither: he hath ordinary jurisdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, in case of appeals; so that upon any appeal made, he, without any farther examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the appellee, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal was made. Of this see more 4 Inst. 337. But he cannot cite any person out of the diocese of another, unless it be on appeal, &c. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 9.

In another sense the dean of the arches has a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, called a deanery, (being exempt from the authority of the bishop of London) of which the parish of Bow is the principal. The persons concerned in this court, are the judge, advocates, registers, proctors, &c. And the foundation of a suit in these courts, is a citation for the defendant to appear; then the libel is exhibited, which contains the action, to which the defendant must answer; whereupon the suit is contested, proofs are produced, and the cause determined by the judge, upon hearing the advocates on the law and fact; when follows the sentence or decree thereupon.

This court, as also the court of peculiars, the admiralty court, the prerogative court, and the court of delegates, (for the most part,) is now held in the hall belonging to the college of Civilians, commonly called Doctors Commons. Floy. 21.

From this court the appeal is to the king in chancery; by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

ARCHIVES, Archiva, from arca, a chest.] The Rolls, or any place where ancient records, charters, and evidences, belonging to the crown and kingdom, are kept; also the Chancery, Exchequer-office, &c. And it hath been some-times used for repositories in libraries.—It is used in common speech for the records themselves.

ARERIESMENT, Surprise, affrontment.—To the great areriesment and estonishment of the Common law. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3.

ARIERBAN, The edict of the ancient French and German kings, &c. commanding all their tenants to come into the army: if they refuse, then to be deprived of their estates.—See Spelm. in v. Aribannum, &c.

ARENTARE, To rent out, or let at a certain rent. Consuetud. Domus de Farendon, MS. fol. 53.

ARGENTUM ALBUM, Silver coin, or pieces of bullion that anciently passed for money. See Alba Firma.

ARGENTUM DEI, God's money; i. e. money given in earnest upon the making of any bargain; hence comes arles, carnelt.

ARGIL, or ARGOIL, Clay, lime, and sometimes gravel; also the lees of wine, gathered to a certain hardness. Law Fr. Ditt.

ARGUMENTOSUS, ingenious, mentioned by our historian Neubrigenfis Lib. 1. c. 14.

ARIEIUM LEVATIO, An old sportive exercise, supposed to be the same with running at the quintain. See Stevens's Shakspeare, Edit. 1793. vol. vi. p. 27, 175.

ARMA DARE, To dub or make a knight. Arma capere, or suscipere to be made a knight. Kennet's Paroeb. Antiq. p. 288. Walsingham, p. 507. The word arma, in these places, signifies only a sword; but sometimes a knight knight was made by giving him the whole armour. Ordericus Vitalis, lib. 8. de Henrico, &c.

ARMA LIBERA, A sword and a lance which were usually given to a servant when he was made free. Leg. Will. cap. 65.

ARMA MOLUTA, Sharp weapons that cut, opposed to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise. Bract. lib. 3. They are called arma emolita by Pleta, lib. 1. c. 33. par. 6.

ARMA REVERSATA, A punishment when a man was convicted of treason or felony: thus our historian Knighton, speaking of Hugh Spencer, tells us, Primo vestierunt eum uno vestimento cum armis suis reversatis. Lib. 3. p. 2546.

ARMARIA, Vide Almaria.

ARMIGER, Esquire. A title of dignity, belonging to such gentlemen as bear arms: and these are either by courtesy, as sons of noblemen, eldest sons of knights, &c. Or by creation, such as the king's servants, &c. The word armiger has been also applied to the higher servants in convents. Paroch. Antiq. 576. See title, Esquire, and Spelman in v.

ARMISCARA, Is a sort of punishment decreed or imposed on an offender by the judge. Malmsh. lib. 3. p. 97: Walsingham, p. 430. At first it was to carry a saddle at his back in token of subjection. Brampton says, that in the year 1176, the king of the Scots promised king Hen. 2. at York, Lanceam & sellam suam super altare Sancti Petri ad perpetuam hujus subjectionis memoriam offerre. See Spelm. in v.

ARMOUR and ARMS, In the understanding of law, are extended to any thing that a man wears for his defence, or takes into his hands, or useth in anger to strike or cast at another. Crompt. Just. 65. Arms are all what we call in Latin insignia, ensigns of honour; as to the original of which, it was to distinguish commanders in war; for the ancient defensive armour being a coat of mail, &c. which covered the persons, they could not be distinguished, and therefore a certain badge was painted on their shields, which was called arms; but not made hereditary in families till the time of king Rich. 1. on his expedition to regain Jerusalem from the Turks: and besides shields with arms, they had a silk coat drawn over their armour, and afterwards a stiff coat, on which their arms were painted all over, now the herald's coat of arms. Sid. 352.

By stat. 13 R. 2. §. 1. c. 2, The constable (Lord High Constable) shall have cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms done out of the realm; but it seems he cannot punish for painting coats of arms, &c. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. §. 5—8. and this Dict. tit. Constable.

By the common law it is an offence for persons to go or ride armed with dangerous and unusual weapons: but gentlemen may wear common armour according to their quality, &c. 3 Inst. 160.

By stat. 7 E. 1. §. 1, The king may prohibit force of arms, and punish offenders according to law; and herein every subject is bound to be aiding. And by stat. 2 E. 3. c. 3, enforced by stat. 7 R. 2. c. 13, and 20 R. 2. c. 1, None shall come with force and arms before the king's justices, nor ride nor go armed in affray of the peace, on pain to forfeit their armour, and suffer imprisonment, &c.

Under these statutes none may wear (unusual) armour publicly upon pretence of protecting his person; but a man may assemble his neighbours to protect his house without transgressing the act. 1 Hawk. P. C. 267. But no wearing of arms is within the stat. unless they are such as terrify, therefore the weapons of fashion, as swords, &c. or privy coats of mail may be worn. Id. ib. And one may arm to suppress riots or dangerous insurrections. Id. 268.

By the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. §. 2. c. 2, It is declared that "the subjects which are Protestants may have arms for their defence suitable to their conditions as allowed by law." See stat. 33 H. 8. c. 6. and tit. Game and Constable III. 2.

Embezzling the king's armour felony; stat. 31 Eliz. c. 4. Armour may be exported, unless prohibited by proclamation; stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4. Importing arms or ammunition prohibited; 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.

ARNALIA, Arable grounds. This word is mentioned in Domesday, tit. Essex.

ARNALDIA, Arnoldia; A disease that makes the hair fall off like the alopecia, or like a distemper in foxes. Rog. Hoveden, p. 693.

AROMATARIUS, Latin.] A word often used for a grocer, but held not good in law proceedings. 1 Vent. 142.

ARPEN, or Arpent. An acre or furlong of ground; and according to the old French account in Domesday-book, 100 perches make an arpent. The most ordinary acre, called l'arpent de France, is one hundred perches square: but some account it but half an acre.

ARPENTATOR, A measurer or surveyor of land.

ARQUEBUS, Fr. Arquebuse.] A short hand-gun, a caliver or pistol; mentioned in some of our ancient statutes. Law Fr. Dict.

ARRACK, A duty and excise is payable for arrack imported from the East Indies; See tit. Navigation-Acts.

ARRAIATIO PEDITUM, Is used in Pat. 1. Ed. 2. for the arraying of foot soldiers.

ARRAIER, Arraiatores.] Such officers as had the care of the soldiers' armour, and whose business it was to see them duly accounted. In several reigns commissioners have been appointed for this purpose.

ARRAIGN, from the Fr. arranger, To set a thing in order; hath the same signification in law; but the true derivation is from the French arraisonner, i. e. ad rationem ponere.] To call a man to answer in form of law. A prisoner is arraigned, when he is indicted and brought to trial: and to arraign a writ of assise, is to cause the demandant to be called to make the plaint, in such manner as the tenant may be obliged to answer. Co. Lit. 262. But no man is properly arraigned but at the suit of the king, upon an indictment found against him, or other record wherewith he is to be charged: and this arraignment is to take care that the prisoner do appear to be tried, and hold up his hand at the bar, for the certainty of the person, and plead a sufficient plea to the indictment. Co. Lit. 262, 263.

The prisoner is to hold up his hand only in treason and felony; but this is merely a ceremony: if he owns that he is the person, it is sufficient without it; and then upon his arraignment his fetters are to be taken off; and he is to be treated with all the humanity imaginable. 2 Inst. 315: 3 Inst. 35.—A peer need not hold up his hand. 4 St. Trials 211, 508.

Prisoners are now generally tried in their irons, because taking them off is usually attended with great pain and trouble.

An attainder of high treason has been reversed for the omission of an arraignment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 438, which see for further matter as to Arraignment.

If in action of slander for calling one thief, the defendant justifies that the plaintiff stole goods, and issue is thereon taken; if it be found for the defendant in B. R. and for felony in the same county where the court sits, or before justices of assize, &c. he shall be forthwith arraigned upon this verdict of twelve men, as on an indictment. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 151.

The pleas upon arraignment are either the general issue, Not guilty; plea in abatement, or in bar; and the prisoner may demur to the indictment: he may also confess the fact, but then the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him.

For the solemnity of the arraignment and trial of a prisoner. See Dalt. chap. 185. p. 515.

ARRAY, arraya five arraimentum.] An old French word, signifying the ranking or setting forth of a jury of men impanelled upon a cause. And when we say to array a panel, that is, to set forth the men impanelled one by another. F. N. B. 157. To challenge the array of the panel, is at once to except against all the persons arrayed or impanelled, in respect of partiality, &c. Co. Lit. 156. If the sheriff be of affinity to either of the parties; or if any one or more of the jurors are returned at the nomination of either party; or for any other partiality; the array shall be quashed. The word array also relates, in a particular manner, to military order, as to conduct persons armed, &c. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 3.

ARREARAGES, arreragia, from the French arrière, reho, behind.] Money unpaid at the due time, as rent behind; the remainder due on an account; or a sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant.

ARRÉNATUS, arraigned, accused. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 1.

ARRÉNTATION, from the Spanish arrendar, ad certum redditum dimittere.] The licensing the owner of lands in the forest, to inclose them with a low hedge and small ditch, according to the assize of the forest, under a yearly rent: saving the arrentations is saving a power to give such licences. Ordin. Forestæ, 34 Ed. 1. §. 5.

ARREST, arrestum from the Fr. arrêter, to stop, or stay.] A restraint of a man's person, obliging him to be obedient to the law: and it is defined to be the execution of the command of some court of record or officer of justice. An arrest is the beginning of imprisonment, where a man is first taken, and restrained of his liberty, by power or colour of a lawful warrant: also it signifies the decree of a court, by which a person is arrested. 2 Shep. Abr. 299.

ARRESTS are either in civil or criminal cases.

An arrest in a civil cause is defined to be the apprehending or restraining one's person by process in execution of the command of some court, or officer of justice. Wood's Inst. 575.

There are several statutes, securing the liberty of the subject, against unlawful arrests and suits. See Magna Charta, c. 29: 3 Ed. 1. c. 35: and See tit. Barrator.

Some persons are also privileged from arrests, viz. peers of the realm, members of parliament, peeresses by birth (1 Inst. 131: 2 Inst. 50: 4 Bacon's Ab. 228;) peers of Scotland, (2 Str. 990;) a peeress by marriage, (Co.

or breach of the peace, any man may arrest without warrant or precept. Term. de Ley 54.

The abuses of gaolers and sheriff's officers towards their prisoners are well restrained and guarded against by Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28; the chief provisions of which are, that an officer shall not carry his prisoner to any tavern, &c. without his consent, nor charge him for any liquor but such as he shall freely call for, nor demand for caption or attendance any other than his legal fee, nor exact any gratuity-money, nor carry his prisoner to gaol within twenty-four hours after his arrest, unless the prisoner refuses to go to some safe house (except his own) of his own choosing. Nor shall any officer take for the diet, lodging or expences of his prisoner more than shall be allowed by an order of sessions. Bailiffs to shew a copy of the act to prisoners, and to permit perusal thereof; and the prisoner to send for his own victuals, bedding, &c.

By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. No writ. process, warrant, &c. (except in cases of treason, felony, or for breach of the peace) shall be served on a Sunday: on pain that the person serving them shall be liable to the suit of the party grieved, and answer damages, as if the same had been done without writ: an action of false imprisonment lies for arrest on a Sunday, and the arrest is void. 1 Salk. 78. A defendant was arrested on a Sunday by a writ out of the Masbalsea; and the court of B. R. being moved to discharge him, it was denied; and he was directed to bring action of false imprisonment. 5 Mod. Rep. 95. The defendant being taken upon a Sunday, without any warrant, and locked up all that day; on Monday morning a writ was got against him, by which he was arrested; it was ruled, that he might have an action of false imprisonment, and that an attachment should go against those who took him on the Sunday. Mod. Caf. 96. Attachments have been often granted against bailiffs for making arrests on Sunday: but affidavit is usually made, that the party might be taken upon another day. 1 Mod. 56. A person may be retaken on a Sunday, where arrested the day before, &c. Mod. Caf. 231. And a man may be taken on a Sunday on an escape-warrant: or on fresh pursuit when taken the day before. *2 Ld. A party cannot be arrested on a Sunday on an attachment for non-performance of an award, it being only in the nature of a civil execution. 1 T. Rep. 266, denies 1 Atk. 581.

By Stats. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29: and 5 Geo. 2. c. 27, both made perpetual by Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 3. No person can be arrested, or held to bail, on a writ sued out of the superior courts, unless the cause of action be 10l. or upwards.

And now by Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. No person can be arrested or held to bail upon process out of any inferior court for less than 10l. but proceedings are to be had in inferior courts according to the directions of 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, extended by 19 Geo. 3. c. 70 to debts under 10l.

By § 3. of 19 Geo. 3. c. 70, so much of all acts of parliament for the recovery of debts within certain districts, as gives power to arrest debtors for less than 10l. is repealed. And by § 4, when final judgment is obtained in such suits, and defendant cannot be found within the jurisdiction, the superior courts may issue execution.

By Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9, No person is to be held to bail in Writs on process out of the courts at Wylminster for less than 20l.

In trover the defendant may be held to bail of course. 2 Str. 1122: Corop. 529. For this is more an action of property than a tort. 1 Wils. 23.

In an action of debt on a judgment, whether after verdict or by default, defendant cannot be arrested if he was previously held to bail in the original action. Say. 160.

It is now settled both in K. B. and C. P. that a defendant may be arrested in an action on a judgment for 10l. for damages and costs though the original debt alone were under 10l. 4 Term Rep. 570. on the authority of 2 Black. Rep. 1274; (though it had been otherwise ruled in K. B. 2 Burr. 1309: 4 Burr. 2117: 5 Burr. 2660: Corop. 128.)

Bail cannot be had in an action on the second judgment, where bail has been given on the first. 2 Str. 782.

In what cases special bail shall be required, See tit. Bail.

Formerly one great obstruction to public justice, civil as well as criminal, was the number of privileged places, such as the Mint, Savoy, &c. under pretence of their being ancient palaces; but these sanctuaries for iniquity are now abolished, and the opposing any process therein is made highly penal by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. § 15: 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. § 1: and 11 Geo. 1. c. 22; by which persons opposing the execution of process, or abusing the officer, if he receives any bodily hurt, are declared guilty of felony.

When a person is apprehended for debt, &c. he is said to be arrested: and writs express arrest by two several words capias and attachias, to take and catch hold of a man; for an officer must actually lay hold of a person, besides saying he arrests him, or it will be no lawful arrest. 1 Lil. Abr. 96. If a bailiff be kept off from making an arrest, he shall have an action of assault: and where the person arrested makes resistance, or assaults the bailiff, he may justify beating of him. If a bailiff touches a man, which is an arrest, and he makes his escape, it is a rescous, and attachment may be had against him. 1 Salk. 79. If a bailiff lays hold of one by the hand, (whom he had a warrant to arrest) as he holds it out at the window, this is such a taking of him, that the bailiff may justify the breaking open of the house to carry him away. 1 Vent. 306.

When a person has committed treason or felony, &c. doors may be broke open to arrest the offender; but not in civil cases, except it be in pursuit of one arrested; or where a house is recovered by real action, or in ejectment, to deliver possession to the person recovering. Plowd. 5 Rep. 91. Action of trespass, &c. lies for breaking open a house to make arrest in a civil action. Mod. Caf. 105. But if it appears a bailiff found an outer door, door, &c. open, he may open the inner door to make an arrest. Comb. 327.

In the case of Lee v. General Garsel, the court of King's Bench determined, that the chamber door of a lodger, is not to be considered as his outer door; but that the street door being open, the officers had a right to force open the chamber door, the defendant being in the room, and refusing to open it. Conn. 1.

Also it is enacted by the 3 & 4 Jac. 1. par. 35, That upon any lawful writ, warrant or process awarded to any sheriff or other officer, for the taking of any popish recusant, standing excommunicated for such recusancy, it shall be lawful, if need be, to break any house. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. § 10.

But it hath been resolved, that where justices of peace are, by virtue of a statute, authorised to require persons to come before them to take certain oaths prescribed by such statute, the officer cannot lawfully break open the doors. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. § 11.

An arrest in the night, as well as the day, is lawful. 9 Rep. 66. And every one is bound by the common law to assist not only the sheriff in the execution of writs, and making arrests, &c. but also his bailiff that hath his warrant to do it. 2 Inst. 193. A bailiff upon an arrest ought to shew at whose suit, out of what court the writ issues, and for what cause, &c. when the party arrested submits himself to the arrest: a bailiff, sworn and known, need not shew his warrant, though the party demands it; nor is any other special bailiff bound to shew his warrant, unless it be demanded. 9 Rep. 68, 69: Cro. Jac. 485. If an action is entered in one of the compters of London, a city serjeant may arrest the party without the sheriff's warrant. 1 Lill. Abr. 94. And by the custom of London, a debtor may be arrested before the money is due, to make him find sureties: but not by the common law. 1 Nelf. Abr. 258.

If a wrong person is arrested; or one for felony, where no felony is done, &c. it will be false imprisonment.

By Glynn Ch. J. Mich. 1658. If one be arrested by the sheriff of the county, within a liberty, without a non omittas, yet the arrest is good; for the sheriff is sheriff of the whole county, but the bailiff of the liberty may have his action against the sheriff, for entering of his liberty. But upon a quo minus, a sheriff may enter any liberty, and execute it impune. Pract. Reg. 72.

With regard to arrests in criminal cases, it hath already been observed, that for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, any person may arrest without warrant or precept. But the king cannot command any one by word of mouth to be arrested; for he must do it by writ, or order of his courts, according to law: nor may the king arrest any man for suspicion of treason, or felony, as his subjects may; because, if he doth wrong, the party cannot have an action against him. 2 Inst. 186.

Arrests by private persons are in some cases commanded. Persons present at the committing of a felony must use their endeavours to apprehend the offender, under penalty of fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 117: 4 Inst. 177.

And for this cause, by the common law, if any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with, or without malice, or even by misadventure or self-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day time, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced, and if out of a town, the hundred shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53.

And since the statute of Winchester, c. 5, which ordains that walled towns shall be kept shut from sun-setting to sun-rising; if the fact happen in any such town by night, or by day, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53.

And, as private persons are bound to apprehend all those who shall be guilty of any of the crimes above mentioned in their view, so also are they, with the utmost diligence, to pursue and endeavour to take all those who shall be guilty thereof, out of their view, upon a hue and cry levied against them. 3 Inst. 117.

Every private person is bound to assist an officer, requiring him to apprehend a felon.

As to the arresting of offenders by private persons of their own authority, permitted by law for the prevention of treason or felony only intended to be done; any one may lay hold of a person, whom he sees upon the point of committing treason, or felony, or doing an act which would manifestly endanger the life of another, and detain him, till it may be reasonably presumed he has changed his purpose. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 19.

As to arrests for inferior offences, no private person can arrest another for a bare breach of the peace after it is over; but it is held, that a private man may arrest a night-walker, or a common cheat going about with false dice, and actually caught playing with them, in order to have him before a justice of peace; and the arrest of any other offenders, by private persons, for offences in like manner scandalous, and prejudicial to the public, seems justifiable. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 20.

With regard to arrests by public officers, they may be made either with or without process.

Arrests without process may be made by watchmen, constables, bailiffs of towns, or justices of peace. For the power of watchmen, See Stat. Winchester, c. 4. It has been holden, that this statute was made in affirmance of the common law, and that every private person may by the common law arrest any suspicious night-walker, and detain him till he give a good account of himself. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 6.

As to arrests by constables, See tit. Constable III. 1, 2. 'Tis the better opinion at this day, that any constable, or even a private person, to whom a warrant shall be directed from a justice of peace, to arrest a particular person for felony, or any other misdemeanor within his jurisdiction, may lawfully execute it, whether the person mentioned in it be, in truth, guilty or innocent; and whether he were before indicted of the same offence or not, and whether any felony were, in truth, committed or not: for, however the justice himself may be punishable for granting such a warrant, without sufficient grounds, it is reasonable that he alone be answerable for it, and not the officer, who is not to examine or dispute the reasonableness of his proceeding. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 11.

The doctrine of general warrants (i. e. to apprehend all the authors and publishers of libels, or generally all persons suspected of any particular crime, without mentioning the name of the person accused) seem exploded as illegal. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 13. § 10; and the note there as to Wilkes's case. But it is to be observed that the term general warrant used by Hawkins in that place, does not seem to mean a warrant, without the name of the party being specified, but one which does not contain the specific charge against the party. See the case of Money v. Leach, and also 4 Comm. 291.

The great point gained by these determinations, was the rescuing persons from the malice or ignorance of the inferior ministers of justice.

With regard to arrests by baillifs of towns, their power is founded on the above-mentioned statute of H. 1. c. 4. And as to arrests by justices of peace, arrests by their command are either by word of mouth or by warrant.

A justice of peace may, by word of mouth, authorise any one to arrest another, who shall be guilty of an actual breach of the peace in his presence, or shall be engaged in a riot in his absence. 2 Harw. P. C. c. 13. § 14: Dalt. c. 117.

And a justice of peace may lawfully grant a warrant for apprehending, or arresting persons charged with treason, felony, premunire, or any other offence against the peace; and generally, wherever a statute gives one or more justices of peace a jurisdiction over any offence, any one justice of peace may, by his warrant, cause such offenders to be arrested and brought before him. 2 Harw. P. C. c. 13. § 15.

But it is said, that anciently no one justice of peace could legally make out a warrant for an offence against a penal statute, or other misdemeanor; cognizable only by a sessions of two or more justices; for that one single justice of peace hath no jurisdiction of such offence, and regularly those only who have jurisdiction over a cause can award process concerning it. Yet the long, constant, universal, and uncontrolled practice of justices of peace seems to have altered the law in this particular, and to have given them an authority, in relation to such arrests, not now to be disputed. Id. § 16.

A justice of peace may justify the granting a warrant for the arrest of any person upon strong grounds of suspicion of felony, or misdemeanor, but he seems to be punishable, as well at the suit of the king, as of the party grieved, if he grant any such warrant groundlessly, or maliciously, without such a probable cause as might induce a candid and impartial man to suspect the party to be guilty. Id. § 18.

Every warrant ought to be under the hand and seal of the justice of peace, and specify the day it was made out: if it be for the peace or good behaviour, it is advisable to set forth the special cause upon which it is granted, but if it be for treason or felony, or other offences of an enormous nature, it is said that it is not necessary to set forth the special cause, and it seems to be rather discretionary than necessary to set it forth in any case. Id. § 21—25.

The warrant may be directed to the sheriff, bailiff, constable, or to any indifferent person by name, who is no officer; for, though the justice may authorise any one to be his officer, whom he pleases to make such, yet it is most advisable to direct to the constable of the precinct wherein it is to be executed; for that no other constable, and à fortiori no private person, is compellable to serve it. Id. § 27.

A bailiff or constable, if they be sworn, and commonly known to be officers, and act within their own precincts, need not shew their warrant to the party, notwithstanding he demand the sight of it; but that these and all other persons whatsoever making an arrest, ought to acquaint the party with the substance of their warrant; and and all private persons to whom such warrants shall be directed, and even officers, if they be not sworn and commonly known, and even these, if they act out of their own precincts, must shew their warrants, if demanded. Id. § 28.

And therefore Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20, provides, that in all cases where a justice is empowered by statute to issue a warrant of distress for levying a penalty, the officer executing such warrant, if required shall shew the same to the defendant, and suffer a copy to be taken.

The sheriff, having such warrant directed to him, may authorise others to execute it; but every other person, to whom it is directed, must personally execute it; yet, it seems, that any one may lawfully assist him. Id. § 29.

After presentment or indictment found in felony, &c. the first process is a capias, to arrest and imprison the offender: and if the offender cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded in order to outlawry. H. P. C. 209. For further matter See tit. Debtors.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT. To move in arrest of judgment, is to shew cause why judgment should be stayed, notwithstanding verdict given. Judgment may be arrested for good cause in criminal cases, as well as civil; if the indictment be insufficient, &c. 3 Inst. 210.

Arrests of judgment arise from intrinsic causes appearing upon the face of the record; for a judgment can never be arrested but for that which appears on the face of the record itself. Ld. Raym. 232. Motions in arrest of judgment may be made at any time before judgment signed. Dougl. 747: Str. 845. Sunday is no day, 4 Burr. 21, 30. nor a dies non. It is a rule to shew cause, therefore needs no notice to be given, nor yet an affidavit to ground it on, as it arises out of the record; and after judgment upon demurrer, there can be no such motion made, as the court will not suffer any one to tell them that the judgment they gave on mature deliberation is wrong. It is otherwise indeed in the case of judgment by default, for that is not given in so solemn a manner; or if the fault arises on the writ of inquiry or verdict, for then the party could not alledge it before. Str. 425.

It may be made after motion for a new trial discharged, Dougl. 716: 1 Burr. 334. and if arrested, each party pays his own costs, Coop. 407.

After verdict a man may alledge any thing in the record, in arrest of judgment, which may be assigned for error after judgment. 2 Roll. Abr. 716. And judgment after verdict, shall not be arrested for an objection that would have been good on demurrer. 3 Burr. 1725. For further matter See tit. Amendment, Judgment; and for causes of arrest of judgment, See 3 Comm. 393, 4.

ARRESTO FACTO SUPER BONIS MERCATORUM ALIENIGENORUM, A writ that lay for a denizen against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompence of goods taken from him in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. Reg. Orig. 129. This the ancient civilians called clarigatio; but by the moderns it is termed replevia.

ARRETTE, arrestatus, quasi, a. l. reatum vocatus.] Is where a man is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. Staundf. Pl. Co. 45. And it is sometimes used for imputed or laid unto; as no folly may be arrested to one under age. Littleton, cap. Remitter. Chaucer useth the verb arresteth, that is, lays blame, as it is interpreted. Bracton says, ad reatum habere malefactorum, i. e. to have the malefactor forth-coming, so as he may be charged, and put to his trial. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10. And in another place, reatus de morte hominis, charged with the death of a man.

ARROWS. By an ancient statute, all heads for arrows shall be well brazed, and hardened at the point with steel, on pain of forfeiture and imprisonment: and to be marked with the mark of the maker. Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 7.

ARRURA,—In the black book of Hereford, De Operationibus Arruræ, signifies days' work of ploughing; for antiently customary tenants were bound to plough certain days for their lord. Una arrura, one day's work at the plough: and in Wiltshire, earing is a day's ploughing. Paroch. Antiq. p. 41. See Atarrum terræ.

ARSON, from ardeo, to burn.] House-burning, which is felony at common law. 3 Inst. 66. It must be maliciously, voluntarily, and an actual burning: not putting fire only into a house, or any part of it, without burning; but if part of the house is burnt, or if the fire doth burn, and then goeth out of itself, it is felony. 2 Inst. 188: H. P. C. 85. and it must be the house of another, for if a man burns his own house only, though with intention to burn others, it was not at common law felony, but a great misdemeanor, punishable with fine, pillory, &c. But a pauper may be guilty of this offence by burning the public workhouse. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 39. § 3. and in note.

If a house is fired by negligence or mischance, it cannot amount to arson. 3 Inst. 67: H. P. C. 85. Where one burns the house of another, if it be not wilful and malicious, it is not felony, but only trespass: therefore if A. shoot unlawfully in a gun at the cattle or poultry of B. and by means thereof sets another's house on fire, this is not arson; for though the act he was doing was unlawful, yet he had no intent to burn the house. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 569. By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 13, to burn corn in the four Northern counties, is felony without clergy. And the Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7, makes it felony to set barns, stables, stacks of corn, hay, &c. on fire in the night-time, or any out-houses, or buildings: but the offender may be transported for seven years.

By 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, (made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42.) Setting fire to any house, barn, or out-house, or to any hovel, cock, mow, or stack of corn, straw, or wood, or to rescue any offender is made felony without benefit of clergy.—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 58. App. 4. § 3.

As to other malicious burnings; by Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 6. § 4, to burn any cart loaded with fuel, incurs 10*l.* penalty and treble damages. By Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23, to burn the covert for red or black game, one month's imprisonment; and by Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19, to burn the covert for deer or game, a penalty between 40*l.* and 5*l.* By Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48, to burn any wood or coppice is felony. By Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32, to set fire to a coal mine, felony without clergy. By Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 29, to burn any mill, felony without clergy, if prosecuted within eighteen months.

The offence of Arson was denied the benefit of clergy, by Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 1; but that Stat. was repealed by Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12; and arson was afterwards held to be ousted of clergy, with respect to the principal offender, only by inference from the Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4; which expressly denied it to the accessory before the fact: though now it is expressly denied to the principal in all cases within the Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. 4 Comm. 223, which see and Leach's Hawk. P. C. vol. i. and ii.

ARSER IN LE MAIN, burning in the hand, is the punishment of criminals that have the benefit of clergy. Terms de Ley.

ARSURA, The trial of money by fire, after it was coined. In Domesday we read, *reddidit 50*l.* ad arsuram*, which is meant of lawful and approved money, whose alloy was tried by fire.

ART AND PART, Is a term used in Scotland and the North of England; when one charged with a crime, in committing the same, was both a contriver of, and acted his part in it.

ARTHEL, A British word, and more truly written arddelaw, or according to the South Welsh ardhel, signifying to avouch; as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his hand, he was to be allowed a lawful arthel (or vouchee) to clear him of the felony: it was part of the law of Hovel Dha; according to whose laws every tenant holding of any other than of the prince or the lord of the fee, paid a fine pro defensione regis, which was called arian arabel. The privilege of arthel occasioning a delay and exemption of criminals from justice, provision was made against it by Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 6.—Blount.

ARTICULI CLERI, (articles of the clergy.) Are statutes containing certain articles relating to the church and clergy, and causes ecclesiastical. 9 E. 2. Stat. 1.

ARTICULUS, An article, or complaint, exhibited by way of libel, in a court Christian. Sometimes the religious bound themselves to obey the ordinary, without such formal process. Paroch. Antiq. p. 344.

ARTIFICERS, See tit. Manufactures and Manufacturers.

A stranger, artificer in London, &c. shall not keep above two strangers servants; but he may have as many English servants and apprentices as he can get, Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 16. Artificers in wool, iron, steel, brass, or other metal, &c. persons contracting with them to go out of this kingdom into a foreign country, shall be fined not exceeding 100*l.* and be imprisoned three months: and English artificers going abroad, not returning in six months after warning given by our ambassadors, &c. shall be disabled to hold lands by descent or devise, be incapable to take any legacy, &c. and deemed aliens. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27.

By the Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13, Persons convicted of seducing artificers in the manufactures of Great Britain or Ireland, out of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain, to forfeit 500*l.* and to be imprisoned for twelve months; for the second offence to forfeit 1000*l.* and be imprisoned two years. See also Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 71; 15 Geo. 3. c. 5; and 21 Geo. 3. c. 37; by which heavy penalties are inflicted on masters of ships assisting in such seduction.

ARUNDEL. See Honour.

ARUNDINETUM, A ground or place where reeds grow. 1 Inst. 4. And it is mentioned in the book of Domesday.

ARVIL-SUPPER, A feast or entertainment made at funerals, in the North part of England: arvil bread is the bread delivered to the poor at funeral solemnities. Covel. And arvil, arval, arsal, are used for the burial or funeral rights.

ASCESTERIUM, Archisterium, arcisterium, acisterium, alcysterium, architrium, from the Greek.] A monastery. It often occurs in old histories. Du Cange.

ASSACH, or Affash, Was a custom of purgation used of old in Wales, by which the party accused did clear himself by the oaths of 300 men. It is mentioned in ancient MSS. and prevailed till the time of Hen. 5, when it was abrogated. 1 H. 5. c. 6: Spelman. and See Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 7.

ASSART, Affartum from the Fr. Affartir, To make plain.] Affartum est quod redactum est ad culturam. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 21. And the word affartum is by Spelman derived from exertum, to pull up by the roots: for sometimes it is wrote effart. Others derive it from exaratum or exartum, which signifies to plow or cut up. Manwood, in his Forest Laws, says it is an offence committed in the forest, by pulling up the woods by the roots, that are thickets and coverts for the deer, and making the ground plain as arable land; this is esteemed the greatest trespass that can be done in the forest to vert or venison, as it contains in it waste and more; for whereas waste of the forest is but the felling down the coverts which may grow up again, assart is a plucking them up by the roots, and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterwards spring up again. See the Red book in the Exchequer. But this is no offence if done with licence; and a man may, by writ of ad quod damnum, sue out a licence to assart ground in the forest, and make it several for tillage. Reg. Orig. 257. Hence are lands called assarted: and formerly assart rents were paid to the crown for forest lands assarted. See Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 6. Affartments seem to be used in the same sense in Rot. Parl. Of assarts you may read more in Crompt. Juris. p. 203. And Charta de Foresta, anno 9 H. 3. c. 4; Manwood, part 1. p. 171.

ASSAULT, Affultus, from the Fr. Affayler.] An attempt or offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another; as by striking at him, with or without a weapon. But no words whatsoever, be they ever so provoking, can amount to an assault, notwithstanding the many ancient opinions to the contrary. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 62. § 1: See also Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 3: 22 Lib. Aff. pl. 60.

Assault does not always necessarily imply a hitting, or blow; because, in trespasss for assault and battery, a man may be found guilty of the assault, and excused of the battery. 1 Hawk. P. C. 263. But every battery includes an assault; therefore if the assault be ill laid, and the battery good, it is sufficient. Id. ib.

If a person in anger lift up or stretch forth his arm, and offer to strike another; or menace any one with any staff or weapon, it is trespass and assault in law: and if a man threaten to beat another person, or lie in wait to do it, if the other is hindered in his business, and receives loss thereby, action lies for the injury. Lamb. lib. 1: 22 Aff. pl. 60.

Any injury whatsoever, be it never so small, being actually done to the person of a man, in an angry or revengeful, or rude or insolent manner, as by spitting in his face, or any way touching him in anger, or violently jostling him, are batteries in the eye of the law. 1 Hawk. P. C. 263, 4.—from the Fr. Battre to beat or strike.

In many cases a man may justify an assault; thus, to lay hands gently upon another, not in anger, is no foundation of an action of trespass and assault: the defendant may justify molliter manus imposuit in defence of his person, or goods; or of his wife, father, mother, or master; or for the maintenance of justice. Braft. 9 B. 4: 35 H. 6. c. 51.

A servant, &c. may justify an assault in defence of a master, &c. but not à contra. Ld. Raym.

If an officer, having a warrant against one who will not suffer himself to be arrested, beat or wound him in the attempt to take him, he may justify it; so if a parent in a reasonable manner chastise his child, or master his servant, being actually in his service at that time, or a schoolmaster his scholar, or a gaoler his prisoner, or even a husband his wife (for reasonable and proper cause,) or if one confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him, &c. in such manner as is proper in his circumstances; or if a man force a sword from one who offers to kill another; or if a man gently lays his hand on another and thereby stay him from inciting a dog against a third person; if I beat one (without wounding him, or throwing at him a dangerous weapon) who wrongfully endeavours with violence to dispossess me of my lands or goods, or the goods of another delivered to me to be kept for him, and who will not desist upon my laying my hand gently on him and disturbing him; or if a man beat, wound or maim one who makes an assault upon his person, or that of his wife, parent, child, or master; or if a man fight with, or beat one who attempts to kill any stranger; if the beating was actually necessary, to obtain the good end proposed, or rendered necessary in self-defence; in all these cases it seems the party may justify the assault and battery. See 1 Hawk. P. C. 259. and the several authorities there cited.

And on an indictment the party may plead Not guilty, and give the special matter in evidence; but in an action he must plead it specially. 6 Mod. 172. Supposing it matter of justification.—If of excuse, it is said it may be given in evidence, on the general issue. Bull. N.P. 17.

Also in cases of assault, for the assault of the wife, child, or servant, the husband, father, and master, may have action of trespass, per quod servitium amittit. In case of a wife, husband and wife should join in the action for the personal abuse of the wife, (the husband not having sustained any damage). If the husband has been damaged, as by tearing her cloaths, &c. or loss of her assistance, &c. in his domestic concerns, for that peculiar injury to himself he alone must sue.

As to parent and child, master and servant, unless injury accrues to the parent or master, the child or servant may sue.

For an assault, the wrong-doer is subject both to an action at the suit of the party, wherein he shall render damages; and also to an indictment at the suit of the king.

ASSAULT.

king, wherein he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. 1 Hawk. 263.

But if both are depending at one time, unless in very particular cases, the attorney general, will, on application, grant a nolle prosequi, if the party will not discontinue his action.

Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, enacts, That where there are several defendants to any action of assault, &c. and one or more acquitted, the person so acquitted shall recover costs of suit; unless the judge certify that there was a reasonable cause for making such person a defendant or defendants to such action.

If any person assault a privy councillor, in the execution of his office, it is felony. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 16.

Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. sect. 11. If any person shall wilfully and maliciously assault any person in the public streets or highways, with an intent to tear, spoil, cut, burn or deface, and shall tear, spoil, cut, burn, or deface the garments, &c. of such person, it is felony; and the offender may be transported for seven years.

Assaulting persons in a forcible manner, with intent to commit robbery, is made felony and transportation, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. And assaulting or threatening a counsellor at law, or attorney employed in a cause against a man; or a juror giving verdict against him; his adversary for suing him, &c. is punishable on an indictment, by fine and imprisonment, for the contempt. 1 Hawk. 58. There are other assaults punishable in a precise peculiar manner viz.—Stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 6, & 11 Hen. 6. c. 11, render assaults on members of parliament more than usually penal, upon non-surrender on proclamation. Stat. 9 E. 2. Stat. 1. c. 3, gives a double criminal process against those who assault clergymen, indictment for the temporal offence, and process in the ecclesiastical court, for the spiritual one. By Stat. 5 Edw. c. 4, servants assaulting their master, mistress, or overseer may be imprisoned twelve months on conviction before two justices: By Stat. 9 Ann. c. 14. § 8, to assault, beat or challenge another on account of money won by gaming incurs forfeiture of goods and two years' imprisonment. By Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, to assault another by wilfully shooting at him is felony without clergy. By Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 34, assaulting a master woolcomber or weaver, &c. for not complying with the demands of workmen, is felony and transportation for seven years.

ASSAY of weights and measures, (from the Fr. essay, i. e. a proof or trial). Is the examination of weights and measures, by clerks of markets, &c. Reg. Orig. 279.

ASSAYER OF THE KING, Assayator regis.] An officer of the king's mint, for the trial of silver; he is indifferently appointed between the master of the mint and the merchants that bring silver thither for exchange. See tit. Gold and Silver; and Money.

ASSAYERS, Of plate made by goldsmiths, &c. See tit. Goldsmiths.

ASSAYSIARE, To associate, to take as fellow judges; a word used in old charters. Cart. Abbat. Glaf. MS. § 57.

ASSECURARE, Adsecurare.] To make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith. In the charter of peace between Hen. 2. and his sons, this word is mentioned. Hoveden, anno 1174.

ASSEMBLY UNLAWFUL, See tit. Riot.

ASSENT, or CONSENT. To a legacy of goods, the assent of the executor is necessary. See tits. Executor and Legacy.

ASSETS.

Assent of Dean and Chapter in making leases of church lands; vide Leases. Of the major part of corporations, in making by-laws, Vide Bye Laws. Of assents to agreements. See tit. Agreement.—See also other proper titles.

ASSESSORS, Those that assess public taxes. There are assessments of parish duties, for raising money for the poor, repairing of highways, &c. made and levied by rate on the inhabitants; as well as assessments of public taxes, &c. See Assessors.

ASSETS, Fr. Assets, i. e. Satis.] Goods enough to discharge that burden which is cast upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the debts and legacies of the testator or ancestor. Bro. tit. Assets.

Assets are real, or personal; where a man hath lands in fee-simple, and dies seised thereof, the lands which come to his heir are assets real; and where he dies possessed of any personal estate, the goods which come to the executors are assets personal.

Assets are also divided into assets per descent, and assets inter mains. Assets by descent, is where a person is bound in an obligation, and dies seised of lands which descend to the heir, the land shall be assets, and the heir shall be charged as far as the land to him descended will extend.

Assets inter mains, is when a man indebted makes executors, and leaves them sufficient to pay his debts and legacies; or where some commodity or profit ariseth to them in right of the testator, which are called assets in their hands. Terms de Ley 56, 77.

As to assets by descent it is to be observed, that by the common law, if an heir had sold or aliened the lands which were assets, before the obligation of his ancestor was put in suit, he was to be discharged, and the debt was lost: but by Statute, 3 W. & M. c. 14, made perpetual by 6 Will. 3. c. 14, the heir is made liable to the value of the land by him sold, in action of debt brought against him by the obligee, who shall recover to the value of the said land, as if the debt was the proper debt of the heir; but the land which is sold or aliened bona fide before the action brought, shall not be liable to execution upon a judgment recovered against the heir in any such action.

And by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 10, Lands of cessuy que trust shall be assets by descent; and by the same Stat. § 12, Estates pur autre vie shall be assets in the hands of the heir, if it come to him by reason of a special occupancy; and where there is no special occupant, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and shall be assets in their hands.

Where a man binds himself and his heirs in a bond; and dies leaving issue two sons, if the eldest son enters on the lands by descent as heir to the father, and die without issue; and then the youngest son enters, he shall be charged with assets as heir to the father. Dyer 368. Lands which come to the heir by purchase shall not be assets; for it is only lands by descent that are assets. 1 Danv. Abr 577.

A reversion in fee, depending upon an estate tail, is not assets; because it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it by fine, &c. 6 Rep. 56. But after the tail is spent, it is assets. 3 Mol. 257. And a reversion on an estate for life or years shall be assets. A reversion expectant upon the determination of an estate for life is assets, and ought to be pleaded specially by the heir and the plaintiff in such case may take judgment of it et cum acciderit. Dyer 371: Carth. 129. An advowson is assets; but not a presentation to a church actually void, which may not be sold. Co. Lit. 374.

And lands by descent in ancient demesne will be assets in debt. But a copyhold estate descending to an heir is not assets; nor is any right to an estate assets, without possession, &c. till recovered and reduced into possession. Dan. 577.

An annuity is no assets, for it is only a chose en action. Br. Assets per Descent, pl. 26.

Equity of redemption of an estate mortgaged, and a term for years to attend the inheritance are assets. 3 Leon. 32. An heir may plead riens per descent, but the plaintiff may reply that he had lands from his ancestor; and special matter may be given in evidence, &c. 5 Rep. 60. A special judgment against assets shall only have relation to, and bind the land from the time of filing the original writ or bill. Carth. 245: See tit. Heir.—and Com. Dig. tit. Assets.

Assets also are either legal or equitable; of the former some have been specified above; for the latter see Com. Dig. tit. Chancery, (2 G. 1.) &c.

As to assets inter maines. See tit. Executor, V. 5.

ASSEWIARE, To draw or drain water from marsh grounds. Mon. Ang. 2 vol. f. 334.

ASSIDERE, or Affelare, To tax equally; to assess. Mat. Paris. anno 1232. Sometimes it hath been used to assign an annual rent, to be paid out of a particular farm, &c.

To ASSIGN, assignare.] Hath various significations; one general, as to set over a right to another, or appoint a deputy, &c. another special, to set forth or point at; as to assign error, assign false judgment, waste, &c. And in assigning of error, it must be shewn where the error is committed; in false judgment, wherein the judgment is unjust; in waste, wherein especially the waste is done. F. N. B. 19, 112: Reg. Orig. 72. Also justices are said to be assigned to take assizes. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 2.

ASSIGNS or ASSIGNEES, assignatus. Lat.] Those who are assigned, deputed or appointed by the act of the party, or the operation of law, to do any act, or enjoy any benefit on their own accounts and risks—an assignee being one that possesses a thing in his own right; but a deputy, he that acts in right of another. Perkins. Assignee by deed is when a lessee of a term, &c. sells and assigns the time to another, that other is his assignee by deed: assignee in law is he whom the law makes, without any appointment of the person; as an executor is assignee in law to the testator. Dyer 6. But if there be assignee in deed, assignee in law is not allowed: if one covenant to do a thing to J. S. or his assigns by a day, and before that day he dies; if before the day he name any assignee, the thing must be done to his assignee named; otherwise to his executor or administrator, who is assignee in law. 27 H. 8. 2.

He is called assignee, who hath the whole estate of the assignor: and an assignee, though not named in a condition, may pay the money to save the land; but he shall not receive any money, unless he be named, Co. Lit. 215. Assignees may take advantage of forfeitures on conditions, when they are incident to the reversion, as for rent, &c. 1 And 82. What covenants affect or benefit assignees see tit. Covenant, Condition.

ASSIGNMENT.

Under the word assigna, shall be included the assignee of an assignee in perpetuum, the heir of an assignee, or the assignee of an heir. Co. Lit. 384 b: Plowd. 173: 5 Co. 16, 17 b. So the assignee of an assignee's executor, a Show. 57. And a devisee. 2 Show. 39: Godb. 161. But if an obligation be, to pay such persons as he shall name by his will, or writing; there must be an express nomination, and his executor shall not take as assignee. Mo. 855.—An administrator is an assignee. Moor 44.

ASSIGNMENT, Assignatio.] The setting over or transferring the interest a man hath in any thing to another.

Herein shall be considered principally what things are assignable.—As to what covenants, &c. affect or benefit assignees, See tit. Condition, Covenant.

Assignments may be made of lands in fee, for life, or years; of an annuity, rent-charge, judgment, statute, &c. but as to lands they are usually of leases and estates for years, &c. And by the statute of frauds, Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, no estate of freehold, or term for years, shall be assigned but by deed in writing signed by the parties; except by operation of law. A possibility, right of entry, title for condition broken, a trust, or thing in action, cannot be granted or assigned over. Co. Litt. 214.

But though a bond, being a chose in action, cannot be assigned over so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name, yet he has by the assignment such a title to the paper and wax, that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232. And in the assignment of bonds, &c. is always contained a power of attorney to receive and sue in the assignor's name.

Also in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignee alone becomes intitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595: In the case of a policy of insurance the court of K. B. will so far take notice of an assignment, as to permit an action to be brought in the name of the assignor. 1 Term Rep. 26. And the assignor who has become a bankrupt may sue the debtor for the benefit of the assignee. Id. 619.

As to bare rights and possibilities see Com. Dig. tit. Assignment (C).

Tho' a possibility or contingent interest, be not grantable at law, yet (whether in real or personal estate) it is transmissible and devisable; Cro. Jac. 509: 1 P. Wms. 566: Porter 117: 8 Vin. Abr. 112. pl. 38: 2 Atk. 616: 1 Vez. 236: Pollexfen 44: 3 Term Rep. 88: 2 Burr. 1131: 1 Bro. Rep. 181: Fearne's Con. Rem. 444.—The cases in the books, (1 C. R. 18: 1 Ch. Caf. 8: Pollex. 31, 44: 1 P. Wms. 572: 3 P. Wms. 132: 2 Freem. 250: 9 Mod. 101: 2 P. Wms. 608,) abundantly prove, that interests in contingency, respecting personal estates are assignable in equity; but it may be material to observe, that in the case of assignments of such interests, Equity requires the assignee to shew that he gave a valuable consideration for the interest assigned; and therefore will not interpose to assist volunteers. But courts of equity will establish assignments of contingent interests against executors, administrators, or heirs at law, even where such assignments are made, not for consideration of money, but in consideration of love and affection, and advancement of children. 1 Vez. 409. See Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity i. 203.

An assignee must take the security assigned, subject to the same equity that it was in the hands of the obligee; as if on a marriage treaty the intended husband enters into a marriage-brotherage bond, which is afterwards assigned to creditors, yet it still remains liable to the same equity, and is not to be carried into execution against the obligor 2 Vern. 428.

Where there is a bond for the performance of the covenants in a lease, if the lessee assigns the lease, he may likewise assign the bond; but this must be before any of the covenants are broken; but if any of the covenants are broken, and the lessee afterwards assigns the lease and bond, and the assignee puts the bond in suit, for those breaches, it is maintenance. Godb. 81.

'Tis enacted by the statute 7 Jac. 1. c. 15, That a debtor to the king shall not assign any debts to him, but such as did originally grow due to the debtor; afterwards there was a debtor to the husband in 2000l. by a statute; the husband made his wife executrix, and died; she married again one G. D. who was indebted to the king, and then the husband and wife assigned this statute to the king in satisfaction of the debt due to him; adjudged, that the assignment was good, for tho' the second husband had the statute in right of his wife, and by consequence the debt was not originally due to him; yet because he might release the statute, it is the same thing as if it had been originally taken in his name 2 Cro. 324.

An office of trust is not grantable or assignable to another; and therefore it was adjudged, that the office of a filazer, which was an office of trust could not be assigned; nor could it be extended upon a statute Dyer 7.

A bare power is not assignable, but where it is coupled with an interest it may be assigned: 2 Jon. 206: 2 Mod 317.

Arrars of rent, &c. is a chose in action, and not assignable. See Skin. 6.

It hath been doubted if a lease for years, before entry and possession, be assignable. See Show 291.

A lessee out of possession cannot make any assignment of his term off the land; but must first enter, and recontinue his possession; or seal and deliver the deed upon the land, which puts the assignee into actual possession. Dalif. 81. But it has been adjudged that where lessee for years of the crown is put out of his estate by a stranger, yet he may assign the term, though he is not in possession; because the reversion being in the crown, he cannot lawfully be put out of possession, but at his own will. Cro. Eliz. 275.

If lessee for years assign all his term in his lease to another, he cannot reserve a right in the assignment; for he hath no interest in the thing by reason of which the rent reserved should be paid; and where there is no reversion there can be no distress: but debt may lie upon it, as on a contract. 1 Lill. Abr. 99. Where the executor of a lessee assigns the term, debt will not lie against him for rent incurred after the assignment; because there is neither privity of contract, nor estate between the lessor and executor: but if the lessee himself assigns his lease, the privity of contract remains between him and the lessor, although the privity of estate is gone by the assignment, and he shall be chargeable during his life; but after his death, the privity of contract is likewise determined. 3 Rep. 14, 24. Although a lessee make an assignment over of his term, yet debt lies against him by the lessor or his heir; (not having accepted rent from the assignee;) but where a lessee assigns his term, and the lessor his reversion, the privity is determined, and debt doth not lie for the reversioner against the first lessee. Moor 472. Vide Barker v. Dormer. 1 Sbo. 191.

A man made a lease, provided that the lessee or his assigns should not alien the premises without licence of the lessor, &c. who after gave licence to the lessee to alien; by this the lessee or his assigns may alien in infinitum. 4 Rep. 119.

Adjudged, that some things in respect of their nature are not assignable, or to be granted over; as for instance, if the donee in tail holdeth of the donor by fealty, he cannot assign it over to another, because fealty is incident to, and inseparable from, the reversion; so if the founder of a college grant his foundation, though it be to the king, the grant is void, because it is inseparable from his blood. 11 Rep. 66. b, in Magdalen College's case.

Several things are assignable by acts of parliament, which seem not assignable in their own nature; as promissory notes and bills of exchange by Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9; bail-bonds by the sheriff, by 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16; a judge's certificate for taking and prosecuting a felon to conviction, by 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23; a bankrupt's effects by the several statutes of bankruptcy.

A lease was made for years of lands, excepting the woods; the lessor grants the trees to the lessee, and he assigns the land over to another; the trees do not pass by this assignment to the assignee. Goldsb. 188.

Where tenant for years assigns his estate, no consideration is necessary; for the tenant being subject to payment of rent, &c. is sufficient to vest an estate in the assignees: in other cases some consideration must be paid. 1 Mod. 263. The words required in assignments are, grant, assign and set over; which may amount to a grant, feoffment, lease, release, confirmation, &c. 1 Inst. 301. In these deeds the assignor is to covenant to save harmless from former grants, &c. That he is owner of the land, and hath power to assign; that the assignee shall quietly enjoy, and to make further assurance; and the assignee covenants to pay the rent, and perform the covenants, &c.

FORM of an ASSIGNMENT of a BOND.

TO all to whom these presents shall come, greeting;
Whereas A. B. of, &c. in and by one bond or obligation, bearing date, &c. became bound to C. D. of, &c. in the penal sum of, &c. conditioned for the payment of, &c. and interest at a day long since passed, as by the said bond and condition thereof may appear: And whereas there now remains due to the said C. D. for principal and interest on the said bond, the sum of, &c. Now know ye, That the said C. D. for and in consideration of the said sum of, &c. of lawful British money to him in hand paid by E. F. of, &c. the receipt whereof the said C. D. doth hereby acknowledge; he the said C. D. Hath assigned and set over, and by these presents doth assign and set over, unto the said E. F. the said recited bond or obligation, and the money thereupon due and owing, and all his right and interest of, in, and to the same. And the said C. D. for the consideration aforesaid, hath made, constituted and appointed, and by these presents doth make, constitute and appoint, the said E. F. his executors and administrators, his true and lawful attorney and attorneys irrevocable, for him and in his name, and in the name and names of his executors and administrators, but for the sole and proper use use and benefit of the said E. F. his executors, administrators and assigns, to ask, require, demand, and receive of the said A. B. his heirs, executors and administrators, the money due on the said bond; and on non-payment thereof, he the said A. B. his heirs executors and administrators, to sue for and recover the same; and on payment thereof to deliver up and cancel the said bond, and give sufficient releases and discharges therefore, and one or more attorney or attorneys under him to constitute; and whatsoever the said E. F. or his attorney or attorneys, shall lawfully do in the premises, the said C. D. doth hereby allow and assent. And the said C. D. doth covenant with the said E. F. that he the said C. D. hath not received, nor will receive the said money due on the said bond, any part thereof; neither shall or will release or discharge the same, or any part thereof; but will own and allow of all lawful proceedings for recovery thereof; he the said E. F. saving the said C. D. harmless, of and from any costs that may happen to him thereby. In witness, &c.

ASSIMULARE, To put highways together: it is mentioned in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 8.

ASSISA CADERE, This word signifies to be nonsuited; as when there is such a plain and legal insufficiency in a suit, that the complainant can proceed no further on it. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 15: Bracton, lib. 2. c. 7.

ASSISA CADIT IN JURATAM, Is where a thing in controversy is so doubtful, that it must necessarily be tried by a jury. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 15: See post Attaint.

ASSISA CONTINUANDA, A writ directed to the justices of assize for the continuation of a cause, when certain records alleged cannot be produced in time by the party that has occasion to use them. Reg. Orig. 217.

ASSISA PROROGANDA, Is a writ directed to the justices assigned to take assizes, for the stay of proceedings, by reason of the party's being employed in the king's business. Reg. Orig. 208.

ASSISE, Fr. Affir.] According to our ancient books is defined to be an assembly of knights, and other substantial men, with the Justice, in a certain place, and at a certain time appointed. Custum. Normand. cap. 24. This word is properly derived from the Latin verb affideo, to sit together; and is also taken for the court, place or time, when and where the writs and processes of assize are handled or taken. And in this signification assize is general; as when the justices go their several circuits with commission to take all assizes; or special, where a special commission is granted to certain persons (formerly oftentimes done) for taking an assize upon one or two disseisins only. Bract. lib. 3.

Concerning the general assize, all the counties of England are divided into six circuits; and two judges are assigned by the king's commission to every circuit, who hold their assizes twice a year in every county; (except, Middlesex, where the king's courts of record do sit, and where his courts for his counties palatine are held;) and these judges have five several commissions.

1. Of oyer and terminer, directed to them and many other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to try treasons, felonies, &c. and this is the largest commission they have.

2. Of gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of assize associate, which gives them power to try every prisoner in the gaol committed for any offence whatsoever, but none but prisoners in the gaol; so that one way or other they rid the gaol of all the prisoners in it.

3. Of assise, directed to themselves only, and the clerk of assize, to take assises, and do right upon writs of assize brought before them by such as are wrongfully thrust out of their lands and possessions; which writs were heretofore frequent, but now men's possessions are sooner recovered by ejectments, &c.

4. Of nisi prius, directed to the judges and clerk of assize, by which civil causes grown to issue in the courts above, are tried in the vacation by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and on return of the verdict of the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment.

These causes by the course of the courts are usually appointed to be tried at Westminster in some Easter or Michaelmas Term, by a jury returned from the county wherein the cause of action arises; but with this proviso, nisi prius, unless before the day prefixed, the judges of assize come into the county in question.—This they are sure to do in the preceding vacation.

5. A commission of the peace, in every county of the circuits; and all justices of the peace of the county are bound to be present at the assizes; and sheriffs are also to give their attendance on the judges, or they shall be fined. Bacon's Elem. 15, 16, &c. 3 Comm. 60, 269.

There is a commission of the peace, oyer and terminer and gaol delivery of Newgate, held eight times in a year, for the city of London and county of Middlesex, at Justice Hall in the Old Bailey, where the lord mayor is the chief judge.

In Wales there are but two circuits, North and South Wales; for each of which the king appoints two persons learned in the laws to be judges; stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8. If justices sit by force of a commission, and do not adjourn the commission, it is determined. 4 Inft. 265.

The constitution of the justices of assize was begun by Hen. 2; though somewhat different from what they now are: and by Magna Charta justices shall be sent through every county once a year, who, with the knights of the respective shires, shall take assises of novel disseisin, &c. in their proper shires, and what cannot be determined there shall be ended by them in some other place in their circuit; and if it be too difficult for them, it shall be referred to the justices of the bench, there to be ended. 9 Hen. 3. c. 12.

There are several statutes as to holding the assises at particular places in certain counties.

ASSISE is likewise used for a jury, where assises of novel disseisin are tried: the panels of assises shall be arrayed, and a copy indented delivered by the sheriff, &c. to the plaintiffs and defendants six days before the sessions, &c. if demanded, on pain of 40*l.* by stat. 6 Hen. 6. cap. 2. And assize, is taken for a writ for recovery of possession of things immoveable, whereof any one and his ancestors have been disseised. Likewise, in another sense, it signifies an ordinance or statute as Affisa Panis et Cervisie. Reg. Orig. 279.

ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN, Affisa nova disseisinæ.] See Disseisin.

An assize of novel disseisin is a remedy maximè festinum, for the recovery of lands or tenements, of which the party was disseised. 2 Inft. 410. And it is called novel disseisin, because the justices in eyre went their circuits from seven years to seven years; and no assize was allowed before them them, which commenced before the last circuit, which was called an ancient assise; and that which was upon a disseisin since the last circuit, an assise of novel disseisin. Co. Lit. 153 b.

An assise is called sextimum remedium. 1. Because the tenant shall not be effoined. 2. Shall not call a protection. 3. Shall not pray in aid of the king. 4. Shall not vouch any stranger, except he be present, and will enter presently into warranty; so of receipt. 5. The parol shall not demur for the nonage of the plaintiff or defendant. 8 Co. 50: Booth 262.

It lies where tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, is put out and disseised of his lands, or tenements, rents, common of pasture, common way, or of an office, toll, &c. Glouc. lib. 10: Reg. Orig. 197: Assise must be of an actual freehold in lands, &c. and not a freehold in law: it lieth of common of pasture, where the commoner hath a freehold in it, and the lord or other persons feed it so hard, that all the grass is eat up; but then the plaintiff must count and set forth how long the land was fed, and alledge per quod profectum suum ibidem amisit, &c. 9 Rep. 113. One may have an assise of land and rent, or of several rents, and offices and profits in his soil, all in one writ; and if it be of a rent-charge, or rent-seck, it shall be general de libero tenemento in such a place, and all the lands and tenements of the tenants charged ought to be named in the writ; but in assise for rent service it is otherwise. Dyer 31. An assise may be brought for an office held for life; but then it must be an office of profit, not of charge only: of the toll of a mill, or market, assise lieth; though it may not be brought of suit to a mill. 8 Rep. 46, 47.

An assise was brought of the office of a flaxer of the court of Common Pleas, and the demandant counted de libero tenemento, and alledged seisin, by taking money for a capias, and the posse was put in view where the officer late. Dyer 114.

An assise lieth of the office of register of the admiralty, and the demandant laid a prescription to it, viz. quod quilibet hujusmodi persona, who should be named by the admiral, should be register of the admiralty for life. Dyer 153.

It lieth of offices of woodward, park keeper, and keeper of chufes, avanner, &c. but these are not at common law; but by the statute of West. 2. c. 25. because they are of profits to be taken in aliove solo: it likewise lieth of all other offices and bailiwicks in fee. 8 Rep. 47.

In an assise of a new offer, it ought to be shewed what profits belong to it; but it is otherwise of an ancient office, because it is presumed, that the profit thereof is sufficiently known. 8 Rep. 43, 49.

Tenants in common shall each have a several assise for his moiety, or part, because they are seised by several titles; but twenty jointtenants shall have but one assise in all their names, because they have but one joint title; so if there are three jointtenants, and one of them releaseth all his right to one of his companions, and then the other two are disseised of the whole, they shall have but one assise in both their names, for the two parts, because they had a joint title to it at the time of the disseisin, and he to whom the release was given shall have an assise in his own name, because of that part he is tenant in common. Co. Lit. 196.

If lessee for years, or tenant at will, be ousted, the lessor, or he in remainder, may have assise, because the freehold was in him at the time of the disseisin. Rel. 169. Assise lies for tithes, by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 7: Cro. Eliz. 559. But not for an annuity, pension, &c. In some cases an assise will lie, where ejectment will not. Ejectment will not lie de piscariis, by reason the sheriff cannot deliver possession of it; but an assise will lie for it, as it may be viewed by the recognitors. Cro. Car. 534. Assise will sometimes lie where trespass vi & armis doth not. Fid. 8 Rep. 47: 1 Nelf. Abr. 276.

By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. cap. 12, assises of novel disseisin, &c. shall be taken in the proper counties, by the king's justices: and for estovers of wood, profit taken in woods, corn to be received yearly in a certain place; and for toll, tonnage, &c. and of offices, &c. an assise shall be; also for common of turbary, and fishing, appendant to freehold, &c.

In an assise, the plaintiff must prove his title, then his seisin and disseisin: but seisin of part of a rent is sufficient to have assise of the whole; and if a man who hath title to enter set his foot upon the land and is ousted, that is a sufficient seisin.

As the writ of assise restores the party to the actual seisin of his freehold, for so are the words of the writ, viz. faciat tenementum illud seipsum, &c. consequently the party that brings the writ must found it upon an actual seisin, which he has been deposed of, for otherwise this remedy is not commensurate to his case. See 2 Rel. Abr. 463.

Therefore if there be lord and tenant by rent-service, and the lord grants the services to another, and the tenant attorns by a penny, this being given by way of attornment, is not sufficient seisin to ground an assise on; scilicet if the penny had been given by way of seisin of the rent. Lit. Feud. 565: Co. Lit. 315: 4 Co. 9: 10 Co. 127.

The first process in this action is an original writ issued out of chancery, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to return a jury, who are called the recognitors of the assise. An assise is to be arraigned on the day the writ is returnable, on which day the defendant is to count, and the tenant is to appear and plead instantly. Style Reg. 88.

If in an assise no tenant of the freehold be mentioned, the defendant may plead it; and where one defendant pleads, no tenant of the freehold named in the writ, if this is found, the writ shall abate quoad ail. Dyer 207.

On such a plea of the defendant, the plaintiff says that he hath made a feoffment to persons unknown, and he himself hath continually taken the profits; if then they are at issue upon the taking the profits, and it be found against the defendant, it shall not be inquired of the points of the assise, for the disseisin is acknowledged. 1 Dawson. Abr. 584. And if the deed of the ancestor of the plaintiff be pleaded in bar, and this is denied, and found for the plaintiff; the assise shall not inquire of the points of the writ, but only of the damages. Ibid. 585.

In this suit, if the defendant fail to make good the exception which he pleads, he shall be adjudged a disseisor, without taking the assise; and shall pay the plaintiff double damages, and be imprisoned a year. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 25. In assise the tenant pleads in bar, and the plaintiff makes title, but the tenant doth neither answer nor traverse the title; in this case the assise shall be awarded at large. Cro. Eliz. 559. And if any other title is found for the plaintiff, he shall recover. Bro. Aff. 281. If a tenant pleads in abatement in an assise, he must at the same same time plead over in bar; and no imparlance shall be allowed, without good cause: and where there are several defendants, and any of them do not appear the first day, the assise shall be taken against them by default. Pajeb. 5 W. 3.

If assise be brought against a lessee, he may not plead assise non; for that is the form of the plea in bar for tenant of the freehold: he ought to plead the special matter, viz. his lease, the reversion in the plaintiff, and that he is possessed, and so in without wrong. Jenk. Cent. 142. An assise is to be first arraigned, and the plaintiff's counsel prays the court that the defendant may be called; whereupon he is called; and if the defendant appears, then his counsel demand over of the writ of assise, and the return of it; which is granted; and then he prays leave to imparl to a short time after, and the jury is adjourned to that day: at the day given by the court, the defendant is again called, and upon his appearance, he pleads to the assise; and upon this an issue is joined between the parties, and the jurors are sworn to try the issue, the counsel proceeding to give them their evidence: after the trial the court gives judgment, and the plaintiff recovering is to have writ of seisin, &c. 1 Lill. Abr. 105, 106.

The jurors that are to try the assise are to view the thing in demand: by writ of assise the sheriff is commanded, Quod faciat duodecim hiberos & legales homines de vicineto, &c. Videre tenementum illud, & nomina eorum imbraviari, & quod summonent eos per bonas summonitiones, quod sint eorum iustitiaris, &c. parati inde facere recognitionem, &c.

By Westm. 2. cap. 25. A certificate of assise is given, which is a writ for the party grieved, by a verdict or judgment given against him in an assise, when he had something to plead, as a record or release, which could not have been pleaded by his bailiff; or when the assise was taken against himself by default, to have the deed tried, and the record brought in before the justices, and the former jury summoned to appear before them at a certain day and place, for a further examination and trial of the matter. See Boorb 215, 287; 4 Co. 4 b; 2 Inst. 26; F. N. B. 181; 3 Comm. 38.

The plaint need not be so certain in assise as in other writs; the judgment being to recover per assum recognitionem; and if the plaint be but so certain as that the recognitors may put the demandant into possession, it is sufficient. Dyer 84.

To prevent frequent and vexatious disseisin, it is enacted by the statute of Merton. 20 Hen. III. c. 3. that if a person disseised recover seisin of the land again, by assise of novel disseisin, and be again disseised of the same tenements by the same disseisor, he shall have a writ of re-disseisin; and, if he recover therein, the re-disseisor shall be imprisoned; and, by the statute of Marlberge 52 Hen. III. c. 8. shall also pay a fine to the king: to which the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 26. hath superadded double damages to the party aggrieved. In like manner by the same statute of Merton, when any lands or tenements are recovered by assise of mort d'ancestor, or other jury, or any judgment of the court, if the party be afterwards disseised by the same person against whom judgment was obtained, he shall have a writ of post-disseisin, against him; which subjects the post-disseisor to the same penalties as a re-disseisor. The reason of all which, as given by Sir Edward Coke, (2 Inst. 83, 84.) is because such proceeding is a contempt of the king's court, and in despite of the law. 3 Comm. 188; See Reg. Orig. 108; F. N. B. 190; Co. Lit. 154; 2 Inst. Com. on stat. W. 2; New Nat. Br. 417, 420.

For proceedings in writ of assise of novel disseisin, See Plowd. 411, 412.

The court of Common Pleas or King's Bench may hold plea of assises of land in the county of Middlesex, by writ out of Chancery. 1 Lill. Abr. 105. And in cities and corporations an assise of fresh force lies for recovery of possession of lands, within forty days after the disseisin, as the ordinary assise in the county. F. N. B. 7.

ASSISE OF MORT D'ANCESTOR, Assisa mortis antecessoris. Is a writ that lay where a man's father, mother, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, &c. died seised of lands, tenements, rents, &c. that were held in fee, and after their death a stranger abated. Reg. Orig. 223. It is good as well against the abator, as any other in possession of the land; but it lies not against brothers or sisters, &c. where there is privity of blood between the person prosecuting and them. Co. Lit. 242. And it must be brought within the time limited by the statute of Limitations, [50 years, 3 Comm. 189.] or the right may be lost by negligence.

If tenant by the curtesy alien his wife's inheritance, and dieth, the heir of the wife shall have an assise of mort d'ancestor, if he have not assets by descent from the tenant by the curtesy; and the same shall be as well where the wife was not seised of land the day of her death, as where she was seised thereof. New Nat. Br. 489. A warden of a college, &c. shall have assise of mort d'ancestor of rent where his predecessor was seised. And a man may have assise of mort d'ancestor of rents, against several persons in several counties; having in the end of the writ several summons against the tenants: and the process in this writ, is summons against the party; and if he makes default at the day of the assise returned, then the plaintiff ought to sue out a re-summons; and if he makes default again, the assise shall be taken, &c. Bro. Assis. 88. In a mort d'ancestor, if the tenant says, the plaintiff is not next heir, and this is found against him, the points of the writ shall be inquired of: and in this case, the assise may find, that though the plaintiff be the next heir, yet he is not next heir as to this land; for this is in regard of their inquiry at large. Br. Mort d'An. 47; 1 Danv. Abr. 584. Damages shall be recovered in the assise of mort d'ancestor; but it lieth not of an estate-tail, only where the ancestor was seised in demesne as of fee. Bro. Assis. If a man be barred in assise of novel disseisin, upon shewing a discent, or other special matter, he may have mort d'ancestor, or writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. 4 Rep. 43.

If the abatement happened on the death of one's grandfather or grandmother, then an assise of mort d'ancestor no longer lies, but a writ of ayle, or de aylo; if on the death of the great grandfather, or great grandmother, then a writ of heirayle, or de proavo; but if it mounts one degree higher, to the ireayle, or grandfather's grandfather, or if the abatement happened upon the death of any collateral relation, other than those before mentioned, the writ is called a writ of cofinage, or de consanguineo. Finch L. 266, 267. And the same points shall be inquired of, in all these actions ancestral, as in an assise of mort d'ancestor, they being of the very same nature. stat. Westm.

Writ. s. (13 E. 1.) c. 20, though they differ in this point of form, that these ancestral writs (like all other writs of præcipe) expressly assert a title in the demandant, (viz. the seisin of the ancestor at his death, and his own right of inheritance) the assise asserts nothing directly, but only prays an inquiry whether those points be so. 2 Inst. 399. There is also another ancestral writ, denominated a super assise, to establish an equal division of the land in question, where on the death of an ancestor, who has several heirs or co-heiresses, one enters and holds the others out of possession. F. N. B. 197: Finch. L. 293: Leg. Orig. 226: New Nat. Br. 437, 8: Booth on Real Actions. But a man is not allowed to have any of these actions ancestral for an abatement, consequent on the death of any collateral relation, beyond the 4th degree; (Hale on F. N. B. 221.) though in the lineal ascent he may proceed ad infinitum. (Finch. Abr. tit. Cofinage 15.) 3 Comm. 186.

It was always held to be law, that where lands were devisable in a man's last will by the custom of the place, there an assise of mort d'ancestor, did not lie. For, where lands were so devisable, the right of possession could never be determined by a process, which inquired only of these two points, the seisin of the ancestor, and the heirship of the demandant. And hence it may be reasonable to conclude, that when the statute of wills, 32 Hen. 8. c. 1, made all socage lands devisable, an assise of mort d'ancestor could no longer be brought of lands held in socage. See 1 Leon. 267; and that now, since the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, (which converts all tenures, a few only excepted, into free and common socage,) no assise of mort d'ancestor can be brought of any lands in the kingdom; but that, in in case of abatements, recourse must be properly had to the writs of entry. 3 Comm. 187.

It is to be observed moreover, that these writs are now almost obsolete, being in a great measure superseded by the action of ejectment, which answers almost all the purposes of real actions; except in some very peculiar cases.

ASSISE OF DARREIN PRÆSENTMENT. See tit. Darrein Præsentment.

ASSISE DE UTRUM, or assisa juris utrum.] See tit. Juris utrum.

ASSISE OF THE FOREST, Assisa de foresta.] Is a statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forest. Mauwood 35. The statute of view of frank pledge, anno 18 Ed. 2, is also called the assise of the king; and the statute of bread and ale, 51 H. 3, is termed the assise of bread and ale. And these are so called, because they set down and appoint a certain measure, or order, in the things they contain. There is further an assise of nuisance, assisa de nuisance, where a man maketh a nuisance to the freehold of another, to redress the same. And besides Littleton's division of assises, there are others mentioned by other writers, viz. assise at large, brought by an infant to enquire of a disseisin, and whether his ancestor were of full age, good memory, &c. when he made the deed pleaded, whereby he claims his right.

Assise in point of assise; assisa in modum assise.] Which is when the tenant as it were setting foot to foot with the demandant, without any thing further, pleads directly to the writ, no wrong, no disseisin.

Assise out of the point of assise, is when the tenant pleads something by exception; as a foreign release, or foreign matter triable in a foreign county; which must be tried by a jury, before the principal cause can proceed.

Assise of right of damages, is where the tenant confesseth an ouster, and referring it to a demurrer in law, whether it were rightly done or not, is adjudged to have done wrong; whereupon the demandant shall have a writ of assise to recover damages. Bract. lib. 4: F. N. B. 105. Assises are likewise awarded by default of tenants, &c. —Of the Grand Assise see tit. Jury. —For further particulars relative to Assise in general, see Com. Dig. and ante tit. Assise.

ASSISORS, assiores.] Sunt qui assisar condunt aut taverunt inopiam. —In Scotland, (according to Shene) they are the same with our jurors; and the oath is this:

*We shall tell truth say,
And no suit conceal, for naething we may,
So far as we are charged upon this assise,
Be [by] God himself, and be [by] our part of paradise,
And as we will answer to God, upon
The dreadful day of doom.*

ASSISUS, Rented or farmed out for such an assise, or certain assessed rent in money or provisions. Terra assisa was commonly opposed to terra dominica; this last being held in domain, and occupied by the lord, the other let out to inferior tenants. And hence comes the word to assess or allot the proportion and rates in taxes and payments by assissors.

ASSATHMENT, A weregild or compensation, by a pecuniary mulct: from the preposition ad, and the Sax. sith, vice: quod vice supplicii ad expiandum delictum solvitur, Blount.

ASSOCIATION, associatio.] Is a writ or patent sent by the king, either at his own motion or at the suit of a party plaintiff, to the justices appointed to take assises, or of oyer and terminer, &c. to have others associated unto them. And this is usual where a justice of assise dies; and a writ is issued to the justices alive to admit the person associated: also where a justice is disabled, this is practised. F. N. B. 185: Reg. Orig. 201, 206, 223. The clerk of the assise is usually associate of course; in other cases, some learned serjeants at law are appointed. It hath been holden, that an association after another association allowed and admitted, doth not lie; nor are the justices then to admit other association in that writ afterwards, so long as that writ and commission stand in force. Br. Assis. 386: Mich. 32 H. 6. The king may make an association unto the sheriff upon a writ of redisseisin, as well as upon assise of novel disseisin. New Nat. Br. 416, 417. See ante tit. Assise.

ASSOCIATION OF PARLIAMENT, In the reign of King William III. the Parliament entered into a solemn association to defend his majesty's person and government against all plots and conspiracies: and all persons bearing offices civil or military, were enjoined to subscribe the association, to stand by king William, on pain of forfeitures and penalties, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 27.

ASSOLLE, absolvere.] To deliver from excommunication. Stamf. Pl. Cr. 72. In stat. 1 H. 4. c. 10, mentioned being made of K. Ed. 3, it is added, whom God assails.

ASSUMPSIT, from the Lat. Assumo] Is taken for a voluntary promise, by which a man assumes or takes upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: it comprehends any verbal promise, made upon consideration, and the civilians express it diversely, according to the nature of the promise, calling it sometimes pactum, sometimes promissum, or constitutum, &c. Terms de Ley. An action upon the case on assumpsit (or as it is also expressed, on promissus) is an action the law gives the party injured by the breach or non-performance of a contract legally entered into; it is founded on a contract either express or implied by law; and gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92. M. 617.

Here is to be considered,

- I. In what case an assumpsit is or is not the proper action.
- II. What words will create an assumpsit.
- III. What consideration is sufficient.
- IV. Of the proceedings.

I. In every action upon assumpsit, there ought to be a confide action, promise, and breach of promise. 1 Leon. 405. For

The law distinguishes between a general indebitatus assumpsit and a special assumpsit; for though they come under the denomination of actiones on the case, and the party is to be recompensed in damages alike in both, yet the first seems to be of a superior nature, and will lie in no case but where debt will lie; but for a particular undertaking, or collateral promise to discharge the debt or duty of another, a special assumpsit must be brought. 1 New Abr. 183.

An action on the case on assumpsit lies, for not making a good estate of land sold, according to promise; not paying money upon a bargain and sale, according to agreement; not delivering goods upon promise, on demand; this is by express assumpsit; an implied assumpsit is where goods are sold, or work is done, &c. without any price agreed upon; in an action on the case by quantum meruit or quantum valdebat the law implies a promise and satisfaction to the value.

When one becomes legally indebted to another for goods sold, the law implies a promise that he will pay this debt; and if it be not paid, indebitatus assumpsit lies. 1 Danv. Abr. 26. And indebitatus assumpsit lies for goods sold and delivered to a stranger ad requisitionem of the defendant. Ibid. 27. But on indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold, you must prove a price agreed on, otherwise the action will not lie; though this is helped by laying a quantum meruit, with the indebitatus assumpsit, wherein if you fail in proof of the price agreed on, you may recover the value. Wood's Inst. 536.

If A. and B. having dealings with each other, mix up their accounts, and B. is found in arrear, and mixes to pay the balance, an assumpsit lies against him, on infruct computassit and A. need not bring a writ of account. Cro. Jac. 63: Flet. 70. S. P.: 1 Rol. Abr. 7. S. P.: 1 Rd. R. p. 396: Bulst. 208: Moor 854.

So if A. gives money, or delivers goods to B. to merchandize therewith, and B. promises to render an account, assumpsit lies on this express promise, as well as account. 1 Salk. 9.

So if a tenant, being in arrear for rents, settles an account of arrears with his landlord, and promises to pay him the sum in which he is found in arrear, an assumpsit lies on this promise. 1 Rol. Abr. 9: Bio. Account 81: Razm. 211: 2 Keb. 813: Vide Syde 131, 283. Cro.

Jac. 602. So on a balanced account between two partners tho' including items not connected with the partnership. 2 Term Rep. 479, 483.

But if the obligor in a bond, without any new consideration, as forbearance, &c. promises to pay the money, an assumpsit will not lie, but the obligee must still pursue his remedy by action of debt. 1 Rol. Abr. 8: Hutt. 34: Cro. Eliz. 240 seems contra.

Where a man comes to buy goods, and they agree upon a price and a day for the payment, and the buyer takes them away, an assumpsit for the money is the proper action, for trover will not lie for the goods, because the property was changed by a lawful bargain, and by that bargain the buyer was to convert the goods before the money was due. 1 New Abr. 167.

If a man and a woman, being unmarried, mutually promise to marry each other, and afterwards the man marries another woman, by which he renders himself incapable of performing his contract, an assumpsit lies, in which the woman shall recover damages. Carter 233.

An indebitatus assumpsit lies for money by custom due for scavage; adjudged upon a special verdict, by which it was found, that the sum demanded was due by custom, but that there was no express promise to pay it. 2 Lev. 171.

If one receives my rent, under pretence of title, I may have an indebitatus assumpsit against him. 2 Mod. 263.

If a feme sole marries a man, who in truth is married to another woman, and he makes a lease of her lands and receives the rents, she may bring an indebitatus assumpsit against him for so much money received to her use; adjudged after verdict. 1 Salk. 28.

Where action is brought upon a contract, if the plaintiff mistakes the sum agreed upon, he fails in his action; but if he brings it upon the promise in law, arising from the debt, there, though he mistakes the sum, he shall recover. Alley 29. Every contract made between parties, implies a mutual promise for performance: and yet an action may be brought on a reciprocal promise by one against the other, although he who brings it hath not performed on his side. Dyer 30, 75. When an assumpsit or promise is the ground of the action, it must be precisely set forth. 3 L-v. 319. If a promise be made without limitation of time for its performance, reasonable time shall be allowed, if there be an immediate consideration for it; and not time during life. 1 Lill. Abr. 112. On promise to deliver a thing such a day, the party is bound to do it without request. 1 Lev. 284. But if a promise be to do any thing upon request, the request is necessary to intitle the plaintiff to the action, on which it shall arise. 1 Lev. 48. Tho' in every indebitatus assumpsit, 'tis alledged the defendant promised to pay on request and that he was requested, and refused payment, yet no request is ever proved. The time for the performance of the promise being elapsed, and the promise not performed, the law presumes request, unless in a particular case where a thing is not to be done, until request. Every executory contract, and debt that is not upon record, or on a specialty, which may be turned into damage, imports in it an assumpsit in law, and one may have debt or action on the case upon it at his election; for when a man doth agree to pay money, or to deliver any thing, he thereby promises to pay or deliver it. Plowd. 128: 1 Cro. 94.

Every

ASSUMPSIT II.

Every contract executory implies an assumpsit to pay money at the day agreed, or immediately, if no time be limited. Mo. 667.

The assumpsit in an agreement that will be binding and give action, must be compleat and perfect, and duly pursued and observed: and if the party that makes the assumpsit, and he to whom it is made, agree together, and a bond is given and taken for what is promised; by this the assumpsit is discharged. Also where an assumpsit is to stand to an award, if the award made be void; it will make the assumpsit void. Yelv. 87; 2 Leon. ca. 223; 1 Leon. 170. Indeb. assump. lies by a prothonotary against an attorney, for fees for work done for defendant as attorney. Holt's Rep. 20.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for a customary fine, super mortem domini. Show. 35. Indebitatus assumpsit lies upon a personal contract for a sum in gross, as pro rebus venditis; per Holt Ch. J. Show. 36.

Indebitatus lies for fees for being knighted. Show. 78.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for money paid by mistake, on an account or deceit; but not for money paid knowingly on illegal consideration, as an usurious bond. Salk. 22.

Assumpsit lies in many cases where debt lies, and in many where debt doth not lie. 2 Burr. 1005, which see for many cases where assumpsit will lie; as also, 1 Term Rep. 226.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies on a judgment of a foreign court without declaring upon or proving the grounds or cause of action; and if the judgment was obtained unfairly, defendant must shew it. Doug. 1, 4.

Though, assumpsit lies not for rent usually reserved on leases; yet if a man promise to pay, without a lease, so much a week as long as A. B. &c. permits him to enjoy a warehouse, &c. which is a special cause of promise, this action will lie. 2 Cro. 592. Now by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 14, where the demise is not by deed, the landlord may recover his rent in an action on the case, for use and occupation.

Where a person pays money upon a mistake; or if he receives more from another in a reckoning than he ought, or more fees than should be taken, an assumpsit lies. 1 Salk. 22; Comb. 447. If a man receives money for the use of another person, assumpsit may be had against him, which supplies the place of action of account: and where money was deposited on a wager, an indebitatus lay for money received to a man's use. Show. 117.

If where a promise is made, one part of it is against law, and another part of it lawful, this is ground sufficient for assumpsit. 4 Rep. 94.

The person to whom a promise is made, shall have the action; and not those who are strangers, or for whose benefit it is intended. Daro. 64. Nor shall action be brought against one for what another receives, nor at his request, &c. 1 Salk. 23. But if a man delivers money to A. B. to my use, I may have an action on the case against him for this money. If a man accounts, and upon the account is found in arrear to a certain sum, and presently in consideration thereof, assumes to pay the debt at a day; action on the case lies for this after the day. Yelv. 70. And on a promise to pay a sum of money at so much a month, an action on the case may be brought before the whole is payable; for it is grounded upon the promise, which is broken by every non-payment, and damages may be recovered. 2 Cro. 504.—See title Debt.

II. Some agreements though never so expressly made are deemed of so important a nature, that they ought not to rest in verbal promise only, which cannot be proved but by the memory of witnesses. To prevent which, the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car. 2. c. 3, enacts, that in the five following cases no verbal promise shall be sufficient to ground an action upon, but at the least some note or memorandum of it shall be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith. 1. Where an executor or administrator promises to answer damages out of his own estate. 2. Where a man undertakes to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. 3. Where any agreement is made, upon consideration of marriage. 4. Where any contract or sale is made of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein. 5. And, lastly, where there is any agreement that is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. In all these cases a mere verbal assumpsit is void.

The same statute provides that no contract for sale of goods for the price of 10*l.* or upwards shall be good, except the buyer actually receive part of the goods sold, or give earnest; or there be some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain being made by the parties or their agents.

A letter written by a party is a sufficient memorandum. 3 Burr. 1663. And see tit. Agreement.

A parol promise of marriage between parties is not within the statute. Str. 34; 5 Mod. 411; Salk. 24.

As to promises for the debt, &c. of another.

If a person for whose use goods are furnished be liable at all, any other promise by a third person to pay that debt, must be in writing. 2 Term Rep. 80.

And there is no distinction between a promise to pay for goods furnished to a third person made before they are delivered, and one after. 2 Term Rep. 80; Cowp. 227.

But if the credit was given to the promiser originally, and the party furnishing the goods cannot recover against the person for whose use they were furnished, then the person promising is liable; as if one say "let A. have goods and I will pay you;" or "look to me for payment." Com. Dig. tit. Action upon the Case on Assumpsit. (F.3.)

The intent of the parties by and to whom the promise or assumpsit is made, is more to be regarded than the form of words, and this intent and meaning is to be followed, not in the letter, but the substance of it: if a promise be to provide wedding cloaths for a woman, this shall be taken for such cloaths to be worn on the wedding or feast-day according to the dignity of the person. Poph. 182; Yelv. 87; 3 Cro. 53.

All promises and contracts are to receive a favourable interpretation; and such construction is to be made, where any obscurity appears, as will best answer the intent of the parties; otherwise a person, by obscure wording of his contract, might find means to evade and elude the force of it. Hence it is a general rule, that all promises shall be taken most strongly against the promiser, and are not to be rejected, if they can by any means be reduced to a certainty.

If a man promises another, in consideration that he will assign to him a certain term, to pay him 10*l.* this is a good assumpsit, though the time of assignment and payment be not appointed; for the 10*l.* shall be paid in a convenient time after the assignment, which also must be done done in a convenient time, and he shall not have time during his life. 1 Roll. Abr. 14, 15.

If there be an agreement to enter into an obligation for performance of a thing of a certain value, without mentioning in what sum, it shall be according to the value. 1 Sid. 240.

III. The consideration is the ground of the common action on the case: and no action on the case lieth against a man for a promise where there is no consideration why he should make the promise. 1 Danv. 53.

A consideration altogether executed and past was anciently held not to be sufficient to maintain an assumpsit, but this doctrine is denied by the court of K. B. 3 Burr. 1671. See also Cio. Eliz. 282, by which it appears that tho' the consideration were executed, it would be sufficient if laid at plaintiff's request.

If an infant promise after full age to pay a debt incurred in his infancy, this will bind him. 1 Term Rep. 648.

If A. undertakes to do a thing without hire, as to take brandies out of one cellar, and to lay them down in another cellar, no action lies for the non-performance; but if he enters on the doing it, action lies for a misfeasance, if it be through his own neglect, or mismanagement, because it is a deceit; but not if by mere accident; per Holt, 1 Salk. 26: Vide 3 Salk. 11.

Where the doing a thing will be a good consideration, a promise to do that thing will be so too; per Holt, Ch. J. 12 Mod. 459.

Parting with my note to the defendant is a good consideration. 7 Mod. 12, 13.

An assumpsit may be upon a general consideration; but it doth not lie where the plaintiff has an obligation to pay the money, which is a stronger lien than assumpsit; nor when the party has a recognizance for the duty, &c. Jenk. Cent. 293.

Love or friendship are not considerations to ground actions upon. 2 Leon. 30. Also idle and insignificant considerations are looked upon as none at all; for wherever a person promises without a benefit arising to the promisor, or loss to the promisee, it is looked upon as a void promise. 2 Bulst. 269.

Lastly, it is to be observed, that considerations may be void as being against law, for if they are wicked and ill in themselves, or unlawful, by being prohibited by some act of parliament, they are void; therefore if an officer, who, by the duty of his office, is obliged to execute writs, promises, in consideration of money paid him, to serve a certain process, an assumpsit will not lie on this promise; for the receipt of the money was extortion, and the consideration is unlawful. 1 Roll. Abr. 16.

Implied contracts, are such as do not arise from the express determination of any court, or the positive direction of any statute; but from natural reason, and the just construction of law: which extends to all presumptive undertakings and assumpsits: which, though never perhaps actually made, yet constantly arise, upon this general implication and intentment of the courts of judicature, that every man hath engaged to perform what his duty or justice requires. Thus, if I employ a person to transact any business for me, or perform any work, the law implies that I undertook, or assumed to pay him so much as his labour deserved. And if I neglect to make him amends, he has a remedy for this injury, by bringing his action on the case upon this implied assumpsit; wherein he is at liberty to suggest, that I promised to pay him so much as he reasonably deserved, and then to aver that his trouble was really worth such a particular sum, which the defendant has omitted to pay. But this valuation of his trouble is submitted to the determination of a jury; who will assess such a sum in damages as they think he really merited. This is called an assumpsit on a quantum meruit. There is also an implied assumpsit on a quantum valebat, which is very similar to the former; being only where one takes up goods or wares of a tradesman, without expressly agreeing for the price. There the law concludes, that both parties did intentionally agree, that the real value of the goods should be paid; and an action on the case may be brought accordingly, if the vendee refuses to pay that value.

Another species of implied assumpsit is, when one has had and received money belonging to another, without any valuable consideration given on the receiver's part; for the law construes this to be money had and received for the use of the owner only; and implies, that the person so receiving promised and undertook to account for it to the true proprietor. And if he unjustly detains it, an action on the case lies against him for the breach of such implied promise and undertaking; and he will be made to repair the owner in damages equivalent to what he has detained in such violation of his promise. This is applicable to almost every case where the defendant has received money, which ex æquo et bono, he ought to refund. 2 Burr. 1012.

This species of assumpsit lies in numberless instances for money the defendant has received from a third person, which he claims title to, in opposition to the plaintiff's right, and which he had by law authority to receive from such third person. 2 Burr. 1008.

One great benefit which arises to suitors from the nature of this action, is, that the plaintiff need not state the special circumstances, from which he concludes, that ex æquo et bono, the money received by the defendant, ought to be deemed as belonging to him: he may declare generally that the money was received to his use, and make out his case at the trial. 2 Burr. 1010.

This is equally beneficial to the defendant. It is the most favourable way in which he can be sued: he can be liable no further than the money he has received; and against that may go into every equitable defence upon the general issue; he may claim every equitable allowance; he may prove a release without pleading it; in short, he may defend himself by every thing, which shews that the plaintiff, ex æquo et bono, is not intitled to the whole of his demand, or to any part of it.

This action will lie to recover premiums of insurance paid by the insured to the lottery-office-keeper. Corrup. 790. But it will not lie to recover back winnings paid by the lottery-office-keeper or insurer of lottery tickets. 4 Burr. 1984.

If two persons engage jointly in a stock-jobbing transaction and incur losses, and employ a broker to pay the differences, and one of them repay the broker with the privy and consent of the other the whole sum, he may recover a moiety from the other, in an action for money paid to his use. 3 Term Rep. 418.

But.

But in such a case of an illegal transaction, if one partner pay money for another, without an express authority he cannot recover it back. ib.

And, generally, assumpsit for money paid, laid out, and expended will not lie when the money has been paid against the express consent of the party for whose use it is supposed to have been paid. 1 Term Rep. 20.

See title Consideration.

IV. The plaintiff must set forth every thing essential to the gift of the action, with such certainty, that it may appear to the court that there were sufficient grounds for the action; for if any thing material be omitted, it cannot appear to the court whether the damages given by the jury were in proportion to the demand, or whether the party was at all intitled to a verdict. And therefore, in an action upon the case, the plaintiff cannot declare quod cum the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in such a sum, and that the defendant, in consideration thereof, super se assumpsit to pay, &c. without shewing the cause of the debt. 10 Co. 77.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, quod cum there were several reckonings and accounts between the plaintiff and defendant; and at such a day, &c. in simul computaverunt for all debts, reckonings, and demands; and the defendant upon the said account was found to be in arrear the sum of 20*l.* in consideration whereof the defendant promised to pay, &c. this is a good declaration, without shewing it was pro mercimoniis, or otherwise, wherefore he should have an account; for an account may be for divers causes, and several matters and things may be included and comprised therein, which in pote computi are reduced to a sum certain, and thereupon being indebted to the plaintiff, it is sufficient to ground an action. Cro. Car. 116.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, that the defendant did assume and promise to pay to the plaintiff so much money, and also to carry away certain wood before such a day; the defendant as to the money cannot plead that he paid it, and as to the carriage of the wood, non assumpsit, for the promise being intire, cannot be apportioned. March 100.

On an assumpsit in law, payment, or any other matter that excuses payment, may be given in evidence, on the general issue. In an assumpsit in deed, it must be pleaded. Gilb. Evid. 204, 5.

If the plaintiff declares upon an indebitatus assumpsit, and upon a quantum meruit, and the defendant pleads, that after the said several promises made, and before the action brought, the plaintiff and defendant came to an account concerning divers sums of money, and that the defendant was found in arrear to the plaintiff 30*l.* and thereupon, in consideration that the defendant promised to pay the said 30*l.* the plaintiff likewise promised to release and acquit the defendant of all demands, this is a good plea; for by the account the first contract is merged. 2 Mod. 43, 44.

The defendant cannot plead that he revoked his promise; as if A. is in execution at the suit of B. and J. S. desires B. to let him go at large, and that he will satisfy him; to which B. agrees; though J. S. before any thing is done in pursuance of this promise and agreement, comes to B. and tells him, that he revokes his promise, and that he will not stand to it; yet such revocation cannot be pleaded in bar to the action. 1 Rel. Abr. 32.

In an action upon an assumpsit, if the consideration be executory; as if one promises, to do something for me, in consideration of something to be done before by me, to or for him, if I will sue him for that he is to do for me, I must aver, that I have done that which was first to be done by me, for till that be done I may not maintain an action upon the promise. Cro. Jac. 583, 620. For further particulars see Com. Dig. tit. Action on the Case on Assumpsit; and see also 3 Comm. 158: and this Dictionary tit. Agreement, Consideration.

perly grantable in cases of contempts, against which all courts of record, but more especially those of Westminster-hall, and above all the court of B. R. may proceed in a summary manner. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 22; See 1 Wils. 300.

The most remarkable instances of contempts seem reducible to the following heads.—1. Contempts of the king's writs. 2. Contempts in the face of a court. 3. Contemptuous words or writings concerning the court. 4. Contempts of the rules or awards of the court. 5. Abuse of the process of the courts. 6. Forgeries of writs and other deceptions tending to impose on the court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33.

All courts of record have a kind of discretionary power over their own officers, and are to see that no abuses be committed by them, which may bring disgrace on the courts themselves; therefore if a sheriff or other officer shall be guilty of a corrupt practice in not serving a writ; as if he refuse to do it, unless paid an unreasonable gratuity from the plaintiff, or receive a bribe from the defendant, or give him notice to remove his person or effects, in order to prevent the service of any writ; the court which awarded it may punish such offences in such a manner as shall seem proper by attachment. Dyer 218. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 2.

But if there be no palpable corruption, nor extraordinary circumstance of wilful negligence or obstinacy, the judgment whereof is to be left to the discretion of the court, it seems not usual to proceed in this manner; but to leave the party to his ordinary remedy against the sheriff, either by action or by rule to return the writ, or by an alias and pluries, which if he have no excuse for not executing, an attachment goes of course. Hob. 62, 264; Noy 101; F. N. B. 38; Finch 237; 5 Mod. 314, 315.

Attachment lies against attornies for injustice, and base dealing by their clients, in delaying suits, &c. as well as for contempts to the court. 2 Hawk. c. 22. § 11. If affidavits to ground an attachment are full as to the charge; yet if the party deny such charge by as plain and positive affidavits, he shall be discharged; but if he take a false oath, he may be indicted of perjury. Med. Caf. in L. 3 E. 81.

Against sheriffs making false returns of writs, and against bailiffs for frauds in arrests, and exceeding their power, &c. attachment may be had. For contempts against the king's writs; using them in a vexatious manner; altering the teste, or filling them up after sealed, &c. attachment lies. And for contempts of an enormous kind, in not obeying writs, &c. attachment may issue against peers. 2 Hawk. c. 22. § 33, &c. For persuading jurors not to appear on a trial, attachment lies against the party, for obstructing the proceeding of the court. 1 Lill. 121. The court of B. R. may award attachments against any inferior courts usurping a jurisdiction, or acting contrary to justice. Salk. 207. Though it is usual first to send out a prohibition.

Attachment lies for proceeding in an inferior court, after a habeas corpus issued, and a superseas to stay proceedings. 21 Cur. B. R. And attachment may be granted against justices of peace, for proceeding on an indictment after a certiorari delivered to them to remove the indictment. 1 Lill. 121. But it does not lie against a corporation, the mode of compulsion being by sequestration. Cowp. 377. Attachment lies against a lord that refuses to hold his court, after a writ issued to him for that purpose, so that his tenant cannot have right done him. New Nat. Br. 6, 27.

An attachment is the proper remedy for disobedience of the rules of court; as of those made in ejectment, arbitrament, &c. So where a defendant in account, being adjudged to account before the auditors, refuses to do it, unless they will allow matter disallowed by the court before; or where one refuses to pay costs taxed by the master, whose taxation the law looks upon as a taxation by the court. 1 Mod. 21; 1 Salk. 71.

But an attachment is not granted for disobedience of a rule of Nisi prius, unless it be first made a rule of court; nor for disobedience of a rule made by a judge at his chamber; unless it be entered; nor for disobedience of any rule without personal service. 1 Salk. 84.

Also an attachment is proper for abuses of the process of the court; as for suing out execution where there is no judgment; bringing an appeal for the death of one known to be alive; making use of the process of a superior court, to bring a defendant within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, and then dropping it, using such process in a vexatious, oppressive, or unjust manner, without colour of serving any other end by it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33, &c. It seems also that counsellors are punishable by attachment for foul practices. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 30. Gashers are thus punishable for misbehaviour in their offices. Id. ib. Witnesses for non-attendance on a trial. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 22. § 33. in n.—Peers are liable to attachment for certain outrageous contempts, as a disobedience to a writ of habeas corpus, and generally of other writs. Id. ib.

Attachments are usually granted on a rule to show cause, unless the offence complained of be of a flagrant nature, and positively sworn to; in which last case the party is ordered to attend, which he must do in person, as must every one against whom an attachment is granted; and if he shall appear to be apparently guilty, the court in discretion, on consideration of the nature of the crime, and other circumstances, will either commit him immediately, in order to answer interrogatories to be exhibited against him concerning the contempt complained of, or will suffer him to enter into recognizance to answer such interrogatories; which if they be not exhibited within four days, the party may move to have the recognizance discharged; otherwise he must answer them, though exhibited after the four days; but in all cases, if he fully answer them, he shall be discharged as to the attachment, and the prosecutor shall be left to proceed against him for the perjury, if he thinks fit; but if he deny part of the contempts only, and confess other part, he shall not be discharged as to those denied, but the truth of them shall be examined, and such punishment inflicted as from the whole shall appear reasonable; and if his answer be evasive as to any material part, he shall be punished in the same manner as if he had confessed it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 1; 1 Salk. 84; 6 Mod. 73; 2 Jones 178.

Upon all these examinations the master is to make his report, and the party is then and not before acquitted, or adjudged in contempt. Hardw. 23; and in the latter case is either immediately sentenced or committed to the marshal; unless the Court waive giving judgment (as they sometimes do from motives of lenity) and order the recognizance to be discharged, 3 Burr. 1256; or the ATTACHMENT FOREIGN, is an attachment of the goods of foreigners, found in some liberty, to satisfy their creditors within such liberty. Carth. Rep. 66.

Foreign Attachment under the custom of London is thus; if a plaint be entered in the court of the mayor, or the sheriff against A. and the process be returned nichil, and thereupon plaintiff suggests that another person within London is indebted to A. the debtor shall be warned (whence he is called the garnishee,) and if he does not deny himself to be indebted to A. the debt shall be attached in his hands. Com. Dig. tit. Attachment foreign, cites 22 E. 4. 39.

The plaint may be exhibited in the mayor's or the sheriff's court; but the proceeding in the former is the most advantageous. Id. ib.

This custom of foreign attachment is said to prevail in Exeter and other places. Sed qu.

But a foreign attachment cannot be had when a suit is depending in any of the courts at Westminster. Cro. Eliz. 91, and nothing is attachable but for a certain and due debt: though by the custom of London money may be attached before due, as a debt; but not levied before due. Sid. 327; 1 Nelf. Abr. 282, 283.

Foreign attachments in London, upon plaint of debt, are made after this manner; A. oweth B. 100l. and C. is indebted to A. 100l. B. enters an action against A. of 200l. and by virtue of that action a serjeant attacheth 100l. in the hands of C. as the money of A. to the use of B. which is returned upon that action. The attachment being made, and returned by the serjeant, the plaintiff is immediately to fee an attorney before the next court, or the defendant may then put in bail to the attachment, and nonsuit the plaintiff: four court days must pass before the plaintiff can cause C. the garnishee, in whose hands the money was attached, to shew cause why B. should not condemn the 100l. attached in the hands of C. as the money of A. the defendant in the action (though not in the attachment) to the use of B. the plaintiff: and the garnishee C. may appear in court by his attorney, wage his law, and plead that he hath no money in his hands of the defendant's, or other special matter; but the plaintiff may hinder his waging of law, by producing two sufficient citizens to swear that the garnishee had either money or goods, in his hands, of A. at the time of the attachment, of which affidavit is to be made before the lord mayor, and being filed, may be pleaded by way of estoppel: then the plaintiff must put in bail, that if the defendant come within a year and a day into court, and he can discharge himself of the money condemned in court, and that he owed nothing to the plaintiff at the time in the plaint mentioned, the said money shall be forth-coming, &c. If the garnishee fail to appear by his attorney, being warned by the officer to come into court to shew cause as aforesaid, he is taken by default for want of appearing, and judgment given against him for the goods and money attached in his hands, and he is without remedy either at common law or in equity; for if taken in execution, he must pay the money condemned, though he hath not one penny, or go to prison; but the garnishee appearing to shew cause why the money or goods attached in his hands ought not to be condemned to the use of the plaintiff, having feed an attorney may plead as aforesaid, that he hath no money or goods in his hands, of the party's against whom the attachment is made; and it will then be tried by a jury, and judgment awarded, &c. but after trial, bail may be put in, whereby the attachment shall be dissolved, but the garnishee, &c. and his security will then be liable to what debt the plaintiff shall make out to be due, upon the action: and an attachment is never thoroughly perfected, till there is a bail, and satisfaction upon record. Privileg. Lond.

But the original defendant must be summoned and have notice; otherwise judgment against the garnishee will be erroneous; and the money paid or levied in execution, or it will not discharge the debt from the garnishee to the defendant: (though it was alledged that the custom of the city court is to give no notice.) 3 Wils. 297; 2 Black. Rep. 834; See 1 Ld. Raym. 727.

Where a foreign attachment is pleaded to an action, the custom is to set forth, that he who levied the plaint shall have execution of the debt owing by himself, and by which he was attached, if the plaintiff in the original action shall not disprove it within a year and a day; now if the plaintiff in the action below doth not set forth such conditional judgment given by the court, it is wrong, because he doth not bring his case within the custom. Vide 2 Lutw. 955.

In assumpsit, &c. there was evidence given, that the debt was attached by the custom of London before the action brought, and that it was condemned there before the plea pleaded; and this evidence was given upon the general issue non assumpsit; and it being insisted for the defendant, that this should relate so as to defeat the plaintiff's action, it was adjudged, that where there is an attachment and condemnation before the action brought, it may be given in evidence upon the general issue, because there is an alteration of the property; but if the attachment be only before the action brought, and the condemnation afterwards, the attachment may be pleaded in negement, and the condemnation may be pleaded in bar, but shall not be given in evidence on the general issue, because by the condemnation the property is altered, but not before. 1 Salk. 280, 291.

ATTACHMENT.

Action of debt, &c. the defendant pleaded in bar, that there was a custom in London to attach the debt before the day of payment came; et per curiam, such a custom may be good, but to have judgment to recover the debt before the day of payment is come, cannot be a good custom, because the debtor himself could not recover in such case, and therefore he who made the attachment shall not. This custom was pleaded, that the debtor in person, or by his attorney, may swear that the debt is due; but this cannot be good as to the attorney: it was agreed, that goods might be attached by a foreign attachment, and that the value thereof ought to be found before judgment; but that this plea was ill, because the defendant did not aver it, viz. et hoc paratus est verificare. W. Jones 406.

A sum of money was to be paid at Michaelmas, and it was attached before that day; adjudged, that a foreign attachment cannot reach a debt before it is due; therefore, though the judgment on the attachment was after Michaelmas, yet the money being attached before it was due, it is for that reason void. Cro. Elia. 194. For further matter See Com. Dig. tit. Attachment, foreign Attachment.

Money due to an executor or administrator, as such, cannot be attached. It would give a simple contract creditor priority over judgments, See Fisher v. Lane and others, 3 Wils. 297. Nor trust-money in the hands of the garnishee. See Doug. 380.

In an action on the case the plaintiff had judgment against the defendant, and he owing 60*l.* to one G. D. he entered a plea against him in London, and attached the 60*l.* in the hands of the said defendant, against whom the plaintiff had recovered as aforesaid, and had execution according to the custom; afterwards the plaintiff brought a scil. fa. against the defendant, to shew cause why he should not have execution upon the judgment which he had recovered, to which the defendant pleaded the execution upon the attachment; and upon demurrer to that plea it was adjudged against the defendant, because a duty which accrue by matter of record, cannot be attached by the custom of London; for judgments obtained in the king's courts shall not be defeated or avoided by such particular customs, they being of so high a nature, that they cannot be reached by attachment. 1 Leon. 29.

Debtor and creditor being both citizens of London, the debtor delivered several goods to the Exeter carrier then in London, to carry and deliver them at Exeter, and the creditor attached them in the hands of the carrier for the debt due to him from his debtor; adjudged, that the action should be discharged, because the carrier is privileged in his person and goods, and not only in the goods which are his own, but in those of other men, of which he is in possession, for he is answerable for them. 1 Leon. 189.

An executor submitted to an award, and the arbitrators awarded, that the defendant should pay the executor 350*l.* This money is not attachable in his hands by any creditor of his testator, though it is assets in his hands when recovered; because it was not due to the testator tempore mortis, and the custom of foreign attachments extends only to such debts. 1 Vent. 111.

By goods and chattels. 2. By the body, pledges, and mainprize. 3. By the body only. This court is kept every forty days. See Crompton, in his Court of the Forest.

ATTAINDER, attināa and attināura.] The stain or corruption of the blood of a criminal capitally condemned; the immediate inseparable consequence, by the common law, on the pronouncing the sentence of death.

He is then called attaint, attinctus, stained or blackened. He is no longer of any credit or reputation; he cannot be a witness in any court; neither is he capable of performing the functions of another man: for by anticipation of his punishment, he is already dead in law. 3 Inst. 213. This is after judgment: for there is great difference between a man convicted, and attainted; though they are frequently through inaccuracy confounded together; when judgement is once pronounced, both law and fact conspire to prove him completely guilty; and there is not the remotest possibility left of any thing to be said in his favour. Upon judgment therefore of death, and not before, the attainder of a criminal commences: or upon such circumstances as are equivalent to judgment of death; as judgment of outlawry on a capital crime, pronounced for absconding or fleeing from justice, which tacitly confesses the guilt. And therefore either upon judgment of outlawry, or of death, for treason or felony, a man shall be said to be attainted. 4 Comm. 380, 1.

A man is attainted by appearance, or by process: attainder on appearance is by confession, or verdict, &c. Confession, when the prisoner upon his indictment being asked whether Guilty or Not guilty, answers Guilty, without putting himself upon his country; (and formerly confession was allowed before the coroner in sanctuary; whereupon the offender was to abjure the realm, and this was called attainder by abjuration). Attainder by verdict is when the prisoner at the bar pleadeth Not guilty, and is found guilty by the verdict of the jury of life and death. And attainder by process, (otherwise termed attainder by default or outlawry,) is when the party fieth, and is not found, until he hath been five times publickly called or proclaimed in the county, on the last whereof he is outlawed upon his default. Staundf. Pl. Co. 44. 122. 182. Also persons may be attainted by act of parliament.

Acts of attainder of criminals have been passed in several reigns, on the discovery of plots and rebellions, from the reign of king Charles II. when an act was made for the attainder of several persons guilty of the murder of king Charles I. to this time; among which, that for attainting Sir John Fenwick, for conspiring against king William, is the most remarkable; it being made to attaint and convict him of high treason on the oath of one witness, just after a law had been enacted, That no person should be tried or attainted of high treason where corruption of blood is incurred, but by the oath of two lawful witnesses, unless the party confess, stand mute, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 3. But in the case of Sir John Fenwick, there was something extraordinary; for he was indicted of treason, on the oaths of two witnesses; though but one only was produced against him on his trial. It was alledged Sir John had tampered with, and prevailed on one of the witnesses to withdraw.

The consequences of attainder are forfeiture and corruption of blood; which latter cannot regularly be taken off but by act of parliament. Co. Lit. 391. b.

As to forfeiture of lands, &c. by attainder, See this Dict. tit. Forfeiture. As to Corruption of Blood, this operates upwards and downwards, so that an attainted person can neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his ancestors, nor retain those he is already in possession of, nor transmit them by descent to any heir; but the same shall escheat to the lord of the fee, subject to the king's superior right of forfeiture: and the person attainted shall also obstruct all descents to his posterity, wherever they are obliged to derive a title through him to a remoter ancestor. See tits. Tenure, Descent, Forfeiture.

This is one of those notions which our laws have adopted from the feudal constitutions, at the time of the Norman conquest, as appears from its being unknown in those tenures which are indisputably Saxon, or Gravelkind: wherein, though by treason, according to the ancient Saxon laws, the land is forfeited to the king, yet no corruption of blood, no impediment of descent ensues; and, on judgment of mere felony, no escheat accrues to the lord. And therefore as every other oppressive mark of feudal tenures is now happily worn away in these kingdoms, it is to be hoped that the corruption of blood, with all its connected consequences not only of present escheat, but of future incapacities of inheritance even to the twentieth generation, may in process of time be abolished by act of parliament: as it stands upon a very different footing from the forfeiture of lands for high treason, affecting the king's person or government. And indeed the legislature has, from time to time, appeared very inclinable to give way to so equitable a provision; by enacting that, in certain treasons respecting the papal supremacy, Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1; and the public coin, Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 11: 18 Eliz. c. 1: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26: 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28; and in many of the new made felonies, created since the reign of Henry the Eighth by act of parliament, corruption of blood shall be saved. But as in some of the acts for creating felonies (and those not of the most atrocious kind,) this saving was neglected, or forgotten to be made, it seems to be highly reasonable and expedient to antiquate the whole of this doctrine by one undistinguishing law: especially as by the stat. of 7 Ann. c. 21, (the operation of which is postponed by St. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39,) after the death of the sons of the late Pretender, no attainder for treason will extend to the disinheriting any heir, nor the prejudice of any person, other than the offender himself; which virtually abolishes all corruption of blood for treason, though (unless the legislature should interpose,) it will still continue for many sorts of felony. 4 Comm. 388, 9.

In treason for counterfeiting the coin, although by the statutes corruption of blood is saved, yet the lands of the offender are forfeited immediately to the king on attainder, it being a distinct penalty from corruption of blood: for the corruption may be saved, and the forfeiture remain, &c. And accordingly so it is provided by some statutes. 1 Salk. 85.

Attainders may be reversed or falsified, by writ of error, or by plea. If by writ of error, it must be by the king's leave, &c. and when by plea, it may be by denying the treason, pleading a pardon by act of parliament, &c. 3 Inst. 232.

By a king's taking the crown upon him, all attainders of his person are ipso facto purged, without any reversal. 1 Inst. 26: Finch. l. 82: Wood 17. This was the declaration of parliament, made in favour of Henry the 7th. See 1 Comm. 248.

The Stat. 8 W. 3. c. 5, requires Sir George Bayley, major general Holmes, and other persons to surrender themselves to the lord chief justice, or secretaries of state; or to be attainted. By the 13 W. 3. c. 3, the pretended Prince of Wales is under attainder of treason, &c. And by 1 Geo. 1. c. 16, the Duke of Ormond and others are attainted. And besides these acts of attainder, bills for inflicting pains and penalties are sometimes past; as that against the bishop of Rochester; Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 17.

ATTAIN, attincta.] A writ that lieth to enquire whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict; (Finch. 484;) that so the judgment following thereupon, may be reversed: and this must be brought in the life-time of him for whom the verdict was given, and of two at least of the jurors who gave it. This lay at the common law, only upon writs of assise; and seems to have been co-eval with that institution by king Henry II. at the instance of his chief justice Glaucil: being probably meant as a check upon the vast power then reposed in the recognitors of assise, of finding a verdict according to their own personal knowledge, without the examination of witnesses. And even here it extended no further than to such instances, where the issue was joined upon the very point of assise (the heirship, disseisin, &c.) and not on any collateral matter; as villainage, bastardy, or any other disputed fact.

In these cases the assise was said to be turned into an inquest or jury, (assisa vertitur in juratum;) or that the assise should be taken in modum jurate, et non in modum assise; that is, that the issue should be tried by a common jury or inquest, and not by recognitors of assise: (Bract. l. 4. tr. 1. c. 34. § 2, 3, 4.—tr. 3. c. 17: tr. 5. c. 4. § 1, 2: Flet. l. 5. c. 22. § 8: Co. Ent. 61. b: Booth. 213;) and then it followed, that no attaint lay against the inquest or jury that determined such collateral issue: Br. 4. l. 34. 2: Flet. l. 5. c. 22. Neither is mention made by our ancient writers, of such a process obtaining after the trial by inquest or jury, in the old Norman or feudal actions prosecuted by writ of entry. Nor did any attaint lie in trespass, debt, or other action personal, by the old common law: because those were always determined by common inquests or juries. Year B. 28 E. 3. 15: 17 Ass. pl. 15: Flet. 5. 22: 16. Other subsequent statutes, (1 E. 3. st. 1. c. 6: 5 E. 3. c. 7: 28 Ed. 3. c. 8,) introduced the same remedy in all pleas of trespass, and the stat. 34 E. 3. c. 7. extended to all pleas whatsoever, personal as well as real; except only the writ of rights, in such cases where the mise or issue is joined on the mere right, freed from the fear of attain, they have taken a great liberty in giving verdicts; but since the attain is only dissolved, and not taken away, 'tis necessary that a certain matter should be brought before them; and therefore in trepasses, the quantity and value of the thing demanded must be so conveniently described, that if the jury find damages beyond such quantities and value, it may be apparently excessive, and they subject to the attain; and so on special contracts, they must be set forth so precisely, that if evidence be given of another contract, and not in the allegations, and yet the jury find for the plaintiff, they may be subject to an attain; and were it otherwise, if the plaintiff had a jury to his turn, and the judge should direct that the plaintiff be non suit, yet if the plaintiff would stand the trial, the judge must give positive directions to find for the defendant; and there would be no means of compelling the jury to find according to the direction of the judge, if they were not under the terror of an attain, if they did otherwise; so this is the only curb that the law has put in the hands of the judges to restrain jurors from giving corrupt verdicts. *Gilb. III. The process to be issued is directed by stat. 23 H 8 c. 3, already mentioned: and by the said statute if any of the petit jury appear at the return of the writ of attain, the plaintiff shall assign the false oath of the verdict untrue given. And if the defendant, or any of the petit jury appear not on distress, the grand inquest shall be taken by default.

The petit jury can plead no plea, but such as may excuse them of the false oath. 1 Rel. Abr. 235.

In the court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and the court of Husting of London, attain may be brought; and the plaintiff setting aside the verdict, shall have restitution, &c. But if the first verdict be affirmed, the plaintiff shall be imprisoned and fined. 11 J. 7. c. 21.

In attain the parties and the jury appeared and demandedoyer of the record upon which the attain was founded, which record being in the Common Pleas, they had it, and thereupon the plaintiff assigned the false oath; the defendants pleaded, that they made a good and lawful oath; upon which they were at issue, and in the same term the record was removed by a writ of error into the King's Bench; adjudged, that notwithstanding it was thus removed, the court of Common Pleas might proceed if the process for the grand jury were returned. Dyer 284.

Attain was brought in the Common Pleas against a jury, for a verdict given in the King's Bench, whereupon the record was removed from that court to the Common Pleas, and there the verdict was affirmed; adjudged, that the plaintiff in the action shall have execution according to the verdict, for the record is in the King's Bench, and nothing but the tenor thereof in the Common Pleas; but if the verdict had been set aside, and execution had been had upon it before it was set aside, then the court of Common Pleas might have awarded restitution to the party grieved. *Cro. In an attain the plaintiff shall recover against all the jurors, tenants, and defendants, the costs and damages, which he shall sustain by delay or otherwise in that suit; and if the defendant's plea in bar be found against him, the plaintiff will have judgment to be restored to what he lost, with damages. stat. 11 H 6. c. 4. and 15 H. 6. c. 5.

ATTORNEY, attornatus] Is one that is appointed by another man to do any thing in his absence. West. Symb. Crimpt. Jurisdic. 105. An attorney is either publick, in the courts of record, the King's Bench and Common Pleas, &c. and made by warrant from his client: or private, upon occasion for any particular business, who is commonly made by letter of attorney. In ancient times, those of authority in courts had it in their power whether they would suffer men to appear or sue by any other but themselves: and the king's writs were to be obtained for the admission of attorneys: but, since that, attorneys have been allowed by several statutes. Attornies may be made in such pleas whereon appeal lieth not: in criminal cases there will be no attorneys admitted. See stat. Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. stat. 1. c. 8. An infant ought not to appear by attorney, but by guardian, for he cannot make an attorney, but the court may assign him a guardian; 1 Lill. Abr. 138. ATTORNEYS AT LAW, Are such persons as take upon them the business of other men, by whom they are retained.

Before the statute of West. 2. c. 10. [13 Ed. 1. A. D. 1285,] all attainies were made by letters patent under the great seal, commanding the justices to admit the person to be his attorney. These patents, where they were obtained, seemed to have been inrolled by a proper officer, called the clerk of the warrants; and also the courts inrolled those patents on which any proceedings were. If such letters patent could not be obtained, the persons were obliged to appear each day in court in their proper persons. Gillb. H. C. P. 32, 33.

The said statute of West. 2. c. 10. gives to all persons a liberty of appearing, and appointing an attorney, as if they had letters patent; and therefore the clerk of the warrants received each person's warrant, and upon the warrant it equally appeared to the court, that he had appointed such a one his attorney to the end of the cause, unless revoked; so that on each act there is no occasion of the plaintiff's and defendant's presence, as was used before that time. This authority continues till judgment, and for a year and a day, and afterwards to sue out execution, and for a longer time, if they continue execution; but if not, the judgment is supposed to be satisfied; and to make it appear otherwise, the plaintiff must again come into court, which he either does by a fiere fac' or an action of debt on the judgment. Gillb. H. C. P. 33.

The attainies of B. R. are of record as well as the attainies of C. B. 1 Roll. 3. And it is now the common course for the plaintiff and defendant to appear by attorney. F. N. B. 25. D. But where the party stands in contempt, the court will not admit him by attorney, but oblige him to appear in person. ib. 262. Outlawry is excepted by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. unless where the court orders special bail. By stat. 13 W. 3. c. 6. attainies are to take the oaths to government under penalties and disability to practise. By stat. 1 H. 5. c. 4. "no sheriff, sheriff's clerk, receiver, nor sheriff's bailiff shall be attorney in the king's courts during the time he is in office with any such sheriff."

In Trinity Term 31 Geo. 3. a rule of court was made to prevent the admission of persons under irregular articles of clerkship, &c. chiefly to prevent the clerks of attainies from acting as principals. See 4 Term Rep. 379.

Parties to fines, as well demandant or plaintiff as tenants or defendants, that will acknowledge their right of lands unto others in pleas of warrantia chartæ, covenant, &c. before the fines pass, shall appear personally, so that their age, ideocy, or other default (if any be) may be discerned: provided that if any, by age, impotency, or casualty, is not able to come into court, one of the justices shall go to the party and receive his cognizance, and shall take with him a knight or man of good fame. Barons of the exchequer and justices shall not admit attainies, but in pleas that pass before them, and where they be assigned. Reserving to the Chancellor his authority in admitting attainies, and to the Chief Justices. Stat. 15 Ed. 2. stat. 1.

In respect of the several courts, there are attainies at large, and attainies special, belonging to this or that court only. An attorney may be a solicitor in other courts, by a special retainer: one may be attorney on record, and another do the business; and there are attornies who manage business out of the courts, &c. Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 18. was enacted, that the justices should examine attainies, and remove the unskilful; and attainies shall swear to execute their offices truly, &c. and by stat. 33 H. 6. c. 7. the number of attainies in Norfolk and Suffolk werelimited.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. attainies, &c. shall not be allowed any fees laid out for counsel, or otherwise, unless they have tickets thereof signed by them that receive such fees; and they shall give in true bills to their clients of all the charges of suits, under their hands, before the clients shall be charged with the payment thereof. If they delay their client's suit for gain; or demand more than their due fees and disbursements, the clients shall recover costs and treble damages; and they shall be for ever after disabled to be attainies. None shall be admitted attainies in courts of record, but such as have been brought up in the said courts, or are well practised and skilled, and of an honest disposition; and no attorney shall suffer any other to follow a suit in his name, on pain of forfeiting 20*l.* to be divided between the king and the party grieved. This statute, as to fees to counsel, doth not extend to matters transacted in inferior courts, but only to suits in the courts of Westminster Hall. Carth. 147.

By the stat. 12 Geo. 1. cap. 29. If any who hath been convicted of forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, or common barratry, shall practise as an attorney or solicitor in any suit or action in any court, the judge where such action shall be brought hath power to transport the offender for seven years, by such ways, and under such penalties as felons.

The act 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. ordains, That all attainies shall be sworn, admitted and inrolled, before allowed to sue out writs in the courts at Westminster; and after the first of December 1730 none shall be permitted to practise but such as have served a clerkship of five years to an attorney, and they shall be examined, sworn and admitted in open court; and attainies shall not have more than two clerks at one time, &c. Every writ and copy of any process served on a defendant, and also every warrant made out thereon, shall be indorsed with the name of the attorney by whom sued forth; and no attainies or solicitors shall commence any action for fees till a month after the delivery of their bills subscribed with their hands: also the parties chargeable may in the mean time get such bills taxed, and upon the taxation the sum remaining due is to be paid in full of the said bills, or in default the parties shall be liable to attachment, &c. And the attorney is to pay the costs of taxation, if the bill be reduced a sixth part. A penalty of 50*l.* inflicted, and disability to practise, for acting contrary to this statute.

By stat. 6 Geo. 2. cap. 27. Attainies of the courts at Westminster may practise in inferior courts.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. Attainies, &c. that act in any county-court, without being admitted according to the statute 2 Geo. 1. c. 23. shall forfeit 20*l.* recoverable in the courts of record; and no attorney, who is a prisoner in any prison, shall sue out any writ, or prosecute suits; if he doth, the proceedings shall be void, and such attorney, &c. is to be strack off the roll. But suits commenced before by them may be carried on. A quaker serving a clerkship, and taking his solemn affirmation instead of an oath, shall be admitted an attorney.

ATTORNEY.

By the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46, Persons bound clerks to attorneys or solicitors are to cause affidavits to be made and filed of the execution of the articles, names and places of abode of attorney or solicitor, and clerk, and none to be admitted till the affidavits be produced and read in court; no attorney having discontinued business to take any clerk. Clerks are to serve actually during the whole time, and make affidavits thereof. Persons admitted sworn clerks in Chancery, or serving a clerkship to such, may be admitted solicitors. By the stat. 23 G. 2. c. 26, Any person duly admitted a solicitor, may be admitted an attorney, without any fee for the oath, or any stamp to be impressed on the parchment, whereon his admission shall be written, in the same manner as by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 20, Attornies may be admitted solicitors.

By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 80, Every admitted attorney, solicitor, notary, proctor, agent or procurator, shall annually take out a stamp certificate [with a $\frac{1}{2}$ l. stamp if within the bills of mortality, and $\frac{3}{4}$ l. if elsewhere,] from the courts in which they practise, on penalty of 50*l*.

Attornies of courts; &c. shall not receive or procure any blank warrant for arrests from any sheriff, without writ first delivered, on pain of severe punishment, expulsion, &c. And no attorney shall make out a writ with a clause ac etiam billæ, &c. where special bail is not required by law. Pa. b. 15 Car. 2. See tit. Appearance. Action upon the case lies for a client against his attorney, if he appear for him without a warrant; or if he plead a plea for him, for which he hath not his warrant. 1 Lill. Abr. 140. But if an attorney appear without warrant, and judgment is had, against his client, the judgment shall stand, if the attorney be responsible: contra; if the attorney be not responsible. 1 Salk. 88.

Action lies against an attorney for suffering judgment against his client by nil dicit, when he had given him a warrant to plead the general issue: this is understood where it is done by covin. 1 Danv. Abr. 185. If an attorney makes default in a plea of land, by which the party loses his land, he may have a writ of deceit against the attorney, and recover all in damages. Ibid. An attorney owes to his client secrecy and diligence, as well as fidelity; and if he take reward on the other side, or cause an attorney to appear and confess the action, &c. he may be punished. Hob. 9.

But action lies not against an attorney retained in a suit, though he knows the plaintiff hath no cause of action; he only acting as a servant in the way of his profession. 4 Inst. 117: 1 Mod. 209. Though, where an attorney or solicitor is found guilty of a gross neglect, the court of Chancery has in some cases ordered him to pay the costs. 1 P. Wms. 593. He who is attorney at one time, is attorney at all times, pending the plea. 1 Danv. 609. And the plaintiff or defendant may not change his attorney, while the suit is depending, without leave of the court, which would reflect on the credit of attorneys; nor until his fees are paid. Mich. 14 Car. A cause is to proceed notwithstanding the death of an attorney therein; and not be delayed on that account: For if an attorney dieth, the plaintiff or defendant may be required to make a new attorney. 2 Keb. 275.

Attornies are liable to be punished in a summary way, either by attachment, or having their names struck out of the roll for ill practice, attended with fraud and corruption, and committed against the obvious rules of justice and common honesty; but the court will not easily be prevailed on to proceed in this manner, if it appears, that the matter complained of was rather owing to neglect or accident than design; or if the party injured has other remedy by act of parliament, or action at law. 12 Mod. 251, 318, 410, 583, 657. 4 Mai. 367.

If an attorney, defendant in an action, does not appear in due time, plaintiff may sign a forejudger, which enables him to strike the defendant off the roll, and then he may be sued as a common person (stat. 2 H. 4. c. 8.) and cannot be proceeded against by bill.—On making satisfaction to the plaintiff, an attorney so forejudged, may be restored. See Impey's Instructor Clericalis C. P. 521.

Sometimes attorneys are struck off the roll on their own application, for the purpose of being called to the bar, &c. and in this case, they must be disbarred by their inn, before they are re-admitted attorneys. Dougl. 144.

They are also liable to be punished for base and unfair dealings towards their clients, in the way of business, as for protracting suits by little shifts and devices, and putting the parties to unnecessary expence, in order to raise their bills; or demanding fees for business that was never done; or for refusing to deliver up their client's writings with which they had been entrusted in the way of business; or money which has been recovered and received by them to their client's use, and for other such like gross and palpable abuse. 2 *Hawk. Payment to the attorney, is payment to the principal. Doug. 623: 1 Black. R. 8.

An action lies against an attorney for neglecting to charge a person in execution at his client's suit, according to a rule of court; although it seems it was rather want of judgment than negligence, 3 Will. 325:—But the court will not proceed against him for it in a summary way. 4 Burr. 2060.

An attorney has a lien on the money recovered by his client, for his bill of costs: if the money come to his hands he may retain to the amount of his bill. He may stop it in transitu if he can lay hold of it; if he apply to the court, they will prevent it's being paid over until his demand is satisfied. If the attorney give notice to the defendant not to pay till his bill be discharged, a payment by the defendant after such notice, would be in his own wrong, and like paying a debt which has been assigned after notice. Dougl. 238.

The court under circumstances, will entertain a summary jurisdiction over an attorney in obliging him to deliver up deeds, &c. on satisfaction of his lien, tho' they came into his hands as steward of a court, and receiver of rents. 3 Term R. 25 See 1 Salk. 89: 1 Lill. 148: Mod. Caf. Law & Eq. 306, the latter that an attorney cannot detain papers delivered to him on a special trust for money due to him in that very business.

Attornies have the privilege to sue and be sued only in the courts at Westminster, where they practise: they are not obliged to put in special bail, when defendants; but when they are plaintiffs, they may insist upon special bail in all bailable cases. 1 Fent. 299: Wood's Inst. 450 But an attorney of one court, may in that court, hold an attorney of of another court to bail. Attorneys shall not be chosen into offices, against their wills. See tit. Advocatus, Procurator.

ATTORNEY OF THE DUTCHY COURT OF LANCASTER, Attornatus curiæ ducatus Lancastrie. Is the second officer in that court: and seems for his skill in law to be there placed as assessor to the chancellor, and chosen for some special trust reposed in him, to deal between the king and his tenants. Cowel.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, Is a great officer under the king, made by letters patent. It is his place to exhibit informations, and prosecute for the crown, in matters criminal; and to file bills in the Exchequer, for any thing concerning the king in inheritance or profits; and others may bring bills against the king's attorney. His proper place in court, upon any special matter of a criminal nature, wherein his attendance is required, is under the judges, on the left hand of the clerk of the crown: but this is only upon solemn and extraordinary occasions; for usually he does not sit there, but within the bar in the face of the court.

ATTORNEYMENT, Attornamentum from the French tourner, to turn. [—Sir Martin Wright and many other writers have laid it down as a general rule, that by the old feudal law the feudatory could not alien the feud without the consent of the lord; nor the lord alien or transfer his feignory without the consent of his feudatory, Wright's Tenures 30, 31. It is certain that this doctrine formerly prevailed in England; if not at least to equal extent in other countries.

This necessity of the consent of the tenant to the alienation of the lord gave rise in our old law to the doctrine of attornment; which at common law, signified only the consent of the tenant to the grant of the feignory, whereby he agreed to become the tenant of the new lord. But after the statute quia emptores terrarum, (4 Ed. I. c. 1), was passed, by which subinfeudation was prohibited, it became necessary that when the reversion or remainderman after an estate for years, for life or in tail, granted his reversion or remainder, the particular tenant should attorn to the grantee. The necessity of attornment was, in some measure; avoided by the statute of uses; (27 H. 8. c. 10); as by that statute the possession was immediately executed to the use; and by the statute of Wills; (36 & 35 H. 8. c. 5) by which the legal estate is immediately vested in the devisee.

Attornments however still continued to be necessary in many cases; but both their necessity and efficacy are now almost totally taken away; for by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, &c. It is enacted, That all grants and conveyances of manors, lands, rents, reversions, &c. by fine, or otherwise, shall be good without the attornment of the tenants; but notice must be given of the grant, to the tenant, before which he shall not be prejudiced by payment of any rent to the grantor, or for breach of the condition for non-payment. And by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, attornments of lands, &c. made by tenants to strangers claiming title to the estate of their landlords shall be null and void, and their landlord's possession not affected thereby: though this shall not extend to vacate any attornment made pursuant to a judgment at law, or with consent of the landlord; or to a mortgagee on a forfeited mortgage.

Until the passing of these statutes, the doctrine of attornment was one of the most copious and abstruse points of the law. But these acts having made attornment both unnecessary and unoperative, the learning upon it may be said to have become almost entirely obsolete. See 1 Inst. 309.

AVAGE, or Avage. A small payment by tenants of the manors in the county of Essex, upon St. Leonard's day, 6 November, for the privilege of pasture in the lord's woods, viz. for every pig under a year old, an half-penny; for every yearly pig, one penny; and for every hog above a year old, two pence. Blount.

AUCTIONS and AUCTIONEERS, Under stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 50; 19 Geo. 3. c. 25; 56; 41 Geo. 3. c. 17; 21 Geo. 3. c. 66; 32 Geo. 3. c. 11, every Auctioneer must take out an annual licence, paying within the bills of mortality 1s. 3d. and without 5s. 9d. and under these statutes and stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, (explained by statutes 29 Geo. 3. c. 63; 30 Geo. 3. c. 26; 31 Geo. 3. c. 41, containing certain exemptions), duties are imposed on goods sold by auction; which duties are a charge on the auctioneer, not on the purchaser.

The practice of passing at it is called, at auctions was in Dexwell v. Christie, (Eq. 395.) considered as illegal; but the legislature having enacted that property put up to sale at auction shall, upon the knocking down the hammer, subject the auctioneer to the payment of certain duties, unless such property can, by the mode prescribed by the act be shown to have been bought in by the owner himself, or by some person by him authorised, seems indirectly to have given a sanction to this practice which may materially affect the authority of the decision in Walker v. Gascogne, and the opinion in Dexwell v. Christie: see 2 Bro. C. R. 326 and the stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 37. § 20. Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity, i. 215.

AUDIENCE COURT, Curia audientie Cantuariensis] A court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, having the same authority with the court of arches, though inferior to it in dignity and antiquity. It was held in the archbishop's palace; and in former times the archbishops were wont to try and determine a great many ecclesiastical causes in their own palaces, but before they pronounced their definitive sentence, they committed the matter to be argued by men learned in the law, whom they named their auditors; and so in time it grew to one special man, who at this day is called causarum negotiorumque audientie Cantuariensis auditor officialis. And to the office of auditor was formerly joined the chancery of the archbishop, which meddled not with any point of contentious jurisdiction, that is, deciding of causes between party and party, but only such as are of office, and especially as are voluntarie jurisdictionis; as the granting the custody of spiritualties, during the vacancy of bishopricks, institutions to benefices, dispensations, &c. but this is now distinguished from the audience. The auditor of this court anciently by special commission was vicar general to the archbishop, in which capacity he exercised ecclesiastical jurisdiction of every diocese becoming vacant within the province of Canterbury. 4 Inst. 337. But now these three great offices of official principal of the archbishop, dean or judge of the pecuhara, and official of the audience are, and have been for a long time past, united in one person under the general name of Dean of the arches. Johns. 254.

The archbishop of York hath in like manner his court of audience. Johns. 255. See Archbishop's court.

AUDIENDO ET TERMINANDO, See title Oyer and Terminer, Assise, Justices.

AUDITA QUERELA.

AUDITA QUERELA is a writ whereby a defendant, against whom judgment is rendered, and who is therefore in danger of execution, or perhaps actually in execution, for on a statute-merchant, statute-dues or recognizance, may be relieved upon good matter of discharge, which has happened since the judgment: as if the plaintiff having given him a general release, or if the defendant hath paid the debt to the plaintiff without providing a release, or not entered on the record. In these and the like cases, when in the defendant's oath good matter is shown, but hath had no opportunity of pleading it, either at the beginning of the suit, or just before execution, which must always be before judgment, or at least before the return of a bill in equity, or be relieved against the oppression of the plaintiff. In Levy v. Aris directed to the court stating that the complaint of the defendant had been heard (audita querela defendantis), and then, setting out the matter of the complaint, in as brief and concise the court to call the party before them, and, having heard their allegations and proofs, to cause justice to be done between them, Stur. L. 488: F. N. B. 102. It is also for Bail, when judgment is obtained against them by scire facias to answer the debt of their principal, and it happens afterwards that the original judgment against their principal is reversed: for here the Bail, after judgment had against them, have no opportunity to plead this special matter, and therefore they shall have redress by audita querela; (3 Rel. Abr. 308;) which is a writ of a most remedial nature, and seems to have been invented, lest in any case there should be an oppressive defect of justice, where a party, who hath good defence, is too late to make it in the ordinary forms of law. But the indulgence now shewed by the courts in granting a summary relief upon motion, in cases of such evident oppression, (Levy v. Aris, 439: 1 Bull. 93;) has almost rendered obsolete the writ of audita querela and driven it quite out of practice. 3 Comm. 406.

Some part of the old law on this subject is here stated, to give the student a general idea of this circuitous proceeding — If necessary to enter more at large into this learning, let him look into Four's Abridgement, and Comyn's Digest.

On a statute, the cosutor or his heir may bring audita querela, before execution is sued out; but this may not be done by a stranger to the statute, or a purchaser of the land. 1 Dav. Abr. 530: 3 Rep. 73. If a lessee covenants for him and his assigns to repair, and the lessee assigns over, and the covenant is broken; if the lessor sues one of them and recovers damages, and then sues the other, he may bring audita querela for his relief. Bro. 74. And where a man hath goods from me by my delivery, and another takes them from him, so that he is liable to both our suits: and one of us sue and recover against him, and then the other sues him, his remedy is by this writ. Dyer 232. One binds himself and his heirs in an obligation, if the obligee recover of the heir, and after sue the executor for the same cause; Et. they may have the writ audita querela. Plowd. 439. If two joint and several obligors are sued jointly, and both taken in execution, the death or escape of one will not discharge the other, so as to give him this action; but if such obligors be prosecuted severally, and a satisfaction is once had against one of them, or against the sheriff upon the escape of one, the other may have it. Hob. 58: 5 Rep. 87. judg- ment is had against a sheriff on an escape of a person in execution, and after the first judgment is reversed for error, the sheriff shall have relief by audita querela. 3 Rep. 342.

If a plaintiff, that sues an administrator, and recovers judgment and sees out execution, has his letters of administration revoked; the defendant must be relieved by audita querela. Style 417.

If A. being within age becomes bail for B. and after two scire fac. and nil returned, judgment is given against A. Et. he may have an audita querela, and avoid the recognizance, and so the judgment thereupon of consequence shall be avoided. Yelv. 155.

But if A. being within age enters into a bond for B. who procures C. without any warrant, to appear for A. and confesses a judgment thereupon, yet A. shall not have an audita querela, but he must take his remedy by action of assumpsit against the attorney. Gr. Jac. 694.

The writ of audita querela may be had, where a recognizance or statute entered into is defective, and not good; or being upon an usurious contract, by darts of imprisonment, or where there is a defence upon it, 15. Mod. Cr. 1697: 1 Brownl. 301: 2 Bull. 320. So upon showing an acquittance of the cognizee, on a suggestion that he had agreed to deliver up the statute. 1 Rel. 379. Where one enters into a statute, and after sells his lands to divers purchasers; or judgment is had against a man, who leaves land to several heirs, Et. and one of the purchasers, or one heir alone is charged, he may have this writ against the rest to contribute to him. 3 Rep. 44: 2 Bull. 15.

Where a statute or recognizance is acknowledged before one who hath not power to take it, and afterwards the cognizee makes a feoffment of the land to another, and the cognizee takes out execution, in such case the feoffee may have an audita querela, and avoid the execution. Dyer 27. 35.

If A. enters into a statute to B. and pays the money in the day assigned, upon which the statute is cancelled, and after B. forges a new statute in the name of A. in which A. may release himself by audita querela; for the forged statute having all the essentials of a true one, the court was obliged to look on it as such till the contrary appeared; which the cognitor could not set forth before execution, having no day to appear judicially in court, and therefore is put to this writ to avoid the execution founded on the injustice of the pretended cosuee. F. N. B. 104.

If upon an assumpsit the sheriff takes an inquisition, and there are several lands found subject to the extent, and several values found, and the sheriff returns, that he has delivered some of the lands in particular for the moiety, where it appears according to the values found, that an equal moiety is not delivered to the party who recovered, but more than a moiety; yet this is not void, nor is it a disseisin by the entry, but only voidable by audita querela. 1 Rel. Abr. 305.

If two executors sue execution for damages recovered by the testator, where one hath released, an audita querela lies against both. 1 Rel. Abr. 314.

If A. cognizee of a statute releases to the tenant all right, interest, and demand, together with all suits and executions, and afterwards sues execution, the tertenant shall have an audita querela to set aside this execution. Gr. Elm. 40: 1 And. 133.

So in trespass or other action, if it be found for the plaintiff by nisi prius, and after, before the day in bank, the plaintiff releases to the defendant, and after judgment is given for the plaintiff, the defendant shall have an audita querela upon this matter; because he could not plead the release at the day in bank. 1 Rol. Abr. 307.

In an audita querela, the process is a venire facias, disstringas, alias, pluries; and if non est inventus be returned, or that be bath nothing, the plaintiff shall have a capias against the defendant. F. N. B. 104: Dyer 297. b.

If an audita querela is founded on a record, or the person bringing it is in custody, the process upon it is a scire facias; but if founded on matter of fact, or the party is at large, then the process is a venire. 1 Salk. 92.

And if there be a default by the defendant upon a scire feci, or two nibils returned, the plaintiff shall have judgment. 1 Salk. 93. But, where an audita querela is sued quia timet, and the party is at large, there shall never be a scire facias. 1 Salk. 92: 1 Inst. 100. a.

An audita querela shall be granted out of the court, where the record upon which it is founded, remains, or it may be returnable in the same court. F. N. B. 105. b. And therefore if a man recover in B. R. or C. B. the defendant, having a release after judgment, and before execution, shall sue the audita querela out of B. R. or C. B. where the record is. F. N. B. 105. So, if a recognizance be acknowledged in C. B. and execution be sued upon it after release, the defendant shall sue the audita querela out of C. B. F. N. B. 105. But an audita querela may be by original; and upon a judgment in C. B. it goes out of chancery returnable in C. B. F. N. B. 105.

The writ of audita querela shall be allowed only in open court. 1 Bulst. 140: 2 Bulst. 97: 2 Shew. 240.

Upon audita querela brought, a superfedeas shall go to stay execution: and the judgment in this action is, to be discharged of execution. Hob. 2. If an audita querela be unduly gotten, upon a false surmise, it may be quashed. 1 Bulst. 140. This writ lies not after judgment upon a matter which the party might have pleaded before. Cro. Eliz. 35. A bare surmise is not sufficient to avoid a judgment; but generally some specialty must be shewn. Cro. Jac. 579. Upon a release or other deed pleaded, no superfedeas will be granted till the plaintiff in the audita querela hath brought his witnesses into court to prove the deed: and if execution be executed before, bail is to be put in by allowance of the court. 1 Lill. Abr. 151.

Upon a motion for an allowance of an audita querela, it was held, that bail must be given in court and not elsewhere; unless in cases of necessity, to be allowed by the court, and then it may be put in before two judges. Palm. 422.

A man nonsuited in an audita querela, may have a new writ. F. N. B. 104. When lands are extended on any statute, &c. before the time, audita querela lieth. 22, 46 E. 3. A writ in the nature of an audita querela, has been made out returnable in B. R. on a special pardon, setting forth the whole matter. Jenk. Cent. 109.

AUDITOR, Lat.] An officer of the king, or other person or corporation, who examines yearly the accounts of all under-officers, and makes up a general book, which shews the difference between their receipts and charge, and their several allowances, commonly called allocations: as the auditors of the exchequer take the accounts of those receivers who collect the revenues. 4 Inst. 106. Receivers general of fee-farm rents, &c. are also termed auditors, and hold their audits for adjusting the accounts of the said rents at certain times and places appointed. And there are auditors assigned by the court to audit and settle accounts in actions of account, and other cases, who are proper judges of the cause, and pleas are made before them, &c. 1 Brownl. 24.—See tit. Account.

AUDITOR OF THE RECEIPTS, An officer of the exchequer, that files the tellers' bills, and having made an entry of them, gives the lord treasurer, &c. weekly, a certificate of the money received; he makes debentures to the tellers, before they pay any money; and takes their accounts: he also keeps the black book of receipts, and the treasurer's key of the treasury, and seeth every teller's money locked up in the treasury. 4 Inst. 107.

AUDITORES, the same with audientes, i. e. the catechumens, or those who were newly instructed in the mysteries of the Christian religion before they were admitted to baptism; and auditorium was that place in the church where they stood to hear, and be instructed, now called the nave of the church: and in the primitive times, the church was so strict in keeping the people together in that place, that the person who went from thence in sermon time was excommunicated. Blount.

AUDITORS OF THE IMPREST, Officers in the exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the great accounts of the king's customs, naval and military expenses, &c. But who are now superseded by the Commissioners for auditing the publick accounts. See title Accounts Publick.

AVENAGE, from the Lat. avena.] A certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as a rent, or in lieu of some other duties. Blount.

AVENOR, avenarius, from the Fr. avoine, oats.] An officer belonging to the king's stables, that provided oats for his horses; mentioned Stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 8.

AVENTURÆ, Adventures or trials of skill at arms; military exercises on horseback.—Affisa de armis: Brady's Append. Hist. Eng. 250: Addit. Mat. Paris, p. 149.

AVENTURÆ, (properly adventure). A misfame causing the death of a man: as where a person is suddenly drowned, or killed by any accident, without felony. Co. Lit. 391.

AVERA, quasi overa, from the Fr. ouvrage and ouvrage, velut operagium.] Signifies a day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at 8 d. It is found in Domesday. 4 Inst. 269.

AVERAGE, averagium.] Is said to signify service which the tenant owes to his lord by horse or carriage: but it is more commonly used for a contribution that merchants and others make towards their losses, who have their goods cast into the sea, for the safeguard of the ship, or of the other goods and lives of those persons that are in the ship, during a tempest. It is in this sense called average, because it is proportioned and allotted after the rate of every man's goods carried. See title Insurance.

Average is likewise a small duty, paid to masters of ships when goods are sent in another man's ship, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight.

AVERAGE OF CORN FIELDS, The stubble or remainder of straw and grafs left in corn fields after the harvest is carried away. In Kent it is called the gratten, and in other parts the roughings, &c.

AVE

AVERCORN, Is a reserved rent in corn, paid by ~~ers~~ and tenants to religious houses: and signifies, by ~~corn~~ corn drawn to the lord's granary, by the working cattle of the tenant. 'Tis supposed that this custom was owing to the Saxon cyriac fecat, a measure of corn brought to the priest annually on St Martin's day, as an oblation for the first-fruits of the earth: under which title the religious had corn-rent paid yearly; as appears by an inquisition of the estate of the abbey of Glastonbury. A. D. 1201.

AVERLAND, Seems to have been such lands as the tenants did plough and manure, cum averiis suis, for the proper use of a monastery, or the lords of the soil. Mon. Angl.

AVER PENNY, (or average penny). Money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, or to be freed thereof.—Rastal.

AVER SILVER, A custom or rent formerly so called. Cowel.

AVERIA, Cattle: Spelman deduces the word from the Fr. ouvier, to work, as if chiefly working-cattle: though it seems to be more probably from avoir, to have or possess: the word sometimes including all personal estate, as catalla did all goods and chattels. This word is used for oxen or horses of the plough; and in a general sense any cattle.—Averia elongata; see Elongata.

AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAM. A writ for the taking of cattle to his use, who hath cattle unlawfully distrained by another, and driven out of the county where they were taken, so that they cannot be replevied by the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 82. See tit. Distr.

AVERMENT, verificatio, from the Fr. averer, i. e. verificare, testari.] Is an offer of the defendant to make good or justify an exception pleaded by him in abatement or bar of the plaintiff's action: and it signifies the act, as well as the offer, of justifying the exception; and not only the form, but the matter thereof. Co. Lit. 362. Averment is either general, or particular; general, which concludes every plea, &c. containing matter affirmative, and ought to be with these words, and this he is ready to verify, &c. Particular averment is when the life of tenant for life, or of tenant in tail, &c. is averred. Ibid. As to general averments see tit. Pleading. With respect to particular averments, the following quotations may serve as examples.—See further Vin. Abr. tit. Averment.

He that claims estate from tenant for life, or in tail, or from parson of a church, ought to aver his life. Br. Estat. pl. 18.

Where one thing is to be done in consideration of another, on contracts, &c. there must be an averment of performance, but where there is promise against promise, there needs no averment; for each party hath his action, 1 Lev. 87. The use of averment being to ascertain what is alledged doubtfully, deeds may sometimes be made good by averment, where a person is not certainly named; but when the deed itself is void for uncertainty, it cannot be made good by averment. 5 Rep. 155. Averment cannot be made against a record, which imports in itself an uncontrollable verity. Co. Lit. 26: Jenk. 232.

Where a statute is recited, there one may not aver that there is no such record; for generally an averment, as this is, doth not lie against a record; for a record is a thing of solemn and high nature, but an averment is but the allegation of the party, and not so much credit in law to be given to it. Lil. P. R. 155.

AVERMENT.

Averment lies not against the proceedings of a court of record. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. sect. 14. Nor shall it be admitted against a will concerning lands. 5 Rep. 68. And an averment shall not be allowed where the intent of the testator cannot be collected out of the words of the will. 4 Rep. 44. One may not aver a thing contrary to the condition of an obligation, which is supposed to be made upon good deliberation, and before witnesses, and therefore not to be contradicted by a bare averment. 1 Lill. Abr. 156.

An averment of a wicked and unlawful consideration of giving a bond, may well be pleaded, though it doth not appear on the face of the deed: and any thing which shews an obligation to be void may well be averred, although it doth not appear on the face of the bond. Adjudged on demurrer, after two arguments in the case of Collins and Blantern, C. B. Easter, 7 Geo. 3: 2 Wilson, 347.

If an heir is sued on the bond of his ancestor, it must be averred that the heirs of the obligor were expressly bound. 2 Saund. 136. In declaring you shew that the obligor bound his heirs.—Another consideration than that mentioned in a deed, may be averred, where it is not repugnant or contrary to the deed. Dyer 146. But a consideration may not be averred, that is against a particular express consideration; nor may averment be against a consideration mentioned in the deed, that there was no consideration given. 1 Rep. 176: 8 Rep. 155. If an estate is made to a woman that hath a husband, by fine or deed, for her life; in this case it may be averred to be made to her for her jointure, although there be another use or consideration expressed. 4 Rep. 4. Averment may be of a use upon any fine, or common recovery; though not of any other use than what is expressed in it: it may be received to reconcile a fine, and the indenture to lead the uses. Dyer 311: 2 Bull. 235: 1 And. 312.

If one has two manors known by the name of W. and levies a fine or grants an annuity out of his manor of W. he shall by averment ascertain which of them it was; per cur. 6 Mod. 235: Chas. Rep. 138.

If a piece of ground was anciently called by one name, and of late is called by another, and it is granted to me by this new name; an averment may be taken that it is all one thing, and it will make it good. Dyer 37, 44. No averment lies against any returns of writs, that are definitive to the trial of the thing returned; as the return of a sheriff upon his writs, &c. But it may be where such are not definitive; and against certificates upon commissions out of any court: also against the returns of bailiffs of franchises, so that the lords be not prejudiced by it. Dyer 348: 8 Rep. 121: 2 Cro. 13.

As to Averments in actions on the case for words, See tit. Action II. 1.

A special averment must be made upon the pleading of a general pardon, for the party to bring himself within the pardon. Hob. 67. A person may aver he is not the same person on appeal of death in favour of life. 1 Nell. Abr. 305.

Where a man is to take a benefit by an act of parliament, there in pleading he must aver, that he is not a person excepted; but where he claims no benefit by it, but only to keep that which he had before, in such case it is not necessary to make such averment. Plow. Com. 87, 488.

Pleas merely in the negative, shall not be averred, because they cannot be proved: nor shall what is against presumption of law, or any thing apparent to the court. Co. Lit. 362, 373. By statute 4 & 5 An. c. 16, no exception or advantage shall be taken upon a demurrer, for want of averment of hoc paratus est, &c. except the same be specially set down for cause of demurrer. See tit. Amendment.

AVERRARE. To carry goods in a waggon, or upon loaded horses, a duty required of some customary tenants. Cartular. Glouster. MS. f. 4.

AUGEA, A cistern for water. Reg. Eccl. Well. MS.

AUGMENTATIO, augmentatio.] The name of a court erected 27 H. 8; for determining suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey lands. The intent of this court was, that the king might be justly dealt with touching the profits of such religious houses, as were given to him by act of parliament. It took its name from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown, by the suppression of religious houses: and the office of augmentation, which hath many curious records, remains to this day, though the court hath been long since dissolved. Terms de Ley 68.

AVISAMENTUM, Advice, or counsel—De avisamento & consensu concilii nostri concessimus, &c. was the common form of our ancient kings' grants.

AULA, i. e. A court-baron, aula ibidem tenet die, &c. Aula ecclesiæ is that which is now termed navis ecclesiæ. Eadm. lib. 6. p. 141.

AULNAGE See ALNAGE.

AUMONE, Fr. aumône, alms.] Tenure in aumone is where lands are given in alms to some church, or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor's soul. Brit. 164. Vide Frankalmoin.

AUNCCEL or AUNSEL-WEIGHT, quasi hand-sale-weight, or from ansa, the handle of the balance.] An ancient manner of weighing, by the hanging of scales or hooks at each end of a beam or staff, which by lifting up in the middle with one's finger or hand, discovered the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other. This weighing, being subject to great deceit, was prohibited by several statutes, and the even balance commanded in its stead. But notwithstanding, it is still used in some parts of England: and what we now call the stilliards, a sort of hand-weighing among butchers, being a small beam with a weight at one end, (which shews the pounds by certain notches) seems to be near the same with the auncel-weight.—See tit. Weights and Measures.

AVOIDANCE, In the general signification, is when a benefice is void of an incumbent; in which sense it is opposed to plenary. Avoidances are either in fact, as by death of the incumbent; or in law: and may be by cession, deprivation, resignation, &c. See tit. Advowson.

AVOIRDUPOIS, or averdupuis. Fr. avoir du poids, i. e. habere pondus, aut justè esse ponderis.] A weight different from that of troy-weight, which contains but twelve ounces in the pound, whereas this hath sixteen ounces: and in this respect it is probably so called, because it is of greater weight than the other. It also signifieth such merchandizes as are weighed by this weight; and is mentioned in divers statutes. See tit. Weights.

AVOW See Advow.

AVOWEE, Of a church benefice. Britt. c. 29. Advocate.

AVOWRY, Is where a man takes a distress for rent or other thing, and the party on whom taken sues forth a replevin, then the taker shall justify his plea for what cause he took it; and if in his own right, he must shew the same, and avow the taking: but if he took it in right of another, he must make cognisance of the taking, as bailiff or servant to the person in whose right he took the same. Terms de Leys 70: 2 Lill. 454. The avowry must contain sufficient matter for judgment to have return: but so much certainty is not required in an avowry as in a declaration; and the avowant is not obliged to alledge seisin within the statute of limitations. Nor shall a lord be required to avow on any person in certain; but he must alledge seisin by the hands of some tenant within forty years. Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19: 1 Inst. 268. In avowry seisin in law is sufficient, so that where a tenant hath done homage or fealty, it is a good seisin of all other services to make an avowry, though the lord, &c. had not seisin of them within sixty years. See Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 2: 4 Rep. 9. A man may distrain and avow for rent due from a copyholder to a lord of a manor; and also for heriots, homage, fealty, amercements, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 315.

If a person makes an avowry for two causes, and can maintain his avowry but for one of them, it is a good avowry: and if an avowry be made for rent, and it appears that part of it is not due, yet the avowry is good for the rest: supposing sufficient rent due to justify a distress. An avowry may be made upon two several titles of land, though it be but for one rent; for one rent may depend upon several titles. 1 Lill. Abr. 157: Saund. 285. If a man takes a distress for rent reserved upon a lease for years, and afterwards accepts a surrender of the lands, he may nevertheless avow, because he is to have the rent due, notwithstanding the surrender. 1 Danv. Abr. 652. Where tenant in tail aliens in fee, the donor may avow upon him, the reversion being in the donor, whereunto the rent is incident. Ibid. 650. If there be tenant for life, remainder in fee, the tenant for life may compel the lord to avow upon him: but where there is tenant in tail, with such remainder, and the tenant in tail makes a feoffment, the feoffee may not compel the lord to avow upon him. 1 Danv. Abr. 648: Co. Lit. 268. If the tenant enfeoffs another, the lord ought to avow upon the feoffor for the arrérages before the feoffment, and not upon the feoffee. 1 Danv. 650. The lord may avow upon a disseisor. 20 Hen. 6. And if a man's tenant is disseised, he may be compelled to avow, by such tenant or his heir. A defendant in replevin may avow or justify; but if he justifies he cannot have a return. 3 Lev. 204. The defendant need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus est, &c. By Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19, it is enacted, That if in any replegiare for rents, &c. the avowry, cognisance, or justification be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, &c. the defendant shall recover such damages and costs as the plaintiff should have had, if he had recovered. See Bull. N. P. 57, that this statute does not extend to an avowry for a nomine pæne or estray. And by Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7, When a plaintiff shall be nonsuit before issue in any suit of replevin, &c. removed or depending in any of the courts courts at Westminster, the defendant making suggestion in the nature of an avowry for rent, the court on prayer shall award a writ to inquire of the sum in arrear, and the value of the distress, &c. upon return whereof the defendant shall recover the arrears, if the distress amounts to that value, or else the value of the distress with costs; and where the distress is not found to the value of the arrears, the party may distress for the residue. See titles Distress and Writ.

AURUM REGINÆ. The queen's gold.—This is a royal revenue belonging to every queen-consort during her marriage, from every person who hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the king, of ten marks or upwards, in consideration of any grants, &c. by the king to him; and it is due in the proportion of one-tenth part more, over and above the entire fine to the king. 1 Comm. 221.

AUSCULTARE. Formerly persons were appointed in monasteries to hear the monks read, and direct them how, and in what manner they should do it with a graceful tone or accent, to make an impression on their hearers, which was required before they were admitted to read publicly in the church; and this was called auscultare. See Lanfrancus in Decretis pro ordine Benedicti. c. 5.

AUSTURCUS, and Osturcus, A goshawk; from whence we usually call a falconer, who keeps that kind of hawks, an ostringer. In ancient deeds there has been reserved, as a rent to the lord, unum austurcum.

AUTER DROIT, An expression used where persons sue or are sued in another's right; as executors, administrators, &c.

AUTERFOITS ACQUIT, Is a plea by a criminal that he was heretofore acquitted of the same treason or felony: for one shall not be brought into danger of his life, for the same offence more than once. 3 Inst. 213. Except by appeal of death which is a private suit. See tit. Appeal. There is also plea of auterfoits convicted, and auterfoits attaint; that he was heretofore convicted, or attainted, of the same felony. In appeal of death, auterfoits acquit, or auterfoits attaint, upon indictment of the same death, is no plea. H. P. C. 244. But in other cases where a person is attainted, it is to no purpose that he should be attainted a second time. And conviction of manslaughter, where clergy is admitted thereon, will bar any subsequent prosecution for the same death. 2 Hawth. P. C. c. 35, 36.

AUTHORITY, Is nothing but a power to do something: it is sometimes given by word, and sometimes by writing: also it is by writ, warrant, commission, letter of attorney, &c. and sometimes by law. The authority that is given must be to do a thing lawful; for if it be for the doing any thing against law, as to beat a man, take away his goods, or dispossess him of his lands, this will not be a good authority to justify him that doth it. Dyer 102: Keilw. 89. An authority given to another person, to do that which a man himself cannot do, is void: and where an authority is lawful, the party to whom given must do the act in the name of him who gave the authority. 11 Rep. 87. Where an authority is given by law, it must be strictly pursued; and if a person acting under such authority, exceeds it, he is liable to an action for the excess.

An authority in some cases cannot be transferred.—Thus a person who has an authority to do any act for another, must execute it himself, and cannot transfer it to another: for this being a trust and confidence reposed in the party, cannot be assigned to a stranger whose ability and integrity were not so well thought of by him for whom the act was to be done. 9 Co. 77 b: 1 Roll. Abr. 330.

Some authorities likewise determine with the life of the person who gave them.

The authority given by letter of attorney must be executed during the life of the person that gives it; because the letter of attorney is to constitute the attorney my representative for such a purpose, and therefore can continue in force only during the life of me that am to be represented. 2 Roll. Abr. 9: Co. Lit. 52.

But if any corporation aggregate, as a mayor and commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a feoffment and letter of attorney to deliver seisin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean, but the attorney may well execute the power after their death: because the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which subsists after the death of the mayor or dean, and therefore may be represented by their attorney; but if the dean or mayor be named by their own private name, and die before livery, or be removed, livery after seems not good. Co. Lit. 52: 2 Roll. Abr. 12.

It is a rule that every authority shall be countermandable, and determine by the death of him that gives it, &c. But where an interest is coupled with an authority, there it cannot be countermanded or determined. And. 1: Dyer 190: and See Viner's Abridgment tit. Authority.

A devise to another to have the disposing, selling, and letting his land; so a devise to his son, but that his wife shall take the profits; so a devise, that his executor shall have the oversight and dealing of his lands; so a devise to an infant in tail, but that G. D. shall have the oversight of his will, and the education of his son till of age, and, to receive, set, and let for him; these and such like words give the devisee an authority, but no interest. Dyer 26. b, 3; 1: 2 Leon. 221: 3 Leon. 78. 216: Moor 635. S. P. Cro. Eliz. 674, 678, 734.

The law makes a difference where lands are devised to executors to sell, and where the devise is, that his lands shall be sold by his executors; for in the first case an interest passes to the executor, because the lands are expressly devised to them, but in the other case they have only an authority to sell. Goldf. 2: Dyer 219: Moor 61: Keilw. 107 b: 1 And. 145.

The testator devised, that his executors should receive the issues and profits of his lands till his son came of age, to pay his debts and legacies, and to breed up his younger children; the testator died, so did the executor, during the minority of the son, having first made J. S. his executor; adjudged, that this executor of an executor may dispose of the issues and profits for the purposes mentioned in the will during the infancy of the son; because the first executor had not only a bare authority, but an interest vested in him. Dyer 210.

Where the testator gives another authority to sell his lands, he may sell the inheritance, because he gave him the same power he had himself, and in such case the purchaser shall be in by the devise. 2 Rep. 53.

An authority may be apportioned or divided, but an interest is inseparable from the person, and where an act, which is in its nature indifferent, will work two ways, the

the one by an authority, and the other by an interest, the law will attribute it to the interest. But where an interest and authority meet, if the party declare, that the thing shall take effect by virtue of his authority, there it shall prevail against the interest. 6 Rep. 17.

In many cases authorities must be strictly executed according to the power given.

If a man devise that his executors shall sell his land, this gives but a naked authority; and the lands, till the sale is made, descend to the heir at law; and in this case, all must join in the sale; and if one die, it being a bare authority, cannot survive to the rest. Co. Lit. 112 b: 113 a: 181 b.

But if a man by will give land to executors to be sold, and one of them die, the survivors may sell; for the trust being coupled with an interest, shall survive together with it. Co. Lit. 113 b: 181 b.

If a letter of attorney be to make livery upon condition, so as to make a conditional feoffment, and the attorney delivers seisin absolutely, the livery is not good; because the attorney had no authority to create an absolute fee-simple; and therefore such absolute feoffment shall not bind the feoffor, because he gave no such authority. 2 Rol. Abr. 9.

If a warrant of attorney be given to make livery to one, and the attorney makes livery to two; or if the attorney had authority to make livery of Black-Acre, and he made livery of Black-Acre and White-Acre, though the attorney has in these cases done more, yet there is no reason that shall vitiate what he has done pursuant to his power, since what he did beyond it is a perfect nullity, and void. Perk. sec. 7. 189.

If a letter of attorney be given to two jointly to take livery, and feoffor makes livery to one in the absence of the other, in the name of both, this is void; because they being appointed jointly to receive livery, are to be considered but as one. Co. Lit. 49. b: 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But if a letter of attorney be made to three conjunctim & divisim, and two only make livery, this is not good, because not pursuant to their authority; for the delegation was to them all three, or to each of them separately; yet if the third was present at the time of the livery made by two, though he did not actually join with them in the act of livery, yet the livery is good; because when they all three are upon the land for that purpose, and two make livery in the presence of the third, there is his concurrence to the act, though he did not join in it actually, since he did not dissent to it. Dyer 62: 1 Rol. Abr. 329: Co. Lit. 181 b: 1 Rol. Rep. 299: Yelv. 26.

If a letter of attorney be given to A. to make livery of lands already in lease, the attorney may enter upon the lessee in order to make livery; because, whilst the lessee continues in possession, the attorney cannot deliver seisin of it; and therefore, to execute the power given him by the letter of attorney, it is necessary he should have a power to enter upon the lessee. Co. Lit. 52: Popb. 103: Dyer 131 a: 340 a.

If a sheriff makes a warrant to four or three, or a capias jointly or severally to arrest one, two of them may arrest the party, for the greater expedition of justice. Co. Lit. 181: Palm. 52: 2 Rol. Rep. 137.

So if the lord gives licence to a copyholder for life, to lease the copyhold for five years, if the copyholder am- diu vixerit, and he leases it for five years generally without limitation, this is a good execution, and pursuant to the licence; for the lease is determinable by his death, by a limitation in law; and therefore as much is implied by law, as if he had made an actual limitation, 1 Rol. Abr. 330, 331: Cro. Jac. 436. S. C.—See further tit. Power, and Vin. Abr. tit. Authority.

AUTUMN. The decline of the summer. Some computed the years by autumns; but the English Saxons by winters; Tacitus says, that the ancient Germans knew the other divisions of the year, but did not know what was meant by autumn.

AUTUMNALIA, Those fruits of the earth which are ripe in autumn or harvest.

AUXILIUM AD FILIUM MILITEM FACIENDUM ET FILIAM MARITANDAM. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff of every county where the king or other lord had any tenants, to levy of them an aid towards the knighting of a son, and the marrying of a daughter. F.N.B. 82: See tit. Aid, Tenure.

AUXILIUM CURIÆ, A precept or order of court for the citing or convening of one party, at the suit and request of another, to warrant some thing. Kenner's Paroch. Antiq. 477.

AUXILIUM FACERE ALICUI IN CURIA REGIS. To be another's friend and solicitor in the king's courts; an office undertaken for and granted by some courtiers to their dependants in the country. Paroch. Antiq. 126.

AUXILIUM REGIS, The king's aid, or money levied for the king's use, and the public service; as where taxes are granted by parliament. See title Aid, Taxes.

AUXILIUM VICECOMITI, A customary aid or duty anciently payable to sheriffs, out of certain manors for the better support of their offices. See Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 245. An exemption from this duty was sometimes granted by the king; and the manor of Stretton in Warwickshire was freed from it by charter. 14 H. 3. M. 4.

AWAIT, Seems to signify what we now call way-laying, or lying in wait to execute some mischief. By stat. 13 R. 2. c. 1, It is ordained that no charter of pardon shall be allowed before any justice for the death of a man slain by await, or malice prepensed, &c.

AWARD, from the Fr. Agard.] Perhaps because it is imposed on both parties to be observed by them. Distum quod ad custodiendum seu observandum partibus imponitur, Spelm.

That act by which parties refer any matter in dispute between them, to the private decision of another party (whether one person or more) is called a Submission; the party to whom the reference is made an Arbitrator or Arbitrators: when the reference is made to more than one, and provision made, that in case they shall disagree, another shall decide, that other is called an Umpire. The judgment given or determination made by an arbitrator or arbitrators is termed an Award; that by an umpire an Umpirage, or less correctly an award.

The following system of the law on this subject is chiefly collected from, and follows the plan of Kyd's Treatise on the Law of Awards, 8vo. 1791.

The subject may be conveniently distributed under the following heads;

AWARD I. II.

- I. The Submission.
- II. The Parties thereto.
- III. The Subject of the Reference.
- IV. The Arbitrators and Umpire.
- V. The Award or Umpirage.
- VI. The Remedy to compel Performance, on an Award or Umpirage properly made.
- VII. Of the Means of procuring Relief against it, when improperly made. And
- VIII. The Effect, in precluding the Parties from suing on the original Cause of Action, or Subject of Reference.

I. THE SUBMISSION may be purely by the act of the parties themselves; or it may be by their act, with the interposition of a court of justice: in either case it may be either verbal or in writing; the general practice, as well as the most safe is to prefer the latter.

When the submission is in writing, it is most commonly by mutual bonds, given by the parties each to the other, in a certain sum penal, on condition, to be void on performance of the award; but such bonds may be given to a third person or even to the arbitrator himself (Comb. 100); and they may be given by other persons than the parties themselves, who will incur the forfeiture if the parties do not perform the award. The submission may also be by indenture, with mutual covenants to stand to the award. 2 Mod. 73.

It is usual in articles of co-partnership, to insert a provision, that all disputes between the partners shall be referred to arbitration. This has so far the effect of a submission, that one of the parties cannot sue another either at law or in equity, for any matter within the terms or meaning of the proviso, without having first had an actual reference, which has proved ineffectual, or a proposal by the plaintiff to refer, and a refusal by the defendant. See 2 Atk. 585, (569): 2 Brownl. c. 336.

All the cases of awards reported in the books, for a long series of years, appear to have been made on submissions, by the act of the parties only; but when mercantile transactions came to be frequently the subject of discussion in the courts, it was soon found, that a judge and jury were very unfit to unravel a long and intricate account; and it therefore became a practice, in cases of that kind, and others, which seemed to be proper for the same tribunal, to refer the matters, by consent of parties, under a rule of nisi prius; which was afterwards made a rule of that court, out of which the record proceeded, and performance of the award was enforced by process of contempt. This practice does not appear to have begun before the reign of Charles II. for the reports of that period shew, that it was not before the latter end of that reign, that the courts granted their interference without reluctance. Their utility, however, was at length so well understood, that by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15. it was enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for all traders and merchants, and others, desiring to end by arbitration, any controversy, suit or quarrel, for which there is no other remedy, but by personal action, or suit in equity, to agree that their submission of their suit to the award or umpirage of any person or persons, should be made a rule of any of his Majesty's courts of record; and to insert such their agreement in their submission, or the condition of the bond or promise whereby they oblige themselves respectively; which agreement being so made and inserted, may on producing an affidavit thereof, made by the witnesses thereunto, or any one of them, in the court of which the same is agreed to be made a rule, and on reading and filing the said affidavit in court, be entered of record in such court; and a rule shall thereupon be made by the said court, that the parties shall submit to, and finally be concluded by the arbitration or umpirage, which shall be made concerning them, by the arbitrators or umpire, pursuant to such submission; and in case of disobedience to such arbitrator or umpirage, the party neglecting or refusing, shall be subject to all the penalties of contemning a rule of court."—On this statute, and awards made in consequence, see 1 Stra. 1, 2: 2 Stra. 1178: 10 Mod. 332, 3: Barnes 55, 8: 1 Salk. 72: Comyns 114: 1 Ld. Raym. 664.

The extent of the submission may be various, according to the pleasure of the parties; it may be of one particular matter only, or of many, or of every subject of litigation between them.

It is proper to fix a time, within which the arbitrators shall pronounce their award: but where the submission limits no time for the making of the award, that shall be understood to be within convenient time; and if in such a case the party request the arbitrators to make an award, and they do not, a revocation of the authority afterwards will be no breach of the submission. 4 Keb. 10, 20.

The submission, being the voluntary agreement of the parties, the words of it must be so understood, as to give a reasonable construction to their meaning, and to make their intention prevail: and where there is a repugnancy in the words of the submission, the latter part shall be rejected, and the former stand. Poph. 15, 16.

It has been said, that as all authority is in its nature revocable, even though made irrevocable, therefore a submission to an award may be revoked by either of the parties; such at least was the determination under the old law as reported in the year-books, and ancient reporters, but now it may reasonably be supposed, that the courts would sustain an action on the case, for countermanding the authority of the arbitrator. A case is reported in two books, one being evidently nothing more than a loose note; 1 Sid. 261; the other report is at length, and the manner of the pleadings distinctly given; the breach being assigned in a discharge by the defendant of the arbitrators from making any award; and the judgment of the court without much hesitation in favour of the plaintiff 2 Keb. 10, 20. 24.

This applies only, however, to the case of an express revocation; not to that which must necessarily be implied by construction of law from another act of the party. Thus, if a woman while sole, submit to arbitration, and marry before the making of the award, or before the expiration of the time for making it, the marriage operates as a revocation. W. Jones 388: 3 Keb. 9745.

II. EVERY ONE who is capable of making a disposition of his property, or a release of his right, may make a submission to an award; but no one can, who is either under a natural or civil capacity of contracting. Therefore a married woman cannot be party to a submission, whatever may be the subject of dispute, whether arising arising before or after her marriage; but the husband may submit for himself and his wife. Str. 351.

On the principle that an infant cannot bind himself for any thing but necessities, it is clear he cannot be party to a submission; whether the matter in dispute be an injury done to him, or an injury done by him to another; but a guardian may submit for an infant, and bind himself that he shall perform the award. See Comb. 318, Roberts v. Newbold; which established this principle, in contradiction to former determinations.

An executor or administrator may submit a matter in dispute between another and himself, in right of his testator and intestate; but it is at his own peril; for if the arbitrator do not give him the same measure of justice as he would be entitled to at law, he must account for the deficiency to those interested in the effects. See Dyer 216 b; 217 a: Con. Dig. Admin. (l. i.): 3 Leon. 53: and Barry v. Ruff, 1 Term Rep. 691.

So the assignees of a bankrupt may submit to arbitration any disputes, between their bankrupt and others, provided they pursue the directions of the stat. 5 Geo. II. c. 30 § 34; on the construction of which see 1 Atk. 91.

Those only who are actually parties to the submission shall be bound by the award.—For the case of partners see 2 Mol. 228.—Of co-parishioners, Mudry v. Osam, Litt. 30.

So, in general, a man is bound by an award, to which he submits for another, Alfop v. Senior, 2 Keb. 707, 718. And see Bacon v. Dubarry; the case of an attorney submitting for his principal without authority from him. 1 Ld. Raym. 246: See Kyd on Awards, p. 27: and Colwill v. Child, 1 Rep. Ch. 104: 1 Ca. Ch. 86.

But if a man authorize another on his behalf, to refer a dispute, the award is binding on the principal alone. Dyer 216 b; 217. unless the agent binds himself for the performance of the principal. 1 Wils. 28, 58.

When there are several claimants on one side, and they all agree to submit to arbitration, and some only enter into a bond to perform the award, the award shall bind the rest. Wood & al. v. Thompson & al. M. 24 Car. B. R. Rel. Abr. tit. Arbitr. F. 11.

Where there are two on one side, though they will not be bound the one for the other, yet if the award be general, that they shall do one entire thing, both shall be bound to performance of the whole. Cro. Car. 434.

If the husband and wife submit to arbitration, any thing in right of the wife, the wife shall after the death of the husband, be bound by the award. Lumley v. Hutson, 1 Rel. Rep. 2: 8, 9.

An award creates a duty which survives to executors or administrators; they shall therefore on the one hand be compelled to the performance it made against their testator or intestate; and on the other may take advantage of it, if made in his favour. 2 Vent. 249: 1 Ld. Raym. 248.

And it is a general rule, that all those who would be bound by an award may take advantage of it.

Generally speaking, a submission of all matters between the parties, when there are more persons than one, either on one or both sides, is the same as a submission of all matters between the parties, any or either of them. Comyns 328. and therefore on submission by A. and B. on the one side, and C. and D. on the other, the award may be of matters between A. and C. alone, or between A. and B. together, with C. alone, or vice versa; and money may be awarded to be paid accordingly. This rule however may be controlled by the words of the mission, in which it is in this case more particularly requisite to be very exact. See Kyd on Awards 141: 8 Co. 98. a: Hardr. 399: 1 Vern. 259: Com. 547: Rel. Abr. tit. Arbitr. D. 5. and O. 8.

III. THOUGH the courts have at all times manifested a general disposition to give efficacy to awards, yet there are some cases in which they have refused them their protection, because the subjects on which they were made were not the proper objects of such reference.

The only motive which can influence a man to refer any subject of dispute to the decision of an arbitrary judge, is, to have an amicable and easy settlement of something which in its nature is uncertain. An award therefore is of no avail when made of debt on a bond for the payment of a sum certain, whether it be single or with a condition to be void on the payment of a less sum; nor if made of debt for arrears of rent ascertained by a lease; nor of covenant to pay a certain sum of money; Blake's Case, 6 Co. 43, 4; nor of debt on the arrears of an account as formerly taken before auditors in an action of account; 1 Lev. 292. nor of damages recovered by a judgment; Gouldsb. 91, 2. for in all these cases the demand is ascertained. But see Lumley v. Hutson, Rel. Abr. tit. Arbitr. B. 8. and Coxal v. Sharp, 1 Keb. 917; as it seems that when joined with other demands of an uncertain nature, those which are certain may also be submitted; even in the case of a verdict and judgement.

But in general where the party complaining could recover by action only uncertain damages, the subject of complaint may be the object of a reference to arbitration; as any demand not ascertained by the agreement or contract of the parties though the claimant demand a sum certain; as a claim of 5*l.* for different expences in the service of the other party. Sower v. Bradfield, Cro. Eliz. 422. So an action of account may be submitted; for till the account be taken, the sum remains uncertain. Rel. Abr. tit. Arbitr. R. 4.

It is said, and it appears justly, that all kinds of personal wrong, the compensation for which is always uncertain, depending on the verdict of a jury may be submitted to arbitration; where the injury done to the individual, is not considered, by the policy of the state, as merged in the publick crime, which latter can never be the subject of arbitration.

In the case of deeds when no certain duty accrues by the deed alone, but the demand arises from a wrong or default subsequent, together with the deed, as in the case of a bond to perform covenants, or covenant to repair a house, there the demand, being for damages for a breach, may be submitted to award. Blake's Case, 6 Co. 43, 4: Cro. Jac. 99. However in all cases where the demand arises on a deed, the submission ought also to be by deed; because a specialty cannot be answered but by a specialty. Lumley v. Hutson, before quoted.

Much doubt and uncertainty seems anciently to have prevailed on the question, "How far a dispute concerning land could be referred to an arbitrator; and how far, on an actual reference, the parties were bound by his award." But it appears that the real difficulty was how to enforce an award made on a reference of a dispute concerning land; for whenever the submission was by bond, it was almost universally held, that the party who did not reform the award forfeited the bond. Kilway 43, 45.

"The present rule of law therefore is that "Where the parties might by their own act have transferred real property, or exercised any act of ownership with respect to it, they may refer any dispute concerning it to the decision of a third person, who may order the same acts to be done, which the parties themselves might do by their own agreement." Knight v. Dutton, 6 Mod. 231: Trustee v. Ascare, Cro. El. 223: Dy. 183. in marg.

As real property cannot be transferred by the parties themselves without deed, wherever that makes a part of the dispute, the submission as well as the award, [and whatever act, is by the award, directed to be performed by the parties, as to real property,] must also be by deed.

IV. Every one whom the law supposes free, and capable of judging, whatever may be his character for integrity or wisdom, may be an arbitrator or Umpire: because he is appointed by the choice of the parties themselves, and it is their folly if they choose an improper person.

An idiot cannot be an arbitrator; nor a married woman, nor a man attainted of treason or felony. But an unmarried woman may be an arbitratix. Duchess of Suffolk's case, 8 E. 4. 1. B. 37.

It is a general rule of law, founded on the first principles of natural justice, that a man cannot take on himself to be judge in his own cause; but should he be nominated an arbitrator, by or with the consent of the opposite party the objection is waived; and the award shall be valid. Matthew v. Linterton, Comb. 218: 4 Mod. 226: Hicks v. Bennison, Har. 43.

The nomination of the Umpire is either made by the parties themselves, at the time of their submission, or left to the discretion of the arbitrators. Where two arbitrators (as is most frequently the case) have this power, the law provides that the choice shall be fair and impartial, and that it shall not even be left to chance, an election being an act of the will and understanding. 2 Vent. 85.

There is no part of the law relative to awards in which so much uncertainty and confusion appear in the reported cases, as on this respecting the Umpire. The time when the power of the Arbitrators ceases, and that of the Umpire begins; the time when the Umpire may be nominated; and the effect of his nomination have, each in its turn, proved questions of sufficient magnitude to exercise and distract the genius of the lawyers. The time limited for the Umpire to make his umpirage, has sometimes been the same with that limited for the Arbitrators to make their award. It is now however most usual, and certainly more correct to prolong the time beyond that period.

In this case of a prolongation of time, the authority of the Arbitrators is determined, and that of the umpire immediately begins on the expiration of the time specified to be allowed to the Arbitrators. Lumley v. Hutton.

The point on which, on all the forms of submission, the greatest difficulty has been felt, has been to decide whether any conduct of the arbitrators can authorise the Umpire to make his umpirage before the expiration of the time limited for their making their award.

On this head the following seems to be undeniably the clearest and most accurate opinion. If the Arbitrators do in fact make an award within the time allowed to them, that shall be considered as the real award; if they make none, then the umpirage shall take place; and there is here no confusion as to the concurrence of authority with respect to the time. The Umpire has no concurrence absolutely, but only conditionally, if the arbitrators make no award within their time. This applies equally to the case where the Umpire is confined to the same time with the arbitrators, and to that where a further time is given to him. Chase v. Dore, Sir T. Jones 168: see also, Godb. 241: 1 Lev. 174, 285: 1 Ld. Raym. 671: 12 Mol. 512: Lutw. 541, 4: Cro. Car. 263: 1 Mod. 274: Sir T. Raym. 205: 1 Salk. 71.

It is now finally determined that the Arbitrators may nominate an Umpire before they proceed to consider the subject referred to them; and that this is so far from putting an end to their authority, that it is the fairest way of choosing an umpire. 2 Term Rep. 645. And it is in fact not unusual for the parties to make it a condition in the submission that the umpire shall be chosen by the Arbitrators, before they do any other act. They may also, when a further day is given to the Umpire, and the choice left to them in general terms, choose him at any time after the expiration of their own time, provided it be before the time limited for him. 3 Keb. 387: Freem. 378: 2 Mod. 169.

From the opinion that the arbitrators having once elected an Umpire had executed their authority, it has been thought to follow as a necessary consequence, that if they elected one who refused to undertake the business they could not elect another. This opinion has been supported by two Chief Justices, but over-ruled (surely with propriety) by determinations of the Court. 3 Lev. 263: 2 Vent. 113: Palm. 289: 2 Saund. 129: 1 Salk. 70: 1 Ld. Raym. 222: 12 Mod. 120.

When the person to whom the parties have agreed to refer the matters in dispute between them has consented to undertake the office, he ought to appoint a time and place for examining the matter, and to give notice of such appointment to the parties or to their attorneys; if the submission be by rule of reference at nisi prius, the witnesses should be sworn at the bar of the court, or afterwards, (if neglected) before a judge.

The parties must attend the arbitrators, according to the appointment, either in person or by attorney, with their witnesses and documents. The arbitrators may also, if they think proper, examine the parties themselves, and call for any other information.

Where a time is limited for making the award, it cannot be made after that time, unless it be prolonged. When the submission is by the mere act of the parties, that prolongation may be made by their mutual consent; otherwise a rule of court is necessary for the purpose.

The law has secured each of the parties against the voluntary procrastination of the other, by permitting the arbitrator on due notice given to proceed without his attendance. Waller v. King, 9 Mod. 63: 2 Eq. Ab. 92. c. 3; or the willing party may press his opponent by rule of court to attend the arbitrator, who on failure may make his award without such attendance. Hesley v. Hesley, in Scac. Mich. 1789.

It has been formerly held that an Umpire cannot proceed on the report of the arbitrators, but must hear the whole matter anew; but there seems to be no good reason son why the Umpire, if he think proper, may not take those points on which the arbitrators agree to be as they report them. The nature of his duty is only to make a final determination on the whole subject of dispute, where the arbitrators cannot do it, and by adopting their opinion as far as they agree, and incorporating it with his own on the other points, he effectually makes that final determination. And in this manner Umpires do usually act: and they are justified in so doing unless requested to re-examine the witnesses. 4 Term Rep. 589.

Though the words in the submission which regulate the appointment of an Umpire, be not perfectly correct; but might from the grammatical order seem to imply that the Arbitrators and the Umpire, should all join together to make an award, yet an award made by the arbitrators without the participation of the umpire, will be considered as satisfying the terms of the submission. Rel. Abr. tit. Arbitr. p. 6.—And on the other hand, an umpirage made by the umpire jointly with the arbitrators is good; their approbation, shewn by joining with him, being mere surplusage, does not render the instrument purporting to be his umpirage in any degree less the act of his judgment. Soulby v. Hodgson, 2 Blackst. 453.

Unless it be expressly provided in the submission, that a less number than all the arbitrators named may make the award, the concurrence of all is necessary; and where such a proviso is made, all must be present, unless those who do not attend had proper and sufficient notice, and are wilfully absent. Barnes 57.

As to the necessity imposed on the arbitrators or umpire of giving notice of their award, the following are the clearest determinations. If the award be made before the day limited in the submission, the parties shall not be bound by any thing awarded to be done before that day, unless they have notice; but they must take notice at their peril of any thing ordered at the day. 8 E. 4: 1: Br. 37: Kelway 175: see Cro. El. 97; Cro. Car. 132, 3.

It has long been the practice to guard against the consequences of the want of notice, by inserting a proviso in the condition of the arbitration-bond not only that the award shall be made, but that it shall be delivered to the parties by a certain day; and then the bond will not be forfeited by non performance, unless the party not performing had notice; and the award ought to be delivered to all the persons who are parties on either side. Hungate's Case, 5 Co. 103: Cro. El. 885: Mo. 642.

The object of every reference is a final and certain determination of the controversies referred. A reservation of any point for the future decision of the arbitrator, or of a power to alter the award, is inconsistent with that object; and therefore it is established as a general rule that such a reservation is void: but the reservation of a mere ministerial act, as the measuring of land, the calculation of interest at a rate settled, &c. does not vitiate the award. 12 Mod. 139: 2 Ro. Rep. 189, 214, 215: Palm. 110, 146: Cro. Jac. 315: Hob. 218: Lutw. 550: Hardw. 43.

The submission to the decision of an individual, arises from the confidence which the parties repose in his integrity and skill; and is merely personal to him; it is therefore inconsistent that the arbitrators or umpire should delegate any part of their authority to another; and such delegation is absolutely void. But it was determined in the case of Lingood v. Eade, 2 Atk. 501, (515.) that arbitrators where they award the substance of things to be done, may refer it to another to settle the manner in which it shall be put in execution.

Since the introduction of references at nisi prius, there can be no question, but the arbitrator has a jurisdiction over the costs of the action, as well as over the subject of the action itself; unless some particular provision is made to the contrary by the form of the submission. Instead of ascertaining the costs, the arbitrator may refer them to be taxed by the proper officer of the court, but to no one else. 2 Atk. 504, (519): 1 Salk. 75: 6 Mod. 195: Hardw. 181: Barnes 56, 8: 1 Sid. 358: Str. 737, 1035: Com. 330. When it is agreed that costs shall abide the event, it means the legal event. See 3 Term Rep. 139. And also as to awarding the costs of the arbitration, 2 Term Rep. 645. And the arbitrators may award damages to either party, though in point of law there was no cause of action. 2 Vent. 243. If the arbitrator takes no notice of the costs, but awards mutual releases, it shall be presumed to be meant that each party shall pay his own costs. See Kyd, 143.

V. EVERY AWARD should be consistent with the terms of the submission; the whole authority of the arbitrators being derived from thence.—Therefore,

1 The Award must not extend to any matter not comprehended in the submission: thus if the submission be confined to a particular subject of dispute, while there are other things in controversy between the parties, an award which extends to any of these other things is void as far as it respects them. 2 Mod. 309.

If two submit to the award of a third person all demands between them; without more; the word, demands, implies all matters between them concerning the lands of both parties which are the subjects of variance. 1 Ld. Raym. 115: Kelw. 99.

If the submission be, “of all causes of action, suits, debts, reckonings, accounts, sums of money, claims and demands,” an award, “to release all bonds, specialties, judgments, executions and extents,” is within the submission; for as all debts are submitted, of course a release may be awarded of the securities for them. 2 Saund. 190.

Where the submission is, “of all debts, trespasses and injuries,” an award “to release all actions, debts, duties and demands,” does not exceed the submission; the word injuries comprehending demands. 3 Bull. 312.

The rule however is not so strictly interpreted as to extend to every thing literally beyond the submission; if the award be of any thing depending on the principal, it is good. Rel. Arb. B. 2: C. 4, 5, 6.

Thus if the submission be of all trespasses, and the award be, “that one shall pay to the other 10*l.* and that he shall enter into a bond for the sum;” this is good, because it only renders the award more effectual. Kyd. 96.

In like manner if it can reasonably be presumed that nothing is in reality awarded beyond the submission it has in general been supported. 10 Co. 131, 2: Jenk. 264: Rel. Arb. 21: see 6 Mod. 232.

On the submission of a particular difference when there are other matters in controversy, though an award of a general release is void; yet the proof of such other disputes existing is thrown on the party objecting. 2 Mod.

AWARD V. 2, 3.

309: 1 Sid. 154: Wilde Hob. 190. (See post. Div. 3. of this head).

If in a similar case the arbitrators award "that all suits shall cease," this shall be confined to suits relating to the subject of the submission, and void only for the residue. 1 Ro. R.p. 362: 2 Ro. Rep. 192: Cro. Jac. 661.

On a dispute between a parson and one of his parishioners, whether the tithes should be paid in kind or not; the arbitrator awarded that the parson should have 7*l.* for the tithes due before the submission, and that the parishioner should pay 4*l.* annually for the future tithes. This was held to be a good award, because the submission comprehended a question concerning the future rights. Rel. Arb. D. 8. But an award made on the 23d of June, ordering so much rent to be paid, which by the award itself appeared not to be due till the 24th, was held bad. 10 Mol 204.

If partners refer all matters in difference between them, the arbitrators may dissolve the partnership. 1 Black. Rep. 475.

Where the submission is by reference at non prius, the order in which the words are placed in the rule of reference, gives no material distinction with respect to the power of the arbitrator. If the reference be "of all matters in dispute in the cause between the parties," the power of the arbitrator is confined solely to the matters in dispute in that suit. If it be "of all matters in difference between the parties in the suit," his power is not confined to the subject of that particular cause, but extends to every matter in dispute between them. 2 Black. 1118: 2 Term Rep. 644, 5: 3 Term Rep. 626.

As an award of a thing out of the submission cannot be enforced by an action at law, so neither shall a man by such an award be precluded from claiming his right in equity. Finch. Rep. 141.

2. The award should not extend to any who is a stranger (that is, not a party) to the submission. Thus if two submit to arbitration concerning the title to certain lands, and the arbitrators award that all controversies touching the land shall cease; and that one of the parties, his wife and son, his heir apparent, by his procurement, shall make to the other such assurance of the land as the other shall require, this is void; because the wife and son are strangers to the submission. Rel. Arb. N. 9: and see Samon's Ca. 5 Rep. 77 b.

Lord Coke (10 Rep. 131 b.) says, that an award is void, which directs money to be paid by one of the parties to a third person not included in the submission; but this must be understood to hold good only when such payment can be of no benefit to the other party; for an award that one of the parties shall pay so much to the creditor of the other, in discharge of a debt, is unquestionably good. 1 Ld. Raym. 123: Rel. Arb. E. 6. F. 8.

And in general a distinction is taken between the case of an act awarded to be done by a stranger, and that of an act awarded to be done to him, by a party to the submission: in the latter case the award is said to be good; and if the stranger will not accept the money awarded to be paid to him the party's obligation is saved. 3 Leon. 62.

So where a stranger is only an instrument to the performance of the award, no objection shall be allowed on that account: as if it be, that one of the parties shall surrender his copyhold into the hands of two tenants of the mansion who shall present the surrender; this award is good. Rel. Arbitr. E. 7, 8: 1 Keb. 569: and see Division 4 of this head.

If the persons comprehended in the award were in contemplation of the submission, though they were not directly parties to it, yet the award is good. Lutw. 530, 571: 1 Mar. 78: Comyns 183: Rel. Arb. B. 18.

An award shall not affect the rights of persons not parties to the submission. Finch. 180, 4. and see Id. 147.

3. The award ought not to be of part only of the things submitted. This however must be understood with a considerable degree of limitation; for though the words of the submission be more comprehensive than those of the award, yet if it do not appear that any thing else was in dispute between the parties, beside what is comprehended in the award, it will be good. 8 Co. 98: Rel. Arb. L. 5.

If a submission be "of all the premises or of any part of them," in this case the arbitrator may undoubtedly make an award of part only. Rel. Arb. L. 6.

If an award be made of all matters except a bond; and of this it be awarded that it shall stand, the award is good; for it shall be presumed there was no cause to discharge the bond. Cro. Jac. 277, 400: Bridg. 91.

If arbitrators award for one thing, and say that they will not meddle with the rest, all is void; because they have not pursued their authority. Cro. El. 858: see Dy. 216, 217.

Where a submission is of certain matters specifically named, with a provisional clause "so that the award be made of and upon the premises," the arbitrator ought to make his award of all, otherwise it will be void. 8 Co. 98: Goldsb. 125: Rel. Arbitr. L. 9.

But where the submission is general of all matters in difference between the parties; though there should happen to be many subjects of controversy between them, if only one be signified to the arbitrator, he may make his award of that: he is, in the language of Lord Coke, in the place of a judge, and his office is to determine according to what is alledged and proved. It is the business of the parties grieved, who know their own particular grievances, to signify their causes of controversy to the arbitrator; for he is a stranger, and cannot know any thing of their disputes but what is laid before him. 8 Co. 98 b: 1 Brownl. 63: 2 Brownl. 309.

In the case of such a general submission, if an award concerning one thing only be made, it shall be presumed (till the contrary be shewn by the party objecting) that nothing else was referred. Cro. Jac. 200, 355: 1 Burr. 274 et seq. But the arbitrators ought to decide on all matters laid before them, or they cannot do complete justice. And it is said that on a reference by rule of a court of equity, the award ought to comprehend all the matters referred. 1 C. C. 87, 186.

It is however no valid objection to an award that the arbitrator had notice of a certain demand, and that he made no award of that, if in other respects the award be good; as, though the sum in question may not be mentioned in the award, the arbitrator may have shewn his opinion that the demand was unfounded; as, by ordering general releases, &c. See 1 Saund. 32.

An award of one particular thing for the ending of an hundred matters in difference is sufficient, provided it concludes to them all. 1 Keb. 738: 1 Lev. 132, 3.

4. If an award be to do any thing which is against law, it is void, and the parties are not bound to perform it. Rol. Arbitr. G: 1 Sid. 12: 2 Cent. 243. So also is an award of a thing which is not physically or morally possible, or in the power of the party to perform; as that he shall deliver up a deed which is in the custody or power of a person, over whom he has no controul. 12 Mod. 585: and see Rol. tit. Arbitr. And an award that the defendant shall be bound with sureties such as the plaintiff shall approve, is void; for it may be impossible to force the approbation of the plaintiff. 3 Mod. 272, 3. But in this case the party should enter into a bond himself and tender it to the plaintiff.

Where an award is that one of the parties shall procure a stranger to do a thing, there is a distinction taken between the case where he has no power over the stranger, to compel him, and where he has power either by the common law or by bill in equity. In the former case the award is void, for so much as concerns the stranger. In the latter it is good. Rol. Arbitr. F. 1: 248 n. 11: March. 18: 1 Mod. 9.—(See ante Division 2.)

Neither must an award be to do a thing unreasonable; nor by the performance of which the party awarded to do the acts may subject himself to an action from another. Rol. Arbitr. E. 2, 3; F. 10: 2 Bull. 39: 1 Keb. 92: 1 Ro. Rep. 6: Cro. Car. 226: 3 Lev. 153.

What shall or shall not be unreasonable, is however matter of construction in which the cases differ considerably. See Rol. Arb. B. 12; J. 4. 5: 2 Mod. 304.

An award must not be of a thing which is merely negatory, without any advantage to the parties. Rol. Arb. J. 10—15. And if a man and a woman submit to arbitration, and it be awarded that they shall intermarry, this is said not to be binding (Id. ib.) for one reason among others, that it cannot be presumed to be advantageous to them. Mutual releases are advantageous, and therefore an award of them is good. Freem. 51.

5. The Award must be certain and final. As the intention of the parties in submitting their disputes to arbitration, is to have something ascertained, which was uncertain before, it is a positive rule that the award ought to be so plainly express, that the parties may certainly know what it is they are ordered to do. 5 Co. 77 b: 78 a.

On the construction of certainty and uncertainty the cases are multifarious; and it may be observed, that they principally depend on such circumstances as are peculiar to each case, and very seldom form any general precedent. "The rule therefore serves better to regulate the conduct of arbitrators, than the numerous exceptions: as it is the interest of the party against whom the award is made to be ingenious in finding out objections, an award cannot be too particular or precise in laying down what is to be done by the parties, and the manner, time and place of their doing it. Though the two latter have been deemed immaterial (Stra. 905,) yet it is safest to specify them.

Awards are now so liberally construed, that trifling objections are not suffered to prevail against the manifest intent of the parties. See 1 Burr. 277. and post Division 6. In favour of the equitable jurisdiction of the arbitrators, if that, to which the objection of uncertainty is made, can be ascertained either by the context of the award, or from the nature of, and circumstances attendant on the thing awarded, or by a manifest reference to something connected with it, the objection shall not prevail. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1076: 12 Mod. 585: Lutw. 545: Stra. 903. Where there is no date to the award, it shall be taken as dated from the day of the delivery which may be ascertained by averment; and all other uncertainties may be helped by proper averments in pleading. 1 Ld. Raym. 245, 672: Cro. Eliz. 676: Sty. 28: 2 Saund. 252.

As an award must be certain, so also must it be final; (at the time of making it; see 1 Sid. 59: Lut. 51: Comb. 456); in order to prevent any future litigation on the subject of the submission.

On this principle, an award that each party shall be non-suited in the action which he has brought against the other, is not good; because (amongst other reasons) a nonsuit does not bar them from bringing a new action: but an award that a party shall discontinue his action, or enter a retraxit, is good. Godb. 276: Rol. Arbitr. F. 7.

An award—that all suits shall cease—or, that a bill in chancery shall be dismissed—or, that a party shall not commence or prosecute a suit—is final; for it shall be taken to mean, that the debts and actions shall cease forever; that alone being a substantial performance of the award. 6 Mod. 33, 232: 2 Ld. Raym. 961, 4: 1 Salk. 74, 5: Rol. Arb. O. 7. But see 2 Stra. 1024.

Lastly the Award must be mutual; not giving an advantage to one party without an equivalent to the other.

The principal requisite, however, to form that mutuality, about which so much is said in all the cases usually classed under this rule, is nothing more than that the thing awarded to be done should be a final discharge, and satisfaction of all debts and claims by the party in whose favour the award is made, against the other, for the matters submitted; and therefore the present rule amounts to nothing more than a different form of expression of that which requires that an award should be final. See Comb. 439: 1 Ld. Raym. 246: Cro. Eliz. 904: Comyns 328.

6. The rules which at present govern the construction of awards are, that they shall be interpreted, as deeds, according to the intention of the arbitrators. That they shall not be taken strictly, but liberally, according to the intent of the parties submitting, and according to the power given to the arbitrators. 1 Burr. 277: 2 Atk. 504 (519)—That all actions mentioned in the award, shall be construed to mean, all actions over which the arbitrators have power by the submission—That if there be any contradiction in the words of an award, so that the one part cannot stand consistently with the other, the first part shall stand and the latter be rejected; but that if the latter be only an explanation of the former, both parts shall stand. Palm. 108: 3 Bull. 66, 7.—And that where the words of an award have any ambiguity in them, they are always to be construed in such a manner as to give effect to the award. 6 Mod. 35.

Much unnecessary difficulty occurs in all the old reports on the construction that ought to be put on the award of a Release; but it is now clearly settled, that an award of releases up to the time of making the award, is not altogether void; but that it shall be construed so as to support the award; and that for two reasons. 1st. That it shall be presumed that no difference has arisen since the time of the submission, unless it be specially shewn that there there has: ad. That a release to the time of the submission is a good performance of an award, ordering a release to the time of the award; not because the meaning of the arbitrators is so, but because their meaning must be controuled so far as it is void, by construction of law. 10 Mod. 201; 6 Mod. 43; 5: 2 Ld. Raym. 964, 5: 1 Ld. Raym. 116. See 12 Mod. 8, 116, 589: Godb. 164, 5: 2 Keb. 431: 1 Sid. 365.

Formerly, if one part of an award was void, the whole was considered so: now however, it is the rule of the courts, in many cases, to enforce the performance of that; which had it stood by itself, would have been good, notwithstanding another part may be bad. 12 Mod. 534: but if that part of the award, which is void, be so connected with the rest, as to affect the justice of the case between the parties, the award is void for the whole. Cro. Jac. 584.

When, from the tenor of the award, it appears that the arbitrator has intended that his award should be mutual, awarding something in favour of one of the parties as an equivalent for what he has awarded in favour of the other; if then that which is awarded on the one side, be void, so that performance of it cannot be enforced, the award is void for the whole, because that mutuality, which the arbitrator intended, cannot be preserved. Yel. 98: Brown. 92: Roll. Arb. K. 15: Cro. Jac. 577, 8.

If one entire act awarded to be done on one side, comprehend several things, for some of which it would be good, and for others not, the award is bad for the whole, because the act cannot be divided. Cro. Jac. 639.

When it appears clearly that both parties have the full effect of what was intended them by the arbitrator, though something be awarded which is void; yet the award shall stand for the rest. 1 Ld. Raym. 114: Lutw. 545: and see 12 Mod. 588.

An award ought regularly to be made in writing, signed and sealed by the arbitrators, and the execution properly witnessed: It may however be made by parol, if it is so expressly provided in the submission.

7. It is not in all cases absolutely necessary that performance should be exactly according to the words of the award; if it be substantively and effectually the same, it is sufficient. 3 Bull. 67. And if the party, in whose favour the award is made, accept of a performance differing in circumstances from the exact letter of the award, that is sufficient; for consensus tollit errorem. 3 Bull. 67.

Where the concurrence and presence of both parties is not absolutely necessary to the performance, each ought to perform his part without request from the other, 1 Ld. Raym. 233, 4. and see Roll. Arb. Z. 6.—If an award order that the defendant shall re-assign to the plaintiff, certain mortgaged premises, it will be a breach if he do not re-assign without request. 1 Ld. Raym. 234.

If the award be to pay at, on or before a particular day, payment before the day is equivalent to payment on the day. 3 Keb. 675, 6.

A considerable number of years having elapsed since the making of the award, is no objection to the parties being called upon to perform it. Finch. Rep. 384: nor can the statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1. c. 16. § 3) be pleaded in bar. 2 Saund. 64.

On an award, that one party shall enter into a security for money, (note, bond, &c.) the giving the security is a performance of the award; and on non-payment, the person to whom it is given can only proceed against the other on that security, and not on the submission or arbitration bond. Bendl. 15: Str. 903, 1082.

VI. THE REMEDY to compel performance of an award is various, according to the various forms of the submission.

Though the submission be verbal, an action may be maintained on the award, whether it be for the payment of money, or for the performance of a collateral act. 1 Ld. Raym. 122: and see ante Division 1.

Where the award is either verbal, or in writing, for the payment of money, and made on a submission, either by parol or by deed, the action on the award may be an action of debt: it may also be an action of assumpsit; and in all other cases on a parol submission, an assumpsit is the only species of action that can be maintained.

1 Leon. 72: Cro. Jac. 354.

In all actions on the award, it must necessarily be shewn, in direct unequivocal terms, that the parties submitted; before the award can be properly introduced; 2 Str. 923. the submission too must be so stated as to correspond with the award, and to support it. 2 Lev. 235: 2 Show. 61.

When the action is on a mutual assumpsit, to pay a certain sum on request, if the defendant should not stand to the award; an actual request to pay that sum, before the action brought, must be positively stated.

1 Saund. 33: 2 Keb. 126.

When the submission is by bond, if the award be for payment of money, an action of debt on the award lies, as well as an action on the bond; but the latter is the action most usually brought; in this the order of pleading commonly observed is, that the plaintiff declares on the bond, as in ordinary cases of action on a bond; the defendant then prays oyer of the condition, which being set forth, he pleads that the arbitrators or the umpire made no award; then the plaintiff replies, not barely alledging that they did, but setting forth the award at large, and assigning the breach by the defendant: (as to which see post. and Winch 121: Yelv. 24, 78, 153: 1 Ld. Raym. 114, 123: 2 Vent. 221: 3 Lev. 293:) and on that the whole question arises as on an original declaration.—The defendant then either rejoins, that they made “no such award,” (Jenk. 116: Cro. Jac. 207: Palm. 511.) on which the plaintiff takes issue—or, he demurs, and the plaintiff joins in demurrer. Vid. Str. 923: Freem. 410, 415: 1 Sid. 370: 3 Burr. 1729, 30: 5 E. 4. 108: Brooke pl. 33: Cro. Eliz. 838.

Every thing necessary to shew that the award was made according to the terms of the submission, must be stated by the plaintiff. Lutw. 536: 2 Ld. Raym. 989, 1076. Where also by the terms of the award, performance on the part of the plaintiff, is a condition precedent to that on the part of the defendant; there the plaintiff must shew that he has done every thing necessary to entitle him to call on the opposite party.—But tender by the plaintiff, and refusal by the defendant, will be sufficient, unless the thing to be done by the plaintiff can be done without the concurrence of the other. Hurd. 43, 44.

A material variance between the real award and that set forth in the pleadings, will be fatal to the plaintiff; and and if on the trial the jury doubt whether the variance is material or not, a special verdict may be taken for the opinion of the court. 1 Salk. 72: 1 Ld. Raym. 745. S. C.: 1 Burr. 278.

In an action on the award, the defendant may plead 'that he did not submit;' but in an action on the bond such a plea is not good. 1 Sid. 290: 2 Str. 923.

More exactness is required in setting forth a written than a verbal award—in the former nothing must be alleged by inducement. 2 Vent. 242. The breach must also be assigned, with such precision, as to shew that the award was made of the thing in which the breach was alleged. 1 Roll. Rep. 8: Cro. Jac. 339: 2 Bull. 93. and in an action on the assumption, to perform the award, the plaintiff may assign several breaches. Jenk. 264, and see Tyle. 35. But in an action on the arbitration bond, where several things are ordered to be done by the defendants, it is not necessary to assign breaches of every matter, because the breach of any one is a forfeiture of the penalty of the bond; and when the plaintiff has once recovered, then he can never maintain another action on the same bond, to recover the penalty again on a second breach. 2 Will. 276, 9. and see Ld. 293. S. P.

If the defendant set forth the award, and alleged the performance generally, and then on a breach being assigned in the replication, he rejoin and shew a special performance, this will be a departure. 1 Ld. Raym. 234.

It has several times happened, that the defendant by setting forth an award, partially, has imposed considerable difficulty on the plaintiff how to answer him. (See 1 Keb. 568: 1 Saund. 326: 3 Lev. 165: Lutw. 525). In this case if the plaintiff demand oyer of the award, and have it set forth at full length, assigning a breach in the same manner as if the defendant had pleaded no award, he will be secure against any objection from the manner of pleading. Lutw. 451: and see Godb. 255: 1 Roll. Rep. 6.

If from the default of the defendant no award has been made within the time limited, the plaintiff may, to the plea of no award, reply that default of the defendant. See 8 Co. 81.—On a submission by bond, providing that the award shall be made within a limited time, though that time is enlarged by mutual consent, and the award made within the enlarged time, an action cannot be maintained on the bond to recover the penalty for non-performance. 3 Term Rep. 529. n.—And as to such enlargement of time, see 2 Term Rep. 643, 4: 3 Term Rep. 601.

On the practice obtaining, of references at Nisi Prius, performance of the award was consequently enforced by means of an attachment, and the following is the present course of proceeding to obtain that remedy.—The award must be tendered to the party bound to perform it, and on his refusal to accept it, affidavit must be made of the due execution of the award, and of such tender and refusal; and on that, application made to the court to make the order of Nisi Prius a rule of court; a copy of this rule must be personally served on the party, and if he still refuse to accept the award, an affidavit must be made of such service and refusal; on which the court will grant an attachment of course. 1 Crompt. Pract. 264. When the award is accepted, but the money being demanded is not paid, an affidavit must be made of such refusal, and of the due execution of the award. 2 Black. Rep. 990, 1.—Where there is any dispute as to the proper performance of an award, it is discretionary in the court to grant or refuse an attachment. 1 Str. 695: 1 Burr. 278.

When an award is not for the payment of money, but for the performance of any collateral act, it may sometimes be enforced by a bill in equity, on which the court will decree a specific performance. See 1 Atk. 74, (62): 1 Eq. Ab. 51: 1 C. R. 46: 3 C. R. 20: 2 Vern. 24: 3 P. Wms. 187, 9, 190. But though a court of equity may assist a plaintiff to procure the execution of an award, it will not compel a defendant to discover a breach by which he may charge himself with the penalty of a submission bond. Bishop v. Bishop, 1 C. R. See the next Division.

VII. RELIEF may be obtained against an award, made contrary to the prescribed rules of law, when the award is put in suit. But when the submission is by the mere act of the parties, the defendant is not permitted to impeach the conduct of the arbitrators, at law; so as to make it a defence to an action on the award or submission bond. See 1 Saund. 327: 2 Will. 149. In such case the only relief is in equity. 2 Vern. 315. But a court of equity will not interfere to set aside an award, where the submission is voluntary, (or by order of Nisi Prius, 1 C. C. 140: 1 Vern. 157), except for corruption or improper conduct in the arbitrators: or where the award appears on the face of it to be contrary to the rules of equity; as, to the prejudice of an infant, Se. 146. C. 276, 279, 280: 3 Atk. 529. (496): 2 Eq. Ab. 63, 4: 3 C. R. 49: Ambl. 245.

In bills to have an award set aside for corruption or partiality, it is usual to make the arbitrators defendants; together with the party in whose favour the award is made. Finch. Rep. 141: 3 Atk. 644, 397. The arbitrators may plead the award in bar; but they must shew themselves impartial, or the court will make them pay costs. 2 Atk. 396, (412).

Where the submission is by order of Nisi Prius, or under the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. a court of equity will not entertain a bill to relieve against an award for corruption or partiality, unless the court of law has not afforded that relief, on application; or the time for complaining at law under the statute is elapsed. 2 Atk. 155, (162), 396, (412): 2 Vern. 316, 7: See Bunb. 265.

By the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15. It is enacted, That "any arbitration or umpirage, procured by corruption, or undue means, shall be void; and be accordingly set aside by any court of law or equity, so as complaint be made to the court, where the rule for submission is made, before the last day of the next term after such arbitration made and published to the parties." See 1 Str. 301: 2 Burr. 701: Barnes 55, 7. But it seems that a court of equity may relieve, on manifest grounds, after the time required, by the act, for complaint at law, though no such complaint is made at all in the common law courts. Bunb. 265: 1 Barn. K. B. 75, 152.

Where the submission is by reference at Nisi Prius, there is no time limited for making an application to set aside an award for any cause. 2 Atk. 155, (162): Sir. 301: 2 Burr. 701.—When the submission is according to the statute, no application can be made to have the award set aside till the submission be actually made a rule of court, which may be either before or after making the award. 1 Str. 301: 2 Vern. 317: 2 Str. 1178: 3 P. Wms. 362.

A W A R D, VIII.

The most frequent subject of complaint against an award, arises from some imputed misconduct of the arbitrators, and when the complaint is made out, it is generally successful: as if one of the arbitrators unjustly exclude the rest from the award; or hold private meetings with one of the parties. 2 Vern. 515: or appoint an umpire by lot. Id. 485: or manifest any other undue partiality. Id. 101, 251: 3 P. Wms. 262: 2 Ven. 216, 8: 1 Fen. 317.

If it appear that the arbitrators went on a plain mistake, either as to the law or in a point of fact, that is an error appearing on the face of the award, and sufficient to set it aside. 2 Vern. 705.—So if the arbitrators appear to have an interest in the subject of reference. 2 Vern. 251. So also where any circumstance is suppressed or concealed from either of the arbitrators, and the arbitrator declares that had he known the circumstance, he would have made a different award. 1 Atk. 77, (64).

Where the submission is under the statute, or by reference at Nisi Prius, the court will on some occasions send back the award to be re-considered, on suggestion that the arbitrator had not sufficient materials before him, and perhaps too to rectify any trifling or apparent mistake; but such application must be made in the former case within the time prescribed by the statute. 2 Term Rep. 781.

VIII. AN AWARD may be pleaded in bar to every action brought, for a cause or complaint which had been previously referred to the arbitrators, on which the award was made. See 4 Term Rep. 146.

The award thus pleaded, must have all the qualities necessary to constitute a good award; and must be such, if it be pleaded without performance, that the plaintiff may have a remedy to compel performance: but if performance be alleged, as it may be (Sec. 1 Ro. Rep. 7, 8: Cro. Jac. 339: 2 Bull. 93; Roll. Arbitr. f. 2: Al. 86: 3 Leon. 62:) even a void award may frequently be a good bar. An award however which is in itself uncertain, and cannot be ascertained by averment, cannot be pleaded in bar. 2 Saund. 292; 2 Keb. 736.

The cases which have determined an award not to be pleadable in bar, where it does not create a new duty, seem unreconcilable to the present state of the law on the subject—particularly as they allow that an action may be maintained on the submission, whether that is by bond or otherwise. 1 Ld. Raym. 248: 12 Mod. 130: Comb. 445: 1 Salk. 69: Lutw. 56, 7.

An award however which does not extend to the whole of the thing demanded, is reasonably not a good plea to an action on the demand. Al. 5: 1 Ld. Raym. 612. See Lutw. 51. And in order to make an award a good plea, it must appear that both parties were equally bound by it.

Where the plaintiff lays several counts in his declaration, and the award from the terms of it, can only be a bar to one of them; if in reality they are all for the same cause, the best way of pleading seems to be, to plead the award to that count to which it is answerable in terms; and the general issue to the rest. Kyd. 245.

There were antiently some distinctions in the manner of pleading an award, with respect to the necessity of alleging performance of the thing awarded, which are not now essential, for since it has been held that an action will lie on the mere submission, it is in no case necessary for the defendant in pleading an award in bar of an action, to allege performance of the thing awarded, unless where the award is void, and consequently the plaintiff could not enforce it. 1 Ld. Raym. 122.

FORM OF AN AWARD; ON A SUBMISSION.

TO all people to whom this present writing indented of Award shall come, greeting. Whereas there are several accounts depending, and divers controversies and disputes have lately arisen between A. B. of, &c. Gent. and C. D. of, &c. all which controversies and disputes are chiefly touching and concerning, &c. And Whereas, for the putting an end to the said differences and disputes, they the said A. B. and C. D. by their several hands or obligations bearing date, &c. are become bound each to the other of them in the penal sum of, &c. to stand to and abide the award and final determination of us E. F. G. H. &c. so as the said award be made in writing, and ready to be delivered to the parties in difference on or before, &c. next, as by the said obligations, and the condition thereof may appear. Now Know ye, That we the said Arbitrators, whose names are hereunto subscribed, and seals affixed, taking upon us the burthen of the said award, and having fully examined and duly considered the proofs and allegations of both the said parties, do, for the settling amity and friendship between them, make and publish this our award, by and between the said parties, in manner following, that is to say; First, We do award and order, that all actions, suits, quarrels and controversies whatsoever bad, moved, arisen or depending between the said parties in law or equity, for any manner of cause whatsoever, touching the said, &c. to the day of the date hereof, shall cease and be no further prosecuted, and that each of the said parties shall pay and bear his own costs and charges, in any wise relating to or concerning the said premises. And we do also award and order that the said A. B. shall pay, or cause to be paid to the said C. D. the sum of, &c. within the space of, &c. And also at his own costs and charges do, &c. And we do award and order that, &c. And lastly, we do award and order that the said A. B. and C. D. on payment of the money abovementioned, shall in due form of law release each to the other of them general releases, sufficient for the releasing by each to the other of them his executors and administrators, of all actions, suits, arrests, quarrels, controversies and demands whatsoever touching or concerning the premises aforesaid, or any matter or thing thereunto relating, from the beginning of the world until the day of, &c. last, In witness, &c.

THE READER is thus presented with a complete abridgment of the law on this subject. Were it accurately attended to, and were the arbitrators uninfluenced by motives of partiality, arbitration would be a very desirable way to put an end to many suits, instead of affording grounds of new proceedings, as they now too frequently do.—As it is, the subjects most proper for arbitration seem to be (in the words of the author, to whom we have confessed ourselves so much indebted on this subject) “Long and intricate accounts”—Disputes of so trifling a nature, that it is of little importance to the parties in whose favour the decision may be given, provided at all events there be a decision—and—questions on which the evidence is so uncertain, that it is much better to have a decision whether right or wrong, than that the parties should be involved in continual litigation.”

BAIL,

BAIL I.

BAIL, ballium, from the Fr. bailler, which comes of the Greek βαλλω, and signifies to deliver into hands.] Is used in our common law for the freeing or setting at liberty of one arrested or imprisoned upon any action, either civil or criminal, on surety taken for his appearance at a day and place certain. Bract. lib. 3. tract 2. cap. 8. The reason why it is called bail, is because by this means the party restrained is delivered into the hands of those that bind themselves for his forth-coming, in order to a safe keeping or protection from prison: and the end of bail is to satisfy the condemnation and costs, or render the defendant to prison.

With respect to bail in civil cases it is to be observed, that there is both common and special bail: common bail is in actions of small concernment, being called common, because any sureties in that case are taken; whereas in causes of greater weight, and value, special bail or surety must be taken, and they according to the value. 4 Inst. 179. See tit. Appearance.

By stat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 9, Sheriffs, &c. are to let to bail persons by them arrested by force of any writ, in any personal action, &c. upon reasonable sureties, having sufficient within the county to keep their days in such place, &c. as the writs require.

Bail and mainprize are often used promiscuously in our law books, as signifying one and the same thing, and agree in this notion, that they save a man from imprisonment in the common gaol; his friends undertaking for him before certain persons for that purpose authorized, that he shall appear at a certain day, and answer whatever shall be objected to him, in a legal way. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15, § 29; 4 Inst. 180. The chief difference is, that a man's mainperners are barely his sureties, and cannot imprison him themselves to secure his appearance, as his bail may, who are looked upon as his gaolers, to whose custody he is committed, and therefore may take him upon a Sunday, and confine until the next day, and then render him. 6 Mod. 231; Ld. Raym. 706; 12 Mod. 275.

Special bail, are two or more persons who undertake generally or in a sum certain, that if the defendant be convicted, he shall satisfy the plaintiff, or render himself to the custody of the marshal; generally there are but two persons who become bail for a defendant.

Where the defendant has been arrested or discharged out of custody, upon giving a bail-bond to the sheriff, he must at the return of the writ, to discharge such bond, appear thereto, namely, by putting in special bail, or, as it is termed, bail above, so called, in contradistinction to the sheriff's bail, or bail below; nor can he render himself in discharge of such bond, without first putting in bail above. 5 Burr. 2683.

By rule M. 1654, no attorney shall be bail for a defendant in any action; nor his clerk. Corup. 228 n: Vide Dougl. Rep. 466, that an attorney may be admitted as bail in a criminal case.

No sheriff's officer, bailiff, or other persons concerned in the execution of process, shall be permitted to be bail in any action or suit depending in K. B. nor persons outlawed after judgment. R. M. 14 Geo. 2. The keeper of the Poultry Compter was rejected. Dougl. 466.

less by order of court, and the process is marked for special bail: nor is it required in actions of account, or of covenant, except it be to pay money; nor against heirs or executors, &c. for the debt of the testator, unless they have wasted the testator's goods. 1 Davy. Abr. 681.

If baron and feme are sued, the husband must put in bail for both, but if the husband does not appear upon the arrest, the wife must file common bail before she can be discharged; for otherwise the plaintiff could not proceed to obtain judgment. Goldf. 127; Cro. Eliz. 370; Cro. Jac. 445; Style 475; 1 Mod. 8; 6 Mod. 17, 105.

A feme covert was discharged out of custody, because she was arrested without her husband; though the writ was sued against both, and non est inventus returned as to the husband. 1 Term Rep. 486; See tit. Arrest.

In all actions brought in B. R. upon any penal law, the defendant is to put in but common bail. Yelv. 53. In actions where damages are uncertain, bail is to be at the discretion of the court: on a dangerous assault and battery, upon affidavit of special damages, a judge's hand may be procured for allowance of an ac etium in the writ: and in action of scandalum magnatum the court on motion ordered special bail. Raym. 74. When bail is taken by the chief justice, or other judge on a habeas corpus, the bail taken in the inferior court is dismissed; though the last bail be not filed presently, nor till the next term. Yelv. 120, 121. Yet it has been held, where a cause is removed out of an inferior court by habeas corpus, if the bail below offer themselves to be bail above, they shall be taken, not being excepted against below, unless the cause comes out of London. For the sufficiency of the bail there is at the peril of the clerk, and he is responsible to the plaintiff: so that the plaintiff had not the liberty of excepting against them, and the clerk is not responsible for their deficiency in the court above, though he was in London. 1 Salk. 97.

In London it is said, special bail is to be given in action of account, &c. But on removal by habeas corpus into B. R. that court will accept common bail. 2 Keb. 404.

There is not only bail to appear, &c. on writs of error; but also in audita querela, a recognizance of bail must be acknowledged; and upon a writ of attaint, to prosecute, &c. Jenk. Cent. 129.

By the stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8, No execution shall be delayed by any writ of error or superfedeas thereupon, unless bail shall be given, in double the sum adjudged, to prosecute the writ of error with effect; and also to satisfy the debt, damages, and costs adjudged, &c.

If a cause removed from an inferior court, be remanded back by procedendo the same term, the original bail in the inferior court are chargeable, but not if remanded in another term. Cro. Jac. 363. One taken on a writ of execution is not bailable by law; except an audita querela be brought; but where a writ of error is brought and allowed, if the defendant be not in execution, there shall not be an execution awarded against him, at the request of the bail, though he be present in court. 1 Nelf. Abr. 331. The bail ought not to join with the principal, nor the principal with the bail, in a writ of error to reverse the judgment against either. Cro. Jac. 384.

On capias ad satisfaciendum against the defendant returned non est inventus, scire facias is to issue against the bail, or an action may be brought. Where a defendant renders renders his body in discharge of the bail, the plaintiff is by the rules of the court to make his choice of proceeding in execution, whether he will charge body, goods or lands. 1 Lill. 183. And if the principal after judgment renders not himself in discharge of his bail, it is at the election of the plaintiff to take out execution either against him or proceed against his bail: but if he takes the bail in execution, though he hath not full satisfaction, he shall never after take the principal; and if the principal be taken, he may not after meddle with the bail.

Where two are bail, although one be in execution, the plaintiff may take the other. Cro. Jac. 320: 2 Bulst. 68. If a principal render himself, and there is none to require his commitment, the court is ex officio to commit him; and if the plaintiff refuse him, he shall be discharged, and an entry made of it upon the record. Moor, Cas. 1249: 1 Leon 59: See Hob. 210.

There must be an exoneretur entered, to discharge the bail. If the defendant dies before a capias ad satisfac. against him returned and filed, the bail will be discharged. 1 Lill. 177.

The Bail upon a writ of error cannot render the party in their discharge; because they are bound in a recognisance that the party shall prosecute the writ of error with effect, or pay the money if judgment be affirmed. 1 Lill. Abr. 173: 2 Cro. 402: 3 Mod. 87. Nor can the Bail in such case surrender the principal, though he become a bankrupt pending the writ of error. 1 Term Rep. 624.

Before a scire facias taken out against bail, the principal may render his body in discharge of the bail: and if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the second sci. fac. against them, they shall be discharged. 1 Rol. Abr. 250: 1 Lill. 471. Anciently the bail were to bring in the principal upon the first scire fac. or it would not be allowed. 3 Bulst. 182.

If the bail mean to acquit themselves of their recognisance entirely, and run no hazard of the death of the defendant, then they must render him in their discharge, before the return of the ca. sa.; as the death of the principal afterwards will not discharge them. 2 Wils. 67: 2 Cro. 165: Jon. 139: Str. 511. But if they do not, then they have until the return day, (if the proceedings be by bill) sedente curia, of the first scire facias, if it be returned scire feci, but if a nihil is returned thereon, then until the return day, sedente curia of the second sci. fa. N on R. E. 5 Geo. 2. And if the proceedings be by original, they have till the quarto die post of the return of the first sci. fa. if returned scire feci; if not, then till the quarto die post of the return day of the second. 4 Burr. 2134: 1 Wils. 270. If an action be brought then eight days in full term after the return. R. Trin. 1 An.—See further Impey's and the other books of practice.

If Bail surrender the principal at or before the return of the second scire facias, it is good, although there be no immediate notice of it to the plaintiff; and if, through want of notice, he is at further charge against the bail, that shall not vitiate the surrender, but the bail shall not be delivered till they pay such charges: if at any time, after the return of the capias, the bail surrender the principal at a judge's chamber, and he thereupon is committed to the tipstaff, from whom he escapes, &c. this will not be a good surrender: but if it be before or on a capias returned, it is otherwise, the one being an indulgence, and the other matter of right. Mod. Cas. 238.

BAIL I.

When a person makes his escape out of prison, and is retaken and bailed; the bail shall be discharged on writ to the sheriff commanding him to keep the prisoner in discharge of the bail. Stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 6. § 3.

The judges of the courts at Westminster have power by statute to appoint commissioners in every county to take recognizances of bail, in causes depending in their courts; and to make such rules for justifying the bail as they shall think fit, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 4.

The commissioners are to take bail, but are obliged by rule of court to keep a book wherein are the names of the plaintiff, defendant, and bail, and the person who transmits the same, and who makes affidavit that the recognisance was duly acknowledged in his presence: on such affidavit the judges make a conditional allocatur, and the bail are to stand absolute, unless the plaintiff excepts against them within twenty days, and if he excepts, the bail may justify by affidavit before the commissioners in the country. Gilb. H. C. R. 32.

If a defendant puts in bail by a wrong name, the proceedings shall nevertheless be good; for otherwise every man impleaded may give a false name to his attorney by which he will be bailed, and then plead it in arrest of judgment. Goltsb. 138. But it hath been held, that if the bail be entered in one name, and the declaration and all the proceedings are by a contrary name, it will be erroneous. Cro. Eliz. 223. So if there is bail, and the bail be taken off the file, the plaintiff is without remedy: though where a habeas corpus and bail piece were lost in B. R. new ones were ordered to be made out. Style 261.

Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 26, enacts, That it is felony without benefit of clergy to acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, any bail in the name of another person not privy or consenting thereto; provided that it shall not corrupt the blood, or take away dower.

Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 4. s. 4, enacts, That any person representing or personating another before commissioners appointed to take bail, shall be adjudged guilty of felony.

Special bail, which is taken before a judge, or by commissioners in the country, when accepted, is to be filed; after twenty days notice given of putting in special bail before a judge, on a cepi corpus, if there be no exception, the bail shall be filed in four days. 1 Lill. Abr. 174. Upon a cepi corpus twenty days are allowed to except against the bail: so on a writ of error; and you need not give notice; but you cannot take out execution without giving a four days rule to put in better bail: in all other cases, notice must be given. Upon a habeas corpus, eight and twenty-days are appointed to except against the bail, and after that, if it be not excepted against, it shall be filed in four days. 1 Salk. 98: R. M. 8 An.

The exception to bail put in before a judge, must be entered in the bail-book, at the judge's chambers at the side of the bail there put in, after this manner: I do except against this bail, A. B. attorn. for the plaintiff. And if there be no such exception, the defendant's attorney may take the bail-piece from the judge's chamber, and file it. Bail is not properly such until it is filed, when it is of record: but it shall be accounted good, till the same is questioned and disallowed.

Bail cannot be justified before a judge in his chamber, except it be by consent, or for necessity in vacation; but in

in the latter case they ought to be justified again in term, and upon that the defendant is compelled to accept a declaration to go to trial at the assizes, if it be an issuable term; and upon putting in bail, it is not enough to give notice of their being put in, but it ought to be of their names, places of abode, and trade or vocation, that the plaintiff may know how to enquire after them. 6 Mod. 24, 25.

It being doubtful whether Sunday should be reckoned as one day in notice to justify bail, it was determined per cur. that for the future Sunday shall not be counted one, (it not being a proper day to enquire after bail); but two days notice must be given, of which Sunday shall not be one; upon motion for defendant to justify bail, notice was served Saturday June 23, to justify bail Monday 25; the notice being insufficient, the bail was not suffered to justify. Notes in C. B. 220.

After the plaintiff has entered his exception, and given notice thereof to the defendant, the bail, (to discharge the bond) must personally appear in court within the time limited by the rules thereof, and justify themselves; [or by affidavit, if taken before commissioners in the country,] and the plaintiff may oppose them by his counsel; if it appear they are insufficient, the court will reject them, and leave the plaintiff at liberty to proceed upon the bail-bond, or against the sheriff.

Bail coming to justify and not being present at the sitting of the court, must wait until the rising.

Generally, bail are opposed on five grounds with effect. 1st, That there is some mistake in the notice to justify; namely, that it should have been given two days previous, instead of one; 2dly, That the bail have assumed names that are either feigned, or belong to other persons, contrary to the Stats. 21 Jac. 1: and 4 & 5 W. & M. But the court will not vacate the proceeding; against the party personated, until the offender be convicted. 1 Vent. 301; nor can a conviction take place, until the bail-piece be filed. 2 Sid. 90: 3d. A third ground of opposing bail is, that they are not house-keepers; if they be, the rent paid is immaterial, though under 10*l.* Loft 148; nor is it necessary they should have been assessed to the poor's rate. Ibid 328. 4thly. They may be opposed on the ground of their not being worth double the sum sworn to, after payment of all their debts. Under this head may be ranked bankrupts, who have not obtained their certificates; or such as have been twice bankrupts, and not paid 15*s.* in the pound. M. 24 Geo. 3. Lastly, after the expiration of the rule to bring in the body. Loft 438: M. 20 Geo. 3.

If the bail do not justify at the day given (being the last day they have) they are out of court. Nor can they justify after the rule upon the sheriff, to bring in the body is expired; without leave of the court. Loft. 88.

In case the defendant by neglect has suffered the plaintiff to take an assignment of the bond, and he has lost a trial; if he would wish to try the cause, he must move the court for that purpose on a special affidavit containing merits, if it be in term time, if in vacation, he may apply and obtain a judge's order, which will be granted, upon putting in and perfecting bail, paying the costs incurred, receiving a declaration in the original action, pleading issuably, and taking short notice of trial, so as not to delay the plaintiff, and consenting that the bond stand as a security. But the court of K. B. has not yet said, that the plaintiff shall take judgment on the actions upon the bond, although the practice in the Common Pleas is so.

If the bond be irregularly assigned, defendant may move the court to set the proceedings aside for irregularity, upon an affidavit, stating the particular facts.

If the court stay the proceedings on the bond, the defendant is not at liberty to plead in abatement, but in chief. Salk. 519; nor will the court order the bond to be delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground of a misnomer. 3 Term-Rep. 572.

Pending a rule to set aside proceedings for irregularity, and to stay the proceedings, plaintiff took an assignment of the bond in the mean-time; the court agreed that the proceedings were totally suspended, by an act of the court, and made the rule absolute to set aside the assignment of the bond, as having been made too soon. 4 Term-Rep. 176.

The court may adjudge bail sufficient, when the plaintiff will not accept of it. Also the court on motion, or a judge at his chamber, will order a common appearance to be taken, when special bail is not required, on affidavit made by the defendant of the smallness of the debt due, &c. The putting in of a declaration, and the acceptance of it by the defendant's attorney with the privity of the plaintiff's attorney, is an acceptance of the bail.

When a sheriff hath taken good bail of the defendant, he will on a rule return a cepi, and assign the bail-bond to plaintiff, which may be done by indorsement without stamp; so as it be stamped before action brought thereupon; and then the defendant and bail may be sued on the bond, by the plaintiff in his own name, i.e. as assignee of the sheriff. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. The action must be brought in the same court, where the original writ was sued out. 3 Burr. 1923: 1 Burr. 643. The venue may be laid in any county. Str. 727: 2 Ld. Raym. 1455. But if the plaintiff takes an assignment of the bail-bond, though the bail is insufficient, the court will not amerce the sheriff. 1 Salk. 99.

In case the defendant doth not put in bail, the attorney for the plaintiff is to call on the sheriff for his return of the writ; and so proceed to an attachment against the sheriff. If on a cepi corpus no bail is returned, a rule will be made out to bring in the defendant's body. Though a defendant, with leave of the court, may deposit money in court instead of bail; and in such case the plaintiff shall be ordered to waive other bail. Lill. Abr. Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

If more damages, &c. are recovered than mentioned in the plaint, or than the sum wherein the bail is bound, the bail will not be liable for the surplus. 1 Salk. 102.

A bail cannot be witness for the defendant at the trial; but the court, on motion, will discharge the bail, upon giving other sufficient bail. Wood's Inst. 582. Bail-pieces are written on a small square piece of parchment, with the corners cut off at the bottom.—For further matter see the books of practice.

II. As to BAIL for CRIMES. At common law bail was allowed for all offences except murder, 2 Inst. 109. And if the party accused could find sufficient sureties, he was not to be committed to prison; for all persons might be bailed till convicted of the offence. 2 Inst. 186. But by statute it was after enacted, that in case of homicide the offender should not be bailed; and by our statutes, murderers, derers, out-laws, house-burners, thieves openly defamed, &c. are not bailable; but where persons are accused of larceny, as accessaries to felony, or under light suspicion, they may be admitted to bail. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 15.

BAIL II.

One indicted and found guilty of the death of a man by misadventure, as by casting a stone over a house, and by chance killing a man, woman, or child, is not bailable. 3 Ed. 3. Corone 354.

One indicted of conspiracy, viz. that he with others conspired falsely to indict another of murder or felony, by means whereof he was indicted, and afterwards convicted, shall not be bailed. The resolution of all the judges, upon the question demanded by King Ed. III. himself, as appears. 27 Aff. 1.

One indicted for burglary may be bailed. 29 Aff. 44.

One indicted on suspicion of robbery was outlawed, and taken on the outlawry, and brought writ of error, and being brought to B. R. by habeas corpus, prayed to be bailed, and took two exceptions to the indictment; 1st. That he was in prison, and knew nothing of the outlawry; 2dly. That the charge is too general, and no body prosecutes; but per Roll Ch. J. He cannot be bailed. Sty. 418. But see Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, which enacts, that persons outlawed, except for treason or felony, may appear by attorney and reverse the same without bail; except special bail shall be ordered by the court: and that persons arrested upon any capias utlagatum, except for treason or felony, may be discharged by an attorney's engagement to appear: and in cases where special bail is required, the sheriff may take bond with sureties.

By the common law the sheriff might bail persons arrested on suspicion of felony, or for other offence bailable; but he hath lost this power by the Stat. 1 E. 4. c. 2. Justices of peace may let to bail persons suspected of felony, or others bailable, until the next sessions: though where persons are arrested for manslaughter or felony, being bailable by law, they are not to be let to bail by justices of peace but in open sessions, or where two justices (quorum unus) are present; and the same is to be certified with the examination of the offender, and the accusers bound over to prosecute, &c. 3 H. 7. c. 3: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. § 3: not to restrain justices in London and Middlesex, and towns corporate. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. § 6. If a person be dangerously wounded, the offender may be bailed till the person is dead; but it is usual to have assurance from some skilful surgeon, that the party is like to do well. 2 Inst. 186. A man arrested and imprisoned for felony, being bailable, shall be bailed before it appears whether he is guilty or not; but when convicted, or if on examination he confesseth the felony, he cannot be bailed. 4 Inst. 178.

It is to be observed, that the Stat. West. 1, 3 Ed. 1. c. 15. above mentioned, doth not extend to the judges of B. R. &c. only to sheriffs and other inferior officers. H. P. C. 98, 99—Likewise, justices of gaol delivery not being within the restraint of the statute of Westm. 1. may bail persons convicted before them of homicide by misadventure, or self defence, the better to enable them to purchase their pardon. Crompt. 154 a: H. P. C. 101: F. N. B. 2, 6: S. P. C. 15.

Also it seems that in discretion they may bail a person convicted before them of manslaughter, upon special circumstances; as if the evidence against him were slight, or if he had purchased his pardon. H. P. C. 101: Crompt. 153.

BAIL II.

The court of B. R. has power to bail in all cases, whatsoever, and will exercise their discretion in all cases not capital; in capital cases where innocence may be fairly presumed; and in every case where the charge is not alledged with sufficient certainty. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 15. § 80. in note, where several cases are enumerated.

It is to be observed, that with respect to the nature of the offence, although this court is not tied down by the rules prescribed by the stat. of Westm. 1; yet it will in discretion pay a due regard to those rules, and not admit a person to bail who is expressly declared to be irreplevisable, without some particular circumstances in his favour. 2 Inst. 185, 186, 189: H. C. P. 104: 1 Salk. 61: 3 Bulst. 113: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 80: 5 Mod. 454.

And therefore if a person be attainted of felony, or convicted thereof by verdict general or special, or notoriously guilty of treason or manslaughter, &c. by his own confession or otherwise, he is not to be admitted to bail; without some special motive to induce the court to grant it. Kelynge 90: Dyer 79: 1 Bulst. 87: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 80.

Upon a commitment of either house of parliament, when it stands indifferent on the return of the habeas corpus, whether it be legal, or not, the court of B. R. ought not to bail a prisoner. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 15. § 73. But if it be demanded in case a subject should be committed by either of the Houses for a matter manifestly out of their jurisdiction, what remedy can he have? I answer (says the learned and cautious Serjeant Hawkins) as this is a case which I am persuaded will never happen, it seems needless over nicely to examine it. See Leach's notes, 2 Hawk. P. C. cap. 15. § 73. from the cases cited there (viz. The Hon. Alex. Murray's, 1 Wilf. 299: John Wilkes's, 2 Wilf. 158: Entick v. Carrington, 11 St. Tr. 317: Brads Case's, 3 Wilf. 188: 2 Blackst. 755.) it appears that the courts in Westminster Hall have been positively of opinion, "that they have no power to decide on the privileges of Parliament; that the rights of the House of Commons are paramount to the jurisdiction of those courts; that the Commons are the exclusive arbiters of their own peculiar privileges; that their power of commitment is inherent in the very nature of their constitution; and finally that their adjudication is tantamount to a conviction, and their commitment equal to an execution; and that no court can discharge a prisoner committed in execution by another court."

However, a person committed for a contempt, by order of either House of Parliament, may be discharged by B. R. after a dissolution or prorogation, which determine all orders of parliament: also it is said on an impeachment, when the parliament is not sitting, and the party has been long in prison, B. R. may bail him. The court of B. R. hath bailed persons committed to the Fleet Prison by the Lord Chancellor; when the crime of commitment was not mentioned, or only in general terms, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 76.

And B. R. having the control of all inferior courts, may at their discretion bail any person unjustly committed by any of those courts. In admitting a person to bail in the court of B. R. for felony, &c. a several recognisance is entered into to the king in a certain sum from each of the bail, that the prisoner shall appear at a certain day, &c. And also that the bail shall be liable for the default of such appearance, body for body. And it is at the discretion of justices of the peace, in admitting any person to bail for felony, to take the recognisance in a certain sum, or body for body: but where a person is bailed by any court, &c. for a crime of an inferior nature, the recognisance ought to be only in a certain sum of money, and not body for body. 2 Hawk c. 15. § 83. And the bail are to be bound in double the sum of the criminal. Where persons are bound body for body, if the offender doth not appear, whereby the recognisance is forfeited, the bail are not liable to such punishment to which the principal would be adjudged if found guilty, but only to be fined, &c. Wood's Inst. 618. If bail suspect the prisoner will fly, they may carry him before a justice to find new sureties; or to be committed in their discharge. 1 Rep. 99.

The courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, in term time, and the Chancery in the term or vacation, may bail persons by the habeas corpus act; see title Habeas Corpus.

To refuse bail when any one is bailable on the one hand; or on the other to admit any to bail who ought not by law to be admitted, or to take slender bail, is punishable by fine; &c. 2 Inst. 291: H. P. C. 97. And see farther, 3 Edw. 1. c. 15: 27 Edw. 1. St. 1. c. 3: 4 Edw. 3. c. 2: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13: & 31 Car. 2. c. 2.

No person shall be bailed for felony by less than two; and it is said not to be usual for the King's Bench to bail a man on a habeas corpus, on a commitment for treason or felony, without four sureties; the sum in which the sureties are to be bound, ought to be never less than 40*l.* for a capital crime; but it may be higher in discretion, on consideration of the ability and quality of the prisoner, and the nature of the offence; and the sureties may be examined on oath concerning their sufficiency, by him that takes the bail; and if a person be bailed by insufficient sureties, he may be required either by him who took the bail, or by any other who hath power to bail him, to find better sureties, and on his refusal may be committed; for insufficient sureties are as none. 2 Hawk P. C. c. 15. § 4: H. P. C. 97.

But justices must take care, that under pretence of demanding sufficient surety, they do not make so excessive a demand, as in effect amounts to a denial of bail; for this is looked upon as a great grievance, and is complained of as such by 1 W. & M. St. 2. c. 2, (the bill of rights); by which it is declared, that excessive bail ought not to be required. 2 Hawk P. C. c. 15.

If where a felony is committed, one is brought before a justice on suspicion, the person suspected is to be bailed, or committed to prison; but if there is no felony done, he may be discharged: H. P. C. 98, 106.

Persons committed for treason or felony, and not indicted the next term, are to be bailed. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. § 7.

BAILIFF, ballivus.] From the French word bayliff, that is, praefectus provinciae, and as the name, so the office itself was answerable to that of France; where there were eight parliaments, which were high courts from whence there lay no appeal, and within the precincts of the several parts of that kingdom which belonged to each parliament there were several provinces to which justice was administered by certain officers called bailiffs: and in England we have several counties in which justice hath been, and still is, in small suits, administered to the inhabitants, by the officer whom we now call sheriff or viscount; (one of which names descends from the Saxons, the other from the Normans;) and though the sheriff is not called bailiff, yet it is probable that was one of his names also, because the county is often called balliva: as in the return of a writ, where the person is not arrested, the sheriff saith, Infra-nominatus A. B. non est inventus in balliva mea, &c. Kitch. Ret. Brev. fol. 285. And in the statute of Magna Charta, cap. 28, and 14 Ed. 3. c. 9, the word bailiff seems to comprise as well sheriffs, as bailiffs of hundreds.

As the realm is divided into counties, so every county is divided into hundreds; within which in ancient times the people had justice administered to them by the several officers of every hundred, which were the bailiffs. And it appears by Bracton, (lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 34.) that bailiffs of hundreds might anciently hold plea of appeal and approvers: but since that time the hundred courts, except certain franchises, are swallowed in the county-courts; and now the bailiff's name and office is grown into contempt, they being generally officers to serve writs, &c. within their liberties. Though in other respects, the name is still in good esteem; for the chief magistrates in divers towns, are called bailiffs: and sometimes the persons to whom the king's castles are committed are termed bailiffs, as the bailiff of Dover Castle, &c.

Of the ordinary bailiffs there are several sorts, viz. bailiffs of liberties; sheriffs' bailiffs; bailiffs of lords of manors; bailiffs of husbandry, &c.

Bailiffs of liberties are those bailiffs who are appointed by every lord within his liberty, to execute process and do such offices therein, as the bailiff errant doth at large in the county; but bailiffs errant or itinerant, to go up and down the county to serve process, are out of use.

Bailiffs of liberties and franchises, are to be sworn to take distresses, truly impanel jurors, make returns by indenture between them and sheriffs, &c. and shall be punished for malicious distresses, by fine and treble damages, by ancient statutes. Vide 12 Ed. 2. St. 1. c. 5: 14 Ed. 3. St. 1. c. 9: 20 Ed. 3. c. 6: 1 Ed. 3. St. 1. c. 5: 2 Ed. 3. c. 4: 5 Ed. 3. c. 4: 11 H. 7. c. 15: 27 H. 8. c. 24: 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 10.

The bailiff of a liberty, may make an inquisition and extent upon an elect. The sheriff returned on a writ of elect, that the party had not any lands but within the liberty of St. Edmund's Bury, and that J. S. bailiff there had the execution and return of all writs, and that he inquired quired and returned an extent by inquisition, and the bailiff delivered the moiety of the lands extended to the plaintiff, who by virtue thereof entered, &c. This was held a good return. Cro. Car. 319. These bailiffs of liberties cannot arrest a man without a warrant from the sheriff of the county: and yet the sheriff may not enter the liberty himself, at the suit of a subject, (unless it be on a quo minus, or capias utlagatum) without clause in his writ, Non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, &c. If the sheriff, &c. enters the liberty without such power, the lord of the liberty may have an action against him; though the execution of the writ may stand good. 1 Vent. 496: 2 Inst. 453.

Sheriffs' bailiffs are such who are servants to sheriffs of counties to execute writs, warrants, &c. Formerly bailiffs of hundreds were the officers to execute writs; but now it is done by special bailiffs, put in with them by the sheriff. A bailiff of a liberty is an officer which the court takes notice of; though a sheriff's bailiff is not an officer of the court, but only the sheriff himself. Pascb. 23 Car. 1. B. R. The arrest of the sheriff's bailiff is the arrest of the sheriff; and if any rescous be made of any person arrested, it shall be adjudged done to the sheriff: also if the bailiff permit a prisoner to escape, action may be brought against the sheriff. Co. Lit. 61, 168. Sheriffs are answerable for misdemeanors of their bailiffs; and are to have remedy over against them. 2 Inst. 19. The latter are therefore usually bound in an obligation for the due execution of their offices, and thence are called bound bailiffs; which the common people have corrupted to a more humble appellation.

There are thirty-six serjeants at mace in London who may be termed bailiffs, and they each give security to the sheriffs.

By Stat. 14 E. 3. c. 9, Sheriffs shall appoint such bailiffs for whom they will answer; and by Stat. 1 H. 5. c. 4, no sheriff's bailiff shall be attorney in the king's court. R. M. 1654.

Bailiffs of lords of manors are those that collect their rents, and levy their fines and amercements: but such a bailiff cannot distrain for an amercement without a special warrant from the lord or his steward. Cro. Eliz. 698. He cannot give licence to commit a trespass, as to cut down trees, &c. though he may licence one to go over land, being a trespass to the possession only, the profits whereof are at his disposal. Cro. Jac. 337, 377. A bailiff may by himself, or by command of another take cattle damage-feasant upon the land. 1 Don v. Abr. 685. Yet amends cannot be tendered to the bailiff, for he may not accept of amends, nor deliver the distress when once taken. 5 Rep. 76. These bailiffs may do any thing for the benefit of their masters, and it shall stand good till the master disagrees; but they can do nothing to the prejudice of their masters. Lit. Rep. 70.

Bailiffs of courts-baron summon those courts, and execute the process thereof; they present all pound breaches, cattle-strayed, &c.

Bailiffs of husbandry are belonging to private men of good estates, and have the disposal of the under-servants, every man to his labour; they also sell trees, repair houses, hedges, &c. and collect the profits of the land for their lord and master, for which they render account yearly, &c.

Besides these there are also bailiffs of the forest, of which see Manwood, part 1. page 113.

BAILMENT.

An Appointment of a Bailiff of a Manor.

KNOW all men by these presents, That I W. B. of, &c. Esq; lord of the manor of D. in the county of G. Have made, ordained, deputed and appointed, and by these presents do make, ordain, depute, and appoint J. G. of, &c. my bailiff, for me and in my name, and to my use, to collect and gather, and to ask, require, demand and receive of all and every my tenants, that have held or enjoyed, or now do, or hereafter shall hold or enjoy, any messuages, lands, or tenements, from, by, or under me, within my said manor of D. all rents, and arrears of rent, heriots, and other profits, that now are, or hereafter shall become payable, due, owing or belonging to me, within the said manor; and, in default of payment thereof, to distrain for the same from time to time, and such distress or distresses to impound, detain and keep, until payment be made of the said rents and profits, and the arrears thereof. And I do also further empower and authorize the said J. G. to take care of and inspect into all and every my messuages, lands and woods within the said manor, and to take an account of all defects, decays, wastes, spoils, trespasses, or other misdemeanors, committed or permitted within my said manor, or in any messuages, lands or woods there; and from time to time, to give me a just and true account in writing thereof; and further to act and do all other things that to the office of a bailiff of the said manor belongs and appertains, during my will and pleasure. In witness, &c.

BAILIWICK, balliva.] Is not only taken for the county; but signifies generally that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff with such powers within his precinct, as an under-sheriff exerciseth under the sheriff of the county; such as the bailiff of Westminster, &c. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 12: Wood's Inst. 206.

BAILMENT, from bailier Fr. to deliver.] "A delivery of goods in trust, upon a contract expressed or implied that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee:" [the person to whom they are delivered.] 2 Coom. 451. which see: to which Sir W. Jones adds, "and the goods re-delivered as soon as the time or use, for which they were bailed shall have elapsed or be performed." Law of Bailment, p. 117.

It is to be known that there are six sorts of bailments which lay a care and obligation on the party to whom goods are bailed; and which consequently subject him to an action, if he misbehave in the trust reposed in him.

1. A bare and naked bailment, to keep for the use of the bailor, which is called depositum; and such bailee is not chargeable for a common neglect, but it must be a gross one to make him liable. 2 Str. 1099.

2. A delivery of goods which are useful to keep, and they are to be returned again in specie, which is called accommodatum, which is a lending grati; and in such case the borrower is strictly bound to keep them: for if he be guilty of the least neglect, he shall be answerable, but he shall not be charged where there is no default in him. See post.

3. A delivery of goods for hire, which is called locatio or conductio; and the hirer is to take all imaginable care, and restore them at the time; which care if he so use, he shall not be bound.

4. A delivery by way of pledge, which is called vadum; and in such goods the pawnee has a special property;

perty; and if the goods will be the worse for using, the pawnee must not use them; otherwise he may use them at his peril; as jewels pawned to a lady, if she keep them in a bag, and they are stolen, she shall not be charged; but if she go with them to a play, and they are stolen, she shall be answerable. So if the pawnee be at a charge in keeping them, he may use them for his reasonable charge; and if notwithstanding all his diligence he lose the pledge, yet he shall recover the debt. But if he lose it after the money tendered, he shall be chargeable, for he is a wrong-doer; after money paid (and tender and refusal is the same) it ceases to be a pledge, and therefore the pawnor may either bring an action of assumpsit, and declare that the defendant promised to return the goods upon request; or trover, the property being vested in him by the tender.

5. A delivery of goods to be carried for a reward, of which enough is said under title Carrier. It may here be added, that the plaintiff ought to prove the defendant used to carry goods, and that the goods were delivered to him or his servant to be carried. And if a price be alleged in the declaration, it ought to be proved the usual price for such a stage; and if the price be proved there need no proof, the defendant being a common carrier: but there need not be a proof of a price certain.

6. A delivery of goods to do some act about them (as to carry) without a reward, which is called by Bracton, mandatum, in English, an acting by commission; and though he be to have nothing for his pains, yet if there were any neglect in him, he will be answerable, for his having undertaken a trust is a sufficient consideration; but if the goods be misused by a third person, in the way, without any neglect of his, he would not be liable, being to have no reward.

The above is taken from Lord Chief Justice Holt's opinion, in the case of Ciggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909. as abridged, Bull. N. P. 72. See also Sir W. Jones's Essay on the Law of Bailment, p. 35: Com. Rep. 133. with Mr. Rufe's notes; and on this subject 2 Inst. 89: 4 Rep. 83: 1 Rel. Ab. 338: 1 Inst. 89 b: Doct. & St. 129: 1 New Ab. 243.

Having mentioned Sir W. Jones's Essay on the Law of Bailment, we cannot help recommending it to the attention of the rational student; and for the use of such, extracting the following analysis, which will in general be found to be consonant with the determinations in the books, and convey much knowledge in a short compass. Sir W. Jones differs in a few points from Lord Holt, and Lord Coke, and his reasons are deserving of much attention.

"I. DEFINITIONS.—1. Bailment, as before at the beginning of this article.—2. Deposit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor without recompence.—3. Mandate is a bailment of goods, without reward, to be carried from place to place, or to have some act performed about them.—4. Lending for use is a bailment of a thing for a certain time to be used by the borrower without paying for it.—5. Pledging, is a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt be discharged.—6. Letting to hire is, (1) a bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation in money; or (2) a letting out of, work and labour to be done, or care and attention to be bestowed, by the bailee on the goods bailed, and that for a pecuniary recompense; or (3) of care and pains in carrying the things delivered from one place to another, for a stipulated or implied reward.—7. Innominate bailments are those where the compensation for the use of a thing, or for labour and attention is not pecuniary; but either (1) the reciprocal use or the gift of some other thing; or (2) work and pains reciprocally undertaken; or (3) the use or gift of another thing in consideration of care and labour; and conversely.—8. Ordinary neglect, is the omission of that care, which every man of common prudence, and capable of governing a family, takes of his own concerns.—9. Gross neglect, is the want of that care which every man of common sense, how inattentive soever, takes of his own property. See Post. II. 8.—10. Slight neglect is the omission of that diligence which very circumspect and thoughtful persons use in securing their own goods and chattels.—11. A naked contract is a contract made without consideration or recompence.

"II. THE RULES which may be considered as axioms flowing from natural reason, good morals, and sound policy, are these—1. A bailee who derives no benefit from his undertaking, is responsible only for gross neglect.—2. A bailee who alone receives benefit from the bailment, is responsible for slight neglect.—3. When the bailment is beneficial to both parties, the bailee must answer for ordinary neglect.—4. A special agreement of any bailee to answer for more or less, is in general valid.—5. All bailees are answerable for actual fraud, even though the contrary be stipulated.—6. No bailee shall be charged for a loss by inevitable accident or irresistible force, except by special agreement.—7. Robbery by force is considered as irresistible; but a loss by private stealth, is presumptive evidence of ordinary neglect.—8. Gross neglect is a violation of good faith.—9. No action lies to compel performance of a naked contract.—10. A reparation may be obtained by suit for every damage occasioned by an injury.—11. The negligence of a servant acting by his master's express or implied order, is the negligence of the master.

"III. From these rules the following PROPOSITIONS are evidently deducible.—1. A depositary is responsible only for gross neglect; or in other words for a violation of good faith.—2. A depositary whose character is known to his depositor, shall not answer for mere neglect, if he take no better care of his own goods, and they also be spoiled or destroyed.—3. A mandatary to carry is responsible only for gross neglect, or a breach of good faith.—4. A mandatary to perform a work is bound to use a degree of diligence adequate to the performance of it.—5. A man cannot be compelled by action to perform his promise of engaging in a deposit or a mandate; but.—6. A reparation may be obtained by suit for damage occasioned by the non-performance of a promise to become a depositary, or a mandatary.—7. A borrower for use is responsible for slight negligence.—8. A pawnee is answerable for ordinary neglect.—9. The hirer of a thing is answerable for ordinary neglect.—10. A workman for hire must answer for ordinary neglect of the goods bailed, and must apply a degree of skill equal to his undertaking.—11. A letter to hire of his care and attention, is responsible for ordinary negligence.—12. A carrier for hire by land or by water is answerable for ordinary neglect.

"IV.

BAILMENT.

"IV. EXCEPTIONS, to the above rules and propositions.—1. A man who spontaneously and officiously engages to keep or to carry the goods of another, though without reward, must answer for slight neglect.—2. If a man through strong persuasion and with reluctance undertake the execution of a mandate, no more can be required of him, than a fair exertion of his ability.—3. All bailees become responsible for losses by casualty or violence, after their refusal to return the things bailed; on a lawful demand.—4. A borrower and a hirer are answerable in all events, if they keep the things borrowed or hired after the stipulated time, or use them differently from their agreement.—5. A depositary and a pawnee are answerable in all events if they use the things deposited or pawned.—6. An inn-keeper is chargeable for the goods of his guest within his inn, if the guests be robbed by the servants or inmates of the keeper.—7. A common carrier by land or by water, must indemnify the owner of the goods carried if he be robbed of them.

"V. It is no exception but a COLLATERARY from the rules that Every bailee is responsible for a loss by accident or force, however inevitable or irresistible; if it be occasioned by that degree of negligence for which the nature of his contract makes him generally answerable."

The cases cited and commented on by Sir Wm. Jones, besides the above of Coggs v. Bernard, and which lead to the whole law on this subject, are 1 Sir. 128, 145: 2 Sira. 1039: Allcu. 93: *Fitz. The following cases may serve to illustrate the above principles.

A man leaves a chest locked up with another to be kept, and doth not make known to him what is therein; if the chest and goods in it are stolen, the person who received them shall not be charged for the same, for he was not trusted with them. And what is said as to stealing is to be understood of all other inevitable accidents: but it is necessary for a man that receives goods to be kept, to receive them in a special manner, viz. to be kept as his own, or at the peril of the owner. 1 Lill. Abr. 193, 174. And vide 1 Rel. Abr. 338: 2 Show. pl. 166.

If I deliver 100*l.* to A. to buy cattle, and he bestows 50*l.* of it in cattle, and I bring an action of debt for all, I shall be barred in that action for the money bestowed and charges, &c. but for the rest I shall recover. Hob. 207.

If one deliver his goods to another person, to deliver over to a stranger; the deliverer may countermand his power, and require the goods again; and if the bailee refuse to deliver them, he may have an action of account for them. Co. Litt. 286.

If A. delivers goods to B. to be delivered over to C. C. hath the property, and C. hath the action against B. for B. undertakes for the safe delivery to C. and hath no property or interest but in order to that purpose. 1 Rel.

Abr. 606: see 1 Bulff. 68, 69, where it is said that in case of conversion to his own use the bailee shall be answerable to both.

But if the bailment were not on valuable consideration, the delivery is countermandable; and in that case, if A. the bailor bring trover, he reduces the property again in himself, for the action amounts to a countermand; but if the delivery was on a valuable consideration, then A. cannot have trover, because the property is altered; and in trover the property must be proved in the plaintiff. 1 Bulff. 68: see 1 Leon. 30.

And where a man delivers goods to another to be delivered to the deliverer at such a day, and before that day the bailee doth sell the goods in market overt; the bailor may at the day seize and take his goods, for the property is not altered. Godb. 160.

If A. borrows a horse to ride to Dover, and he rides out of his way, and the owner of the horse meets him, he cannot take the horse from him; for A. has a special property in the horse till the journey is determined; and being in lawful possession of the horse, the owner cannot violently seize and take it away; for the continuance of all property is to be taken from the form of the original bargain, which in this case was limited till the appointed journey was finished. Telv. 172. But the owner may have an action on the case against the bailee for exceeding the purposes of the loan; for so far it is a secret and fallacious abuse of his property; but no general action of trespass, because it is not an open and violent invasion of it. 1 Rel. Rep. 128.

As to borrowing a thing perishable, as corn, wine, or money, or the like, a man must, from the nature of the thing, have an absolute property in them; otherwise it could not supply the uses for which it was lent; and therefore he is obliged to return something of the same sort, the same in quantity and quality with what is borrowed. Dr. & Stud. 129.

But if one lend a horse, &c. he must have the same restored. If a thing lent for use be used to any other end or purpose than that for which it was borrowed, the party may have his action on the case for it, though the thing be never the worse; and if what is borrowed be lost, although it be not by any negligence of the borrower, as if he be robbed of it; or where the thing is impaired or destroyed by his neglect, admitting that he put it to no more service than that for which borrowed, he must make it good: so where one borrows a horse, and puts him in an old rotten house ready to fall, which falls on and kills him, the borrower must answer for the horse. But if such goods borrowed perish by the act of God, (or rather, as Sir Wm. Jones says it ought more reverentially to be termed, by inevitable accident;) in the right use of them; as where the borrower puts the horse, &c. in a strong house, and it falls and kills him, or it dies by disease, or by default of the owner, the borrower shall not be charged. 1 Inst. 89: 29 Aff. 28: 2 H. 7, 11.

If one delivers a ring to another to keep, and he breaks and converts the same to his own use; or if I deliver my sheep to another to be kept, and he suffers them to be drowned by his negligence; or if the bailee of a horse, or goods, &c. kill or spoil them, in these cases action will lie. 5 Rep. 13: 15 E. 4. 20 b: 12 E. 4. 13.

If a man deliver goods to another, the bailee shall have a general action of trespass against a stranger, because he is answerable over to the bailor; for a man ought not to be charged with an injury to another, without being able to retire to the original cause of that injury, and in amends there to do himself right. 13 Co. 69; 14 Hen. 4. 28; 25 H. 7. 14.

BAN, or bans, from the Brit. ban. i. e. clamor.] A proclamation, or public notice; any public summons, or edict, whereby a thing is commanded or forbidden. It is a word ordinary among the feudills; and for its various significations, see Spelman v. hannum. The word bans in its common acceptance is used for the publishing matrimonial contracts, which is done in the church before marriage; to the end that if any man can speak against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred, precontract, or for other just cause, they may take their exception in time, before the marriage is consummated; and in the canon law, Bannæ sunt proclamationes sponsi & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri solitæ. But there may be a faculty or licence for the marriage, and then this ceremony is omitted. See tit. Marriage.

BANE, from the Sax. bana, a murderer.] Signifies destruction or overthrow; as, I will be the bane of so. h a man, is a common saying; so when a person receives a mortal injury by any thing, we say it was his bane: and he who is the cause of another man's death, is said to be le bane, i. e. malefactor. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 8. cap. 1.

BANERET, bancrētus, miles vexillarius] Sir Thomas Smith, in his Repub. Angl. cap. 18, says, is a knight in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it as it were a banner, and accounted so honourable that they are allowed to display their arms in the king's army as barons do, and may bear arms with supporters. See Camden and Spelman, from whom it appears bannerets are the degree between barons and knights. Spelm. in v. Bancrētus. It is said that they were anciently called by summons to parliament: and that they are next to the barons in dignity, appears by the stats. 5 R. 2. Stat. 2. cap. 4; and 14 R. 2. c. 11.—William de la Pole was created bancrēt by K. Edward the Third by letters patent, Anno Regni sui 13. And those bancrēts, who are created sub vexillis regis, in exercitu regali, in aperto bello, & ipso rege personaliter præseste, explicatis, take place of all barons; as we may learn by the letters patent for creation of baronets. 4 Inft. 6. Some maintain that knights bancrēts ought not to be made in a civil war: but Hen. 7. made divers bancrēts upon the Cornish commotion, in the year 1495. See Selden's Titles of Honour, f. 799.

BANISHMENT, Fr. bannissement; Exilium, abjuratio.] is a forsaking or quitting of the realm; and a kind of civil death, inflicted on an offender: there are two kinds of it, one voluntary and upon oath, called abjuraton, and the other upon compulsion for some offence. Staundf. Pl. Cr. f. 117. See tits. Abjuratio, Transportation.

BANK, Lat. bancus, Fr. banque.] In our common law, is usually taken for a seat or bench of judgment; as Bank le Roy, the King's Bench, Bank le Common Pleas, the Bench of Common Pleas, or the Common Bench; called also in Latin Bancus Regis, and Bancus Communium Placitorum. Crompt. Just. 67, 91. Jus Banci, or the privilege of the Bench, was anciently allowed only to the king's judges, qui summam administrant justitiam; for inferior courts were not allowed that privilege.

There are, in each of the terms, stated days, called days in bank, dies in banco, that is, days of appearance in the court of Common Pleas. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and regulated by some festival of the church. On some one of these days in bank all original writs must be made returnable; and therefore they are generally called the returns of that term. See tit. Dry.

A bank, in common acceptance, signifies a place where great sum of money is deposited, returned by exchange, or otherwise disposed of to profit.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND is managed by a governor and directors, established by parliament, with funds for maintaining thereof, appropriated to such persons as were subscribers; and the capital stock, which is enlarged by divers statutes, is exempted from taxes, accounted a personal estate assignable over, not subject to forfeiture; and the company make dividends of the profits half yearly, &c. The funds are redeemable by the parliament, on paying the money borrowed: and the Company of the

During the continuance of the Bank, no body politic, &c. other than the Company, shall borrow any sums on bills payable at demand; and forging the seal of the Bank, and forging or altering Bank-notes, or tendering such forged notes in payment, demanding to have them exchanged for money, &c. and forging the names of cashiers of the Bank, are all capital felonies. See the several statutes 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 20: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20: 11 Geo. 1. c. 9: 12 Geo. 1. c. 32: 15 Geo. 2. c. 13. And officers or servants of the Company, that imbezzle any Bank-note, &c. wherewith they are intrusted, being duly convicted, shall suffer death as felons.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 79, Persons not authorized by the Bank, making or using moulds, for the marking of paper, with the words Bank of England, visible in the substance, or having such moulds in their possession, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy: And persons issuing notes and bills engraved to resemble those of the Bank, or having the sum expressed in white characters on a black ground, may be punished by imprisonment, not exceeding six months. But innocent persons possessed of such notes carrying them for payment, not affected.

See Stat. 34 Geo. 2. c. 4, to regulate the holding general courts and courts of directors.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 33, the Bank is to keep in hand only 600,000 l. above the sum necessary to pay the current dividends—the remaining surplus to be applied to the use of the Public.

BANKERS, The monied goldsmiths first got the name of bankers in the reign of K. Charles the Second; but bankers now are those private persons in whose hands money is deposited and lodged for safety, to be drawn out again as the owners have occasion for it. See the preceding title.

BANKRUPT, A Trader, who secretes himself or does certain other acts, tending to defraud his creditors. 2 Comm. 285, 471. The word itself is derived from bancus or banque, the table or counter of a tradesman; (Dufresne 1969;) and ruptus broken, denoting thereby one whose shop or place of trade is broken or gone; though others rather choose to adopt the French word route a trace or track—a bankrupt, say they, being one who has removed his banque, leaving but a trace behind. Cowel: 4 Inst. 277—It is observable that the title of the first English statute concerning this offence; Stat. 34 H. 8. c. 4, “against such persons as do make bankrupt” is a literal translation of the French idiom, qui font banque route. 2 Comm. 472. n.

The Bankrupt-law is a system of positive regulations by various statutes, the construction of which have produced the multiplied cases on the subject, from whence the following principles and rules are extracted.—These statutes are,—Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7: (which almost totally altered the old Stat. 34 Hen. 8. c. 4, mentioned above); 1 Jac. 1. c. 15: 21 Jac. 1. c. 19: 10 An. c. 15: 7 Geo. 1. c. 31: 5 Geo. 2. c. 30, continued at present by 28 Geo. 3. c. 24. § 2: 19 Geo. 2. c. 32: 24 Geo. 2. c. 57: 4 Geo. 3. c. 33.

On this subject, recourse has chiefly been had to Cooke's Bankrupt Laws; together with the Commentaries, and the modern reported determinations.

The matter, to suit the present purpose, has thus been arranged.

I. Who may be a Bankrupt.

II. By what Acts a Person may become so.

III. A general View of the Proceedings on, and Effects of a Commission of Bankruptcy.

1. As they relate to the Bankrupt himself.

2. As they transfer his Estate and Property.

IV. To this it has seemed necessary to add some more minute Particulars, as to the following Parts of the Subject:

1. Of the petitioning Creditor's Debt.

2. Of the Proof of Debts.

3. Of Creditors by Marriage Articles.

4. Of Contingent Debts.

5. Of Annuitants and certain other peculiar Creditors.

6. Of removing the Assignees.

7. Of Partners.

V. Practical Notes and Forms:

I. THE Statute, 13 Eliz. c. 7, enacts “That any merchant or other person, being subject or denizen, using or exercising the trade of merchandize, by way of bargaining, exchange, rechange, bartery, chevifance, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, or seeking his or her trade or living by buying and selling”—may become bankrupts.—Drawing and redrawing bills of exchange, may in certain cases be considered as trading. 1 Atk. 128. See Cowp. 745.

Every person being a trader, and capable of making binding contracts, is liable to become a bankrupt.—As a nobleman, member of parliament, clergyman, &c. And where it is said, that farmers, innkeepers, &c. cannot be bankrupts, it means, in respect to that particular description; and not as affording protection, if in any other shape they come within the bankrupt-laws.—But Infants and Married women cannot be bankrupts.—As to the latter however, there are exceptions; for a feme covert in London, being a sole trader according to the custom, is liable to a commission of bankruptcy; and, as repeated determinations have settled that a feme covert living apart from her husband, as a feme sole, is liable to execution for debts contracted by her, there seems no doubt that such a married woman is equally liable to a commission of bankruptcy.—But if a feme sole trader, commit an act of bankruptcy, and afterwards marry and live with her husband, she cannot be made a bankrupt. Ex parte Mear, See Cooke B. L. c. 3. § 1: 4 Term Rep. 362. and this Dictionary tit. Baron and Feme.

Buying only, or selling only, will not qualify a man to be a bankrupt; but it must be both buying and selling, and thereby attempting to get a livelihood. 2 Comm. 476: 2 Wils. 171.

There can be no such thing as an equitable bankruptcy; it must be a legal one; and the party must be a trader in his own right, for if a person that is a trader, makes another his executor, who only disposes of the stock of his trade, it will not make the executor a trader, and liable to a commission of bankruptcy. 2 P. Wms. 429: 1 Atk. 102.

Any

BANKRUPT I.

Any person trading to England, whether native, denizen or alien, though never resident as a trader in England, may be a bankrupt, if he occasionally come to this country and commit an act of bankruptcy. Cowp. 398, 402: Raym. 375: Salk. 110.

If a merchant gives over his trade, and some years after becomes insolvent for money he owed while a merchant, he may be a bankrupt: but if it be for new debts, or old debts continued on new security, it is otherwise. 1 Vent. 5, 29.

To enumerate every trade sufficient to make a man a bankrupt would be tedious. The following seem now settled; and some others are enumerated which have afforded cause of dispute, chiefly from the particular facts of the case.—It is to be premised, that a chapman, or one that buys and sells any thing, though his dealing does not come under the denomination of any particular trade, may become a bankrupt.

* Bankers, brokers, coal-dealers, factors, scriveners, vintners, brick-makers, butchers, bakers, brewers, clothiers, goldsmiths, dyers, iron-manufacturers who buy iron and work it into wares, lock-smiths, milliners, nailors, plumbers, sales-men, shoe-makers, smiths and farriers. 2 Wils. 170, 2: 4 Burr. 2148: 3 Mod. 330: *Cro. [In this case and that of allum-manufacturers, though they seem to differ, the same principle is recognized, viz. "If a man exercises a manufacture upon the produce of his own land, as a necessary or usual mode of reaping and enjoying that produce, and bringing it advantageously to market, he shall not be considered as a trader, though he buys materials or ingredients—as in the case of cheese, cyder, allum, and coal-mines; and the like.—But where the produce of land is merely the raw materials of a manufacture, and used as such, and not as the mode of raising the produce of the land; in short, where the produce of the land is an insignificant article, compared with the expence of the whole manufacture, there in truth he is, and ought to be considered as a trader.—As this distinction turns on the nature and manner of exercising the manufacture, and the motive with which it is carried on, it depends so much upon the light in which a jury sees the whole transaction, the law and the fact are so blended together, that it is hardly possible to distinguish them."]

BANKRUPT II.

II. To LEARN what the particular Acts of Bankruptcy are, which render a man a bankrupt, the several statutes must be consulted, and the resolutions of the courts thereon;—Among these are to be reckoned.

1. To depart the realm, or from his dwelling house, with intent to defraud or hinder his creditors. St. 13 Eliz. c. 7.

2. To begin to keep his house privately, to absent himself from and avoid his creditors. Stat. ib.

3. To procure or suffer himself willingly to be arrested, without just or lawful cause; to suffer himself to be outlawed; or to yield himself to prison. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7: 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. sect. 2.

4. Willingly or fraudulently to procure his goods, money or chattels, to be attached or sequestered. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15.

5. To make any fraudulent grant or conveyance of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels, to the intent or whereby his creditors shall and may be defeated or delayed for the recovery of their just debts. Stat. ib.

6. Being arrested for debt, to be in prison two months after his arrest, upon that or any other arrest, or detention for debt. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 15.

7. To obtain privilege, other than that of parliament against arrest. Stat. ib.

8. Being arrested for 100*l.* or more, to escape out of prison. Stat. ib.

9. To prefer to any court, any petition or bill against any of the creditors, thereby endeavouring to enforce them to accept less than their just debts, or to procure time, or longer days of payment, than was given at the time of their original contracts. Stat. ib.

10. For a bankrupt to pay, satisfy, or secure the petitioning creditor his debt, is an act of bankruptcy which shall supercede that commission, and be sufficient on which to ground another: and such petitioning creditor shall lose his debt, to be divided among the other creditors. See Cooke's B. L. c. 4. § 1: St. 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 24.

11. Neglecting to make satisfaction for any just debt, to the amount of 100*l.* within two months after service of legal process, for such debt, upon any trader, having privilege of parliament, is an act of bankruptcy. Stat. 4 G. 3. c. 33.

The Legislature having thus by positive laws, declared what acts shall be considered as criterions of insolvency or fraud, whereon to ground a commission; none other can be admitted by inference or analogy. Therefore it is not an act of bankruptcy for a trader secretly to convey his goods out of his house, and conceal them, to prevent their being taken in execution, nor to give money for notice, when a writ should come into the Sheriff's office. 1 Ld. Raym. 725: Bull. N. P. 40. So if a trader procure his goods fraudulently to be taken in execution, or makes a fraudulent sale of them, is not an act of bankruptcy, though void against creditors. 4 Burr. 2478: Cowp. 429.

Many of the acts of bankruptcy above described are in themselves equivocal, and capable of being explained by circumstances; for to bring them within the purview and meaning of the statute, it is absolutely necessary they should be done to defraud and delay creditors from recovering their just debts.

The better to obtain a clear and comprehensive view of the decisions on this part of the subject, each act of bankruptcy on which any question appears to have been raised, shall be considered separately; promising that the statutes of bankrupts are local, and do not extend to acts done in foreign countries, or other dominions of Great Britain. Cowp. 398.

Departing the realm, will not be an act of bankruptcy unless done with a view of defrauding or delaying creditors; but if it appear that they are in fact delayed, by such absence, it will be the same as if the original departure was fraudulent. Bull. N. P. 39: Com. Dig. tit. Bankrupt (C. 1): 1 Atk. 196, 240: Cooke's B. L. Vernon v. Hankey.

Beginning to keep house, or otherwise to absent himself. Denial to a creditor is prima facie evidence of this act of bankruptcy. But as the statute requires it to be with an intent to delay or defraud creditors; the mere denial is therefore capable of being explained by circumstances, such as sickness, company, business, or even the lateness of the hour at which the creditor calls.—Neither will an order by the debtor to his servant to deny him be sufficient. For where a trader gave orders to his servant to deny him to creditors on the 26th of May, but was not actually denied to a creditor till the 28th, the court held the actual denial and not the order constituted the act of bankruptcy. Bull. N. P. 39: 1 Atk. 201: Cooke cites Hawkes v. Sanders, T. 24 G. 3.

Keeping in another man's house or chamber, having no house of his own, or on ship board, is an act of bankruptcy; so a miller keeping his mill. Com. Dig. tit. Bankrupt.

Any keeping house for the purpose of delaying a creditor, even for a very short time, will be an act of bankruptcy; notwithstanding the party afterwards goes abroad and appears in publick. 2 Str. 809: 2 Term Rep. 59.

A general denial will not be sufficient, but it must be a denial to a creditor who has a debt at that time due; for if he is only a creditor by a note payable at a future day, a denial to him will be no act of bankruptcy. 7 Vin. 6. pl. 14.

It frequently happens that traders in declining circumstances call their creditors together to inspect their affairs; and determine whether a commission shall issue against them or not; and if thought advisable, it is usual for the trader to deny himself to a creditor, for the purpose of making an act of bankruptcy. However it seems doubtful how far such concerted denial will be an act of bankruptcy to affect the interest of third persons. See 1 Black. Rep. 441: Bull. N. P. 39.

Departing from his dwelling house may become an act of bankruptcy or not, according to the motive by which the party is impelled; if it be done with a view of defrauding his creditors, or even delaying them, and his absence be but for a single day, it will be an act of bankruptcy; and his very absenting himself is sufficient prima facie evidence of an intention to defraud or delay his creditors; but it must be a voluntary absenting and not by means of an arrest. 1 Salk. 110: 1 Burr. 484: 2 Str. 809: Green 53.

Suffering himself to be outlawed. An outlawry in Ireland does not make one a bankrupt; but in the county palatine of Durham it does. However an outlawry does not appear to be an act of bankruptcy, unless it be suffered with intent to defraud creditors. Com. Dig. tit. Bankrupt: Stone 124: Billing. 94: Good. 23: 1 Lev. 13.

Yielding himself to prison, is to be intended of a voluntary yielding for debt; and if a person capable of paying, will notwithstanding, from fraudulent motives, voluntarily go to prison, it is an act of bankruptcy. Bill. 95: Good. 25: Vin. tit. Creditor and Bankrupt 62.

Willingly

BANKRUPT III. 1

Willingly or fraudulently procuring his goods to be attached or sequestered, which is a plain and direct endeavour to dis-appoint his creditors of their security. 2 Comm. 478.—The attachment here meant, and which the legislature had in view, is that sort of attachment only by which suits are commenced; as in London and other places where that species of process is used. Cowp. 427.

Making any fraudulent conveyance of his lands or goods.—A fraudulent grant, to come within the meaning of the statute, must be by deed; therefore a fraudulent sale of goods not by deed, is no act of bankruptcy in itself; but being a scheme concerted at the eve of bankruptcy, to cheat innocent persons, in order to secure particular creditors, is such a fraud as shall render the sale void. 4 Burr. 2478.

A grant or conveyance fraudulent within Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, or 27 Eliz. c. 4, is an act of bankruptcy. Com. Dig.: Cooke.

A trader before he becomes a bankrupt may prefer one creditor to another; and may pay him his debt; or may make him a mortgage, with possession delivered, or may assign part of his effects; but a preference of one creditor to the rest, by conveying by deed all his effects to him, is a fraud upon the whole bankrupt law, and an act of bankruptcy. 1 Burr. 467.

Whether a transaction be fair or fraudulent, is often a question of law; it is the judgement of law upon facts and intents; but transactions valid as between the parties may be fraudulent by reason of covin, collusion, or confederacy to injure third persons. 2 Burr. 827: 1 Burr. 467.

Nor will the case be different, if the assignment is made to indemnify a surety; for the inconvenience and mischief arising from an undue preference is the same. Coke's B. L. 78: Dougl. 282.

An equal distribution among creditors who equally give a general personal credit to the bankrupt, is anxiously provided for, ever since the act 21 Jac. 1. c. 19; therefore when a bankrupt, by deed, conveys all his effects to trustees to pay all but one creditor, it is fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy. 1 Burr. 477.

But though a conveyance by deed of all a bankrupt's effects, or so much of his stock in trade, as to disable him from being a trader, or all his household goods, is itself an act of bankruptcy; a conveyance of part is very different; that may be publick, fair and honest. As a trader may sell, so may he openly transfer many kinds of property by way of security. What assignment of part will or will not be fraudulent, must depend on the particular circumstances of the case; but a colourable exception of a small part of his estate or effects, will not prevent the deed being declared fraudulent; for the law will never suffer an evasion to prevail to take a case out of the general rule, which is so essential to justice. 1 Black. Rep. 441: 2 Black. Rep. 362, 996: 1 Burr. 477.

An assignment by deed of part of a trader's effects, will be good, if made bonâ fide, and possession delivered; and indeed the not delivering possession being only evidence of fraud, may be explained by circumstances. 1 Burr. 478, 484. But an assignment even of only part of a trader's effects, to a fair creditor, will if done in contemplation of bankruptcy itself become the very act. 3 Wils. 47: Cowp. 124.

Procuring any protection except privilege of parliament. If any one be protected as the king's servant, it does not make him bankrupt. Shim. 21. By Stat. 7 Ann. c. 12 § 5, declaring the privilege of ambassadors and their train, it is expressly enacted, That no merchant, or other trader whatsoever, within the description of any of the statutes against bankrupts, shall have any benefit of that act.

Being arrested for debt and lying two months in prison. The statute does not make the mere being arrested an act of bankruptcy. The most substantial trader is liable to be arrested; but the presumption of insolvency arises from his lying in prison two months without being able to get bail; nor will this presumption be obviated by a mere formal bail, put in for the purpose of changing from one custody to another. Where bail is really put in, the bankruptcy only relates to the time of the surrender; but when it is only formal bail, it will have relation to the first arrest. 1 Burr. 437: see Salk. 109: Bull. N. P. 38.

Escape out of prison on arrest for 100l. or more. The act clearly intends such an escape, as shews he means to run away and thereby to defeat his creditors; it must be an escape against the will of the sheriff, for a man shall not be made a criminal, where he has not the least criminal intention to disobey any law. 1 Burr. 440.

It is not an act of bankruptcy for a banker to refuse payment, if he appears, and keeps his shop open. 7 Mod. 139: S. C. C. 42.

An act of bankruptcy if once plainly committed, can never be purged, even though the party continues to carry on a great trade. 2 Term Rep. 59. But if the act was doubtful, then circumstances may explain the intent of the first act, and shew it not to have been done with a view to defraud creditors. But if after a plain act of bankruptcy, a man pays off and compounds with all his creditors he becomes a new man. 1 Burr. 484: 1 Salk. 110.

III. THE PROCEEDINGS ON A COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT, depend entirely on the several statutes of bankruptcy; all which are blended together, and digested into a concise methodical order in 2 Comm. 480, and here adopted with additions.

1. There must be a petition to the Lord Chancellor by one creditor to the amount of 100*l.* or by two to the amount of 150*l.* or by three or more to the amount of 200*l.*; which debts must be proved by affidavit. (St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.) Upon which he grants a commission to such discreet persons as to him shall seem good, who are then styled commissioners of bankrupt. St. 13 Eliz. c. 7. of these commissioners there are several existing lists, which take the commissions of bankruptcy in turn. The petitioners, to prevent malicious applications, must be bound in a bond to the Lord Chancellor for 200*l.* to make the party amends in case they do not prove him a bankrupt. And if, on the other hand, they receive any money or effects from the bankrupt, as a recompence for suing out the commission, so as to receive more than their rateable dividends of the bankrupt's estate, they forfeit not only what they shall have so received, but their whole debt. These provisions are made, as well to secure persons in good credit from being damaged by malicious petitions, as to prevent knavish combinations between the creditors and bankrupt, in order to obtain the benefit of a commission. When the commission is awarded and issued, issued, the commissioners are to meet at their own expence, and take an oath for the due execution of their commission, and to be allowed a sum not exceeding 20*s. per diem*, each, at every sitting. And no commission of bankrupt shall abate, or be void by the death of the bankrupt subsequent to the commission. St. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. nor upon any demise of the crown. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. The granting a commission of bankruptcy is not discretionary, but a matter of right. 1 Vern. 153.

By Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 25, the petitioning creditor is directed at his own costs, to prosecute the commission until assignees shall be chosen; which costs are to be ascertained by the commissioners at the meeting for the choice of assignees; and are to be paid by the assignees to the petitioning creditor out of the first money or effects received by them, under the commission — But these costs may be taxed by a Master in Chancery, on petition to the Lord Chancellor. Cooke's B. L. c. 1. § 3.

Notwithstanding the statute 5 Geo. 2. has provided a remedy against maliciously suing out commissions of bankrupt, yet it is held not to take away the common law remedy by an action for damages, but that the party may proceed at law to obtain such redress for the injury he has sustained, as a jury may think he is entitled to. 3 Burr. 1418: 1 Atk. 144.

If more than two of the commissioners should die, by which means there would not be a sufficient number to execute it, or if the commission should be lost, it must be renewed; upon which renewal only half the fees are paid, and the commissioners under the renewed commission proceed from that step which was left incomplete by the former. Cooke B. L.

The commissioners are first to receive proof of the person's being a trader, and having committed some act of bankruptcy; and then to declare him a bankrupt, if proved so; and to give notice thereof in the Gazette, and at the same time to appoint three meetings. At one of these meetings, an election must be made of assignees or persons to whom the bankrupt's estate shall be assigned, and in whom it shall be vested for the benefit of the creditors; and assignees are to be chosen by the major part in value of the creditors who shall then have proved their debts; and one creditor, if to a sufficient amount may chuse himself assignee; but assignees may be, if necessary, originally appointed by the commissioners, and afterwards approved or rejected by the creditors: but no creditor shall be admitted to vote in the choice of assignees, whose debt on the balance of accounts does not amount to 10*l.* And at the third meeting at farthest, which must be on the forty-second day after the advertisement in the Gazette, (unless the time be enlarged by the Lord Chancellor; which it may not be for more than fifty days, unless on special circumstances of involuntary default by the bankrupt, 1 Atk. 222.) the bankrupt, upon notice also personally served upon him, or left at his usual place of abode, must surrender himself personally to the commissioners; which surrender (if voluntary) protects him from all arrests till his final examination is past: and he must thenceforth in all respects conform to the directions of the statutes of bankruptcy; or, in default of either surrender or conformity, he shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, and shall suffer death, and his goods and estate shall be distributed among his creditors. Stat. 5 Geo. II. c. 30.

In case the bankrupt absconds, or is likely to run away, between the time of the commission issued, and the last day of surrender, he may by warrant from any judge or justice of the peace be apprehended and committed to the county gaol, in order to be forth-coming to the commissioners; who are also empowered immediately to grant a warrant for seizing his goods and papers. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30: and see 1 Atk. 240.

When the bankrupt appears, the commissioners are to examine him, touching all matters relating to his trade and effects. They may also summon before them, and examine the bankrupt's wife; (St. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19: see 1 P. Wms. 610, 611;) and any other person whatsoever, as to all matters relating to the bankrupt's affairs. And in case any of them should refuse to answer, or shall not answer fully, to any lawful question, or shall refuse to subscribe such their examination, the commissioners may commit them to prison without bail, till they submit themselves and make and sign a full answer; the commissioners specifying in their warrant of commitment the question so refused to be answered. And any gaoler, permitting such person to escape, or go out of prison, shall forfeit 50*l.* to the creditors. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

The bankrupt, upon this examination, is bound upon pain of death to make a full discovery of all his estate and effects, as well in expectancy as possession, and how he has disposed of the same; together with all books and writings relating thereto: and is to deliver up all in his own power to the commissioners; (except the necessary apparel of himself, his wife, and children;) or, in case he conceals or embezzles any effects to the amount of 20*l.* or withholds any books or writings, with intent to defraud his creditors, he shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy; and his goods and estate shall be divided among his creditors. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. And unless it shall appear, that his inability to pay his debts arose from some casual loss, he may, upon conviction by indictment for such gross misconduct and negligence, be set upon the pillory for two hours, and have one of his ears nailed to the same and cut off. St. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19.

And so careful is the law to avoid any fraud, dishonesty or concealment, on the part of the bankrupt, that an agreement by the friends of the bankrupt, to pay a sum in consideration that the creditors would not examine him as to particular points, is void. Nerot v. Wallace, 3 Term Rep. 17.

After the time allowed to the bankrupt for such discovery is expired, any other person voluntarily discovering any part of his estate, before unknown to the assignees, shall be entitled to five per cent. out of the effects discovered, and such farther reward as the assignees and commissioners shall think proper. And any trustee wilfully concealing the estate of any bankrupt, after the expiration of the two and forty days, shall forfeit 100*l.* and double the value of the estate concealed, to the creditors. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Hitherto every thing is in favour of the creditors; and the law seems to be pretty rigid and severe against the bankrupt; but, in case he proves honest, it makes him full amends for all this rigor and severity. For if the bankrupt hath made an ingenuous discovery, (of the truth and sufficiency of which there remains no reason to doubt), and hath conformed in all points to the directions of the law; and, if in consequence thereof, the creditors, creditors, or four parts in five of them in number and value, (but none of them creditors for less than 20*l.*) will sign a certificate to that purport; the commissioners are then to authenticate such certificate under their hands and seals, and to transmit it to the Lord Chancellor, and he, or two of the judges whom he shall appoint, on oath made by the bankrupt that such certificate was obtained without fraud, may allow the same; or disallow it upon cause shewn by any of the creditors of the bankrupt. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

If no cause be shewn to the contrary, the certificate is allowed of course, and then the bankrupt is entitled to a decent and reasonable allowance out of his effects for his future support and maintenance, and to put him in a way of honest industry. This allowance is also in proportion to his former good behaviour, in the early discovery of the decline of his affairs, and thereby giving his creditors a larger dividend. For, if his effects will not pay one half of his debts, or ten shillings in the pound, he is left to the discretion of the commissioners and assignees, to have a competent sum allowed him, not exceeding three per cent. but if they pay ten shillings in the pound, he is to be allowed five per cent. if twelve shillings and six-pence, then seven and a half per cent. and if fifteen shillings in the pound, then the bankrupt shall be allowed ten per cent. provided, that such allowance do not in the first case exceed 200*l.* in the second 250*l.* and in the third 300*l.* St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Besides this allowance, he has also an indemnity granted him of being free and discharged for ever from all debts owing by him at the time he became a bankrupt; even though judgment shall have been obtained against him, and he lies in prison upon execution for such debts. And for that among other purposes, all proceedings in commissions of bankrupt are, on petition, to be entered of record, as a perpetual bar against actions to be commenced on this account; though in general, the production of the certificate, properly allowed, shall be sufficient evidence of all previous proceedings. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

The allowing the certificate of a bankrupt, will not discharge his sureties; but if a bankrupt obtains his certificate before his bail are fixed, it will discharge them; but if not till after they are fixed, they will remain liable notwithstanding the certificate, for it has no relation back; and till allowed it is nothing. And if the creditor proves his debt, with intent to obstruct the certificate, it does not preclude him from pursuing his legal remedies; and even if he had received his debt, or part of it, under the commission, still he might proceed to fix the bail who would be entitled to their remedy, so far as they are oppressed, by audita querela, or by motion. 1 Atk. 84: 1 Burr. 244: 2 Burr. 716; 2 Black. 812.

However, the bankrupt's certificate, obtained after judgment in an action upon a bail bond against the bankrupt himself, will not discharge the bail-bond, although it discharged the original debt, for it is a new and distinct cause of action. 1 Burr. 430: 2 Str. 1196: 1 Will. 41.

The certificate does not discharge a bankrupt from his own express collateral covenant, which does not run with the land 4 Burr. 2443.—Nor from a covenant to pay rent. 4 Term Rep. 94.

A bankrupt after a commission of bankruptcy sued out, may, in consideration of a debt due before the bankruptcy, and for which the creditor agrees to accept no dividend or benefit, under the commission, make such creditor a satisfaction, in part, or for the whole of his debt, by a new undertaking or agreement, and assumpsit will lie upon such new promise or undertaking. 1 Atk. 67.

If a bankrupt has his certificate, and an action be brought against him afterwards for a debt precedent to the commission, he may plead his certificate, or otherwise he is without relief. 2 Vern. 696, 697.

The common method of pleading is, generally, that he became a bankrupt within the intent and meaning of the statutes made and in force concerning bankrupts, and that the cause of action accrued before he became a bankrupt. This general plea is given by Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 7.

Though a creditor of a bankrupt under 20*l.* is excluded from assent or dissent to the certificate, yet as he is affected by the consequence of allowing the certificate, he hath right to petition, and shew any fraud against allowing the certificate. 7 Vin. Abr. 134. pl. 18

No allowance or indemnity shall be given to a bankrupt, unless his certificate be signed and allowed; and also if any creditor produces a fictitious debt, or is induced by money or notes to sign his certificate, and the bankrupt does not make discovery of it, but suffers the said creditors to be imposed upon, he loses all title to these advantages. St. 24 Geo. 2. c. 57. see Doug. 216, 673. Neither can he claim them, if he has given with any of his children above 100*l.* for a marriage portion, unless he had at that time sufficient left to pay all his debts, or if he has lost at any one time 5*l.* or in the whole 100*l.* within a twelvemonth before he became a bankrupt, by any manner of gaming or wagering whatsoever; or, within the same time has lost to the value of 100*l.* by stock jobbing.

Also to prevent the too common practice of frequent and fraudulent or careless breaking, a mark is set upon such as have been once cleared by a commission of bankrupt, or have compounded with their creditors, or have been delivered by an act of insolvency. Persons who have been once cleared by any of these methods, and afterwards become bankrupts again, unless they pay full 15*s.* in the pound, are only thereby indemnified as to the confinement of their bodies; but any future estate they shall acquire remains liable to their creditors, excepting their necessary apparel, household goods, and the tools and implements of their trades. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. But money gained by his trade or profession for the necessary maintenance of himself and family, may be recovered by action by an uncertificated bankrupt. Chippendale v. Tomlinson, Co. B. L.

2. By the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7. The commissioners shall have full power to dispose of all the bankrupt's lands and tenements, which he had in his own right at the time when he became a bankrupt, or which shall descend or come to him at any time afterwards, before his debts are satisfied or agreed for; [and all lands and tenements which were purchased by him jointly with his wife or children to his own use, (or such interest therein as he may lawfully part with,) or purchased with any other person, upon secret trust, for his own use;] and cause them to be appraised to their full value, and to sell the same, by deed indented and enrolled, or divide them proportionably among his creditors. This statute expressly included not only freehold, but customary and copyhold lands and the lord of the manor is thereby bound to admit the assignee, (See Com. Car. 568: 1 Atk. 96.) but did not extend to estates tail, farther than for the bankrupt's life; nor to equities of redemption on a mortgaged estate, wherein the bankrupt has no legal interest, but only an equitable reversion. Whereupon the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. enacts, that the commissioners shall be empowered to sell or convey, by deed indented and enrolled, any lands or tenements of the bankrupt, wherein he shall be seised of an estate-tail in possession, remainder or reversion, unless the remainder or reversion thereof shall be in the crown; and that such sale shall be good against all such issue in tail, remainder-men and reversioners, whom the bankrupt himself might have barred by a common recovery, or other means; and that all equities of redemption upon mortgaged estates, shall be at the disposal of the commissioners; for they shall have power to redeem the same, as the bankrupt himself might have done, and after redemption to sell them. And the commissioners may sell a copyhold enailed by custom. Stone, 127: Billing. 148. And also, by this and a former act, 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, all fraudulent conveyances to defeat the intent of these statutes are declared void; but it is provided, that no purchaser bona fide, for a good or valuable consideration, shall be affected by the bankrupt-laws, unless the commission be sued forth within five years after the act of bankruptcy committed. See Cooke's B. L. c. 8.

If there be two joint-tenants, and the one becomes bankrupt and dies, Billinghurst is of opinion the bankrupt's part shall be sold, and that there shall be no survivorship; because the bankrupt's moiety is bound by the statutes, and also the bankrupt had power to sell the same in his life-time, and might depart with it. And by Stat. 1 Jac. c. 15, (See ante III. 1.) The Commissioners after the bankrupt's death, may proceed in execution, in and upon the commission, for and concerning the offender's lands, tenements, &c. in such sort as if the offender had been living; which they cannot do, if the survivorship is held to take place.

If the bankrupt be a joint-tenant in fee, for life or years, the commissioners may sell a moiety. So if he be seised in right of his wife, they may sell during the coverture. 1 Com. Dig. 530.

In case of a patron becoming bankrupt, the commissioners may sell the advowson of the living; but if the church be void at the time of the sale, the vendee shall not present to the void turn, but the bankrupt himself, because the void turn of a church is not valuable. 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 4th ed. p. 125.

The commissioners may sell offices of inheritance and for terms of years; but an office concerning the execution of justice (and therefore within 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16,) cannot be sold. 1 Atk. 213. But a place that does not concern the execution of justice, but only the police, may be sold. 1 Atk. 210, 215.

If a mortgage is made by a bankrupt, tenant in tail, without suffering a recovery, the assignees shall take advantage of this defect, and hold the land clear of the mortgage. 1 Will. 276.

The commissioners may assign a possibility of right belonging to the bankrupt. 3 P. Wms. 132.

When assignees are chosen under a commission, all the estate and effects of the bankrupt, whether they be goods or actual possession, or debts, contracts, and legacies, and other choses in action, are vested in them by assignment; (but until the assignment the property is not transferred out of the bankrupt;) and every new acquisition previous to the certificate will vest in the assignees; but as to future real estates, there must be a new assignment of them. 1 Atk. 253: Billing. 118: 1 P. Wms. 385, 6.

The commissioners, by their warrant, may cause any house or tenement of the bankrupt to be broke open, in order to enter and seize the same. See 2 Shew. 247.

When the assignees are chosen or approved by the creditors, the commissioners are to assign every thing over to them: and the property of every part of the estate is thereby as fully vested in them, as it was in the bankrupt himself, and they have the same remedies to recover it. 12 Mod. 324.

The commissioners in England may sell the bankrupt's goods in Ireland; and, (notwithstanding a dictum of Lord Mansfield to the contrary, See Dougl. 151,) it seems now decided, that, by the assignment of the commissioners, all the bankrupt's property, whether in England or abroad, is conveyed to the use of his creditors. See Hunter v. Potts, 4 Term Rep. 182. and Cooke's B. L. c. 8. § 10.

If a man sends bills of exchange, or consigns a cargo, and the person to whom he sends them, has paid the value before, though he did not know of the sending them at that time, the sending of them to the carrier, will be sufficient to prevent the assignees from taking these goods back, in case of an intervening act of bankruptcy. 4 Burr. 2239.

But if the goods were sent, in contemplation of bankruptcy, and to give a preference to a former creditor, if the act of bankruptcy is committed before the creditor receives the property, and assents to it, the commissioners may assign it, as part of the bankrupt's effects, and it will vest in the assignees. 4 Burr. 2235.

All questions of preference turn upon the action being complete, before an act of bankruptcy committed, for then the property is transferred; otherwise an act of bankruptcy intervening, vests the property in the hands and disposal of the law. If a man were to make a payment, but the evening before he becomes bankrupt, independent of the act of parliament, and in a course of dealing and trade, it would be good. Where an act is done, that is right to be done, and the single motive is not to give an unjust preference, the creditor will have a preference. Corup. 123.

If a merchant consigns goods to a trader, and before their arrival, the consignee becomes bankrupt, if the merchant can prevent the goods getting into the bankrupt's hands, the commissioners' assignment will not affect them. 2 Mern. 203: 1 Atk. 248: Corup. 296.

The future profits arising from a bankrupt's personal labour are not subject to the assignment. Chippendale v. Tomlinson, 7. 25 Geo. 3. B. R.

The property vested in the assignees is the whole that the bankrupt had in himself, at the time he committed the first act of bankruptcy, or that has been vested in him since, before his debts are satisfied or agreed for; therefore when the commission is awarded, the commission, and the property of the assignees, shall have a relation, or reference, back to the first and original act of bankruptcy. 4 Burr. 33. Inasmuch that all transactions of

of the bankrupt, are from that time, absolutely null and void; either with regard to the alienation of his property, or the receipt of his debts, from such as are privy to his bankruptcy; for they are no longer his property, or his debts, but those of the future assignees. Therefore even if a banker pay the draft of a trader keeping cash with him after knowledge of an act of bankruptcy, the assignees may recover the money. 2 Term Rep. 113; 3 Bro. C. R. 313; Vernon v. Hankey, and see 2 Term Rep. 287. And, if an execution be sued out, but not served and executed on the bankrupt's effects till after the act of bankruptcy, it is void as against the assignees. But the king is not bound by this fictitious relation, nor is within the statutes of bankrupts; 1 Atk. 262; W. Jones 202; 2 Show. 480; for if, after the act of bankruptcy committed, and before the assignment of his effects, an extent issues for the debt of the crown, the goods are bound thereby. Vin. Abr. tit. Creditor and Bankrupt 104; Cooke's B. L. c. 14. § 7.

As these acts of bankruptcy however may sometimes be secret to all but a few, and it would be prejudicial to trade to carry this notion to it's utmost length, it is provided by Stat. 19 Geo. II. c. 32, that no money paid by a bankrupt to a bond fide or real creditor, in a course of trade, even after an act of bankruptcy done, shall be liable to be refunded. Nor (by Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15,) shall any debtor of a bankrupt that pays him his debt, without knowing of his bankruptcy, be liable to account for it again. The intention of this relative power being only to reach fraudulent transactions, and not to distress the fair trader.

Sale of goods by a bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy is not merely void, the contract is good between the parties; but it may be avoided by the commissioners or assignees at pleasure; therefore they may either bring in re for the goods, as supposing the contract may be void, or may bring debt or assumpsit for the value, which affirms the contract. 3 Salk. 59. pl. 2; 2 Term Rep. 143; 4 Term Rep. 216, 7.

And so if a bankrupt on the eve of bankruptcy, fraudulently deliver goods to a creditor. 4 Term Rep. 211.

The assignees may pursue any legal method of recovering the property vested in them, by their own authority; but cannot commence a suit in equity, nor compound any debts owing to the bankrupt, nor refer any matters to arbitration, without the consent of the creditors, or the major part of them, in value, at a meeting to be held in pursuance of notice in the Gazette. St. 5 Geo. II. c. 30 § 38: See 1 Atk. 91, 107, 210, 253; Cooke's B. L. c. 14.

When they have got in all the effects they can reasonably hope for, and reduced them to ready money, the assignees must, after 4, and within 12 months after the commission issued, give 21 days notice to the creditors of a meeting for a dividend or distribution; at which time they must produce their accounts, and verify them upon oath, if required: [and under St. 5 Geo. II. c. 30. § 6, by affidavit if living in the country, and if Quakers by affirmation.] And then the commissioners shall direct a dividend to be made, at so much in the pound, to all creditors who have before proved, or shall then prove their debts. This dividend must be made equally, and in a rateable proportion, to all the creditors, according to the quantity of their debts; no regard being had to the quality of them. Mortgages indeed, for which the creditor has a real security in his own hands, are entirely safe, for the commission of bankrupt reaches only the equity of redemption. Fincb. Rep. 466; 2 Rep. 25. So are also personal debts, where the creditor has a chattel in his hands, as a pledge or pawn for the payment, or has taken the debtor's lands or goods in execution. But, otherwise, judgments, and recognizances, (both which are debts of record, and therefore at other times have a priority,) and also bonds and obligations by deed or special instrument, (which are called debts by specialty, and are usually the next in order,) these are all put on a level with debts by mere simple contract, and all paid pari passu. St. 21 Jac. c. 19. Nay, so far is this matter carried, that, by the express provision of the St. 7 Geo. 1. c. 31, (See St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 22: Cowp. 243.) debts not due at the time of the dividend made, as bonds or notes of hand payable at a future day certain, shall be proved and paid equally with the rest, allowing a discount or drawback, in proportion. Ld. Raym. 1549; St. 4. 949, 1211; 2 P. Wms. 396; 3 Will. 17.

And insurances and obligations upon bottomry or respondentia, bond fide made by the bankrupt, though forfeited after the commission is awarded, shall be looked upon in the same light as debts contracted before any act of bankruptcy. St. 19 Geo. 2. c. 32; also annuity-bonds though not forfeited at the time of the bankruptcy. Cowp. 540. but see 2 Blac. R. 110. b.—And Policies of Insurances for Life. Dougl. (2d edit.) 166.

Within eighteen months after the commission issued, a second and final dividend shall be made, unless all the effects were exhausted by the first. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. It is the duty of assignees to make a dividend as early as possible after the time given by statute. And if they neglect to do so, and keep the money in their own hands they will be liable to pay interest for it. 1 Atk. 90; Coke B. L. c. 7. § 3.

And if any surplus remains after selling his estates, and paying every creditor his full debt, it shall be restored to the bankrupt. St. 13 El. c. 7. This is a case which sometimes happens to men in trade, who involuntarily, or at least unwarily commit acts of bankruptcy, by absconding and the like, while their effects are more than sufficient to pay their creditors. And, if any suspicious or malevolent creditor will take the advantage of such acts, and sue out a commission, the bankrupt has no remedy, but must quietly submit to the effects of his own imprudence, except that, upon satisfaction made to all the creditors, the commission may be superfeded. 2 Ch. Ca. 144. This case may also happen, when a knave is desirous of defrauding his creditors, and is compelled by a commission, to do them that justice, which otherwise he wanted to evade. And therefore, though the usual rule is, that all interest on debts carrying interest shall cease from the time of issuing the commission, yet, in case of a surplus left after payment of every debt, such interest shall again revive, and be chargeable on the bankrupt, or his representatives. 1 Atk. 244.

The Superfedeas is a writ issuing under the great seal, to supersede the commission, and this writ may be issued at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor, when the creditors of the bankrupt agree to supersede the commission; or because the party appears not to have been a trader; that the party had not committed an act of bankruptcy; that the commission was not opened till three months after it issued; or that he has paid all his creditors. 1 Atk. 154: 2 Cha. Ca. 192: Sil. Ca. Cha. 46: 1 Atk. 135: 1 Atk. 244: Ex parte Nutt, 1 Atk. 102.

Though the usual course is for the Lord Chancellor to order a feigned issue to try the bankruptcy at law, yet if it appears plainly to have been taken out fraudulently and vexatiously, the court will at once supersede the commission, and order the petitioning creditor's bond to be assigned. 1 Atk. 128, 144, 218.

IV. 1. The acts of parliament relating to bankrupts, being made for the relief of creditors, none but a creditor could at any time have taken out a commission; and now he must have a legal demand to the amount specified in St. 5 Geo. 2 c. 30. § 23. But a debt in equity will in no circumstances be a foundation for a commission; therefore if a legal demand is not in its own nature assignable, the assignee, notwithstanding his equitable claim, cannot be a petitioning creditor, Forrest, 248: Ch. Ca. 191: Freem. 270: 1 Atk. 147: 2 Vez. 407: 2 Stra. 899: 1 P. Wms. 783.

It is generally understood, that the commission must issue on the petition of some creditor capable of claiming relief under it; and therefore that if the debt of the petitioning creditor appears to have been contracted subsequent to a secret act of bankruptcy committed by the trader, no commission ought to be granted upon his petition, 2 Stra. 744, 6: 1042: 1 Atk. 73.

A debt at law, notwithstanding the statute of Limitations has incurred, will support a commission; for the statute does not extinguish the debt, but the remedy, and the least hint will revive it. 2 Black. Rep. 703.

It has been determined, that a creditor, by notes bought in at 10s. in the pound, was a creditor for the full sum, and might take out a commission. 1 P. Wms. 783.

A creditor, before the party entered into trade, may on account of such debt, sue out a commission, but a creditor for a debt contracted after leaving off trade, cannot. But when a commission is sued out, those creditors who have become such since the quitting trade, may come in and share the dividend with those who were creditors before or during the trading, provided they are not barred by a prior act of bankruptcy. 12 Mod. 159: Ld. Raym. 28: 1 Sid. 411: Dougl. 282.

If a creditor has his debtor in execution, he cannot petition for a commission of bankruptcy; for the body of the debtor being in execution, is a satisfaction of the debt, in point of law. Therefore where a commission had issued on the petition of a creditor who had the bankrupt in execution, it was upon that account superseded. 3 Wils. 271: 1 Stra. 653.

Nor has the petitioning creditor the ordinary election to sue the bankrupt at law, or come under the commission as other creditors have; (See post. 2.) for if he was to elect to proceed at law, the commission must be superseded, which would affect those creditors who had proved debts under it. 1 Atk. 154.

2. Debts may be proved at any of the public meetings appointed by the commissioners; the usual proof is the oath of the creditor, which if not objected to by the bankrupt himself, or any of those creditors, is generally esteemed sufficient; but if any objection is raised, the demand must be further substantiated by evidence. For though the creditor should make a positive oath of debt, the commissioners, if they conceive themselves have just grounds to doubt its fairness, ought to admit it only as a claim; and if it is not made out to their satisfaction, it may be rejected. 1 Atk. 71, 221.

Upon the principle of equality among the creditors proving under the commission, the privilege of debtors to come in and prove their debts and bankrupts to be discharged therefrom, is co-extensive and commensurate; therefore a man shall not prove a debt and proceed in an action at law, at the same time. However, the court will not absolutely stop him from bringing an action, but put him to his election; and should he elect to proceed at law, he will still be allowed to prove his debt, for the purpose of assenting to, or dissenting from the certificate; which permission is absolutely requisite, to make his remedy at law of any avail, for should the bankrupt procure his certificate, he will be thereby discharged from that action, as well as from all debts contracted before the act of bankruptcy. 1 Atk. 83, 119, 220: 1 P. Wms. 552.

If the creditor, before he proves his debt, proceeds at law against the bankrupt, he cannot be obliged to make his election till a dividend is declared. And where the creditor has already proceeded at law, he is not at liberty to come in, and prove his debt under the commission, without relinquishing his proceedings at law; unless by order from the great seal, for the purpose of assenting to, or dissenting from the certificate. See 1 Atk. 219: 2 Black. Rep. 1317.

But the modern determinations, supported by some of earlier date, have mostly put the creditor to his election before a dividend, provided a reasonable time is afforded the creditor to inform himself of the bankrupt's affairs. Cooke's B. L. c. 6 § 2.

The being chosen assignee, will not prevent the creditor from suing the bankrupt at law, if he has not proved his debt; for in that case he can only be considered as a creditor at large; and even if he has proved his debt and chosen himself assignee, he may still elect to proceed at law, and be discharged as a creditor under the commission. 1 Atk. 153, 221. But a petitioning creditor has not this election; see ante 1.

A debt made void by statute, ought not to be permitted to be proved; as a debt on an usurious contract; and though the rule of the court of Chancery is, upon a bill to be relieved against demands of usurious interest, not to make void the whole debt, but to make the party pay what is really due; yet in a commission of bankruptcy, the assignees have a right to insist that the whole is void, as an usurious contract. And unless the assignees and creditors submit to pay what is really due, the Lord Chancellor has not power to order it; and applications of this nature have been frequently refused. 2 Vez. 489: 1 Atk. 125: see Dougl. 716.

If the bankrupt's estate is in arrear for taxes, the collector, when he comes to prove the debt, must produce his authority, that the commissioners may judge of the legality of it. Corporations usually have a clerk or treasurer who is the person to prove debts due to them; he must however produce his appointment under seal to the commissioners. Every security that a creditor has for his debt, must be produced at the time of his proving, when the commissioners will mark them as having been exhibited.

exhibited. In the same manner, any person acting for another, must produce his authority to the commissioners, and they will mark them as exhibits. Coke's Bankrupt Law. One inhabitant of a parish may prove for himself and the other inhabitants. 1 Atk. 111: and see Coke's B. L. c. 4. § 1.

In case of debts uncertain in point of liquidation, as between two merchants in balancing accounts; this matter rests upon a claim to ascertain the sum that was due at the time of the bankruptcy. So where a creditor cannot ascertain his debt with certainty sufficient to enable him to swear to it, or is not able in other respects satisfactorily to substantiate it; or where the agent of a creditor cannot produce his authority, and in many other cases where there appears a probable foundation of a demand, though not sufficiently made out, it is usual for the commissioners to suffer a claim to be entered; but that will not entitle the party to a dividend, which he cannot receive without completely proving his debt. If a claim is not substantiated in a reasonable time, the commissioners may strike it out; and they generally do so before a dividend is declared, unless sufficient reason is offered to them for prolonging the time; but the creditor is notwithstanding afterwards at liberty to prove his debt, and receive his share upon any future dividends. However in such cases where there has not been gross neglect, the Chancellor will make an order that such creditor shall be paid his proportion of the first dividend out of the money in the assignees' hands, upon condition that it does not break in upon any former dividend. 3 Wils. 271: Coke's B. L.

Aliens as well as denizens may come in as creditors; for all statutes concerning bankrupts extend to aliens. Hob. 287: see Stat. 21 Jac. c. 19.

3. The distinction of debts payable in futuro on a day certain, and debts depending upon contingency, has given rise to frequent questions, whether the bankrupt's wife or her trustees should be admitted to prove the sum settled on her by marriage-articles, under a commission against her husband.

Lord Hardwicke, on a petition ex parte Winchester, (1 Atk. 117: Dav. 535,) stated the distinctions of the several cases. The first head of cases is where a bond is given by a husband to pay a sum of money in his life-time to trustees, to be laid out in trust for himself and his wife, or children; and in case the husband survives, to the use of himself; if in this case the husband becomes a bankrupt, this being a debt due in his life-time, and before the bankruptcy, the court will let in the trustees to prove such debt, according to the trusts.

The second head is, where a person gives a covenant to pay to trustees a sum of money for the benefit of the wife or children after his death; and also a judgment by way of collateral security to such covenant, and afterwards becomes bankrupt; this being a debt at law, may be proved under the commission.

The third is, where the father gives a bond to his intended son-in-law on the marriage of his daughter, to pay a sum of money after his death and interest in the mean time, on particular days and times, and there is a breach of the condition of the bond, and the father becomes bankrupt; this is a legal debt not depending on a contingency, and therefore may be proved.

The fourth head is, where a man covenants in consideration of a marriage portion paid him, for his heirs, executors and administrators to pay to trustees a sum of money after his decease, in case his wife survives him. This case depending on a contingency, is materially different from the others; because in those there was a remedy at law before the commission issued; and it seems now to be settled, that on a contingent provision for a wife, she cannot be admitted as a creditor. 3 Wils. 271: see 2 P. Wms. 497: 2 Ld. Raym. 1346: 7 Fin. 72. pl. 7: Dav. 254, 524: 1 Atk. 113, 115, 120.—And this though it be particularly conditioned or provided that such debt shall be proveable.—Ex parte Hill; ex parte Matthews; Coke's B. L.

But notwithstanding the general rule seems to be thus established, the case will be different, if the assignees are obliged to come into equity to compel the performance of a trust; for then as they require equity, they shall be obliged to do equity, and secure the settlement to the wife. 1 Atk. 114: 2 Vern. 662.

4. Contingent debts are said not to be included in Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 31. because it being uncertain whether they will ever become due or not, it is impossible to make such abatement of 5 l. per cent. as that act directs, and therefore they cannot be within it. And this doctrine has been constantly followed and admitted as appears by the cases allowed, in the division (3) immediately preceding; the principle therefore, that contingent creditors cannot be admitted to prove their debts, where the act of bankruptcy is prior to the happening of the contingency, is clear and indisputable. 1 Atk. 118. But many questions have arisen as to what debts shall be said to be contingent within the meaning of the rule.

One having only a cause of action cannot come in and prove it as a debt; because the damages that may be given are considered merely as contingent; even in case of a bond of indemnity, where the condition is broken. 3 Wils. 270: 2 Str. 1160. And this though the surety is called upon and liable to pay the debt, if it is not actually paid. 1 Term Rep. 599.

So if a lessee plows up meadow ground, for which he is bound to pay the lessor a certain sum of money as a penalty, that penalty cannot be proved as a debt under the commission: nor if a man be bound in an obligation, in a certain sum to perform covenants, and the obligor before he becomes a bankrupt, breaks those covenants, the obligee cannot prove this as a debt. If a bond by a principal and surety has not been forfeited, before the surety became bankrupt, the debt cannot be proved under his commission, but he may be sued upon it notwithstanding his certificate. Doug. 155: 3 Wils. 270. The bankruptcy of the lessee is no bar to an action on covenant (made before his bankruptcy) brought against him for rent due after the bankruptcy. 4 Term Rep. 94. But when judgment is obtained in any action, it then becomes such a debt as may be proved, and the judgment, when signed, relates to the verdict. Id. 2 Black. 1317.

Where a man undertakes to pay a sum of money for another, his undertaking alone will not create a debt capable of being proved under a commission; and if an act of bankruptcy intervenes between the undertaking, and the actual payment, it can never be proved, and the creditor can only resort to the bankrupt personally. But if the party engaging to pay the debt of another, is taken in execution for that debt, his imprisonment is considered as a payment and satisfaction of the debt sufficient to give him a right of proving under the commission. Cowp. 525: 3 Wils. 13.

If the party engaging to secure the debt of another himself becomes bankrupt before that debt is payable by the principal, the creditor cannot prove under his commission. Cowp. 460.

Where a man becomes bail for another, it is considered as a contingent debt. And if the bail commit an act of bankruptcy before the judgment, it cannot be proved under the commission. 2 Str. 1043: 3 Wils. 262.

5. The general rule as to common annuities is, that where one is entitled to an annuity from another, which is not a rent charge on land, or on a specific part of the grantor's estate, but personal, to be paid by him, who afterwards becomes bankrupt, it is only a general demand on him and his estate; and there is nothing a debt on his estate but the arrears of the annuity at the time of the bankruptcy, unless the penalty of the annuity-bond has become forfeited; for otherwise the payments accruing afterwards became a debt after the bankruptcy, and cannot be proved. But where there has been a forfeiture prior to the bankruptcy, in order to prevent the injustice of admitting the creditor only to prove the arrears, and the great inconvenience that would ensue if the annuity should be received from time to time, as an accruing debt on the estate, by which means the division of the estate would be perpetual, and there could be no final dividend during the annuitant's life, the court of Chancery puts it in another shape of setting a value on the annuity, because it was only a general personal demand. And in setting this value, consideration must be had of the time the annuitant has enjoyed it. 2 Vez. 490: 1 Atk. 251: 2 Black. 1107.

In case of an apprentice where the master becomes bankrupt, commissioners recommend it to the creditors to allow him a gross sum out of the estate for the purpose of binding him to another master; as it would be hard to make him come in as a creditor under the commission; but this though it is equitable and just, must be considered as an indulgence, and not a right; for the court can only order him to be admitted as a creditor. 1 Atk. 149, 261.

A bond though it be not assignable at law, may be proved under the commission by the assignee; but the assignor must join in the deposition that he hath not received the debt or any part thereof, or any security or satisfaction for the same. Cooke's B. L.

In bills of exchange and promissory notes, there is a double contract; the first between the principal debtor and creditor; and also an implied contract, that the principal debtor will indemnify the surety, so that if the creditor, the indorsee, comes upon the surety the indorser, the indorser or his assignees may come in against the original or principal debtor. This is the case between principal and surety, and is likewise the case where an indorser is barely a surety, and no consideration is paid by the original drawer. 1 Atk. 123.

The holder of a bill of exchange is entitled to prove the debt under the commission against the drawer, acceptor and indorser, and to receive a dividend from each, upon his whole debt, provided he does not in the whole receive more than 20s. in the pound. 1 Atk. 107. But in this case if the creditor has actually received part of his debt under a commission, he can only prove the remainder under another. See 2 P. Wms. 89, 407: 1 Atk. 109, 129: 2 Vez. 114, 5.

Creditors are not allowed to prove interest on notes or bills, unless it is expressed in the body of them. But the creditor may prove the full sum for which the notes were given, notwithstanding he received 5% per cent. discount. Cooke's B. L.: 1 Atk. 151.

A bill living with the father and earning money for itself, may, if the father receives that money, be admitted a creditor under the commission against him. 2 Vez. 675.

A landlord having a legal right to distrain goods while they remain on the premises, the issuing a commission of bankrupt against the tenant, and the messenger's possession of the tenant's goods, will not hinder him from distraining for rent; for it is not such a custodia legis as an execution; and even there the law allows the landlord a year's rent. And the assignment of the commissioners of the bankrupt's estate and effects is only changing the property of the goods, and while upon the premises they remain liable to be distrained. 1 Atk. 102, 3, 4.

And as a creditor after proving his debt may elect to abide by such proof, or relinquish it and proceed at law, so a landlord who is considered in a higher degree than a common creditor, may make his election to waive his proof, in his distress for rent. Cooke's B. L.—But particular circumstances may deprive the landlord of this right; as if he neglects to distrain, and suffers the goods to be sold by the assignees. 1 Atk. 104: See 1 Bro. C. R. 427. And a landlord may distrain before the end of the term by custom, as in Norfolk. 2 Term Rep. 600. A proviso in a lease, that it shall be void in case of the bankruptcy of the lessee is valid. 2 Term Rep. 133.

If an executor becomes bankrupt, as he acts in auspicio, his bankruptcy does not take away the right of executorship; and the legatees or creditors of the testator cannot prove under the commission, unless the bankrupt has committed a devastavit.—But though a bankrupt executor may strictly be the proper hand to receive the assets, yet if his assignees have received any of the property, the Chancellor may appoint a receiver, with whom the assignees shall account: 1 Atk. 101: or direct the bankrupt himself to be admitted a creditor for what he may be intitled to as executor, and order the dividend to be paid into the Bank. See Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 3. The effects possessed by a bankrupt as executor, are not liable to the assignment of the commissioners. 3 Burr. 1369.

Commissioners after a man becomes a bankrupt compute interest upon debts no lower than the date of the commission.—And a specialty creditor cannot have interest beyond the penalty contained in his security; but a creditor by note carrying interest may receive the full amount. 1 Atk. 79, 80.

If a bankrupt is a factor, and goods are consigned to him or his order, which come to his possession; though he has the power of immediately selling them, and taking the money, in which case the consignor can only come as a general creditor upon his estate, yet notwithstanding the legal property the factor had in, and power over them, if they remain in specie in his hands, they shall be delivered to the principal, who has a lien upon upon them as his own property; and the bankrupt only as agent and trustee for him.—And even where the factor had sold the goods, and taken notes for them, it has been determined that the original owner had a specific lien upon, and was entitled to the notes. 2 Vern. 586: 1 Atk. 232.

6. If the assignees misbehave in the trust reposed in them, they may be removed by petition to the Chancellor. So if an assignee himself becomes bankrupt, that will be a sufficient ground for his removal. 3 Atk. 97: 7 Vin. Abr. 77.—Or if the commissioners act improperly at the choice of assignees. When an assignee is removed he must join with the old assignee, and the commissioners in making an assignment to the new assignee. The common practice, where only one assignee is removed, is, to make him join with his companion in assigning to the new assignee, and to the one retained, whereby a man is made to convey to himself, which appears absurd. The most feasible plan seems for the old assignees to convey to a third person, in trust, that he should immediately re-convey to the old and new appointed assignee. See Cooke's B. L.

Assignees are in the nature of trustees, and where they employ an agent to receive or pay money, and he abuses this confidence, an assignee cannot be distinguished from any other trustee, who if his agent deceive him, must answer over to the cestui que trusts. For the chief consideration of the creditors in the choice of assignees is certainly the ability of the persons, that they may be responsible for the sums they receive from the bankrupt's estate. 1 Atk. 88, 90.

But the negligence of one assignee shall not hurt another joint assignee, where he is not at all privy to any private and personal agreement entered into by his brother assignee. Id. ib.

If an assignee becomes a bankrupt, and has applied any of the money received by him in that capacity, to his own use, the commissioners are to be considered as specialty creditors; because the assignees executed a counterpart of the assignment to them, and the agreement being under hand and seal, makes it in the nature of a specialty debt, and therefore they may come upon his real estate. 1 Atk. 89.

7. If there is a joint commission against two partners, they must be each found bankrupts; and though one of them should die, the commission may still go on; but if one of the joint-traders be dead, at the time of the taking out the commission, it abates, and is absolutely void. Cooke's B. L.

It was formerly the practice, where there were several partners, to take out separate commissions against each, as well as a joint-commission; but this has been since discountenanced, it being the common course of the court upon petition, to make an order for the separate creditors to come in and prove their debts under the joint commission; and that the assignees should keep distinct accounts of the several estates; and this may be done, because the assignment in the case of a joint commission is of the whole estate. But on the other hand, where separate commissions are taken out against joint-traders, it seems to have been the opinion that joint-creditors could not prove their debts under the separate commission, except for the purpose of assenting to, or dissenting from, the certificate; but that they must proceed to take out a joint-commission. Cooke's B. L. 1 Atk. 138, 38. But it seems now to be considered that a joint-commission cannot legally be supported while there is a separate one subsisting; because a trader having been declared a bankrupt, the whole of his property is assigned under the first commission, and till he obtains his certificate he is incapable of trading or contracting for his own benefit. However it is certain that in practice joint-commissions are taken out after the parties have been declared bankrupts under separate commissions; by which means great expence is saved, and the joint effects disposed to better advantage; and therefore in a fair case and where it can be made appear that the bankrupt's estate will be benefited by prosecuting a joint commission, the Lord Chancellor, to make it valid, will supersede the prior separate one. Crop. 824: 1 Atk. 252: Cooke's B. L. c. 1. § 2.

Joint creditors are entitled to a distribution of the joint or partnership estate, without the separate creditors being permitted to participate with them; but notwithstanding separate creditors are not entitled to share the dividend of the joint property, until the joint-creditors have received 20s. in the pound, yet they are upon petition, let in to prove their respective separate debts under the joint-commission, paying contribution to the charge of it; and as the joint or partnership estate is in the first place to be applied to pay the joint or partnership debts, so in like manner the separate estate shall be in the first place applied to pay all the separate debts. This is settled as a rule of convenience; and it is resolved, that if there be a surplus of the joint-estate besides what will pay the joint-creditors, the same shall be allotted in due proportions to the separate estate of each partner, and applied to pay the separate creditors. And on the other hand if there be a surplus of the separate estate, beyond what will satisfy the separate creditors, it shall go to supply any deficiency that may remain as to the joint-creditors. 1 Atk. 68: 2 Vern. 706. Dav. 373: 2 P. Wms. 501.

Where persons in trade [e.g. A. B. and C.] have been connected together in various partnerships, and a joint-commission taken out against them all, an order has been made for keeping distinct accounts of the different partners, as well as of the separate estates of each partner. But when there have been various partnerships [e.g. A. & B. and A. & C.] and a joint-commission is taken out against one firm, in which some of the parties were not engaged, there can be only the common order for keeping the distinct accounts of the joint and separate estate. Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 15.

On a joint-debt, if separate commissions are taken out against the joint-debtors, the creditor may prove his whole debt, under each commission, and receive a dividend so as he does not obtain more than 20s. in the whole. Cooke's B. L.

Where there is a joint and several creditor, he must according to the rule of the court now firmly established, make his election whether he will come in upon the joint or the separate estate; that is, which he will come in upon in preference; for which-ever he may elect, he will be entitled to come in upon the surplus of the other, if there should be any. And in order to make his election, he must have a reasonable time to enquire into the state of the different funds, but he is not intitled to defer such election until a dividend be declared. Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 15.

An act of bankruptcy by one partner, is to many purposes a dissolution of the partnership, by virtue of the relation in the statutes, which avoids all the acts of a bankrupt, from the day of the bankruptcy; and from the necessity of the thing, all his property being vested in the assignees who cannot carry on a trade. But after a dissolution of partnership by agreement, by an execution, or by a bankruptcy, the partner out of possession of the partnership effects, has the same lien, on any new goods brought in which he had upon the old. One partner has not, after a dissolution, a right to change the possession, or to make an actual division of the specific effects; for one partner may be a creditor of the partnership to ten times the value of all the effects. The other partner in that case can only have a right to an account of the partnership, and to the balance due to him, if any, on that account; and no person deriving under the partner can be in a better condition than himself; his executor stands in the very same light. So the assignees under a commission of bankruptcy against one partner must be in the same state. They can only be tenants in common of an undivided moiety, subject to all the rights of the other partner. 4 Burr. 2176; Cowp. 448, 471; 12 Mod. 446.

If a partner is a creditor on the partnership account, he can have no satisfaction but out of the surplus, which shall remain after the joint-creditors are paid; for the joint-creditors rely upon the ostensible state of the fund, and give credit to it accordingly. But Lord Hardwicke said, that where there are joint and separate creditors, if one partner lends a sum of money to the partnership, the creditors of his separate estate have a right to this in the first place. 1 Atk. 287; Wes. jun. 167.

But this has since been determined contrary, as where there was a joint commission against two partners, and a separate one against one of them. The petitioners, assignees under the separate commission, petitioned to be admitted creditors under the joint-commission, for a sum of money brought by their bankrupt into the partnership, beyond his share, and as being therefore a creditor on the partnership for that sum; but refused, on the principle that he cannot be a creditor on the partnership in competition with the joint creditors. Cooke's B. L. c. 13.

So, where one partner has taken more than his share out of the joint-fund, the joint-creditors, as the rule seems to be now settled, cannot be admitted to prove against the separate estate of the partner who drew out the money, until his separate creditors are satisfied, unless it can be shewn that the partner acted fraudulently, with a view to benefit his separate creditors, at the expense of the joint-creditors. Cooke's B. L. c. 13. See tit. Partners.

One partner may be a creditor of another, and may, if he continues solvent, prove his debt under a separate commission. 1 Atk. 225; 2 C. R. 226; Cooke's B. L. c. 13.

If there be two partners, and one of them becomes bankrupt, and, on a separate commission being sued out against him, his certificate is allowed; this does not only discharge the bankrupt of what he owed separately, but also of what he owed jointly, and on the partnership account; because by the act of parliament, the bankrupt, upon making a full discovery, and obtaining his certificate, is to be discharged of all debts. 3 P. Wms. 24.

Where two partners are bankrupts, and a joint commission is taken out against them, if they obtain an allowance of their certificate, this will bar as well their separate as their joint-creditors. 3 P. Wms. 24.

Before the statute 10 Ann. cap. 15, if there were two partners, and only one party became bankrupt, and a separate commission was taken out against him; there was no doubt but the discharge of that bankrupt, discharged him from all debts which he owed in his joint as well as private capacity; but the great question was, whether, by such discharge of the bankrupt, the partner of the bankrupt should likewise be discharged from such debts as he was discharged of; and therefore that statute has enacted, that the partner shall not be discharged.

V. PRACTICAL NOTES, AND FORMS.

The first step to be taken towards procuring a Commission of Bankruptcy, is for the creditor to make an affidavit of his debt before a Master in Chancery; or if he resides altogether in the country, before a Master extraordinary there, to be filed in the Secretary of Bankrupts' Office in London, and exhibited to the commissioners at their first meeting.—The following is the form of an affidavit:

A. B. of, &c. maketh oath that John Wilson of Chelmsford, in the county of Essex, shop-keeper, is justly and truly indebted unto him, this deponent, and to Thomas Abel his partner, in the sum of 100 l. and upwards; for goods sold and delivered by this deponent, and his said partner, to and for the use of the said John Wilson; and this deponent further saith, that the said John Wilson is become a bankrupt, within the true intent and meaning of some or one of the statutes made, and now in force concerning bankrupts, as this deponent hath been informed and believes.

Sworn at the Public Office, the 1st day of September 1754, before me Peter Holford.

When the affidavit is sworn, it is carried to the Secretary of Bankrupts' Office, where the party suing for the commission enters into the bond. See III. 1.

The clerk of the bankrupts fills up a blank petition in the name of the person that makes the affidavit; and annexes the affidavit and bond to the petition, when he prefers the same to the Lord Chancellor.

This petition is answered in a few days, and the petitioning creditor has a commission without any further trouble.

A COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT.

GEORGE the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king, defender of the Faith, &c. to our trusty and well-beloved William Bumpstead, Henry Hunter, Henry Cowper, Henry Russel, Esquires, and Richard Hargrave, gentlemen, greeting. Whereas, we are informed that John Wilson, of, &c. using and exercising the trade of a merchant by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, and chevizance; seeking his trade and living, by buying and selling; about ——— since, did become bankrupt within the several statutes made against bankrupts, to the intent to defraud and hinder Thomas Abel, of, &c. and other other his creditors of their just debts and duties to them due and owing; We, minding the due execution as well of the statute touching orders for bankrupts, made in the parliament begun and holden at Westminster, the 2d day of April, in the thirteenth year of the reign of Elizabeth, late queen of England, made and provided, as of the Stat. [Sec. mentioning Stats. 1 Jac. 1: 21 Jac. 1: and 5 Geo. 2:] Upon trust of the wisdom, fidelity, diligence, and prudent circumspection, which we have conceived in you, daily these presents, name, assign, appoint, constitute and ordain you our special commissioners; Hereby giving full power, and authority unto you, four or three of you, to proceed according to the said statutes, and all other statutes in force concerning bankrupts; not only concerning the said bankrupt, his body, lands, tenements, freehold and customary, goods, debts, and all other things whatsoever; but also concerning all other persons, who by concealment, claim or otherwise, do, or shall offend, touching the premises, or any part thereof, contrary to the true intent and meaning of the said statutes; And to do and execute all and every thing and things whatsoever, as well for and towards satisfaction and payment of the said creditors; as towards and for all other intents and purposes, according to the ordinance, and provision of the same statutes. Willing and commanding you, four or three of you, to proceed to the execution and accomplishment of this our commission, according to the true intent and meaning of the same statutes, with all diligence and effect. Witness ourself at Westminster, the — day of — in the — year of our reign.

J. Yorke,

Having got the commission, the petitioning creditor must employ one of the messengers to summon a meeting of the major part of the commissioners to open the same; when the petitioning creditor, must come prepared, to prove his debt, and the party a bankrupt, within the statutes.

OATH to be administered by the Commissioners to Witnesses, upon their Examination.

YOU are here produced, as witnesses, by virtue of a commission out of the high court of Chancery, to us, and others directed, to be by us examined, concerning the bankruptcy of John Wilson, of, &c. Now to all such questions and interrogatories as shall be asked you, by virtue of this commission of bankrupt, concerning the said John Wilson, his trade or profession, his absconding, and other acts which he hath done or suffered, by which he may be discovered to be a bankrupt; and also concerning his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, debts and duties, frauds and concealments, and other matters and things, in obedience to the said commission, and pursuant to the several statutes made concerning bankrupts, you, and every of you shall, true and direct answer make, and shew the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth

So help you God.

All the depositions must be signed by the witnesses. If the party is a Quaker, then instead of swear, say, "You shall solemnly, sincerely, and truly, declare, and affirm."

Immediately upon the commissioners' declaring party a bankrupt, they issue their warrant for seizure his effects and the messenger by virtue thereof seizes the effects, and continues to keep possession 'till the commissioners have executed the assignment.

The application to enlarge the time for the bankrupt's surrender, must be by petition to the great seal, six days at least before the last sitting appointed in the Gazette: this petition may be either in the name of the bankrupt, or of his assignees.

It is usual for the commissioners to recommend, and the creditors to agree, to return the bankrupts their cloths, monies, &c. particularly the jewels, &c. of their wives.

If the bankrupt happens to be a foreigner, and does not understand English, his English examination must be interpreted, and read to him in the language he understands, by a person versed in both languages, who must be first sworn to interpret truly; of which oath and interpretation there must be a memorandum made and annexed to the bankrupt's examination.

If the bankrupt does not surrender himself to the commissioners by 12 o'clock at night of the last day given, the messenger warns him so to do, by a proclamation made by him in the middle of Guildhall; the commissioners continuing sitting till that time.

FORM OF A BANKRUPT'S CERTIFICATE.

To the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

WE whose names and seals are hereunto subscribed and set, being the major part of the commissioners, named and authorized in and by a commission of bankruptcy, awarded and issued against John Thomas, of, &c. (as described in the commission) bearing date at Westminster, the 21st day of, &c. directed to William Bumpstead, &c. do humbly certify to your Lordship, that the major part of the commissioners by the said commission authorized, having begun to put the said commission into execution, did find that the said John Thomas became a bankrupt, since the 10th day of May, 1784, and before the date, and suing forth of the said commission, within the true intent and meaning of the statutes made, and now in force concerning bankrupts, in some of them; and did thereupon declare and adjudge him a bankrupt accordingly. And we further humbly certify to your Lordship, that the said John Thomas being so declared a bankrupt, the major part of the commissioners by the said commission authorized, pursuant to the directions of the act of parliament made in the 5th year of the reign of his late majesty king George II. intitled 'An act to prevent the committing of frauds by bankrupts, did cause due notice to be given and published in the London Gazette of such commission being issued, and of the times and places of three several meetings of the said commissioners, within 42 days next after such notice (the last of which meetings, was appointed to be on the forty-second day); at which time the said John Thomas was required to surrender himself to the said commissioners named in the said commission, or the major part of them, and to make a full disclosure and discovery of his estate and effects; and the creditors of the said John Thomas, were desired to come prepared, to prove their debts, and to assent to or dissent from the making this certificate. And we further humbly certify to your Lordship, that such three several meetings of the major part of the commissioners by the said commission authorized, were had pursuant to such notice so given and published; and that at one of those meetings the said John Thomas did surrender himself to the major part of the commissioners, by the said commission authorized, and did sign sign and subscribe such surrender, and did submit to be examined from time to time upon oath, by and before the major part of the commissioners, by the said commission authorized: and in all things to conform to the several statutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts; and particularly to the said act made in the 5th year of his late majesty's reign. And we further humbly certify to your Lordship, that at the last of the said three meetings, the said John Thomas finished his examination, before the major part of the said commissioners, by the said commission authorized, according to the directions of the said last mentioned act, and upon such his examination, made a full disclosure and discovery of his estate and effects; and in all things conformed himself to the several statutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts, and particularly according to the directions of the said statute made in the 5th year of his late majesty's reign; and there doth not appear to us any reason to doubt of the truth of such discovery, or that the same is not a full discovery of all the estate and effects of the said John Thomas. And we further humbly certify to your Lordship, that the creditors whose names or marks are subscribed to this certificate, are full 4 parts in 5 in number and value of the creditors of the above-named John Thomas, who are creditors for me Legatum 201. respectively, and who have duly proved their debts under the said commission; and that it doth appear to us by due proof by affidavit in writing, that such several subscribing creditors, or some person by them respectively duly authorized thereunto, did, before our signing hereof, sign this certificate, and testify their consent to our signing the same, and to the said John Thomas having such allowance and benefit, as by the said last mentioned act are allowed to bankrupts, and to the said John Thomas being discharged from his debts, in pursuance of the same act. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals, this — day of — in the — year of the reign of &c. and in the year of our Lord 1784.

We the creditors of the above-named John Thomas, whose names, or marks are hereunder subscribed, do hereby testify and declare our consent, that the major part of the commissioners, by the above-mentioned commission authorized, may sign and seal the certificate above written; and that the said John Thomas may have such allowance and benefit as are given to bankrupts by the act of parliament made in the 5th year of the reign of his late majesty King George II, intituled, "An act to prevent the committing of frauds by bankrupts," and be discharged from his debts in pursuance of the same act.

William Bumpstead,
Henry Hunter,
Henry Russel.

The messengers have printed forms of certificates, therefore the best way is to get a blank from them.

If any person sign the bankrupt's certificate by virtue of a letter of attorney, such letter of attorney must be left at the bankrupt's office.

The certificate, together with the affidavit of seeing the creditors sign it, and also letters of attorney, (if any such there be) must be lodged with the secretary of bankrupts; who will thereupon give the messenger an authority to the printer of the Gazette, to insert an advertisement therein signifying that the acting commissioners have certified to the great seal, that the bankrupt hath conformed, and that the certificate will be allowed and confirmed, unless cause shown to the contrary, within twenty-one days from the date of the said advertisement.

If no cause is shown within the 21 days, against the allowance of the certificate, the Lord Chancellor will allow the same, by the following subscription on the said certificate:

" — day of — 1784.

WHEREAS the usual notice hath been given in the London Gazette, of — the — day of — last, and none of the creditors of the above-named John Thomas have shown any cause to the contrary: I do allow and confirm this certificate.

THURLOW, C."

CERTIFICATE for a Judge or Justice of Peace, to grant his Warrant for apprehending and committing a Bankrupt.

In the Matter of John Thomas, a Bankrupt.

WE whose names are hereunto subscribed, and seals set, do hereby certify, that a commission of bankrupt, under the great seal of Great Britain, grounded upon the several statutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts, bearing date at Westminster, the — day of June, instant, hath been awarded and issued against John Thomas, of, &c. and directed to William Bumpstead, &c. thereby giving full power and authority to 4 or 3 of them to execute the same. And we do further certify, that we, being the major part of the commissioners, by the said commission authorized, have proceeded in the execution of the said commission, and have found upon the due examination of witnesses, and other good proof upon oath before us had and taken, that the said John Thomas, before the date, and suing forth of the said commission, became bankrupt to all intents and purposes within the compass, true intent, and meaning of the several statutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts, or within some or one of them, before the date and suing forth of the said commission. Given under our hands and seals at Searl's Coffee-house, Lincoln's Inn, in the county of Middlesex, this — day of June, in the year of our Lord 17—. Witnesses John Knight. William Bumpstead (L.S.) Henry Hunter (L.S.) Henry Russel (L.S.)

The execution of this certificate must be proved by the subscribing witness before the judge or justice, previous to his granting his warrant.

It is usual for the assignees to give notice of the time and place they intend to pay the dividends; if by the assignees, the Solicitor signs an authority for that purpose, to the following effect, viz.

"Gentlemen,

Please to pay Mary Combes the sum of — being her dividend of — shillings in the pound on her debt of — proved under the commission of bankrupt against Francis Gibbons, of, &c.

Your's, &c. John Knight. 14th July 1780.
To Messrs. Partridge and Dennis, said bankrupt's assignees."

The

BANK

The assignees, upon receiving this authority, pay the creditor, and take a receipt in a book to the following purport, viz.

"Received this — day of July, 1780, of Messrs. Partridge and Dennis, assignees of the estate and effects of Francis Gibbons, of, &c. bankrupt, the sum of — being a dividend of — shillings in the pound, on my debt of — proved under the said commission.

Mary Combes."

WRIT OF SUPERSEDEAS.

G E O R G E the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, and so forth: To our trusty and well-beloved William Bumpstead, Henry Hunter, Henry Russell, Henry Cowper, esquires, and Richard Hargrave, gentleman, greeting. Whereas we being informed that John Thomas, of, &c. using and exercising the trade of merchandize, by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, chewsance, seeking his trade of living by buying and selling, did become bankrupt within the several statutes made against bankrupts, to the intent to defraud and hinder Charles Jones, of, &c. and others, his creditors, of their just debts and duties, to them due and owing; and we, minding the due execution of the several statutes made against bankrupts, did, by our commission, under the great seal of Great Britain, bearing date at Westminster, the — day of — in the — year of our reign, name, assign, appoint, constitute, and ordain you our special commissioners, thereby giving, &c. (here recite the original commission to, "diligence and effect," then add) Now foresmuch as the said John Thomas, the bankrupt, by his humble petition, exhibited to our Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, for the reasons therein contained, prayed that the said commission might be superseded, whereunto we graciously inclining, do, by these presents, will and command you, and every of you, to stay and surcease all further proceedings upon the said commission, and that you supersede the same accordingly, as our special trust is in you reposed. Witness ourselves at Westminster, the — day of — in the — year of our reign.

J. Yorke.

When this writ is obtained, the commissioners must be served therewith, by delivering to each of them a copy, and at the same time shewing them respectively, the original writ under seal, and then the proceedings are at an end; but it is usual to give notice thereof in the Gazette.

BARGAIN AND SALE, Is an instrument whereby the property of lands and tenements is for valuable consideration granted and transferred from one person to another: it is called a real contract upon a valuable consideration, for passing of lands, tenements and hereditaments, by deed indented and inrolled. 2 Inst. 672.

Since the introduction of uses and trusts, and the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, for transferring the possession to the use, the necessity of livery of seisin for passing a freehold in corporeal hereditaments, has been almost wholly superseded; and in consequence of it, the conveyance by feoffment is now very little in use. Before the statute of Uses, equitable estates of freehold might be created through the medium of trusts, without livery; and by the operation of the statute, legal estates of freehold may now be created in the same way. They who framed the statute of Uses, evidently foresaw, that it would render livery unnecessary to the passing of a freehold; and that a freehold of such things as do not lie in grant would become transferable by parol only, without any solemnity whatever. To prevent the inconveniences which might arise from a mode of conveyance so uncertain in the proof, and so liable to misconstruction and abuse, it was enacted in the same session of parliament, that an estate of freehold should not pass by bargain and sale only, unless it was by indenture inrolled in one of the courts at Westminster, or in the county where the lands lie; such inrollment to be made within 6 months after the date of the indenture. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16. See 2 Inst. 675: Dy. 229: Popb. 48: Dalt. 63. The objects of this provision evidently were, first, to enforce the contracting parties to ascertain the terms of the conveyance by reducing it into writing; secondly, to make the proof of it easy, by requiring their seals to it, and consequently the presence of a witness; and lastly, to prevent the frauds of secret conveyances, by substituting the more effectual notoriety of enrollment, for the more antient one of livery. But the latter part of this provision, which if it had not been evaded, would have introduced almost an universal register of conveyances of the freehold, in case of corporeal hereditaments, was soon defeated by the invention of the conveyance by lease and release, which sprung from the omission to extend the statute to bargains and sales for terms of years: (See 8 Co. 93: 2 Ro. Ab. 204: 2 Inst. 671;) and the other parts of the statute were necessarily ineffectual in our courts of equity, because these were still left at liberty to compel the execution of trusts of the freehold, though created without deed or writing. The inconveniences from this insufficiency, of the statute of Inrollments are now in some measure prevented by Stat. 29 Ch. 2. c. 3., which provides against conveying any lands or hereditaments, for more than three years, or declaring trusts of them, otherwise than by writing. 1 Inst. 48 a. n. 3.

This may serve at present to illustrate the doctrine of Bargain and Sale; but to obtain a clear and distinct idea of this part of the Law, see further titles Conveyance, Deed, Feoffment, Lease and Release, Use, &c. and 1 Inst. by Hargrave and Butler.

A man possessed of a term cannot bargain and sell it so as to be executed by the statute. 2 Co. 35, 36: Popb. 76.

A bargain and sale of the profits of land, is a bargain and sale of the land itself; for the profits and the land are the same thing in substance. Dyer 71.

A rent in esse may be bargained and sold, because this is a freehold within the statute; and before the statute a rent newly created might be bargained and sold, because when money, as an equivalent, was given, and ceremonies or words of law were wanting, the Chancery supplied them; but it seems, that since the statute, a rent newly created cannot be bargained and sold, because there ought to be a freehold in some other person, to be executed in cestui que use; but here can be no seisin of his rent in the bargainor, because no man can be seised of a rent in his own land, and consequently there can be no estate to be executed in the bargainee, Kilb. 85: 1 Co. 126: 1 And. 327: 1 Jones 179: Sed qu. de hoc.

If A. by indenture inrolled bargains and sells lands to B. and his heirs, with a way over other lands of A. this is void as to the way; for nothing but an use passes by the deed, and there can be no use of a thing not in esse, as a way, common, &c. before they are created. Cro. Jac. 183.

II. 1. The King, and all other persons that cannot be seised to a use, cannot bargain and sell, for at common law, when a man had sold his land for money without giving livery, the use only passed in equity, and this is now executed and becomes a bargain and sale by the statute; but antecedent to any such execution there must be a use well raised, which cannot be without a person capable of being seised to a use, which the king is not, there being no means to compel him to perform the use or trust; for the Chancery has only a delegated power from the king over the consciences of his subjects; and the king is the universal judge of property, and ought to be perfectly indifferent, and not to take upon him the particular defence of any man's estate as a trustee. Bro. Feoffment 10 Uses 33: Hard. 468: Popb. 72.

If tenant in tail bargains and sells his land in fee, this passes an estate determinable upon the life of the tenant in tail; for at common law the use could not be granted of any greater estate than the party had in him; now tenant in tail had an inheritance in him, but he could dispose of it only during his own life; and therefore when he sells the use in fee, cestui que use has a kind of an inheritance, yet determined within the compass of a life, and the statute executes it in the same manner as he has the use, and consequently he will have some properties of a tenant in fee, and some of a tenant for life only; but if tenant for life bargains and sells in fee, this passes only an estate for life, for he could not pass the use of an estate for life to the bargainee, and the statute executes the possession as the party has the use. 10 Co. 96, 98: 1 Saund. 260, 261: 1 Co. 14, 15: Co. Lit. 151.

A man may bargain and sell to a corporation, for they may take a use, though the money be given by the governors in their natural capacity. 10 Co. 24; 34: 2 Rol. Abr. 788.

A man may bargain and sell to his son; but then the consideration of money ought to be expressed, and it ought to have all the other circumstances of bargain and sale; but this shall operate as a covenant to stand seised, if there be none but the consideration of natural love and affection expressed. 7 Co. 40: 2 Co. 24: Cro. Eliz. 394: 1 Vent. 137: 1 Lev. 56. But if a son and heir bargains and sells the inheritance of his father, this is void, because he hath no right to transfer; the same law of a release. Kilb. 84: Co. Lit. 265.

If an infant bargains and sells his land by deed indented and inrolled, yet he may plead non-age; for notwithstanding the statute the bargainee claims by the deed as at common law, which was, and therefore is still defeasible by non-age. 2 Inst. 673.

If a husband seised of lands, in right of his wife, or tenant in tail bargains and sells the trees growing on the lands, and dies before severance, the bargainee cannot afterwards cut them down and take them away. Mo. 41. See tit. Baron and Feme. IV.

If there be two jointenants, and one of them makes a bargain and sale of his own estate in fee, and then the other dies, the other moiety shall survive to the bargainor: for since the freehold is in the bargainor the inheritance continues; but if such jointenant had bargained and sold totum statum suum in fee, though he died before inrollment; yet, if the deed were afterwards inrolled, the moiety would not survive, but would pass to the bargainee. Cro. Jac. 53: Co. Lit. 186: 1 Bulst. 3.

2. The very words bargain and sell are not of absolute necessity in this deed, for other words equivalent will suffice; as if a man seised of lands in fee sell the same to another, by the words alien or grant, the deed being made in consideration of money, and indented and inrolled, will be an effectual bargain and sale. In short, whatever whatever words upon valuable consideration would have raised an use of any lands, &c. at common law, the same would amount to a bargain and sale within this act; as if a man by deed, &c. for a valuable consideration covenants to stand seised to the use of another, &c. 2 Inst. 672: Cro. Jac. 210: Mo. 34: Cro. Eliz. 166.

III. 1. There must be a good consideration given, or at least said to be given, for lands, in these deeds; and for a competent sum of money, is a good consideration; but not the general words for divers considerations, &c. Mod. Ca. 777. Where money is mentioned to be paid in a bargain and sale, and in truth no money is paid, some of our books tell us this may be a good bargain and sale; because no averment will lie against that which is expressly affirmed by the deed, except it comes to be questioned whether fraudulent or no, upon the statute against fraudulent deeds. Dyer 90. If no consideration of money is expressed in a deed of bargain and sale, it may be supplied by an averment, that it was made for money: and after a verdict on a trial, it shall be intended that evidence was given, at the trial, of money paid. 1 Ventr. 108. If lands are bargained and sold for money only, the deed is to be inrolled according to the statute; but if it be in consideration of money, and natural affection, &c. the estate will pass without it. 2 Inst. 672: 2 Lew. 56.

If a man in consideration of so much money to be paid at a day to come, bargains and sells, the use passes presently, and after the day the party has an action for the money, for it is a sale, be the money paid presently or hereafter. Dyer 337 a.

2. If the deed of bargain and sale be not inrolled within the six months, (which are to be reckoned after twenty-eight days to the month, the day of the date taken exclusively,) it is of no force; so that if a man bargains and sells his land to me, and the trees upon it, although the trees might be sold by deed without inrolment, yet in this case if the deed be not inrolled, it will be good neither for the trees nor the land. Dyer 90: 7 Rep. 40: 2 Bull. 8. A bargain and sale of a manor to which an advowson is appendant by indenture not inrolled, will not pass the advowson or the manor, for it was to go as appendant. Bro. Cas. 240.

But in some cases, where a deed will not enure by way of bargain and sale, by reason of some defect therein, it may be good to another purpose. Dyer 90.

If two bargains and sales are made of the same land, to two several persons, and the last deed is first inrolled; if afterwards the first deed is also inrolled within six months, the first buyer shall have the land; for when the deed is inrolled, the bargainee is seised of the land from the delivery of the deed, and the inrolment shall relate to it. H.b. 165: Wood's Inst. 259. Neither the death of the bargainor or bargainee, before the inrolment of the deed of bargain and sale, will hinder the passing of the estate to the bargainee: but the estate of freehold is in the bargainor, until the deed is inrolled; so that the bargainee cannot bring any action of trespass before entry had: though it is said he may surrender, assign, &c. Cro. Jac. 52: Co. Lit. 147.

A bargainee shall have rent which incurs after the bargain and sale, and before the inrolment. Sid. 310. Upon the inrolment of the deed, the estate settles ab initio, by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16; which says, that it shall not vest, except the deed be inrolled; and when it is inrolled, the estate vests presently by the statute of Uses. 1 Danv. Abr. 696.

If several seal a deed of bargain and sale, and but one acknowledge it, and thereupon the deed is inrolled; this is a good inrolment within the statute. Style 462. None can make a bargain and sale of lands, that hath not the actual possession thereof at the time of the sale; if he hath not the possession, the deed must be sealed upon the land, to make it good. 2 Inst. 672: 1 Lill. 290.

Houses and lands in London, and any city, &c. are exempted out of the statute of Inrolments. 2 Inst. 676. 1 Nels. Abr. 342.—See further tit. Inrolments.

IV. In pleading a bargain and sale the deed itself must be shewn under seal. 1 Inst. 225. For though the inrolment being on record is of undoubted veracity, being the transaction of the court; yet the private deed has not the sanction of a record, though publicly acknowledged and inrolled; for it might have been falsely and fraudulently dated, or ill executed. Co. Lit. 225 b. 251 b; 2 Inst. 673: 4 Co. 71: 5 Co. 53: 2 Rel. Rep. 119.

It must likewise be set forth that the inrolment was within six months, or secundum formam statuti, &c. vide Allen 19: Cartier 221: Style 34. S. C.

In pleading a bargain and sale, the party ought regularly to aver payment of the money. 1 Leon 170: See Mon. 504.

In replevin the case upon the pleadings was, that the defendant made a title under bargain and sale, inrolled within six months, and the statute of uses, and did not shew that it was in consideration of money; but adjudged, that after a verdict, as this case was, it shall be intended, that evidence was given at the trial, of money paid. 1 Ventr. 108.

The party that claims by any bargain and sale, must shew in what court the deed is inrolled, because he must shew all things in certain that make out his title; otherwise his adversary would be put to an infinite search before he could traverse with security. Yelv. 213: Cro. Jac. 291. S. C.: Yelv. 313.

BARKARY, barkaria, corticulus.] A tan-house or place to keep bark in for the use of tanners. New-Book Entr. tit. Affise, Corp. Polit. 2.

BARON, baro.] Is a French word, and hath divers significations here in England. First, it is taken for a degree of nobility next to a viscount. Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 8, says they are called barones, quasi robore belli. In which signification it agrees with other nations, where baronia are as much as provinciae: so that barons are such as have the government of provinces as their fee holden of the king; some having greater and others less authority within their territories. It is probable, that formerly, in this kingdom, all those were called barons that had such feignories as we now call courts-baron; as they were called seigneurs in France, who had any manor, or lordship: and soon after the conquest, all such came to parliament, and sat as peers in the lords' house. But when by experience it appeared that the parliament was too much thronged by these barons, who were very numerous it was in the reign of King John ordained that none but the barones majores should come to parliament, who, for their extraordinary wisdom, interest, or quality, should be summoned by writ. After this, men observing the the estate of nobility to be but casual, and depending merely upon the king's will, they obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male, who were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now by inheritance those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create at his pleasure. Nevertheless there are still barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent: and those barons who were first by writ, may now also justly be called barons by prescription, for that they and their ancestors have continued barons, beyond the memory of man. 2 Inst. 48. See tit. Peers. The original of barons by writ, Camden refers to king Hen. 3; and barons by letters patent, or creation, commenced 11 R. 2. Cumb. Brit. pag. 109. To these is added a third kind of barons, called barons by tenure, which are some of our ancient barons; and likewise the bishops, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, always had place in the lords' house of parliament, as barons by succession. Seager of Honour, lib. 4. cap. 13.

There are also barons by office; as the barons of the Exchequer, barons of the Cinque Ports, &c. In ancient records, the word baron includes all the nobility of England, because regularly all noblemen were barons, though they had a higher dignity; and therefore the charter of King Ed. 1, which is an exposition of what relates to barons in Magna Charta, concludes testibus archiepiscopis, episcopis, baronibus, &c. And the great council of the nobility, when they consisted, besides earls and barons, of dukes, marquesses, &c. were all comprehended under the name de la counceill de baronage. Glanv. cap. 4. These barons have given them two ensigns to remind them of their duties; first, a long robe of scarlet, in respect whereof they are accounted de magno concilio regis; and secondly they are girt with a sword, that they should ever be ready to defend their king and country. 2 Inst. 5. A baron is vir notabilis & principalis: and the chief burgesses of London were in former times barons, before there was a lord mayor, as appears by the city seal, and their ancient charters.—Hemicus 3. Rex. Sciatis nos concessisse & hac presenti charta nostra confirmasse baronibus nostris de civitate nostra London quod eligant sibi mayor de seipfis singulis annis, &c. Spelm. Gloss. The earls-palatine and marches of England had anciently their barons under them; but no barons but those who held immediately of the king were peers of the realm. 'Tis certain the king's tenants were called barons; as we may find in Mist. Favis, and other writers: and in days of old, all men were stiled barons, whence the present law term of baron and feme for husband and wife; which see.

BARONY, baronia.] Is that honour and territory which gives title to a baron; comprehending not only the fees and lands of temporal barons, but of bishops also who have two estates; one as they are spiritual persons, by reason of their spiritual revenues and promotions; the other grew from the bounty of our English kings, whereby they have baronies and lands added to their spiritual livings and preferments. The baronies belonging to bishops are by some called regalia, because ex sola liberalitate regum eis olim concessa, & a regibus in feudum tenebantur. Blount. Barony, Bracton says, (lib. 2. cap. 34.) is a right indivisible; and therefore if an inheritance be to be divided among coparceners, though some capital messuages may be divided, yet si capitale messuagium sit caput comitatus et caput baronie, they may not be parcelled. In ancient times thirteen knight fees and a quarter made a tenure per baroniam, which amounted to 400 marks per annum.

BARONET, baronetus.] Is a dignity or degree of honour, which hath precedency before all knights, as knights of the bath, knights batchelors, &c. except Bannerets, made sub vexillis regis in exercitu regali in aperto bello, & ipso rege personaliter presente. This order of baronets was instituted by King James I. in the year 1611, and was then a purchased honour, for the purpose of raising money to pay troops sent out to quell some insurgents in the province of Ulster in Ireland—The arms of which province, being a red or bloody hand, every baronet has added, on his creation, to his coat of arms. Their number at first was but two hundred; but now they are without limitation: they are created by patent with an habendum sibi & heredibus masculis, &c.

BARON AND FEME. The law term for Husband and Wife.

Our law considers marriage in no other light than as a civil contract. The holiness of the matrimonial state, is left entirely to the ecclesiastical law; the temporal courts not having jurisdiction to consider unlawful marriage as a sin, but merely as a civil inconvenience. The punishment therefore, or annulling of incestuous and unscriptural marriages, is the province of the Spiritual Court.—Taking marriage in a civil light, the law treats it as it does all other contracts; on this part of the subject therefore, as well as on what relates to marriage promises, marriage settlements, &c. See this Dict. title Marriage.

By marriage, the husband and wife are one person in law. 1 Inst. 112.—that is, the very being or legal existence of the woman, is suspended during the marriage; or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of her husband: under whose wing, protection and cover she performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law-french a feme covert, [sæmina viro coopta]; is said to be covert-baron, or under the protection and influence of her husband, her baron or lord; and her condition during her marriage is called her coverture. Therefore if an estate be granted or conveyed to an husband and wife and their heirs, they do not take by moieties, as other jointenants, but the intire estate is in both. 2 Lev. 39. And if an estate be granted to an husband and wife, and another person, the husband and wife have but one moiety, and the other person the other moiety. Litt. § 291.—A woman may be attorney for her husband; for that implies no separation from, but is rather a representation of her lord. F. N. B. 27. Upon this principle of an union of person in husband and wife, depend almost all the legal rights, duties and disabilities, that either of them acquire by the marriage.

We may consider the effect of these rights, duties and disabilities, according to the following arrangement.

- I. 1. Of Grants and Contracts between Husband and Wife;
2. Of them being Evidence for or against each other.
- II. What Acts and Agreements of the Wife before Marriage bind the Husband.
- III. 1. Of the Husband's Power over the Person of his Wife, and of her Remedy for any Injury done to her by him.
2. Of Actions by him for criminal Conversation with her.

IV. Of

BARON AND FEME I. 1. 2.

IV. Of her Interest in her Estate and Property; and her's in his, as to her Paraphernalia.

V. Where the Husband shall be liable to the Wife's Debts contracted before Marriage; and therein of a Wife that is Executrix or Administratrix.

VI. Of her Contract during Marriage, and how far the Husband is bound by such Contracts; and where a Wife shall be considered as a Feme Sole.

VII. Where she alone shall be punished for a criminal Offence, and where the Husband shall be answerable for what she does in a civil Action.

VIII. What Acts done by the Husband, or Wife alone, or jointly with the Wife, will bind the Wife; and therein of her Agreement or Disagreement to such Acts after the Death of the Husband.

IX. Where the Husband and Wife must join in bringing Actions.

X. Where they must be jointly sued.

XI. Of the Effect of Divorce; and of separate Maintenance, Alimony and Pin-Money.

I. 1. At common law a man could neither in possession, reversion or remainder, limit an estate to his wife; but by Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, a man may covenant with other persons to stand seised to the use of his wife; or may make any other conveyance to her use, but he may not covenant with his wife to stand seised to her use. A man may devise lands by will to his wife, because the devise doth not take effect till after his death. Co. Litt. 112

As to devises by femes covert. See tit. Devise, Will.

According to some books, by custom of a particular place, as of Tork, the wife may take by immediate conveyance from the husband. Fitz. Prescription 61. Bro. Custom. 56. And it seems that a donatio causa mortis by husband to wife may be good; because that is in the nature of a legacy. 1 P. Wms. 441.

Where the husband or wife act en autre droit, the one may make an estate to the other; as if the wife has an authority by will to sell, she may sell to her husband. 1 Inst. 112 a. 187 b. and the notes there.

If the feme obligee take the obligor to husband, this is a release in law. The like law is if there be two femes obligees, and the one take the debtor to husband. 1 Inst. 264 b: Cro. Car. 551.

In the case of Smith v. Stafford, (Hob. 216), the husband promised the wife before marriage, that he would leave her worth 100*l*. The marriage took effect, and the question was, whether the marriage was a release of the promise. All the judges but Hobart were of opinion, that as the action could not arise during the marriage, the marriage could not be a release of it. The doctrine of this case seems to be admitted in the case of Gage v. Atton; (1 Salk. 325: 12 Mod. 290;) the case there arose upon a bond executed by the husband to the wife before marriage, with a condition, making it void if she survived him, and he left her 1000*l*. Two of the judges were of opinion that the debt was only suspended, as it was on a contingency which could not by any possibility happen during the marriage. But Lord C. J. Holt differed from them; he admitted that a covenant or promise by the husband to the wife, to leave her so much in case she survives him is good, because it is only a future debt on a contingency, which cannot happen during the marriage, and that is precedent to the debt; but that a bond-debt was a present debt, and the condition was not precedent but subsequent, that made it a present duty; and the marriage was consequently a release of it. The case afterwards went into Chancery; the bond was there taken to be the agreement of the parties and relief accordingly decreed. 2 Vrra. 481—A like decree was made in the case of Caunt v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 2431 and see 2 Freem. 205.—See tit. Bankrupt IV. 3.

A. before marriage with M. agrees with M. by deed in writing, that she, or such as she should appoint, should, during the coverture, receive and dispose of the rents of her jointure, by a former husband, as she pleased. It was decreed that, This agreement being with the feme herself before marriage, was by the marriage extinguished. Chan. Ca. 21 But where a man before marriage mitted with the feme to make a settlement of certain lands, before the marriage should be solemnized; they intermarried before the settlement, and then the baron died: On a bill by the widow for an execution of the articles, it was decreed against the heir at law of the baron, that the articles should be executed. 2 Vent. 343.

2. In trials of any sort, Husband and Wife are not allowed to be evidence, for or against each other; partly because it is impossible their testimony should be indifferent; but principally because of the union of person: and therefore if they were admitted to be witnesses for each other, they would contradict one maxim of law, "nemo in propria causa testis esse debet;" and if against each other, they would contradict another maxim, "nemo tenetur seipsum accusare." But where the offence is directly against the person of the wife, this rule has been usually dispensed with; (State Trials, vol. 1. Lord Audley's case, Stra. 633;) and therefore by Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 2, in case a woman be forcibly taken away and married, she may be a witness against such her husband, in order to convict him of felony. Nor in this case she can with no propriety be reckoned his wife; because a main ingredient, her consent, was wanting to the contract: and also, there is another maxim of law, that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong; which the ravisher here would do, if by forcibly marrying a woman he could prevent her from being a witness, who is perhaps the only witness to that very fact. 1 Comm. 443, 4.

The husband cannot be a witness against the wife, nor the wife against the husband, to prove the first marriage on an indictment, on Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11, for a second marriage. But the second wife or husband may be a witness; the second marriage being void. Bull. N. P. 287: 1 Hal. P. C. 693.

In Raym. 1, there is an opinion, that a husband and wife may be witnesses against one another in treason; but the contrary is adjudged, 1 Brownl. 47: see 2 Keb. 403 and 1 H. P. C. 301.—The rule in Lord Audley's case, is denied to be law. Raym. 1; and perhaps was admitted on the particular circumstances of the facts which were detestable in the extreme, the husband having assisted in the rape of his wife.—In an information against two, one for perjury, and the other for subornation, in swearing on the trial of an ejectment, that a child was supposititious, the husband of one of the defendant's was admitted to give evidence of the birth, but refused as to the subornation. Sid. 377: 2 Keb. 403: Mar. 120.—And the evidence of a wife has been disallowed even against others, where her husband might be indirectly in danger. Dalt. 540: Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 607, 8.—A husband and wife may demand surety of the peace against each each other, and their evidence must then of necessity be admitted against each other. 1 Hawk. P. C. 253; see Stra. 1231; and the other authorities cited by Hawkins.

The wife of a bankrupt may be examined by the commissioners—See tit. Bankrupt, III 1.

It seems that a wife may be evidence to prove a fraud on the husband, particularly if she were party thereto, as in case of a marriage-brochage agreement. Sid. 431: see post. II. And in cases of seduction. L. E. 55.—And in civil actions, where the husband is not concerned in the action, but the evidence is collateral to discharge the defendant, by charging the husband. 1 Stra. 504; and see 1 Stra. 527.

II. As by marriage the husband and wife become one person in law, therefore such an union works an extinguishment or revocation of several acts done by her before the marriage; and this not only for the benefit of the husband, but likewise of the wife, who, if she were allowed at her pleasure to rescind and break through, or confirm several acts, might be so far influenced by her husband, as to do things greatly to her disadvantage. 4 Co. 60: 5 Co. 10: Keilw. 161: Co. Lit. 55: Hill. 72: Cro. Car. 304.

But in cases which would be manifestly to the prejudice of both husband and wife, the law does not make her acts void; and therefore if a feme sole makes a lease at will, or is lessee at will, and afterwards marries, the marriage is no determination of her will, so as to make the lease void; but she herself cannot without the consent of her husband determine the lease in either case. 5 Co. 10.

So where a warrant of attorney was given to confess a judgment to a feme sole, the court gave leave, notwithstanding the marriage, to enter up judgment; for that the authority shall not be deemed to be revoked or countermanded, because it is for the husband's advantage; like a grant of a reversion to a feme sole, who marries before attornment, yet the tenant may attorn afterwards: otherwise if a feme sole gives a warrant of attorney, and marries, for that is to charge the husband. 1 Salk. 117, 397.

But if a feme sole makes her will, and devises her land to J. S. and afterwards marries him, and then dies, yet J. S. takes nothing by the will, because the marriage was a revocation of it. 4 Co. 60.—See tit. Devise, Will.

Equity will set aside the intended wife's contracts, though legally executed, when they appear to have been entered into with an intent to deceive the husband, and are in derogation of the rights of marriage; as where a widow made a deed of settlement of her estate, and married a second husband, who was not privy to such settlement; and it appearing to the court, that it was in confidence of her having such estate that the husband married her, the court set aside the deed as fraudulent; so where the intended wife, the day before her marriage, entered privately into a recognizance to her brother, it was decreed to be delivered up. See 2 Chan. Rep. 41, 79, 81: 2 Vern. 17: 2 Ves. 264: see tit. I. 2.

But where a widow, before her marriage with a second husband, assigned over the greatest part of her estate to trustees for children by her former husband; though it was intimated that this was with the privy of the husband, and done with a design to cheat him, yet the court thought, that a widow might thus provide for her children before she put herself under the power of a husband; and it being proved that 8000*l.* was thus settled, and that the husband had suppressed the deed, he was decreed to pay the whole money, without directing any account. 1 Vern. 408.

III. 1. By marriage the husband hath power over his wife's person; and by the old law he might give her moderate correction. 1 Hawk. P. C. 258; but this power was confined within reasonable bounds. Moor. 874: F. N. B. 80—In the time of Charles II. this power of correction began to be doubted. 1 Sid. 113: 3 Kebl. 433. The courts of law however, still permit a husband to restrain a wife of her liberty, in case of any gross misbehaviour, Stra. 478, 875. But if he threaten to kill her, &c. she may make him find surety of the peace, by suing a writ of supplicavit out of Chancery, or by preferring articles of the peace against him in the court of King's Bench, or she may apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce, propter sevitiam. Crom. 28. 136: F. N. B. 80: Hell. 149. cont. 1 Sid. 113, 116: Dalh. c. 68: Lamb. 7: Crom. 133.

So may the husband have security of the peace against his wife. Stra. 1207.

But a wife cannot, either by herself or her prochein amy, bring a hominie replegiando against her husband; for he has by law a right to the custody of her, and may, if he think fit, confine her, but he must not imprison her; if he does, it will be a good cause for her to apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce propter sevitiam; and the nature and proceedings in the writ de homine replegiando shew that it cannot be maintained by the wife against her husband. Proc. in Ch. 492.

The courts of law will grant a habeas corpus to relieve a wife from unjust imprisonment.

2. The ground of the action for adultery, is the injury done to the husband, by alienating the affections of his wife, destroying the comforts arising from her company and that of her children, and imposing on him a spurious issue.

In this action the plaintiff must bring proof of the actual solemnization of a marriage; nothing shall supply its place: cohabitation or reputation are not sufficient, nor any collateral proof whatever. 4 Burr. 2057: Bull. N. P. 27: Doug. 162: Ejff. N. P. 343.—But it is not necessary to prove a marriage according to the ceremony of the church of England; if the parties are Jews, Quakers, &c. proof of a marriage according to their rites is sufficient. Bull. N. P. 28.—The confession of the wife will be no proof against the defendant; but a discourse between her and the defendant may be proved, and the defendant's letters to her; but the wife's letters to the defendant will be no evidence for him. Id.

The injury in case of adultery being great, the damages are generally considerable, but depend on circumstances; such on the one hand as go in aggravation of damages, and to shew the circumstances and property of defendant; or on the other hand, such as go in extenuation of the offence, and mitigation of damages. Bull. N. P. 27: Ejff. 343, 4.—The defendant may prove particular acts of criminality in the wife, previous to her guilt with him, but not her general character, in extenuation. Id. ib.

no action at the suit of the husband will lie; but if the husband does not know this, it goes only in mitigation of damages. Id. ib.

It is now determined that if the husband consent to his wife's adultery, this will go in bar of his action. 4 Term Rep. 657, in the case of Duberly v. Gunning.—See 12 Mod. 232.

It seems to be in the discretion of the court to grant a new trial in this action, on account of excessive damages; but which they will be very cautious in doing, 4 Term Rep. 651.

If adultery be committed with another man's wife without any force, but by her own consent, though the husband may have assault and battery, and lay it vi & armis, yet they shall in that case punish him below for that very offence; for an indictment will not lie for such an assault and battery; neither shall the husband and wife join in an action at common law; and therefore they proceed below, either civilly, that is, to divorce them, or criminally, because they were not criminally prosecuted above. 7 Mod. 81.

IV. As to the lands of the wife. The freehold or right of possession of all her lands of inheritance, vests in the husband immediately upon the marriage, the right of property still being preserved to her. 1 Inst. 351 a: 273 b: 326 b. in note. This estate he may convey to another.—An incorrect statement in the book called Cases in Equity, temp. Ld. Talbot, p. 167, of what was delivered by his lordship in the case of Robinson v. Cummins, seems to have given rise to a notion that the husband could not make a tenant to the præcipe of his wife's estate for the purpose of suffering a common recovery of it, without the wife's previously joining in a fine; but it now seems to be a settled point that he can. See Cruise on Recoveries; and post. tit. Fine and Recov.—By Stat. 32 H 8 c. 28, leases of the wife's inheritance must be made by indenture, to which the husband and wife are both parties, to be sealed by the wife, and the rent to be reserved to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the wife; and the husband shall not alien the rent longer than during the coverture, except by fine levied by husband and wife.—By the same act it is provided that no fine or other act done by the husband only of the inheritance or freehold of his wife shall be any discontinuance thereof, or prejudicial to the wife or her heirs, but they may enter according to their rights; fines whereunto the wife is party and privy [and the above mentioned leases] only excepted. As to alienations of a husband's estate by a woman tenant in dower, &c. see Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, which makes them void. See post. Div. VIII. and also tit. Forfeiture.

As to chattels real, and things in action of the wife; where the husband survives the wife.

At the common law, no person had a right to administer. The ordinary might grant administration to whom he pleased, till the statutes which gave it to the next of kin, and if there were persons of equal kindred, whichever took administration first was entitled to the surplus. The statute of distribution was made to prevent this. Where the wife was entitled only to the trust of a chattel real, or to any chose in action, or contingent interest in any kind of personalty, it seems to have been doubted, whether if the husband survived her he was intitled to the benefit of it or not. See 1 Inst. 351: 4 Inst. 87: Rel. Ab. 346: All. 15: Co. Eliz. 466: 3 C. R. 37: Gill. Ca. Eq. 234.—See tit. Executor. I. 1: V. 8.

Upon the construction of the Statute of Distributions, (see tit. Executor, V. 8,) it has been held that the husband may administer to his deceased wife; and that he is entitled for his own benefit to all her chattels real, things in action, trusts, and every other species of personal property, whether actually vested in her, and reduced into possession, or contingent, or recoverable only by action or suit.—It was however made a question after the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 25. whether if the husband having survived his wife, afterwards die, during the suspense of the contingency upon which any part of his wife's property depended, or without having reduced into possession such of her property as lay in action or suit, his representative or his wife's next of kin were entitled thereto. But by a series of cases it is now settled, that the representative of the husband is entitled as much to this species of his wife's property, as to any other; that the right of administration, follows the right of the estate, and ought in case of the husband's death, after the wife, to be granted to the next of kin of the husband. See Mr. Hargrave's Law Tracts 475. And that if administration de bonis non of the wife is obtained by any third person, he is a trustee for the representative of the husband. See 1 P. Wms. 378, 382.

If the wife survive the husband.—As to this point, there is a material difference with respect to chattels real, and goods, cattle, money, and other chattels personal.—All chattels personal, become the property of the husband immediately on the marriage; he may dispose of them, without the consent or concurrence of his wife; and at his death, whether he dies in her life-time, or survives her, they belong to his personal representative. See 10 Co. 42: 2 Inst. 510.

With respect to her chattels real, as leases for years, there is a distinction between those which are in the nature of a present vested interest in the wife, and those in which she has only a possible or contingent interest. To explain this fully, it seems proper to mention, that it was formerly held that a disposition of a term of years to a man for his life, was such a total disposition of the term, that no disposition could be made of the possible residue of the term; or at least that if it was made, the first devisee might dispose of the whole term, notwithstanding the devise of the residue. This is reported (Dy. 74.) to have been determined by all the judges in a case in 6 L. 6. The Court of Chancery first broke through this rule, and supported such future dispositions when made by way of trust; their example was followed by the courts of law in Mat. Manning's case, 8 Rep. 94 b. and Lampert's case, 10 Rep. 46 b. This disposition of the residue of a term, after a previous disposition of it to one for life, operates by way of executory devise, and the interest of the devisee of the residue is called a possibility. This possible interest in a term of years differs from a contingent interest created by way of remainder. If a person limits a real estate to A. for life, and after the decease of A. and if B. dies in A.'s life-time, to C. for a term of years; this operates not as an executory devise, but as a remainder, and therefore is not to be considered as a possibility, but as a contingent interest.

Now if a person marries a woman possessed of, or entitled to the trust of a present, actual, and vested interest in

in a term of years, or any other chattel real, it so far becomes his property, that he may dispose of it during her life; and if he survives her, it vests in him absolutely; but if he makes no disposition of it, and she survives him, it belongs to her, and not to his representatives: nor is he in this case intitled to dispose of it from her by will. Prac. Ch. 418: 2 Vern. 270.

If a person marries a woman entitled to a possible or contingent interest in a term of years, if it is a legal interest, that is such an interest, as upon the determination of the previous estate, or the happening of the contingency, will immediately vest in possession in the wife, there the husband may assign it; unless perhaps in those cases where the possibility, or contingency, is of such a nature, that it cannot happen during the husband's life-time. 1 Inst. 46 b: 10 Rep. 51 a: Hutt. 17: 1 Salk. 326. But it is an exception to this rule, at least in equity, that if a future or executory interest in a term or other chattel, is provided for the wife, by or with the consent of the husband, there he cannot dispose of it from the wife, as it would be absurd to allow him to defeat his own agreement. But this suppose: the provision to be made before marriage; for if made subsequent, it is a mere voluntary act, and void against an assignee for a valuable consideration. 1 Cha. Ca. 225: 1 Vern. 7, 18: 1 Eq. Ab. 58.

If a wife have a chattel real en auter droit, as executor or administrator, the husband cannot dispose of it. 1 Inst. 351 a. But if the wife had it as executrix to a former husband, the husband may dispose of it. 3 Wilf. 277.—And if a woman be jointenant of a chattel real, and marries and dies, the husband shall not have it, but it survives to the other jointenant. 1 Inst. 185 b.—And the husband hath not power over a chattel real, which the wife hath as guardian. Plowd. 294.

Things in action do not vest in the husband till he reduces them into possession. It has been held that the husband may sue alone, for a debt due to the wife upon bond; but that if he join her in the action, and recover judgement and die, the judgment will survive to her. 1 Vern. 396: see All. 36: 2 Lev. 107: 2 Vex. 677. The principle of this distinction appears to be, that his bringing the action in his own name alone, is a disagreement to his wife's interest, and implies it to be his intention that it should not survive to her; but if he brings the action in the joint names of himself and his wife, the judgment is that they both should recover; so that the surviving wife, and not the representative of the husband, is to bring the scire facias on the judgment. In 3 Atk. 21, Lord Hardwicke is reported to say, that at law if the husband has recovered a judgment for a debt of the wife, and dies before execution, the surviving wife, not the husband's executors, is entitled.

These appear to be the general principles of the courts of Law, respecting the interest which the husband takes in, and the power given him over the things in action of his wife; but the courts of Equity have admitted many very nice distinctions respecting them.

1. A settlement made before marriage, if made in consideration of the wife's fortune, entitles the representative of the husband dying in his wife's life-time, to the whole of her things in action; but it has been said, that if it is not made in consideration of her fortune, the surviving wife will be entitled to the things in action, the property of which has not been reduced [into his power] by the husband in his life-time; so if the settlement is in consideration of a particular part of her fortune, such of the things in action as are not comprised in that part, it has been said, survive to the wife. See Pre. Ch. 63: 2 Vern. 502: Talb. 168. In the case of Blois v. Countess of Hereford, (2 Vern. 501.) a settlement was made for the benefit of the wife, but no mention was made of her personal estate; it was decreed to belong to the representative of the husband; and it was then said, that in all cases where there was a settlement equivalent to the wife's portion, it should be intended that he is to have the portion, though there is no agreement for that purpose. See Eq. Ab. 69.

2. If the husband cannot recover the things in action of his wife but by the assistance of a Court of Equity, the court upon the principle, that he who seeks equity, must do equity, will not give him their assistance to recover the property, unless he either has made a previous provision for her, or agrees to do it out of the property prayed for; or unless the wife appears in court, and consents to the property being made over to him. 2 P. Wms. 641: 3 P. Wms. 12: Talb. 179: 2 Vex. 669. Neither will the court, where no settlement is made for the wife, direct the fortune to be paid to the husband, in all cases where she does appear personally and consent to it. 2 Vex. 579. It appears to be agreed, that the interest is always payable to the husband, if he maintains his wife. 2 Vex. 561, 2; yet where the husband receives a great part of the wife's fortune, and will not settle the rest, the court will not only stop the payment of the residue of her fortune, but will even prevent his receiving the interest of the residue, that it may accumulate for her benefit. 3 Atk. 21.

3. Voluntaries and assignees under a commission of bankruptcy, are in cases of this nature subject to the same equity as the husband; and are therefore required by the court, if they apply for its assistance in recovering the wife's fortune, to make a proper provision for her out of it. 2 Atk. 420: 1 P. Wms. 382. But if the husband actually assigns either a trust term of his wife, or a thing in action, for a valuable consideration, the court does not compel the assignee to make a provision for the wife. 1 Vern. 7. See 1 Vern. 18.—and Ches's P. Wms. i. 459, in note, where Lord Thurlow is reported to have said in a case before him “that he did not find it any where decided, that if the husband makes an actual assignment by contract for a valuable consideration, the assignee should be bound to make any provision for the wife; but that a court of equity has much greater consideration, for an assignment actually made by contract, than for an assignment made by mere operation of law; for in this latter case the creditor should be exactly in the case of the husband, and subject precisely to the same equity in favour of the wife.”

4. But notwithstanding the uniform and earnest solicitude of the courts of equity, to make some provision for the wife out of her fortune, in those cases where the husband, or those claiming under him by act of law, cannot come at it, without the assistance of those courts, still it does not appear that they have ever interceded to prevent its being paid the husband, or to inhibit him from recovering it at law. 2 Atk. 420.—In Pre. Ch. 414, it is observed, that if the trustees pay the wife's fortune, it is without remedy.

BARON AND FEME IV. 5—V.

5. Money due on mortgage is considered as a thing in action. It seems to have been formerly understood that as the husband could not dispose of lands mortgaged in fee, without the wife, the estate remaining in the wife, carried the money along with it, to her and her representatives; but that as to the trust and the absolute power of a term of years, there was nothing to keep a mortgage debt, secured by a term, from going to the husband's representatives: but this distinction no longer prevails; and it is now held that tho' in the case of a mortgage in fee, the legal fee of the lands in mortgage continues in the wife, she is but a trustee, and the trust of the mortgage follows the property of the debt. See 1 P. Wms. 458: 2 Atk. 207.

6. If baron and feme have a decree for money in right of the feme, and then the baron dies, the benefit of the decree belongs to the feme, and not to the executor of the husband. This was certified by Hyde, Ch. J. and his certificate confirmed by Lord Chancellor. 1 Cba. Ca. 27. If the wife has a judgment, and it is extended upon an assize, the husband may assign it without a consideration. So if a judgment be given in trust for a feme sole, who marries, and by consent of her trustees is in possession of the land extended, the husband may assign over the extended interest; and by the same reason, if the feme has a decree, to hold and enjoy lands until a debt due to her is paid, and she is in possession of the land under this decree, and marries, the husband may assign it without any consideration, for it is in nature of an extent. 3 P. Wms. 200.

The above summary on this part of the law relative to baron and feme, is principally taken from the ingenious and laborious notes on 1 Inst.—To which may be added the following miscellaneous observations.

7. If a lease be conveyed by a feme sole, in trust for the use of herself, if she afterwards marries, it cannot be disposed of by the husband: if she dies, he shall not have it, but the executors of the wife. March 44: See 2 Venn. 270.

If a feme having a rent for life takes husband, the baron shall have action of debt for the rent incurred during the coverture, after the death of the feme. 1 Danv. 719. And arrears due in the life-time of the husband, after his death, shall survive to the wife, if she outlives him, and her administrators after her death. 2 Lut. 1151. A feme lessee for life, rendering rent, takes husband and dies, the baron shall be charged in action of debt for the rent which was grown due during the coverture, because he took the profits out of which the rent ought to issue. Kilw. 125 Raym. 6.

If a feme covert sues a woman in the spiritual court for adultery with her husband, and obtains a sentence against her, and costs; the husband may release these costs, for the marriage continues, and whatever accrues to the wife during coverture, belongs to the husband; per Holt Ch. J. on motion for prohibition. 1 Salk. 115.

But if the husband and wife be divorced a mensâ et thoro, and the wife has her alimony, and sues for defamation or other injury, and there has costs, and the husband releases them, this shall not bar the wife, for these costs come in lieu of what she hath spent out of her alimony, which is a separate maintenance, and not in the power of her husband. 1 Roll. Rep. 426: 3 Bull. 204: 1 Roll. Abr. 343: 2 Roll. Abr. 293. 1 Salk. 115.

Vot. I.

A legacy was given to a feme covert, who lived separate from her husband, and the executor paid it to the feme, and took her receipt for it: yet on a bill brought by the husband against the executor, he was decreed to pay it over again, with interest. 1 Venn. 261.

If husband is attainted of felony, and pardoned on condition of transportation for life, and afterwards the wife becomes intitled to an orphanage share of personal estate, it shall not belong to the husband, but to the wife. 3 P. Wms. 37.

Trinkets and jewels given to a wife before marriage, become the husband's again by marriage, and are liable to his debts, if his personal estate is not sufficient. 2 Atk. 104.

8. And as the husband may generally acquire a property in all the personal substance of the wife, so in one particular instance the wife may acquire a property in some of her husband's goods, which shall remain to her after his death, and not go to his executors. These are called her paraphernalia; which is a term borrowed from the Civil Law, and is derived from the Greek, signifying something over and above her dower. Our law uses it to signify the apparel and ornaments of the wife suitable to her rank and degree; and therefore even the jewels of a Peeress usually worn by her, have been held to be paraphernalia. Moo. 213.—Here she becomes entitled to at the death of her husband, over and above her jointure or dower, and preferably to all other representatives. Cro. Car. 343, 7: 1 Ro. Ab. 911: 2 Leon. 166.—Neither can the husband devise by his will such ornaments or jewels of his wife; though during his life, perhaps he hath the power to sell or give them away. Noy's Max. c. 49: 2 Comm. 436.—But if she continue in the use of them, till his death, she shall afterwards retain them against his executors and administrators, and all other persons except creditors, where there is a deficiency of assets. 1 P. Wms. 730.—And her necessary apparel is protected even against the claim of creditors. Noy's Max. c. 47.

That the widow's paraphernalia are subject to the debts, but preferred to the legacies of the husband; and that the general rules of marshalling assets are applicable in giving effect to such priority, see not only 1 P. Wms. 730 quoted above, but also 2 P. Wms. 544: 2 Atk. 104, 642: 3 Atk. 369, 393: 2 Vez. 7. See also Cha. Ca. 240: 1 C. R. 27.

In one place Rolle says, the wife shall have a necessary bed and apparel. 1 Roll. 911. l. 20.—See further on the subject of Paraphernalia. Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Feme (F. 3.)

V. If a Feme sole indebted takes husband; her debt becomes that of the husband and wife, and both are to be sued for it; but the husband is not liable after the death of the wife, unless there be a judgment against both during the coverture. 1 Roll. Ab. 351. F. N. B. 120. Where there is judgment against a feme sole, who marries and dies, the baron shall not be charged therewith: though if the judgment be had upon joint assets against baron and feme, and then the feme dies, he shall be charged. 3 Mod. 186. In action brought against a feme sole, if, pending the action, she marries, this shall not abate the action; but the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution against her, according as the action was commenced. 1 Lut. 217: Trin. 12 W. 3. And if allegations be brought to

to remove the cause, the plaintiff is to move for a procedendo on the return of the habeas corpus: also the court of B. R. may refuse it, where brought to abate a just action. 1 Salk. 8.

In general the husband is liable to the wife's debts, contracted before marriage, whether he had any portion with her or not; and this the law presumes reasonable, because by the marriage the husband acquires an absolute interest in the personal estate of the wife, and has the receipt of the rents and profits of her real estate during coverture; also whatever accrues to her by her labour, or otherwise, during the coverture, belongs to the husband; so that in favour of creditors, and that no person's act should prejudice another, the law makes the husband liable to those debts with which he took her attached. F. N. B. 265: 20 Hen. 6. 22 b: Moor 468. 1 Rel. Abr. 352: 3 Mol. 186.

If baron and feme are sued on the wife's bond, entered into by the feme before marriage, and judgment is had thereupon, and the wife dies before execution, yet the husband is liable; for the judgment has altered the debt. 1 Sid. 337.

If judgment be against husband and wife, he dies, and she survives, execution may be against her. 1 Rel. Abr. 890. l. 10, 50: See post X.

Where a man marries a widow executrix, &c. her evidence shall not be allowed to charge her second husband with more than she can prove to have actually come to her hands. Agreed per cur. Abr. Eq. Ca. 227. Hil. 1719.

D. confessed a judgment to F. who made his wife, the plaintiff, executrix, and died; she administered and married a second husband, and then she alone, without her husband, acknowledged satisfaction, though no real satisfaction was made. The court held that this was not good. S. d. 31.

A wife administratrix under 17 shall join with her husband in an action; per Tinsden, J. Mol. 297.

If a feme executrix takes baron, and relinquish all actions, this shall be a bar during the coverture without question; by the justices. Br. Releases, pl. 29.

If a feme executrix take baron, and the baron puts himself in arbitrament for death of the testator, and award is made, and the baron dies, the feme shall be barred; per tot' cur'. Brooke says, that from hence it seems to him, that the release of the baron without the feme is a good bar against the feme; quod conceditur, anno 39 H. 15; and therefore there he excepted those debts in his release, otherwise they had been extinct. Br. Releases, pl. 79.

If a man marries an administratrix to a former husband, who in her widowhood wasted the assets of her intestate, the husband is liable to the debts of the intestate, during the life of the wife; and this shall be deemed a deceit in him. Cro. Car. 603.

VI. Every gift, grant, or disposition of goods, lands, or other thing whatsoever, and all obligations and feoffments made by a feme covert, without her husband's consent, are void. 1 H. 5, 125: Fitz. Covert. 18.

The husband is obliged to maintain his wife in necessities; yet they must be according to his degree and estate, to charge him; and necessities may be suitable to a husband's degree of quality, but not to his estate; also they may be necessary, but not ex necessitate to charge the husband. 1 Med. 123: 1 N. J. Abr. 354. If a woman buys things for her necessary apparel, though without the consent of her husband, yet the husband shall be bound to pay it. Brownl. 47. And if the wife buys any thing for herself, children, or family, and the baron does any act precedent or subsequent whereby he shews his consent, he may be charged thereupon. 1 Sid. 120. The expences of a feme covert's funeral, paid by her father, while her husband had left her, and was gone abroad, deemed necessities. H. Black. Rep. 90. Though a wife is very lewd, if she cohabits with her husband, he is chargeable for all necessities for her, because he took her for better, for worse: and so he is if he runs away from her, or turns her away: but if she goes away from her husband, then as soon as such separation is notorious, whoever gives her credit doth it at his peril, and the husband is not liable, unless he take her again. 1 Salk. 119: see 1 Str. 647, 706: and as to actions against fems covert having eloped see 2 Black. Rep. 1079.

If a man cohabits with a woman, allows her to assume his name, and passes her for his wife, though in fact he is not married to her, yet he is liable to her contracts for necessities; and therefore ne unquus accouple is a bad plea in an action on the case for the debt of a wife; it is good only in dower or an appeal. Bull. N. P. 136: Esf. N. P. 124.

Although a husband be bound to pay his wife's debts for her reasonable provision, yet if she parts from him, especially by reason of any misbehaviour, and he allows her a maintenance, he shall never after be charged with her debts, till a new cohabitation; but if the husband receive her, or come after her, and lie with her but for a night, that may make him liable to the debts. Pajch. 3 Ann. Mod. Caf. 147, 171. If there be an agreement in writing between husband and wife to live separate, and that the shall have a separate maintenance, it shall bind them both till they both agree to cohabit again; and if the wife is willing to return to her husband, she may; but it has been adjudged, that the husband hath no coercive power over the wife to force her, though he may visit her, and use all lawful means in order to a reconciliation. Mich. Geo. 1. Mod. Ca. in L. & E. 22.

Where there is a separation by consent, and the wife hath a separate allowance, those who trust her, do it upon her own credit. 1 Salk. 116. If a husband makes his wife an allowance for clothes, &c. which is constantly paid her, it is said he shall not be charged. 1 Sid. 109. And if he forbids particular persons to trust her, he will not be chargeable: but a prohibition in general, by putting her in the news-papers, is no legal notice not to trust her. 1 Vent. 42.

It may now safely be assumed as a principle, that "where the husband and wife part by consent, and she has a separate maintenance from the husband, she shall in all cases be subject to her own debts"—This was finally decided and settled in the case of Englehead v. Lady Langborough, M. 23 Geo. 3. and H. 23 Geo. 3. where in actions against the defendant for goods sold the pleaded coverture; and the plaintiff's replication "that she lived separate and apart from her husband, from whom she had a separate maintenance; and so was liable to her own debts," was on demurrer holden to be good; and plaintiff had judgment.—In the above case the plea also stated that the husband lived in Ireland, which being out of the process of the court, some stress was laid on it in the decision; but in the case of Barwell v. Brock, H.

BARON AND FEME VII.

24 Geo. 3. it was decided as a general principle, that the husband was not liable in any case where the wife lived apart, and had a separate maintenance; and this principle was recognized in Corbett v. Poelnitz which followed it. 1 Term Rep. 5.

It has been said, that when the husband and wife live apart, the wife must have a separate maintenance from the husband, in order to discharge him. 4 Burr. 2078.—But this opinion seems much shaken by that of Lord Mansfield, in 1 Term Rep. 5—11, where he says, the cases (already mentioned) do not rest on one or two circumstances, but on the great principle which the court has laid down “that where a woman has a separate estate, and acts and receives credit as a feme sole, she shall be liable as such”—A principle which extends further than the facts of any cases yet determined.—And it seems that now a determination in 12 Mod. 603, where coverture and the life of the husband in Ireland was given in evidence in an action against a woman who had traded for 12 years as a widow, is not law.

The baron in an account shall not be charged by the receipt of his wife, except it came to his use. 1 Danv. 707. Yet if she usually receives and pays money, it will bind him in equity. Abi. Caf. Eq. 61. And why not in law, in an action for money had and received? For goods sold to a wife, to the use of the husband, the husband shall be charged, and be obliged to pay for the same. Sul. 425.

If the wife pawn her cloaths for money, and afterwards borrows money to redeem them, the husband is not chargeable unless he were consenting, or that the first sum came to his use. 2 Show. 283.

If a wife takes up clothes, as silk, &c. and pawns them before made into clothes, the husband shall not pay for them, because they never came to his use; otherwise if made up and worn, and then pawned; per Holt Ch. J. at Gullthall. 1 Salk. 118.

A wife may use the goods of her husband, but she may not dispose of them: and if she takes them away, it is not felony, for she cannot by our law steal the goods of her husband; but if she delivers them to an adulterer, and he receives them, it will be felony in him. 3 Inst. 308, 310.

If the baron is beyond sea in any voyage, and during his absence the wife buys necessaries, this is a good evidence for a jury to find that the baron assumes it. Sid. 127.

A husband who has abjured the realm, or who is banished, is thereby civiliter mortuus; and being disabled to sue or be sued in right of his wife, she must be considered as a feme sole; for it would be unreasonable that she should be remediless on her part, and equally hard on those who had any demands on her, that, not being able to have any redress from the husband, they should not have any against her. Bra. Baron and Feme, 66: Co. Lit. 133; 1 Rol. Rep. 400: Moon 851: 3 Bullst. 188: 1 Bullst. 140: 2 Vern. 104.

In assumpsit the defendant proved that she was married, and her husband alive in France, the plaintiff had judgment, upon which, as a verdict against evidence, she moved for a new trial, but it was denied; for it shall be intended that she was divorced: besides the husband is an alien enemy, and in that case, why is not his wife chargeable as a feme sole? 1 Salk. 116: Deerly v. Duchs of Mazarine.

By the custom of London, if a feme covert trades by herself, in a trade with which her husband does not intermeddle, she may sue and be sued as a feme sole. 10 Mod. 6.

But in such case she cannot give a bond and warrant of attorney to confess a judgment: and when sued as a feme sole, she must be sued in the courts of the city of London; for if sued in the courts above, the husband must be joined. So the wife alone cannot bring an action in the courts above, but only in the city courts; and this even though her husband be dead; if the cause of action accrued in his life time. 4 Term Rep. 361, 2.

Where a married man is transported for any felony, &c. the wife may be sued alone, for any debt contracted by her, after the transportation. 1 Term Rep. 9.

VII. In some cases the command or authority of the husband, either express or implied, will privilege the wife from punishment, even for capital offences. And therefore if a woman commit bare theft or burglary by the coercion of her husband, (or even in his company which the law construes a coercion,) she is not guilty of any crime, being considered as acting by compulsion, and not of her own will.

But for crimes mala in se, not being merely offences against the laws of society, she is answerable; as for murder and the like; not only because these are of a deeper die; but also since in a state of nature, no one is in subjection to another, it would be unreasonable to screen an offender from the punishment due to natural crimes, by the refinements and subordinations of civil society. In treason also, (the highest crime which a member of society can, as such, be guilty of) no plea of coverture shall excuse the wife: no presumption of the husband's coercion shall extenuate her guilt. 1 Hale's P. C. 47. And this as well because of the odiousness and dangerous consequence of the crime itself, as because the husband having broken through the most sacred tie of social community, by rebellion against the state, has no right to that obedience from a wife which he himself as a subject has forgotten to pay. 4 Comm. 28, 29. (But she shall not be considered criminal for receiving her husband, though guilty of treason, nor for the receiving another offender jointly with her husband. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 1. § 11. in note.)—See tit. Accessary.

If also a feme commit a theft of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, or be guilty of treason, murder or robbery, though in company with, or by coercion of her husband, she is punishable. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 11.—The distinction between her guilt in burglary or theft and robbery, seems to be, that in the former, if committed through the means of her husband “she cannot know what property her husband may claim in the goods taken; 10 Mod. C3;” but in robbery the wife has an opportunity of judging in what sort of right the goods are taken. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 1. § 9. in note.

If the wife receive stolen goods of her own separate act, without the privity of her husband, or if he knowing thereof, leave the house and forsake her company, the alone shall be guilty as accessary. 22 Aff. 40: Dalt. 157: 1 Hale P. C. 516.

In inferior misdemeanors also, another exception may be remarked; that a wife may be indicted and set in the pillory with her husband, for keeping a brothel; for this is an offence touching the domestic economy or government of the house, in which the wife has a principal share; and is also such an offence as the law precludes to be generally conducted by the intrigues of the female sex. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1 § 12: 10 Mod. 63.

A feme covert generally shall answer, as much as if she were sole, for any offence not capital against the common law or statute; and if it be of such nature, that it may be committed by her alone, without the concurrence of her husband, she may be punished for it without the husband by way of indictment, which being a proceeding grounded merely on the breach of the law, the husband shall not be included in it for any offence to which he is no way privy. 9 Co. 71: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1 § 9. See Moor 513: 11 Mod. 93: Nov 103: Savil 25: Cro. Jac. 482: 11 Co. 61.

A feme may be indicted alone for a riot. Dalt. 447.—For selling gin against the Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 3: Str. 1120.—For recalcitancy. Id. 16: Hob 90: 1 Sid. 410: 11 Co. 64: Sav. 25.—For being a common scold. 6 Mod. 213, 239.—For assault and battery. Salk. 384.—For foretelling. Sid. 410.—For usury. Skin 348.—For barratry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 6. See c. 1. § 13.—For a forcible entry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 4 § 35.—For keeping a gaming house. 10 Mod. 335.—Keeping a bawdy house, if the husband does not live with her. 1 Bac. Abr. See ant.—For trespass or slander. Kilw 61: Ro. Ab. 251: Leon 122: Cro. Car. 376.—See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 13 in note.

A man must answer for the trespasses of his wife: if a feme covert slander any person, &c. the husband and wife must be sued for it, and execution is to be awarded against him. 11 Rep. 62.—See post. X.

Husband and wife may be found guilty of nuisance, battery, &c. 10 Mod. 63.

If the wife incur the forfeiture of a penal statute, the husband may be made a party to an action or information for the same; as he may be generally to any suit for a cause of action given by his wife, and shall be liable to answer what shall be recovered thereon. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1.

For the punishment of femes covert, See tit. Felony, Treason, &c.

VIII. A wife is sub potestate viri, and therefore her acts shall not bind her, unless she levy a fine, &c. when she is examined in private, whether she doth it freely, or by compulsion of the husband; if baron and feme levy a fine, this will bar the feme: and where the feme is examined by writ, she shall be bound; else not. 1 Danv. Abr. 708. See ante IV.

If a common recovery be suffered by husband and wife of the wife's lands, this is a bar to the wife; for she ought to be examined upon the recovery. Pl. Com. 514 a: 10 Co. 43 a. 1 Roll. 347. l. 19.

So if husband and wife are vouches in a common recovery, the recovery shall be a bar, though the wife be not examined; for though it be proper that she be examined, yet that is not necessary, and is frequently omitted. 1 Sid. 11: Str. 319, 320.

A recovery, as well as a fine by a feme covert, is good to bar her, because the præcipe in the recovery answers the writ of covenant in the fine, to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges destroys the presumption of the law, that this is done by the coercion of the husband, for then it is to be presumed they would have refused her. 10 Co. 43: 2 Roll. Abr. 395.

By the custom in some cities and boroughs, a bargain and sale by the husband and wife, where the wife is examined by the mayor or other officer, binds the wife after the husband's death. 2 Inst. 673.—And it seems that by Stat. 34 Hen. 8. c. 22, all such customary conveyances shall be of force notwithstanding the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. See ante Div. IV.

So by custom in Denbigh in Wales, a surrender by husband and wife, where the wife is examined in court there, binds the wife and her heirs as a fine does, and this custom is not taken away by Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 25; for it is reasonable and agreeable to some customs in England. Dy. 363 b.

So a surrender of a copyhold by husband and wife, the wife being examined by the steward, binds the wife. Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Feme (G. 4) there cites Litt. 274; but which is to a different purpose.

A wife is disabled to make contracts, &c. 3 Inst. 110. And if a married woman enters into bond as feme sole, if she is sued as feme sole, she may plead Non est factum, and the coverture will avoid her bond. 1 Lil. Abr. 217. A feme covert may plead non assumpsit, and give coverture in evidence, which makes it no promise, &c. Ruym. 395.

In case money be due to the husband by bill or bond, or for rent on a lease, and it is paid to the wife; this shall not prejudice him, if after payment he publicly disagrees to it. 19 Jac. 1. B. R. 2 Shep. Abr. 426: Contra, if she is used to receive money for him, or if it can be proved the money paid came to his use.

If a feme covert levies a fine of her own inheritance without her husband, this shall bind her and her heirs, because they are estopped to claim any thing in the land, and cannot be admitted to say she was covert against the record; but the husband may enter and defeat it, either during the coverture, to restore him to the freehold he held jure uxoris, or after her death to restore himself to his tenancy by the curtesy, because no act of a feme covert can transfer that interest which the intermarriage has vested in the husband; and if the husband avoids it during the coverture, the wife or her heirs shall never after be bound by it. Bro. tit. Fines, 33: 10 Co. 43: Hob. 225: 7 Co. 8: Co. Lit. 46.

Lease made by baron and feme, shall be said to be the lease of them both, till the feme disagrees, which she cannot do in the life of the baron. Br. Agreement, pl. 6.

The examination of a feme covert is not always necessary in levying of fines, because that being provided that she may not at the instance of her husband make any unwary disposition of her property, it follows, that when the husband and wife do take an estate by the fine, and part with nothing, the feme need not be examined; but where she is to convey or pass any estate or interest, either by herself or jointly with her husband, there she ought to be examined; therefore if A. levies a fine conceit to baron and feme, and they render to the conuzor, the feme shall be examined; so it is where she takes an estate by the fine rendering rent. 2 Inst. 515: 2 Roll. Abr. 17.

If baron and feme by fine sur concessit grant land to J. S. for ninety-nine years, and warrant the said land to J. S. during the said term, and the baron dies, and J. S. is evicted by one that hath a prior title, he may thereupon bring covenant against the feme, notwithstanding she was covert at the time when the fine was levied. 2 Saund. 177: 1 Sid. 466. S. C.: 1 Mod. 290: 2 Keb. 684, 703.—See title Fines.

BARON AND FEME VIII.

If a husband disseise another to the use of his wife, this does not make her a disseisorese, she having no will of her own, nor will any agreement of hers to the disseisin during the coverture, make her guilty of the disseisin, for the same reason: but her agreement after her husband's death will make her a disseisorese, because then she is capable of giving her consent, and that makes her tenant of the freehold, and so subject to the remedy of the disseisee. 1 Rol. Abr. 660: Bro. Disseisin 67.

But if a feme covert actually enters and commits a disseisin, either sole or together with her husband, then she is a disseisorese, because she thereby gains a wrongful possession; but such actual entry cannot be to the use of her husband or a stranger, so as to make them disseisors, because though by such entry she gains an estate, yet she has no power of transferring it to another. Co. Lit. 35; 1 Rol. Abr. 660: Bro. Disseisin 15, 67: See 8 Hen. 6. 14. cont.

If the husband, seised of lands in right of his wife, makes a lease thereof for years by indenture or deed poll, reserving rent; all the books agree this to be a good lease for the whole term, unless the wife, by some act after the husband's death, shews her dissent thereto; for if she accepts rent which becomes due after his death, the lease is thereby become absolute and unavoidable; the reason whereof is, that the wife, after her intermarriage, being by law disabled to contract for, or make any disposition of, her own possessions, as having subjected herself and her whole will to the will and power of her husband; the law therefore transfers the power of dealing and contracting for her possessions, to the husband, because no other can then intermeddle therewith, and without such power in the husband, they would be obliged to keep them in their own manurance or occupation, which might be greatly to the prejudice of both; but to prevent the husband's abusing such power, and lest he should make leases to the prejudice of his wife's inheritance, the law has left her at liberty after his death, either to affirm and make good such lease, or defeat and avoid it, as she finds it subservient to her own interest; and this she may do, though she joined in such lease, unless made pursuant to statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28: See ante IV: Bro. Acceptance 10: Bro. Leases 24: Cro. Jac. 332: 2 And. 42: Co. Lit. 45: Plow. 137: Cro. Jac. 563: Yelv. 1: Cro. Eliz. 769.

Husband and wife make a lease for years, by indenture, of the wife's lands, reserving rent; the lessee enters, the husband before any day of payment dies; the wife takes a second husband, and he at the day accepts the rents, and dies; and it was held, that the wife could not now avoid the lease, for by her second marriage she transferred her power of avoiding it to her husband, and his acceptance of the rent binds her, as her own act before such marriage would have done; for he by the marriage succeeded into the power and place of the wife, and what she might have done either as to affirming or avoiding such lease before marriage, the same may the husband do after the marriage. Dyer 159: 1 Rol. Abr. 475: 1 Rol. Rep. 132.

A re-delivery by the wife after the death of her husband, of a deed delivered by her during the coverture is a sufficient confirmation of such deed so as to bind her, without its being re-executed or re-attested—and circumstances alone may be equivalent to such re-delivery, though the deed be a joint deed by baron and feme affecting the wife's land; and no fine levied. Cocp. 201.

The husband being seised of copyhold lands in right of his wife in fee, makes thereof a lease for years not warranted by the custom, which is a forfeiture of her estate, yet this shall not bind the wife or her heirs after the husband's death, but that they may enter and avoid the lease, and thereby purge the forfeiture; and the diversity seems between this act, which is at an end when the lease is expired or defeated by the entry of the lord, or the wife after the husband's death, and such acts as are a continuing detriment to the inheritance, as wilful waste by the husband, which tends to the destruction of the manor; so of non payment of rent, denial of suit or service; for such forfeitures as these bind the inheritance of the wife after the husband's death; but in the other case the husband cannot forfeit by this lease more than he can grant, which is but for his own life. 2 Rol. Rep. 344, 361, 372: Cro. Car. 7: Cro. Eliz. 149: 4 Co. 27.

A feme covert is capable of purchasing, for such an act does not make the property of the husband liable to any disadvantage, and the husband is supposed to assent to this, as being to his advantage, but the husband may disagree; and that shall avoid the purchase; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the purchase is good, for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to turn to his advantage; but in this case, though the husband should agree to the purchase, yet after his death she may waive it, for having no will of her own at the time of the purchase, she is not indispensibly bound by the contract; therefore if she does not, when under her own management and will, by some act express her agreement to such purchase, her heirs shall have the privilege of departing from it. Co. Lit. 3 a.

Jointress paying off a mortgage was decreed to hold over till she or her executor be satisfied, and interest to be allowed her. Chan. Cases 271.

The husband gave a voluntary bond after marriage to make a jointure of a certain value on his wife; the husband accordingly makes a jointure; the wife gives up the bond; the jointure is voided; the jointure shall be made good out of the husband's personal estate, there being no creditors in the case; and the delivery up of the bond by a feme covert could no ways bind her interest. Vern. 427. pl. 402.

A feme covert agrees to sell her inheritance, so as she might have 200 l. of the money secured to her; the land is sold, and the money put out in a trustee's name accordingly; this money shall not be liable to the husband's debts, nor shall any promise by the wife, to that purpose, subsequent to the first original agreement, be binding in that behalf. 2 Vern. 64, 65. pl. 58; Tim. 1688.

It is a general rule that a feme covert acting with respect to her separate property, is competent to act in all respects as if she were a feme sole. 2 Vex. 190: 1 Bro. C. R. 20; and see 1 Vex. 163.—Where the wife, being authorised by settlement to dispose of her separate estate, contracted to sell it, the court of Chancery will bind her to a specific performance. 1 Vex. 517: 1 Bro. C. R. 20.—So the bond of a feme covert jointly with her husband shall bind her separate estate. 1 Bro. C. R. 16: 2 Vex. 190.

BARON AND FEME IX. X.

IX. In those cases where the debt or cause of action will survive to the wife, the husband and wife are regularly to join in action; as in recovering debts due to the wife before marriage; in actions relating to her freehold or inheritance, or injuries done to the person of the wife. 1 Roll. Abr. 347: 2 Mol. 267.

But if a feme sole hath a rent-charge, and rent is in arrear and she marries, and the baron distrains for this rent, and thereupon a rescous is made, this is a tort to the baron himself, and he may have an action alone. Cro. El. 2. 459: Owen 82. S. P.: Moor 584. S. C.

So if a feme sole hath right to have common for life, and she takes husband, and she is hindered in taking the common, he may have an action alone without his wife. it being only to recover damages. 2 Bulst. 14.

But if baron and feme are disseised of the lands of the feme, they must join in action for the recovery of this land. 1 Bulst. 21.

The baron may have an action alone upon the Stat. 5 R. 2. ff. 1. c. 8, for entering into the land of the feme; trespass and taking charters of the inheritance of the feme; quare impedit, &c. But for personal torts, they must join, though the baron is to have the damages. 1 Dan. 709: 1 Roll. Rep. 360. The husband is to join in actions for battery to the wife; and a wife may not bring any action for wrong to her without her husband. Co. Lit. 132, 326. An action for a battery on the wife, brought by husband and wife, must be laid to the damage of both. 2 Lord Raym. 1209. For an injury done to the wife alone, action cannot be maintained by the husband alone, without her; but for assault and debauching or lying with the wife, or for a loss and injury done to the husband, in depriving him of the conversation and service of his wife, he alone may bring an action; and these last actions are laid for assault, and detaining, &c. the wife, per quod consortium amisit, &c. Cro. Jac. 538: See Yelv. 89.

For taking any thing from the wife, the husband only is to bring the action, who has the property; for the wife hath not the property. In all cases where the feme shall not have the thing recovered, but the husband only, he alone is to bring the action. 1 Roll. Rep. 360, except as above, &c. For a personal duty to the wife, the baron only may bring the action: and the husband is intitled to the fruits of his wife's labour, for which he may bring quantum meruit. 1 Lill. Abr. 227: 1 Salk. 114. In case, before marriage, a feme enters into articles concerning her estate, she is as a separate person; and the husband may be plaintiff in equity against the wife. Proc. in Chanc. 24.

Where the feme is administratrix, the suit must be in both their names, for by the intermarriage the husband hath authority to intermeddle with the goods as well as the wife; but in the declaration the granting administration to the feme must be set forth. Ful. the Books of Entries, and Gold. 40 pl. 44.

In action for goods where the feme hath as executrix, they must join, to the end that the damages thereby recovered may accrue to her as executrix in lieu of the goods. Went. Off. Ex. 207.

In an action upon a trover before marriage, and a conversion after, the baron and feme ought to join; for this action, as a trespass, disaffirms the property; but the baron alone ought to bring a replevin, detinue, &c. for the allegations admit and affirm a property in the feme at the time of the marriage, which by consequence must have vested in the baron. 1 Sid. 172: 1 Keb. 641. S. C.: 1 Ent. 261: 2 Leo. 107. S. P.; and that he may join the wife at his election.

If A. declares, that the defendant being indebted to him and his wife, as executrix to one J. S. in consideration that A. would forbear to sue him for three months, assumed, &c. and avers that he forbore, and that his wife is still alive, the action is well maintainable by the husband alone, for this is on a new contract, to which the wife is a stranger. Carth. 462: 1 Salk. 117: Yelv. 84: Cro. Jac. 110. S. P.

Where a right of action doth accrue to a woman before marriage, as where a bond is made to her and forfeited, there, if she marry, she must be joined with the husband in an action of debt against the obligor. Owen 82.

In all actions real for the land of the wife, the husband and wife ought to join. R. 1 Bulst. 21. So in actions personal for a chose in action, due to the wife before coverture. 1 Roll. 347. l. 53: Cro. El. 537: Visc. Com. Dig.

In the civil law the husband and the wife are considered as two distinct persons; and may have separate estates, contracts, debts and injuries: and therefore in our ecclesiastical courts a woman may sue and be sued without her husband. 2 Ro. Ab. 298. See tit. Action.

X. The husband is by law answerable for all actions for which his wife stood attached at the time of the coverture, and also for all torts and trespasses during coverture, in which cases the action must be joint against them both; for if she alone were sued, it might be a means of making the husband's property liable; without giving him an opportunity of defending himself. Co. Lit. 133: Doftr. Plaut. 3: 2 Hen. 6. 4.

If goods come to a feme covert by trover, the action may be brought against husband and wife, but the conversion may be laid only in the husband, because the wife cannot convert goods to her own use; and the action is brought against both, because both were concerned in the trespass of taking them. See Co. Lit. 351: 1 Roll. Abr. 6. pl. 7: Yelv. 106: Noy 79: 1 Leon 312: Cro. Car. 254, 494: 1 Roll. Abr. 348. But in debt upon a decastament against lumen and feme executrix, it shall not be laid quod devastaverunt, for a feme covert cannot waste. 2 Leo. 145.

An action on the case was brought against baron and feme, for retaining and keeping the servant of the plaintiff, and judgment accordingly. 2 Leo. 63.

If a lease for life or years be made to baron and feme, reserving rent, an action of debt for rent arrear may be brought against both; for this is for the advantage of the wife. 1 Roll. Abr. 348.

If an action be brought against an husband and wife for the debt of the wife, when sole, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, the ca. sa. shall issue to take both the husband and wife in execution. Moor 704.—But if the action was originally brought against herself when sole, and pending the suit she marries, the ca. sa. shall be awarded against her only, and not against the husband. Cro. Jac. 323.—Yet if judgment be recovered against an husband and wife, for the contract, nay even for the personal misbehaviour (Cro. Car. 513,) of the wife, during her coverture, the ca. sa. shall issue against the husband only: which is (says Mr. J. Blackstone) one of the many great privileges of English wives. 3 Comm. 414: See 3 Wils.

BARON AND FEME XL

124.—See tit. Arrest, Bail, Execution, Action, &c.—But in an action against husband and wife, for an assault by the wife, it was held that both may be taken in execution. 1 Wils. 149: See Espinasse's N. P. 327.

Where a woman before marriage becomes bound for the payment of a sum of money, and on her marriage separate property is settled on her, if the obligee can have no remedy against the husband, the wife's separate property is bound. But the obligee must first endeavour to recover against the husband by suing him. 1 Bro. C. R. 17. in note.

XI. If baron and feme are divorced causâ adulterii, which is a divorce à mensâ & thoro, they continue baron and feme: it is otherwise in a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, which dissolves the marriage.

The feme, after divorce, shall re-have the goods which she had before marriage. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. D. 13. pl. 63. per Fitzherbert: Keilw. 122 b. pl. 75.

But if the husband had given or sold them without collusion before the divorce, there is no remedy; but if by collusion, she may aver the collusion, and have detinue for the whole, whereof the property may be known; and as for the rest, which consists of money, &c. she shall sue in the spiritual court. Br. Deraignment and Divorce, pl. 1. cites 26 H. 8. 7.

If a man is bound to a feme sole, and after marries her, and after they are divorced, the obligation is revived. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. Because the divorce being à vinculo matrimonii, by reason of some prior impediment, as precontract, &c. makes them never husband and wife ab initio; but if the husband had made a feoffment in fee of the lands of his wife, and then the divorce had been, that would have been a discontinuance as well as if the husband had died, because there the interest of a third person had been concerned, but between the parties themselves it will have relation to destroy the husband's title to the goods, and it proves no more than the common rule, viz. that relations will make a nullity between the parties themselves, but not amongst strangers. Lord Raym. 521: Hil. 11 W. 3.

If a man gives lands in tail to baron and feme, and they have issue, and after, divorce is sued, now they have only frank-tenement, and the issue shall not inherit. Br. Tail et Dones, &c. pl. 9.

If the baron and feme purchase jointly and are disseised, and the baron releases, and after they are divorced, the feme shall have the moiety, though before the divorce there were no moieties; for the divorce converts it into moieties. Br. Deraignment, pl. 18. cites 32 Hen. 8.

If baron alien the wife's land, and then there is a divorce causâ præcontractû, or any other divorce which dissolves the marriage à vinculo matrimonii, the wife during the life of the baron may enter by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28: Dyer 13. pl. 61: But vide Ld. Raym. 521.

But if after such alienation and divorce the baron dies, she is put to her cui in vita ante divorcium; and yet the words of the statute are, that such alienation shall be void, but this shall be intended to toll the cui in vita. Mo. 58. pl. 164: Pach. 8 Eliz. Brayton v. Conway.

Divorce causâ adulterii of the husband; afterwards the wife sues in the spiritual court for a legacy; the executor pleads the release of the baron; the release binds the wife, for the vinculum matrimonii continues. Cro. Eliz. 908: Vide 1 Salk. 115.

Holt held, that if feme covert after divorce à mensâ & thoro, sues for a legacy, which, if recovered, comes to her husband, there the husband may release it, because there is no alimony: and if he may release the duty, he may release the costs. 1 Salk. 115. pl. 4, S. C. & S. P. and see 1 Vern. 261.

A divorce was à mensâ & thoro, and then the husband dies intestate. The wife by bill prayed assistance as to dower and administration (it being granted to another) and distribution. The Master of the Rolls bid her go to law to try if she was entitled to her dower, there being no impediment, and as to that dismissed the bill; and as to the administration, the granting that is in the ecclesiastical court; but the distribution more properly belongs to this court; but since in that court she is such a wife as is not intitled to administration, he dismissed the bill as to distribution too, and said, if they could repeal that sentence, she then would be intitled to distribution. Ch. Proc. 111.

In case of a divorce à mensâ & thoro the law allows alimony to the wife: which is that allowance which is made to a woman for her support out of the husband's estate, being settled at the discretion of the ecclesiastical judge, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case.—And the ecclesiastical court is the proper court in which to sue for alimony. Het. 69.—This is sometimes called her essozers, for which, if the husband refuses payment there is (besides the ordinary process of excommunication in the ecclesiastical court) a writ at common law de essoveriis habendis, in order to recover it. 1 Lev. 6. It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties; but in case of an elopement and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony. Cowel. 1 Inst. 235 a: 12 Rep. 30.

A bill may be brought in Chancery for a specific performance of an agreement by the husband with a third person, for a separate maintenance of the wife; notwithstanding that alimony belongs to the spiritual court. Treat. Eq. 39.

The court of chancery has decreed the wife a separate maintenance out of a trust fund on account of the cruelty and ill-behaviour of the husband, though there was no evidence of a divorce or agreement that the fund in dispute should be so applied. 2 Vern. 752.—And in another case the husband having quitted the kingdom, Lord Hardwicke decreed the wife the interest of a trust fund till he should return and maintain her as he ought. 2 Atk. 96.—Yet in a subsequent case Lord Hardwicke observes, that he could find no decree to compel a husband to pay a separate maintenance to his wife, except upon an agreement between them, and even then unwillingly. 3 Atk. 547.—And this latter opinion seems most reconcilable with principle; for the case of a divorce propter sævitiam (See 2 Vern. 493,) may be considered as an implied agreement; and if there be an express or implied agreement, there seems no doubt, but that courts of equity may, concurrently with the spiritual court, in proceeding upon it, decree a separate maintenance. Wood's Inst. 62: 2 Vern. 386: Guth v. Guth, MSS.—The spiritual court however would be the more proper jurisdiction if it acted in rem. Lit. Rep. 78: 2 Atk. 511.—But if after an agreement between husband and wife to live separate, they appear to have cohabited, equity equity will consider the agreement as waived thereby. Fletcher v. Fletcher, Mich. 1788.—See Fonblanque's Treat. Bq. 96, 7.

Where, on a separation, lands are conveyed by the baron in trust for the feme, chancery will not bar the feme from suing the baron in the trustee's name, and a surrender or release by the baron shall not be made use of against the feme. 2 Chan. Ca. 102.

A woman living separate from her husband, and having a separate maintenance, contracts debts. The creditors, by a bill in this court, may follow the separate maintenance whilst it continues; but when that is determined, and the husband dead, they cannot by a bill charge the jointure with the debts: by Lord Keeper North; and the rather, because the executor of the husband, who may have paid the debt, is no party. Vern. 326.

Where the husband, during his cohabitation with the wife, makes her an allowance of so much a-year for her expences, if she out of her own good housewifery saves any thing out of it, this will be the husband's estate, and he shall reap the benefit of his wife's frugality; because when he agrees to allow her a certain sum yearly, the end of the agreement is, that she may be provided with clothes and other necessaries, and whatsoever is saved out of this, redounds to the husband; per Lord Keeper Finch. Freem. Rep. 304.

A term was created on the marriage of A. with B. for raising 200 l. a-year for pin-money, and in the settlement A. covenanted for payment of it. There was an arrear of one year at A.'s death, which was decreed, because of the covenant to be charged on a trust-estate settled for payment of debts, it being in arrear for one year only; ficus had it been in arrear for several years. Chan. Prec. 26.

The plaintiff's relation (to whom he was heir) allowed the wife pin-money; which being in arrear, he gave her a note to this purpose; I am indebted to my wife 100 l. which became due to her such a day; after by his will he makes provision out of his lands for payment of all his debts, and all monies which be owed to any person in trust for his wife; and the question was, whether the 100 l. was to be paid within this trust; and my Lord Keeper decreed not; for in point of law it was no debt, because a man cannot be indebted to his wife; and it was not money due to any in trust for her. Hil. 1701. between Cornwall and the earl of Montague. But quære; for the testator looked on this as a debt, and seems to intend to provide for it by his will. Abr. Eq. Ca. 66.

Where the wife hath a separate allowance made before marriage, and buys jewels with the money arising thereout, they will not be assets liable to the husband's debts. Chan. Prec. 295.

Where there is a provision for the wife's separate use for clothes, if the husband finds her clothes, this will bar the wife's claim; nor is it material whether the allowance be provided out of the estate which was originally the husband's, or out of what was her own estate; for in both cases her not having demanded it for several years together, shall be construed a consent from her that he should receive it; per Lord C. Maulesfield. 2 P. Wms. 82, 83.

So where 50 l. a year was reserved for clothes and private expences, secured by a term for years, and ten years after the husband died, and soon after the wife died; the executors in equity demanded 500 l. for ten years arrear of this pin-money; but it appearing that the husband maintained her, and no proof that she ever demanded it, the claim was disallowed. 2 P. Wms. 341.

BAR, or BARR, Lat. barra. Fr. barre.] In a legal sense, is a Plea or peremptory exception of a defendant, sufficient to destroy the plaintiff's action. And it is divided into bar to common intendment, and bar special; bar temporary, and perpetual: bar to a common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which usually is a bar to the declaration of the plaintiff: bar special is that which is more than ordinary, and falls out upon some special circumstance of the fact, as to the case in hand. Terms de Ley.

Bar temporary is such a bar that is good for the present, but may afterwards fail: and bar perpetual is that which overthrows the action of the plaintiff for ever. Plowd. 26. But a plea in bar, not giving a full answer to all the matter contained in the plaintiff's declaration is not good. 1 Lill. Abr. 211. If one be barred by plea to the writ, or to the action of the writ, he may have the same writ again, or his right action: but if the plea in bar, be to the action itself, and the plaintiff is barred by judgment, &c. it is a bar for ever in personal actions. 6 Rep. 7. And a recovery in debt is a good bar to action on the case for the same thing: also a recovery on assumpsit in case, is a good bar in debt, &c. Cro. Jac. 110: 4 Rep. 94.

In all actions personal, as debt, account, &c. a bar is perpetual, and in such case the party hath no remedy, but by writ of error or attain; but if a man is barred in a real action or judgment, yet he may have an action of as high a nature, because it concerns his inheritance; as for instance, if he is barred in a formedon in descender, yet he may have a formedon in the remainder, &c. 6 Rep. 7. It has been resolved, that a bar in any action real or personal by judgment upon demurrer, verdict, or confession, is a bar to that action, or any action of the like nature for ever: but, according to Pemberton Chief Justice, this is to be understood, when it doth appear that the evidence in one action would maintain the other; for otherwise the court shall intend that the party hath mistaken his action. Skin. 57, 58.

Bar to a common intent is good: and if an executor be sued for his testator's debt, and he pleadeth that he had no goods left in his hands at the day the writ was taken out against him, this is a good bar to a common intendment, till it is shewn that there are goods: but if the plaintiff can shew by way of replication, that more goods have fallen into his hands since that time, then, except the defendant alledge a better bar, he shall be condemned in the action. Plowd. 26: Kitch. 215: Bro. tit. Barre.

There is a bar material, and a bar at large: bar material may be also called special bar; as when one, in stay of the plaintiff's action, pleadeth some particular matter, viz. a descent from him that was owner of the land, &c. a scotfment made by the ancestor of the plaintiff, or the like: a bar at large is, when the defendant, by way of exception, doth not traverse the plaintiff's title, by pleading, nor confess, nor avoid it, but only makes to himself a title in his bar. Kitch. 68: 5 H. 7. 29.

See titles Abatement, Action, Judgment; and especially Pleading.

This word Bar is likewise used for the place where sergeants and counsellors at law stand to plead the causes in in court; and where prisoners are brought to answer their indictments, &c. whence our lawyers, that are called to the bar, are termed barristers. 24 H. 8. c. 24.

BARRASTER, BARRISTER, [barristerius.] A counsellor learned in the law, admitted to plead at the bar, and there to take upon him the protection and defence of clients. They are termed jurisconsulti; and in other countries, called licentiatii in jure; and antiently barristers at law were called apprentices of the law, (from the French apprendre to learn,) in Lat. apprenticii juris nobiles. Fortesc. The time before they ought to be called to the bar, by the ancient orders, was eight years, now reduced to five; and the exercises done by them, (if they were not called ex gratia), were twelve grand moots performed in the inns of Chancery, in the time of the grand readings, and twenty-four petty moots in the term times, before the readers of the respective inns: and a barrister newly called was to attend the six (or four) next long vacations the exercise of the house, viz. in Lent and Summer, and was thereupon for those three (or two) years stiled a vacation barrister. Also they are called utter barristers, i. e. pleaders aufter the bar, to distinguish them from benchers, or those that have been readers, who are sometimes admitted to plead within the bar, as the king, queen, or prince's counsel are.

From the degrees of barristers and serjeants at law, (see title Serjeant) some are usually selected to be his Majesty's counsel; the two principal of whom are called his Attorney and Solicitor-General.—The first king's counsel under the degree of serjeant, was Sir Francis Bacon, who was made so honoris causâ, without either patent or fee; so that the first of the modern order, who are now the sworn servants of the crown with a standing salary, seems to have been Sir Francis North, afterwards Lord Keeper to Charles II. These king's counsel must not be employed in any cause against the crown without special licence. A custom now prevails of granting letters patent of precedence to such barristers as the crown thinks proper to honour with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and pre-audience as are assigned in their respective patents, sometimes next after the king's Attorney General, but usually next after his Majesty's counsel then being.—These, as well as the queen's Attorney and Solicitor-General, rank promiscuously with the king's counsel, and together with them sit within the bar of the respective courts; but receive no salaries and are not sworn, and therefore are at liberty to be retained in causes against the crown. And all other serjeants and barristers indiscriminately, (except in the court of Common Pleas, where serjeants only are admitted in term time) may take upon them the protection and defence of any suitors whether plaintiff or defendant. 3 Comm. 27, 28.

A counsel can maintain no action for his fees; (Davis Pref. 22: 1 C. R. 38;) which are given not as a salary or hire, but as a mere gratuity, which a barrister cannot demand without doing wrong to his reputation. Davis 23.

In order to encourage due freedom of speech in the lawful defence of their clients, and at the same time to give a check to unseemly licentiousness, it hath been holden, that a counsel is not answerable for any matter by him spoken, relative to the cause in hand, and suggested in his client's instructions; although it should reflect upon the reputation of another, and even prove absolutely groundless: but if he mentions an untruth of his own invention, or even upon instructions, if it be impertinent to the cause in hand, he is then liable to an action from the party injured. Cro. Jac. 90. And could feel guilty of deceit or collusion, are punishable by Stat. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 28, with imprisonment for a year and a day, and perpetual silence in the courts; and the latter punishment is still sometimes inflicted for gross misdemeanours in practice. Raym. 376: 3 Comm. 29.

Barristers, who constantly attend the King's Bench, &c. are to have the privilege of being sued in transitory actions in the county of Middlesex. But the court will not change the venue because some of the defendants are barristers. Str. 610. See title Privilege.—Pleas, before they are filed, must be signed by a barrister or serjeant. See title Abatement, Pleading.

BARRATOR, or BARRETOR. Lat. barrator, Fr. barrateur.] A common mover of suits and quarrels, either in courts, or elsewhere in the country, that is himself never quiet, but at variance with one or other. Lambard derives the word barretor from the Lat. balatro, a vile knave: but the proper derivation is from the Fr. barrateur, i. e. a deceiver, and this agrees with the description of a common barretor in Lord Coke's Reports, viz. that he is a common mover and maintainer of suits in disturbance of the peace, and in taking and detaining the possession of houses and lands, or goods by false inventions, &c. 8 Rep. 37.

However it seems clear that no general indictment, charging the defendant with being a common oppressor, and disturber of the peace, and stirrer up of strife among neighbours is good, without adding the words common barretor, which is a term of art appropriated by law to this purpose. 1 Mod. 288: 1 Sid. 282: Cro. Jac. 526: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 9.

A common barretor is said to be the most dangerous oppressor in the law; for he oppresseth the innocent by colour of law, which was made to protect them from oppression. 8 Rep. 37. No one can be a barretor in respect of one act only; for every indictment for such crime must charge the defendant with being communis barrator, and conclude contra faciem, &c. And it hath been holden, that a man shall not be adjudged a barretor for bringing any number of suits in his own right, though they are vexatious, especially if there be any colour for them; for if they prove false, he shall pay the defendant costs. 1 Pol. Abi. 355: 3 Mod. 98.

A barrister at law entertaining a person in his house, and bringing several actions in his name, where nothing was due, was found guilty of barrety. 3 Mod. 97. An attorney is in no danger of being convicted of barrety, in respect of his maintaining another in a groundless action, to the commencing whereof he was no way privy. Ibid. A common solicitor, who solicits suits, is a common barretor, and may be indicted thereof, because it is no profession in law. 1 Danv. Abi. 725.

The punishment for this offence in a common person is by fine and imprisonment; but if the offender (as is too frequently the case) belongs to the profession of the law, a barretor who is thus able as well as willing to do mischief, ought also to be disabled from practising for the future. See the Stat. 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, under title Attornies at Law: 4 Comm. 134: and see Stat. 34 E. 3, c. 1: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81.

U

It seems to be the settled practice not to suffer the prosecutor to go on in the trial of an indictment of this kind, without giving the defendant a note of the particular matters which he intends to prove against him; for otherwise it would be impossible to prepare a defence against so general and uncertain a charge, which may be proved by such a multiplicity of different instances. 5 Mod 18: 1 Ld. Raym. 490: 12 Mod. 516: 2 Atk. 340: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 13.

To this head may also be referred another offence of equal malignity and audaciousness, that of suing another in the name of a fictitious plaintiff; either one not in being at all, or one who is ignorant of the suit. This offence, if committed in any of the king's superiour courts, is left, as a high contempt, to be punished at their discretion. But in courts of a lower degree, where the crime is equally pernicious, but the authority of the judges not equally extensive, it is directed by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2, to be punished by six months' imprisonment, and treble damages to the party injured. 4 Comm. 134.

BARREL, barillum.] A measure of wine, ale, oil, &c. Of wine it contains the eighth part of a tun, the fourth part of a pipe, and the moiety of a hoghead; that is, thirty-one gallons and a half. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.—Of beer it contains thirty six gallons; and of ale, thirty-two gallons. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 4: 12 Car. 2. c. 23.—The assise of herring-barrels is thirty-two gallons wine measure, containing in every barrel usually a thousand full herrings. Stat. 13 El. c. 11.—The eel barrel contains thirty gallons. 2 H. 6. c. 11.

BARRIERS, Fr. barrières; jeu de barres, i. e. palestra.] A martial exercise of men armed and fighting together with short swords, within certain bars or rails which separated them from the spectators; it is now disused here in England. Coriol. There are likewise barrier towns, or places of defence on the frontiers of kingdoms.

BARROW, from the Sax. barrow, a heap of earth.] A large hillock or mount, raised or cast up in many parts of England, which seem to have been a mark of the Roman tumuli, or sepulchres of the dead. The Sax. beora was commonly taken for a grove of trees on the top of a hill. Kennet's Gloss.

To BARTER, from the Fr. barater, or Span. baratar, circumvenire.] To exchange one commodity for another, or truck wares for wares. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 9. Because probably they that exchange in this manner do endeavour, for the most part, one to over-reach and circumvent the other.—So Bartery the substantive in Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7, of Bankrupts.

BARTON, or BERTON, A word used in Devonshire, for the demesne lands of a manor; sometimes the manor house itself; and in some places for out-houses and fold-yards. In the Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 12, barton lands, and demesne land, are used as synonima. Blount says it always signifies a farm distinct from a mansion—and bertonarii were farmers, husbandmen that held bartons at the will of the lord.—In the West, they called a great farm a barton or burtun; and a small farm, a living. Blountin v. Barton and Berton.

BAS CHEVALIERS, Low or inferior knights by tenure of a base military fee, as distinguished from bannerets, the chief or superior knights: hence we call our simple knights, viz. knights batchelors, bas chevaliers. Kennet's Gloss. to Parish. Antiq.

BASE COURT, Fr. cour basse.] Is any inferior court, that is not of record, as the court baron, &c. Kitch. fol. 95, 96.

BASE ESTATE, Fr. bas estat.] Or Base Tenure. That estate which base tenants have in their lands. And base tenants, according to Lambard, are those who perform villainous services to their lords; but there is a difference between a base estate and villenage; for to hold in pure villenage is to do all that the lord will command him; and if a copy-holder have but a base estate, he not holding by the performance of every commandment of his lord, cannot be said to hold in villenage. See Kitch. 41.—This Dict. title Tenures.

BASE FEE, Is a tenure in fee at the will of the lord, distinguished from socage free tenure: but Lord Coke says, that a base fee, or qualified fee, is what may be defeated by limitation, or on entry, &c. Co. Lit. 1, 18. Bassa tenura, or base tenure, was a holding by villenage, or other customary service, opposed to alta tenura, the higher tenure in capite or by military service, &c.—See tit. Tenure; Tail.

BAS VILLE, The suburbs or inferior town, as used in France.

BASELS, basilli, A kind of coin abolished by King Hen. 2. anno 1158: Hollingshead's Chron. p. 67.

BASELARD, or BASILLARD, In the Stat. 12 Rich. 2. c. 6, Signifies a weapon, which Mr. Speight, in his exposition upon Chaucer, calls pugionem vel sicam, a poniard. Knighton, lib. 5. p. 2731.

BASILEUS, A word mentioned in several of our historians signifying King, and seems peculiar to the kings of England. Monasticon, tom. 1. p. 65. Edgar totius Angliæ basileus coris navi.—In many places of the Monasticon this word occurs; and also in Innythbus, Malmf-bury, Mat. Paris, H. vreden, &c.

BASNETUM, A basnet, or helmet.

BASSINET, A skin with which the soldiers covered themselves. Blount.

BASTARD, bastardus; fancifully derived from the Greek Cassapis, meretrice; more truly from the Brit. Bastard, notbus, spiritus; or according to Spelman from the German, bastart—bas, low, and starr risen, Sax starr; as up starr, homo novus, suddenly risen up.] One whose father and mother were not lawfully married to each other, previous to his birth; or as it has been seemingly more incorrectly phrased, "one born out of lawful wedlock."

I. 1. A bastard by our English laws, is one that is not only begotten, but born out of lawful matrimony. The civil and canon laws do not allow a child to remain a bastard, if the parents afterwards intermarry; and herein they differ most materially from our law; which though not so strict as to require that the child shall be begotten, yet makes it an indispensable condition to make it legitimate, that it shall be born after lawful wedlock. 1 Comm. 454: 2 Inst. 96, 7.

BASTARD I. 1.

Blackstone observes, that the reason of our English law is surely much superiour to that of the Roman, if we consider the principal end and design of the marriage contract taken in a civil light. He then recapitulates several motives, which he concludes we may suppose actuated the Peers at the parliament of Merton, when they refused to enact that children born before marriage should be esteemed legitimate. 1 Comm. 456.—and see 1 Inst. 244 b: and 245 a. in the notes.

If a man marries a woman grossly big with child by another, and within three days after, she is delivered, the issue is no bastard. 1 Danv. Abr. 729. If a child is born within a day after marriage between parties of full age, if there be no apparent impossibility that the husband should be the father of it, the child is no bastard, but supposed to be the child of the husband. 1 Rel. Abr. 358.

As all children born before matrimony are bastards; so are all children born so long after the death of the husband, that by the usual course of gestation they could not be begotten by him. But this being a matter of some uncertainty, the law is not exact as to a few days. Co. Jac. 451.—See 1 Inst. 123 b. in note 1 and 2; where the time of gestation as connected with this question is enquired into at great length, and with exquisite nicety and accuracy. On the whole it appears that what is commonly considered as the usual period is forty weeks, or 280 days.—But though the child is born some time after, it only affords presumption, not proof of illegitimacy. The information of the late celebrated anatomist Dr. Hunter, is also given, from which we learn, 1. That the usual period is nine calendar months; (from 270 to 280 days;) but there is very commonly a difference of one, two, or three weeks.—2. A child may be born alive at any time, from three months, but we see none born with powers of coming to manhood, or of being reared before seven calendar months, or near that time; at six months it cannot be.—3. The Doctor said he had known a woman bear a living child, in a perfectly natural way, fourteen days later than nine calendar months; and he believed two women to have been delivered of a child alive, in a natural way, above ten calendar months from the hour of conception.

This case of birth of children after the death of the husband, gives occasion to the writ de ventre inspiciendo. See title Ventre inspiciendo.

But if a man dies, and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time, as that by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate, for he may when he arrives to years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. 1 Inst. 8. For this reason by the ancient Saxon laws, in imitation of the civil law, a widow was forbidden to marry for twelve months. Ll. Ethel. A. D. 1008: Ll. Canut. c. 71: 1 Comm. 456, 7.—See 1 Inst. 8 a. in note 7. where it is said, “Brook questions this doctrine, from which it seems as if he thought it reasonable that the circumstances of the case, instead of the choice of the issue, should determine who is the father.” See Bro. Ab. Bastardy, p. 18: Palm. 10.—See further, 1 Inst. 123 b. in note 1, where additional authorities are cited, to shew that in this case a jury ought to decide on the question, according to proof of the woman’s condition,

Children born during wedlock, may also in some circumstances be bastards. As if the husband be out of the kingdom of England, (or as the law somewhat loosely phrases it, extra quatuor maria,) for above nine months, so that no access to his wife can be presumed, her issue during that period shall be bastards. 1 Inst. 244. But generally, during the coverture, access of the husband shall be presumed, unless the contrary can be shown. Salk. 123: 3 P. Wms. 276: Str. 925; which is such a negative as can only be proved by shewing him to be elsewhere; for the general rule is presumitur pro legitimatione. 5 Rep. 98.—See also 1 Inst. 126 a. in note 2; and as to these phrases infra (or more classically intra) & extra, quatuor maria, see some incomplete notes in 1 Inst. 108 a. note 6; and 261 a. note 1.—Although a feme covert may on a question of bastardy give evidence of the fact of criminal conversation, yet she shall not be admitted to prove the non-access of her husband. Annal. 79.

There are determinations by which it appears that the child of a married woman may be proved a bastard by other circumstantial evidence than that of the husband’s non-access. 4 Term Rep. 251: 356.

In a divorce à mensâ & thoro, if the wife has children, they are bastards; for the law will presume the husband and wife conformable to the sentence of separation, unless access be proved; but in a voluntary separation by agreement, the law will suppose access unless the negative be shewn; and the children, primâ facie shall not be esteemed bastards. Salk. 123.—In case of divorce in the spiritual court à vinculo matrimonii, all the issue born during the coverture are bastards; because such divorce is always upon some cause, that rendered the marriage unlawful and null from the beginning. 1 Inst. 235.

If a man or woman marry a second wife or husband, the first being living, and have issue by such second wife or husband, the issue is a bastard. See Bott. (Ed. 1793 by Const.) 397. pl. 521. Before the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 21, one was adjudged a bastard, Quia filius sacerdotis.

A man hath issue a son by a woman before marriage, and afterwards marries the same woman, and hath issue a second son born after the marriage; the first of these is termed in law a bastard eigné, and the second a mulier, or mulier puiiné; by the common law, as hath been said, such bastard eigné is as incapable of inheriting, as if the father and mother had never married; but yet there is one case in which his issue was let into the succession, and that was by the consent of the lord and person legitimate; as if upon the death of the father the bastard eigné enters, and the mulier during his whole life never disturbs him, he cannot upon the death of the bastard eigné enter upon his issue. Lit. seit. 397: Co. Lit. 245.

To exclude the mulier from the inheritance, there must not only be an uninterrupted possession of the bastard eigné during his life, but a descent to his issue. Co. Lit. 244: 1 Rel. Abr. 624.

No man can bastardize another after his death, that was a mulier by the laws of holy church, and who carried the reputation of legitimate during his life; for a man must be bastardized by the rules of the civil or common law: by the rules of the civil law, this person is by supposition legitimate; and if the common law be made the judge, he cannot be bastardized; for it is a rule of common law, that a personal defect dies with the person, and cannot after his death be objected to his successor that represents him; and this rule of law was taken from the humanity of the antients, which would not allow the calumny of the dead; as also from an important reason of convenience, for pedigrees are often derived through several persons, concerning whom there remains little knowledge or remembrance of any thing, but only of their being; and therefore it were an easy matter to throw on them the aspersions of bastardy by any forged evidence, which cannot be confronted by opposite proof; and so it is fit to limit a time in which all proofs of bastardy are to be disallowed. 7 Co. 44: Jenk. Rep. 268: 1 Brownl. 42: Co. Lit. 33 a. Lit. fect. 399: Co. Lit. 245.

In the case of Prich v. The Earls of Bath and Montague, it was held that the rule that a person shall not be bastardized after his death, is only good in the case of bastard agnè and mulier pusiù. 1 Salk. 120: 3 Lev. 410.

If there be an apparent impossibility of procreation on the part of the husband, natural or accidental, as in case of the husband being only eight years old, or disabled by disease, there the issue of the wife shall be a bastard. 1 Inst. 244.

The rights of a bastard are very few, being only such as he can acquire; for he can inherit nothing, being looked upon as the son of nobody, and sometimes called filius nullius, sometimes filius populi. Forsefc de Ll. c. 40. Yet he may gain a surname by reputation, though he has none by inheritance. 1 Inst. 3, 123: 6 Co. 65.

Where a remainder is limited to the eldest son of Jane S. whether legitimate or illegitimate, and she hath issue, a bastard shall take this remainder, because he acquires the denomination of her issue by being born of her body; and so it was never uncertain, who was designed by this remainder. Noy 35.

If parents are married, and afterwards divorced, this gives the issue the reputation of children; and so doth a subsequent marriage of the parents. 6 Co. 65: Hugh's Abr. 363.

If a man, in consideration of natural affection and love, covenants to stand seised to the use of a bastard, this is not good; for he is not de sanguine patris; but it is said that a woman may give lands in frank-marriage with her bastard, because he is of the blood of the mother; but he hath no father, but from reputation only. Dyer 374: And. 79: 6 Co. 77: Noy 35.

A court of equity will not supply the want of a surrender of a copyhold estate, in favour of a bastard, as it will for a legitimate child. Preced. Chan 475.

The incapacity of a bastard consists principally in this, that he cannot be heir to any one, neither can he have heirs but of his own body; for being as was before said nullius filius, he is therefore of kin to nobody, and has no ancestor from whom any inheritable blood can be derived. But though bastards are not looked upon as children to any civil purposes, yet the ties of nature hold as to maintenance, and many other purposes; as particularly that a man shall not marry his bastard sister or daughter. 3 Salk. 66, 7: Ld. Raym. 68: Comb. 356. And see post. II.

A bastard was, in strictness of law, incapable of holy orders, and though that were dispensed with, yet he was utterly disqualified from holding any dignity in the church. Fe. tefc. c. 40: 5 Rep. 58. But this doctrine seems now obsolete; and there is a very ancient decision that a felon should have the benefit of clergy, though he were a bastard. Bro. Clergy 20. In all other respects therefore, except those mentioned, there is no distinction between a bastard and another man. 1 Comm. 459.

A bastard may be made legitimate, and capable of inheriting by the transcendent power of an act of parliament, and not otherwise. 4 Inst. 36; as was done in the case of John of Gaunt's bastard children, by a Stat. of R. 2. 1 Comm. 459.

2 Bastardy, in relation to the several manners of its trial, is distinguished into general and special bastardy.

Till the Stat. of Merton, 20 H. 3, the question, whether born before or after marriage, was examined before the ecclesiastical judge, and his judgment was certified to the king or his justices, and the king's court either abided by it or rejected it at pleasure. But after the solemn protest made by the Barons at Merton, against the introduction of the doctrine of the civil and canon law in this respect, special bastardy has been always triable at common law; and general bastardy alone has been left to the judgment of the ecclesiastical judge, who in this case agrees with the temporal. 2 Inst. 99: Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, 85, 201: and see 1 Inst. 126 a. note 2; and 245 a. note 1.

General bastardy, tried by the bishop, in it's notion contains two things. 1st. It should not be a bastard made legitimate by a subsequent marriage. 2dly. That it should be a point collateral to the original cause of action. 1 Rel. Abr. 361.

Formerly bastards had a way in such issues to trick themselves into legitimation; for they used to bring feigned actions, and get suborned witnesses before the bishop to prove their legitimation, and then got the certificate returned of record, and after that their legitimation could never be contested; for being returned of record as a point adjudged by its proper judges, and remaining among the memorials of the court, all persons were concluded by it; but this created great inconveniencies, as is taken notice of in the preamble of Stat. 9 Hen. 6. c. 11, in the case of several persons of quality; for the evidence of the contrary parties concerned were never heard at the trial, and yet their interest was concluded: to remedy this inconvenience without altering the rules of law, it was enacted, that, before any writ to the bishop, there should be a proclamation made in the court, where the plea depends, and, after that, the issue should be certified into Chancery, where proclamation should be made once in every month for three months, and then the Chancellor should certify to the court where the plea depends, and afterwards it shall be again proclaimed in the same court, that all that are concerned may go to the Ordinary to make their allegations; and without these circumstances, any writ granted to the ordinary, and all proceedings thereupon, shall be utterly void. 1 Rel. Abr. 361.

If the ordinary certify or try bastardy without a writ from the king's temporal courts, it is void; for the spiritual jurisdiction within these kingdoms is derived from the King, and therefore it must be exercised in the manner the King hath appointed; for it would be injurious if they should declare legitimation where the rights of inheritance are so nearly concerned, without any apparent necessity. 1 Rel. Abr. 361.

The

BASTARD II. 1.

The certificate must be under the seal of the ordinary, and not under the seal of the commissary only; for the command is to the bishop himself to certify, and therefore the execution of the command must appear to be by the bishop in proper person. 1 Roll. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, this binds perpetually, though the person so adjudged a bastard is not party to the action, for all persons are estopped to speak against the memorial of any judicatory; because the act of the public judicatory under which any person lives, is his own act; and were he not thus bound, there might be contradiction in certificates. 1 Roll. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, that doth not bind a stranger till returned of record, because it is no judicial act till recorded in the place appointed to record such transactions; nor doth it bind the party to the action till judgment thereon, because if he avoid the action he avoids all consequences of the action; and therefore if the defendant be certified bastard by the ordinary, yet if the plaintiff be non-suit they cannot go on to trial, and so the bishop's certificate never appears of record, and therefore is not binding. 1 Roll. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified mulier, no man is estopped to bastardize him, for though he may be a mulier by the spiritual law, yet he may be a bastard by our law; and therefore any man, notwithstanding the certificate, may plead the issue of special bastardy. 1 Roll. Abr. 362.

Special bastardy, is two fold: 1st. Where the bastardy is the gift of the action, and the material part of the issue. 2dly Where those are bastards by the common law that are muliers by the spiritual law. 1 New Abr. 314: Co. Lit. 134: 1 Roll. 367: Hob. 117.

If a man receives any temporal damage by being called a bastard, and brings his action in the temporal courts, and the defendant justifies that the plaintiff is a bastard, this must be tried at common law, and not by writ to the bishop; for otherwise you suppose an action brought in a court which hath not a capacity to try the cause of action. 1 Brownl. 1: Hob. 179: Godol. 479: Co. Ent. 29.

If it be found by an assise taken at large that a man is a bastard, the temporal courts are judges of it; for the jury cannot be estopped to speak truth which may fall within their own knowledge, and what they find becomes the record of the temporal courts, and so within their conuzance. Bro. Bastardy 97.

II. 1. By Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, (and see Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 4.) two justices of peace may make an order on the mother or reputed father of a bastard to maintain the infant by weekly payments or otherwise: and if the party disobey such order, he or she may be committed to gaol, until they give security to perform it; or to appear at the sessions.—By Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. § 7, the justices may commit the mother of a bastard, likely to become chargeable, to the house of correction for a year; or for a second offence till she give security for her good behaviour. By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 19, if the putative father or lewd mother run away from the parish, the overseers may by authority of two justices, seize, and by order of the sessions, sell the effects of the father or mother to maintain the child.—By Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31, the mother of a bastard may, before or after it is born, swear it to any person; and the putative father shall then, on application by the overseer of the parish be apprehended and committed; unless he give security to indemnify the parish; or to appear at the next sessions; but if the woman die or marry before delivery, or miscarry, or prove not to be with child, the reputed father shall be discharged. Any justice near the parish, on application of the reputed father in custody, shall summon the overseer to shew cause against his being discharged; and if no order be made in pursuance of Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, (for the maintenance of the child) within six weeks after the woman's delivery, he shall be discharged.—By the said Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31. § 4, it is expressly provided that, "It shall not be lawful for the justice to send for any woman before she shall be delivered, or for a month after, in order to be examined concerning her pregnancy; or to compel any woman before her delivery to answer any question relating to her pregnancy."—By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 82. § 5, bastards born in any licensed hospital for pregnant women, are settled in the parishes to which their mothers belong. And the like provision is made by Stat. 20 Geo. 3. c. 36. § 2, as to bastards born in houses of industry.

The putative father of a bastard, although no legal relationship subsists between them, is so far considered as its natural guardian, as to be intitled to the custody of it, for its maintenance and education. 2 Str. 1162; and therefore while under his care and protection, and not likely to become chargeable to the parish, the parish officers have no concern with it. 1 Mod. 43: 1 Sid. 444. Bastards are within the meaning of the marriage act. Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, which requires the consent of the father, &c. 1 Term Rep. 96. And the rule that a bastard is filius nullius applies only to the case of inheritances. Id. 101.

As however, without the protection of its natural parents, a bastard is settled in the parish in which it is born; (Salk. 427: 3 Burn. J.: Paul's P. O. 81;) [unless such birth be procured by fraud, Sel. Ca. 66; or happen under an order of removal, 1 Seff. Ca. 33: Salk. 121, 474, 532; or in a state of vagrancy, Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5; or in the house of correction, 2 Bull. 358; or under a certificate, Str. 186;] and the parish of consequence becomes charged with its maintenance, then and not before, the authority of the churchwardens and overseers begins. Say. 93; and they may act without an order from the justices. 3 Term Rep. C. P. 253.—It seems however, that until a bastard attain the age of seven years, it cannot be separated from its mother, Cald. 6; but may be removed to the place of her settlement, while the age of nurture continues. Carth. 279; and must under these circumstances be maintained by the parish where it was born. Doug. 7.

An order of bastardy must be made by two justices, 2 Salk. 478: 1 Str. 475; on complaint, 1 Barn. K. B. 261; and the examination of the woman must be taken, in the presence of both the justices. 6 Mod. 180: 2 Black. Rep. 1027; but it is not necessary that the putative father should be present to hear what the deposes. Cald. 308; although he must be summoned before an order of filiation can be made, 8 Mod. 3: 1 Seff. Ca. 179; for he cannot be compelled to give security, or be committed until he has made default. Id. Raym. 853, 8: 3 Salk. 66; but if an order of filiation is once made, the fact of bastardy is established until the order is reversed. Cro. Jac. 535.

BASTARD.

The justice may commit if the putative father neglect to pay the maintenance therein ordered for the support of the child, unless he give a bond to bear the parish harriels, or to appear at the sessions. 1 Sid. 353. 1 Vent. 41: Ld. Raym. 658, 1157. The order can only be reversed by an appeal to the sessions, which must be to the next sessions after notice of the order; 2 Salk. 480, 7; and if the sessions reverse the order of the two justices, yet they may on summons make another, on the same or on any other person; for in this respect they have an original jurisdiction. 2 Bulst. 355. 1 Str. 4-5. Doug. 632.—The order however may before appeal to the sessions be removed by certiorari, into K. B. and there quashed for errors on the face of it. Cald. 172.—But no order of bastardy made at sessions can be quashed in K. B. unless the putative father is present in court. 2 Salk. 475; for, on its being quashed, he shall enter into a recognizance to abide the order of the sessions below. 1 Bl. Rep. 198.

On this part of the subject see further, Bott's Poor Laws, Confl's Edit. 1793.

In an ancient MSS. temp. E. 3, it is said that he who gets a bastard in the hundred of Middleton in Kent, shall forfeit all his goods and chattels to the king.

2. By Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27, it is enacted, "That if any woman be delivered of any issue of her body, which being born alive, should by the laws of this realm be a bastard, and she endeavour privately, either by drowning, or secret burying thereof, or any other way, either by herself, or the procuring of others, so to conceal the death thereof, as it may not come to light, whether it were born alive or not, but be concealed; in every such case the said mother so offending shall suffer death, as in case of murder; except such mother can make proof by one witness at the least, that the child, whose death was by her so intended to be concealed, was born dead."

It hath been adjudged, that in order to convict a woman by force of this last statute, there is no need that the indictment be drawn specially, or conclude against the form of the statute; for the statute doth not make a new offence, but only makes such concealment an undeniable evidence of murder. 2 Hawt. P. C. c. 46. § 43.

Also, it hath been agreed, that where a woman appears to have endeavoured to conceal the death of such child within the statute, there is no need of any proof that the child was born alive, or that there were any signs of hurt upon the body, but it shall be undeniably taken that the child was born alive, and murdered by the mother. 2 Hawt. P. C. ubi sup.

But it hath been adjudged, that where a woman lay in a chamber by herself, and went to bed without pain, and waked in the night, and knocked for help but could get none, and was delivered of a child, and put it in a trunk, and did not discover it till the following night, yet she was not within the statute, because she knocked for help. 2 Hawt. P. C. ubi sup.

Also, it hath been agreed, that if a woman confess herself with child beforehand, and afterwards be surprized and delivered, no body being with her, she is not within the statute, because there was no intent of concealment, and therefore in such cases it must appear by signs of hurt upon the body, or some other way, that the child was born alive. 2 Hawt. P. C. ubi sup.

If a woman be with child, and any gives her a potion to destroy the child within her, and she takes it, and it works so strongly that it kills the woman, this is murder, for it was not given to cure her of a disease, but unlawfully to destroy the child within her; and therefore he that gives her a potion to this end, must take the hazard, and if it kills the mother, it is murder. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 429, 430.

If a woman be quick or great with child, if she take, or any other give her any potion to cause an abortion, or if a man strike her, whereby the child within her is killed; though it be a great crime, yet it is not murder nor manslaughter by the law of England, because the child is not yet in rerum natura, nor can it legally be known, whether it were killed or not: so it is, if such child were born alive, and after die of the stroke given to the mother, this is not homicide. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 433. The offender however may be indicted for a misdemeanor, at common law.

If a man procure a woman with child to destroy her infant when born, and the child is born, and the woman, in pursuance of that procurement, kill the infant; this is murder in the mother, and the procurer is accessory. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 433.

BATITORIA, A fulling mill. Morasticon, tom. 2. p. 32.

BATTLE, Fr. bataille.] A trial by combat, anciently allowed of in our laws, (among other cases,) where the

the defendant in appeal of murder or felony might fight with the appellant, and make proof thereby whether he be culpable or innocent of the crime. When an appellee of felony wages battel, he pleads that he is Not guilty, and that he is ready to defend the same by his body, and then flings down his glove; and if the appellant will join battel he replies, That he is ready to make good his appeal by his body upon the body of the appellee, and takes up the glove: and then the appellee lays his right hand on the book, and with his left hand takes the appellant by the right, and swears thus: Hear this thou who callest thyself John by the name of baptism, that I who call myself Thomas by the name of baptism, did not feloniously murder thy father W. by name, on the day and year of, &c. at B. as you surmise, nor am any way guilty of the said felony; so help me God. And then he shall kiss the book and say; And this I will defend against thee by my body, as this court shall award. Then the appellant lays his right hand on the book, and with his left hand takes the appellee by the right, and swears to this effect: Hear this thou who callest thyself Thomas by the name of baptism, that thou didst feloniously on the day, and in the year, &c. at B. murder my father W. by name; so help me God. And then he shall kiss the book, and say; And this I will prove against thee by my body, as this court shall award. This being done, the court shall appoint a day and place for the battle; and in the mean while the appellee shall be kept in custody of the marshal, and the appellant shall find sureties to be ready to fight at the time and place, unless he be an approver, in which case he shall also be kept by the marshal: and the night before the day of battle, both parties shall be arraigned by the marshal, and shall be brought into the field before the justices of the court where the appeal is depending, at the rising of the sun, bare-headed and bare-legged from the knee downwards, and bare in the arms to the elbows, armed only with bastons an ell long, and four-cornered targets: and before they engage, they shall both make oath, That they have neither eat nor drunk, nor done any thing else by which the law of God may be deprest, and the law of the devil exalted: and then, after proclamation for silence under pain of imprisonment, they shall begin the combat, wherein if the appellee be so far vanquished that he cannot or will not fight any longer, he may be adjudged to be hanged immediately; but if he can maintain the fight till the stars appear, he shall have judgment to be quit of the appeal: and if the appellant becomes a crying coward, the appellee shall recover his damages, and may plead his acquittal in bar of a subsequent indictment or appeal; and the appellant shall for his perjury lose his lib. et legem. If an appellant becomes blind by the act of God after he has waged battel, the court will discharge him of the battel; and in such case it is said that the appellee shall go free.

This trial by battel is at the defendant's choice; but if the plaintiff be under an apparent disability of fighting, as under age, maimed, &c. he may counterplead the wager of battel, and compel the defendant to put himself upon his country, no champions being allowed in criminal appeals; also any plaintiff may counterplead a wager of battel, by alledging such matters against the defendant, as induce a violent presumption of guilt; as in appeal of death, that he was found lying upon the deceased with a bloody knife in his hand, &c. for here the law will not oblige the plaintiff to make good his accusation in so extraordinary a manner, when in all appearance he may prove it in the ordinary way. It is a good counterplea of battel that the defendant hath been indicted for the same fact; when if appeal be brought, the defendant shall not wage battel. And if a peer of the realm bring an appeal, the defendant shall not be admitted to wage battel, by reason of the dignity of the appellant.

The citizens of London are privileged by charter, that in appeals by any of them, there shall be no wager of battel; and by Stat. 6 R. 2. c. 6, defendant shall not be received to wage battel in an appeal of rape. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 45. This trial by battel is before the constable and marshal; but is now disused, See Glanv. lib. 14: Bracton, lib. 3: Britton, c. 22: Smith de Rep. Angl. lib. 2: Co. Litt. 294, &c.

For the manner of waging battel in an appeal of treason, Hawkins cites Rusw. Col. part 2. vol. 1. 112—128: and 3 Comm. 338. cites vol. 2.

This species of trial by wager of battel, (says Blackstone) was introduced into England, among other Norman customs, by William the Conqueror; but was only used in three cases, one military, one criminal, and the third civil.—The first in the court martial or court of chivalry and honour; (Co. Lit. 261;) the second in appeals of felony; [of which above;] and the third, upon issue joined in a writ of right, the last and most solemn decision of real property. For in writs of right the jus proprietatis which is frequently a matter of difficulty is in question; but other real actions being merely questions of the jus possessionis, which are usually more plain and obvious, our ancestors did not in them appeal to the decision of Providence. Another [and as it seems the juster] pretext for allowing it upon these final writs of right, was for the sake of such claimants as might have the true right, but yet by the death of witnesses or other defect of evidence, be unable to prove it to a jury.

Although the writ of right itself, and of course this trial thereof is at present much disused, yet it is law at this day; and on that account as matter of curiosity the forms of proceeding therein are collected and preserved in 3 Comm. 338, &c. and the appendix thereto; and are similar to those above recited in criminal cases.

The last trial by battel that was waged in the court of Common Pleas at Westminster; [though there was afterwards one in the court of Chivalry in 1631, 6 Car. 1, between Donald Lord Rey appellant, and David Ramsay, esquire, defendant, which was compromised; See Orig. Jurid. 65: 19 Raym. 322; and another in the county palatine of Durham in 1638; Cro. Car. 512;) was in 13 Eliz. A. D. 1571, as reported by Dyer, and held in Totbill-fields, Westminster. See Dy. 301. and Spelm. in v. Campsey; the latter of whom was present at the ceremony.

In this trial by battel, on a writ of right, the battel is waged by champions, and not by the parties themselves; because in civil actions, if any party to the suit dies, the suit must abate and be at an end for the present; and therefore no judgment could be given for lands in question, if either of the parties were slain; and also that no person might claim an exemption from this trial, as was allowed in criminal cases Co. Litt. 294.

This form of trial by battel, the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, has it in his election at this day to demand.

demand. 3 Comm. 341. And it was the only decision of such writ of right from the Conquest, till Hen. II., by consent of parliament introduced the grand assise; a particular species of trial by jury, in concurrence therewith, giving the tenant his choice of either the one or the other.

—See Gloss. lib. 2. c. 7.

BATELLUS, See Batur.

BATTERY, See title Assault.

BATUS, Lat. from the Sax. bat.] A boat, and batellus a little boat. Chart. Ed. 1: 20 Julii 18 regni. Hence we have an old word batfswain, for such as we now call boatswain of a ship.

BAUBELLA, baubles.] A word mentioned in Hoveden in R. 1. and signifies jewels or precious stones.

BAUDEKIN, baldecum, and baldekinum.] Cloth of baudekin, or gold; it is said to be the richest cloth, now called brocade, made with gold and silk, or tissue, upon which figures in silk, &c. were embroidered.

BAWDY-HOUSE, Lupanor, fornix.] A house of ill fame, kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes. The keeping of a bawdy-house comes under the cognizance of the temporal law, as a common nuisance, not only in respect of its endangering the public peace by drawing together dissolute and debauched persons, and promoting quarrels, but also in respect of its tendency to corrupt the manners of the people, by an open profession of lewdness. 3 Inst. 205: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74. Those who keep bawdy-houses are punished with fine and imprisonment; and all such infamous punishment, as pillory, &c. as the court in discretion shall inflict: and a lodger who keeps only a single room for the use of bawdy, is indictable for keeping a bawdy-house. 1 Salk. 382. Persons resorting to a bawdy-house, are punishable, and they may be bound to their good behaviour, &c. But if one be indicted for keeping or frequenting a bawdy-house, it must be expressly alledged to be such a house, and that the party knew it; and not by suspicion only. Poph. 208. A man may be indicted for keeping bad women in his own house. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 61. § 2. A constable upon information, that a man and woman are gone to a lewd house, or about to commit fornication or adultery, may, if he finds them together, carry them before a justice of peace without any warrant, and the justice may bind them over to the sessions. Dalt. 214.

Constables in these cases may call others to their assistance, enter bawdy houses, and arrest the offenders for a breach of the peace. in London they may carry them to prison; and by the custom of the city, whores and bawds may be carted. 3 Inst. 66.

As to a married woman's being indicted for keeping a house of ill fame. See tit. Baron and Feme VII.

But it is said, a woman cannot be indicted for being a bawd generally; for that the bare solicitation of chastity is not indictable. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74. § 1: 1 Salk. 382.

It was always held infamous to keep a bawdy-house; yet some of our historians mention bawdy-houses, brothel houses or stews publickly allowed here in former times, till the reign of Hen. 8. by whom they were suppressed about 1 D. 1546: and writers assign the number to be eighteen thus allowed on the bank-side in Southwark. See Brothel houses.

By Stat. 2. Geo. 2. c. 36. made perpetual by Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19 If two inhabitants, paying scot and lot, shall give notice to a constable of any person keeping a bawdy-house, the constable shall go with them before a justice of peace, and shall, (upon such inhabitants making oath, that they believe the contents of such notice to be true, and entering into a recognizance of 20 l. each, to give material evidence of the offence,) enter into a recognizance of 30 l. to prosecute with effect such person for such offence at the next sessions; the constable shall be paid his reasonable expences by the overseers of the poor, to be ascertained by two justices; and if the offender be convicted, the overseers shall pay to the two inhabitants 10 l. each. On the constable's entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, the justice shall bind over the person accused to the next sessions, and if he shall think proper, demand security for such person's good behaviour in the mean time. A constable neglecting his duty forfeits 20 l. Any person appearing as master or mistress, or as having the care or management of any bawdy house, shall be deemed the keeper thereof, and liable to be punished as such.—The same act also directs the licensing by magistrates of all public places within 20 miles of the metropolis.

BAY, or pen, Is a pond head made up of a great height, to keep in water for the supply of a mill, &c. so that the wheel of the mill may be driven by the water coming thence, through a passage or flood-gate. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 19 A harbour where ships ride at sea, near some port, is also called a bay.

BEACON, from the Sax. biacn, signum, whence the Englsh, beckn to nod or make a sign.] A signal well known; being a fire maintained on some eminence near the coasts of the sea. 4 Inst. 148. Hence beaconage (beaconagium) money paid towards the maintenance of beacons: See Stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 3. as to keeping watch on the sea coast.

The erection of beacons, light houses and sea marks, is a branch of the royal prerogative; whereof the first was antiently used in order to alarm the country, in case of the approach of an enemy; and all of them are signally useful in guiding and preserving vessels at sea by night as well as by day. For this purpose the king hath the exclusive power, by commission under his great seal; (3 Inst. 204: 4 Inst. 148;) to cause them to be erected in fit and convenient places, (4 Inst. 136;) as well upon the lands of the subject as upon the demesnes of the crown: which power is usually vested by letters patent in the office of Lord High Admiral, (Stat. 158: 4 Inst. 149;) or the Admiralty board. And by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 13. the corporation of the Trinity House are empowered to set up any beacons or sea-marks wherever they shall think them necessary; and if the owner of the land or any other person shall destroy them, or shall take down any steeple, tree or other known sea-mark, he shall forfeit 100 l. or in case of inability to pay it, shall be ipso facto outlawed. 2 Comm. 265.—See the Stats. 4 Ann. c. 20. and 8 Ann. c. 17. for building the Eddystone lighthouse near Plymouth, and raising the duties payable by ships for its support; and Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 36. as to the lighthouse on the rock Skerries near Holyhead in the county of Anglesea.

BEAD, or bede, Sax. bead, oratio.] A prayer; so that to say over beads, is to say over one's prayers. They were most in use before printing, when poor persons could not go to the charge of a manuscript book: though they are still used in many parts of the world, where the Roman-Catholic religion prevails. They are not allowed to be brought into England, or any superstitious things, BEAM, That part of the head of a ship where the horns grow, from the Sax. Beam, i. e. beam; because they grow out of the head as branches out of a tree. Beam is likewise used for a common balance of weights in cities and towns.

BEAMS and BALANCE, for weighing goods and merchandize in the city of London. See tit. Weights and Measures.

BEARERS; Such as bear down or oppress others, and is said to be all who with maintenance. Justices of assize shall inquire of hear, and determine maintainers, bearers, and conspirators, &c. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11.

BEASTS of chase; ferae committuntur. Are five, viz. the buck, doe, fox, marten, and roe. Marten, part 1. page 342. Beasts of the forest (ferae silvestres) otherwise called beasts of venary, are the hare, hind, boar, and wolf. Ibid. part 2. c. 4. Beasts and fowls of the warren, are the hare, coney, pheasant, and partridge. Ibid. Reg. Orig. 95. 96. &c. Co. Lit. 233. — See tit. Game.

BEAU-PLEADER, pulchre placitando, Fr. beauplaidier, i. e. to plead fairly. Is a writ upon the statute of Mairbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 11, whereby it is enacted, That neither in the circuit of justices, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for fair pleading, i. e. for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose; upon which statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand such fine, and it is a prohibition not to do it; whereupon an alias and pluries and attachment may be had, &c. Novo Nat. Br. 596, 597. And beau-pleader is as well in respect of vicious pleadings, as of the fair pleading, by way of amendment. 2 Inst. 122.

BEDEL, bedellus, Sax. bydel, Fr. bedeau. A cryer or messenger of a court, that cites men to appear and answer: and is an inferior officer of a parish, or liberty; very well known in London, and the suburbs. There are likewise university bedels, and church bedels; now called summoners and apparitors: and Manwood in his Forest Laws, saith there are forest bedels, that make all manner of garnishments for the courts of the forest, and all proclamations, and also execute the process of the forest, like unto bailiffs errant of a sheriff in his county. Convel.

BEDELARY, bedelaria. The same to a bedel, as bailiwick to a bailiff. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 5. Blount's Convel.

BEDEREPE, alias bederepe. Sax. A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, viz. to reap their landlord's corn at harvest; as some yet are tied to give them one, two, or three days' work, when commanded. This customary service of inferior tenants was called in the Latin pretaria bederipum, &c. See Magna Præcaria.

BEDEWERI, Those which we now call banditti; profligate and excommunicated persons. The word is mentioned in Mae Paris. anno 1258.

BENEFICE, beneficium. It generally taken for any ecclesiastical living or promotion; and benefices are divided into election and advowson. It is used in the Canon law. 3 Inst. 125.

BENEFICE, beneficium, &c. All church preferments and dignities are benefices; but they must be given for life, not for years, or at will. Deaneries, prebendaries, &c. are benefices with cure of souls, though not comprehended as such within the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 13, of residences: but, according to a more strict and proper acceptation, benefices are only rectories, and vicarages. — The word Benefice was formerly applied to portions of land, &c. given by lords to their followers for their maintenance; but afterwards, as these tenures became perpetual and hereditary, they lost their name of beneficia to the livings of the clergy, and retained to themselves the name of feuds. — And beneficium was an estate in land at first granted for life only, so called, because it was held as mere benefice of the donor; and the tenants were bound to swear fealty to the lord, and to serve him in the wars, those estates being commonly given to military men: but at length, by the consent of the donor, or his heirs, they were continued for the lives of the sons of the possessors, and by degrees past into an inheritance: and sometimes such benefices were given to bishops, and abbots, subject to the like services, viz. to provide men to serve in the wars; and when they as well as the laity had obtained a property in those lands, they were called regalia when given by the king; and on the death of a bishop, &c. returned to the king till another was chosen. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 21: Blount, verb. Beneficium. See tit. Tenure.

For matter relating to Ecclesiastical Benefices, and the requisites of the clergy admitted thereto, &c. See titles Advowson, Parson.

BENEFICIO PRIMO ECCLESIASTICO HABENDO, A writ directed from the King to the Chancellor, to bestow the benefice that shall first fall to the King's gift, above or under such value, upon such a particular person. Reg. Orig. 307.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY. See Clergy.

BENERGH, An ancient service which the tenant rendered to his lord with his plough and cart. Lamb. Itin. p. 222: Co. Lit. 86.

BENEVOLENCE, benefolentia. Is used in the chronicles and statutes of this realm for a voluntary gratuity given by the subjects to the king. Stow's Annals, p. 701. And Stow saith, that it grew from Edward the Fourth's days: you may find it also anno 11 H. 7. c. 10, yielded to that prince in regard of his great expences in wars, and otherwise. 12 Reg. 19. And by act of parliament, 13 Ed. 2. c. 4, it was given to his majesty King Charles II., but with a proviso that it should not be drawn into future example: as those benevolences were frequently extorted without a real and voluntary consent, so that all supplies of this nature are now by way of taxes, by grant of parliament; any other way of raising money for the crown is illegal Stat. 1 W. & M. II. c. 2.

In other nations benefolences are sometimes given to lords of the fee by their tenants, &c. Cassan d. Confess. Eng. p. 134, 136 — see tit. Taxes.

BENEVOLENTIA REGIS HABENDA, The form of purchasing the king's pardon and favour, in ancient fine, and submissions, to be restored to estate, title, or place Parsch. Antiq. p. 172.

BENT. See tit. See Banks.

BERBIAGE, berbiagium.] Nativi tenentes manerii de Calistoke reddunt per ann. de certo reddito decem. berbiagg. ad le Hokeday xlv. t. MS. Survey of the Datchy of Cornwall. Blount.

BERBICARIA, A sheep down, or ground to feed sheep. Leg. Alfredi. c. 9: Monasticon, tom. 1. p. 308. See the next article.

BERGARIA, bercbery, from the Fr. bergerie.] A sheep-fold, or other enclosure for the keeping of sheep: in Domesday it is written berquarium. 2 Inst. 476: Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 599. Bercarius is taken for a shepherd: and bercaria is said to be abbreviated from berbicaria, and berbex; hence comes berbicus a ram, berbica, an ewe, caro berbitina, mutton. Cowel.

BEREFELLARII: There were seven churchmen so called, anciently belonging to the church of St. John of Beverley. Cowel: Blount.

BERGHMASTER, from the Sax. berg, a hill, quasi, master of the mountains.] Is a bergh or chief officer among the Derbyshire miners, who also executes the office of a coroner. Esc. de An. 16 Ed. 1. num. 34, in Turri London. The Germans call a mountaineer, or miner, a bergman. Blount.

BERGMOCH, or BERGHMOTTE, Comes from the Sax. berg a hill, and gemote, an assembly; and is as much as to say an assembly or court upon a hill, which is held in Derbyshire, for deciding pleas and controversies among the miners. And on this court of berghmote, Mr. Manlove, in his Treatise of the Customs of the Miners, hath a copy of verses, with references to statutes, &c. Vide Squire on the Anglo Saxon Government.

BERIA, berie, berry, A large open field.] Those cities and towns in England which end with that word, are built in plain and open places, and do not derive their names from boroughs, as Sir Henry Spelman imagines. Most of our glossographers in the names of places have confounded the word ber with that of bury and borough, as the appellatives of ancient towns; whereas the true sense of the word berie is a flat wide campaign, as is proved from sufficient authorities by the learned Du Fresnoy, who observes that Beria Sancti Edmundi, mentioned by Mat. Paris. sub ann. 1174, is not to be taken for the town, but for the adjoining plain. To this may be added, that many flat and wide meads and other open grounds, are called by the name of beries, and berryfields: the spacious meadow between Oxford and Isley was in the reign of king Atelstan called Bery. As is now the largest pasture ground in Quarendon in the county of Buckingham, known by the name of Berryfield. And though these meads have been interpreted demesne or manor meadows, yet they were truly any flat or open meadows, that lay adjoining to any vill or farm. Cowel.

BERRA, A plain open heath. Berras affarsare, to grub up such barren heaths, Cowel.

BERNET, Incendium, comes from the Sax. byran, to burn; it is one of those crimes which by the laws of Hæn: 1. cap. 15, emendari non possunt. Sometimes it is used to signify any capital offence. Leges Canonicæ apud Prompt. c. 90: Leg. Hen. 1. c. 12, 47.

BERQUARIUM, Vide Bercaria.

BERSA, Fr. bars.] A limit or bound. A park pale. Blount.

BERSARE, Germ. bars, to shoot.] Bersare in foresta mea ad tres arcus. Chart. Rapph. Comit. Cestr. ann. 1218. vin. to hunt or shoot with three arrows in my forest. Bersarii were properly those that hunted the wolf. Blount.

BERSELET, berfellata.] A hound. Chart. Reg. de Quincy.

BERTON. See Barton.

BEREWICHA, or BERWICA, Villages or hamlets belonging to some town or manor. This word often occurs in Domesday: istæ sunt berewiche ejusdem manerii.

BERWICK, The town of Berwick upon Tweed was originally part of the kingdom of Scotland; and as such was for a time reduced by king Edward I. into the possession of the crown of England; and during such a subjection it received from that prince a charter, which (after its subsequent cession by Edward Balliol, to be for ever united to the crown and realm of England) was confirmed by king Edward III. with some additions; particularly that it should be governed by the laws and usages which it enjoyed during the time of king Alexander, that is, before its reduction by Edward I. Its constitution was new modelled and put upon an English footing by a charter of king James I: and all its liberties, franchises, and customs were confirmed in parliament by Stats. 22 E. 4. c. 8; and 2 Jac. 1. c. 28. Though therefore it hath some local peculiarities, derived from the ancient laws of Scotland; (See Hale Hist. C. L. 183: 1 Sid. 382, 462: 2 Shew. 365;) yet it is clearly part of the realm of England, being represented by burgesses in the house of commons, and bound by all acts of the British parliament, whether specially named or otherwise. And therefore it was perhaps superfluously declared by Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 42, that where England only is mentioned in any act of parliament, the same notwithstanding hath been and shall be deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales and town of Berwick upon Tweed. And though certain of the king's writs or processes of the courts of Westminster, do not usually run into Berwick, any more than the principality of Wales, yet it hath been solemnly adjudged, that all prerogative writs (as those of mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, &c.) may issue to Berwick as well as to every other of the dominions of the crown of England; and that indictments and other local matters arising in the town of Berwick, may be tried by a jury of the county of Northumberland. Cron. Jac. 543: 2 Ro. Ab. 292: Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4: 4 Burr. 834: 1 Comm. 99.

BERY, or BURY, The vill or seat of habitation of a nobleman, a dwelling or mansion house, being the chief of a manor; from the Sax. beorg, which signifies a hill or castle; for heretofore noblemen's seats were castles, situate on hills, of which we have still some remains. As in Hertfordshire, there are the beries of Stockton, Hope, &c. It was anciently taken for a sanctuary. See Beria.

BESAILLE, or BESAYLE, Fr. bisayal, procurator.] The father of the grandfather: and in the Common law it signifies a writ that lies where the great grandfather was seized the day that he died, of any lands or tenements in fee-simple; and after his death a stranger entereth the same day upon him, and keeps out the heir. E. N. B. 222. See title Mort d'Ancestor.

BESCHA,

BECADE, from the By. Saxon, bedan, to dig. A spade or shovel. Hence perhaps, the Beccate terra is clay. Mon. Angl. tom. 7. fol. 63. may signify a piece of land usually trenched up with a spade, as gardeners fit and prepare their grounds; or may be taken for as much land as one man can dig with a spade in a day.

BESTIALS, bestiales.] Beasts or cattle of any sort; Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 5. it is written bestiale; and is generally used for all kinds of cattle, though it has been restrained to those anciently purveyed for the king's provision.

BETACHES, Laymen using glebe lands. Parl. 14 E. 2.
BEBERCHES, Bidawicks, or customary services done at the bidding of the lord by his inferior tenants. Godol.

BEWARED, An old Saxon word signifying expended; for before the Britons and Saxons had plenty of money, they traded wholly in exchange of wares. Blount.

BIDALE, or BIDALL, precaria petaria, from the Sax. biddan, to pray or supplicate.} Is the invitation of friends to drink ale at the house of some poor man, who thereby hopes a charitable contribution for his relief: it is still in use in the West of England; and is mentioned Stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 6. And something like this seems to be what we commonly call house warming, when persons are invited and visited in this manner on their first beginning house-keeping.

BIDDING OF THE BEADE, bidding from the Sax. biddan.] Was anciently a charge or warning given by the parish priest to his parishioners at some special times to come to prayers, either for the soul of some friend departed, or upon some other particular occasion. And at this day our ministers, on the Sunday preceding any festival or holiday in the following week, give notice of them, and desire and exhort their parishioners to observe them as they ought; which is required by our canons.

BIDENTES, Two yearlings or three of the second year. Paroch. Antig. p. 216.

BIDUANA, A fasting for the space of two days. Mat. West. p. 135.

BIGA, bigata, A cart or chariot drawn with two horses coupled side to side; but it is said to be properly a cart with two wheels, sometimes drawn by one horse; and in our ancient records it is used for any cart, wain or waggon. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 256.

BIGAMUS, One guilty of bigamy.

BIGAMY, bigamia.] A double marriage; this word properly signifies the being twice married; but is now used by an almost universal corruption, to signify the offence of polygamy, or the having a plurality of wives at once. 3 Inst. 88.

Bigamy according to the Canonists, consisted in marrying two virgins successively, one after the death of the other, or in once marrying a widow. Such were esteemed incapable of holy orders; probably on the ground of St. Paul's words. 1 Tim. c. 5. v. 2. "That a bishop should be the husband of one wife," and they were by a canon of the council of Lyons, A. D. 1274, denied all clerical privileges. This canon was adopted and explained in England by the Stat. 4 E. 1. c. 3. (commonly called the Stat. de bigamis) c. 5; and bigamy thereupon became an uncommon counterplea to the claim of the benefit of clergy. The cognizance of the plea of bigamy was declared by Stat. 18 E. 3. c. 2. to belong to the Court Christian, like that of bastardy. But by Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12. § 16, bigamy was declared to be no longer an impediment to the claim of clergy. See Darby v. Darby 201. and 1 Inst. 20 b; note 1.

A second marriage, living the former husband or wife is, by the ecclesiastical law of England, simply void, and a mere nullity; but the Legislature has thought proper to make it felony, by reason of its being so great a violation of the public economy and decency of a well-ordered state. By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11, it is enacted "that if any person, being married, do afterwards marry again, the former husband or wife being alive, it is felony;" but within the benefit of clergy.

The act however makes exception to five cases, in which such second marriage, (though in the three first it is void) is yet no felony: (See 3 Inst. 89; Kel. 27; 1 Hal. P. C. 694).—1. Where either party has been continually abroad for seven years; whether the party in England hath notice of the others being living or no. 2. Where either of the parties hath been absent from the other seven years within this kingdom; and the remaining party hath had no knowledge of the other's being alive within that time. 3. Where there is a divorce; (or separation à mens et thoro, 1 Hawk. P. C. 174;) by sentence in the ecclesiastical court. 4. Where the first marriage is declared absolutely void by any such sentence; and the parties loosed à vinculo matrimonii, or, 5. Where either of the parties was under the age of consent at the time of the first marriage. 1 Hawk. P. C. 174; 1 Inst. 79.

In the last case the first marriage was voidable by the disagreement of either party; which the second marriage very clearly amounts to. But if at the age of consent the parties had agreed to the marriage, which completes the contract, and is indeed the real marriage, and afterwards one of them should marry again, it seems undoubted that such second marriage would be within the reason and penalties of the act. 4 Comm. 164.

If the first marriage were beyond sea, and the latter in England, the party may be indicted for it here; because the latter marriage is the offence; but not vice versa, though quære why not? 1 Hawk. P. C. 174, 5; 1 Hale's P. C. 692; 1 Sid. 171; Kel. 80.

A sentence in the ecclesiastical court against a marriage, in a suit for jactitation does not preclude the proof of a marriage on an indictment on the statute.—And admitting such sentence were conclusive as to the fact of marriage, the effect may be avoided by evidence of fraud and collusion in obtaining the sentence. 11 St. Tr. 262. Dutches of Kingston's case.

As to husband and wife being evidence against each other on trial for this offence. See tit. Baron and Feme. I. 2.

BIGOT, A compound of several old English words.] An obstinate person; or one that is wedded to an opinion, in matters of religion, &c. It is recorded that when Roll the first duke of Normandy, refused to kiss the King's foot, unless he held it out to him, it being a ceremony required in token of subjection for that dukedom, with which the King invested him; those who were present taking notice of the duke's refusal, advised him to comply with the king's desire, who answered them ne se bigot; whereupon he was in derision called bigot, and the Normans are so called to this day. Blount.

BILAGINES, Lat.] By-laws of corporations, &c. See By-laws.

BILANCHUS DEFERENDIS, A writ directed to a corporation, for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool that persons by our ancient laws were licensed to transport. Reg. Orig. 270.

BILINGUIS, Generally a double tongued man; or one that can speak two languages: but it is used in our law for a jury that passeth between an Englishman and a foreigner, whereof part ought to be English, and part strangers: properly a jury de medietate lingue, under Stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 13. See title Jury.

BILL, billā] Is diversely used: in law proceedings, it is a declaration in writing, expressing either the wrong the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of, or else some fault committed against some law or statute of the realm: and this bill is sometimes addressed to the Lord Chancellor of England, especially for unconscionable wrongs done to the complainant; and sometimes to others having jurisdiction, according as the law directs. It contains the fact complained of, the damage thereby sustained, and petition of process against the defendant for redress; and it is made use of as well in criminal as civil matters. In criminal cases, when a grand jury upon a presentment or indictment find the same to be true, they indorse on it billā vera; and thereupon the offender is said to stand indicted of the crime, and is bound to make answer unto it: and if the crime touch the life of the person indicted, it is then referred to the jury of life and death, viz. the petty jury, by whom if he be found guilty, then he shall stand convicted of the crime, and is by the judge condemned to death. Term. de Ley 86: 3 Inst. 30. See Ignoramus and Indictment.

Many of the proceedings in the King's Bench are by bill: it is the ancient form of proceeding, and was, and yet should be filed in parchment, in all suits, not by original. The declaration is a transcript of it, or supposed to be. See tit. Amendment.

Bill is also a common engagement for money given by one man to another; being sometimes with a penalty, called penal bill, and sometimes without a penalty, then called a single bill, though the latter is most frequently used. By a bill we ordinarily understand a single bond, without a condition; and it was formerly all one with an obligation, save only its being called a bill when in English, and an obligation when in Latin. West. Symbol. lib. 2. sect. 146. Where there is a bill of 100 l. to be paid on demand, it is a duty presently, and there needs no actual demand. Cro. Eliz. 548. And a single obligation or bill, upon the sealing and delivery, is debitum in presenti, though solvendum in futuro. On a collateral promise to pay money on demand, there must be a special demand; but between the parties it is a debt, and said to be sufficiently demanded by the action: it is otherwise where the money is to be paid to a third person; or where there is a penalty. 3 Kebl. 176. If a person acknowledge himself by bill obligatory to be indebted to another in the sum of 50 l. and by the same bill binds him and his heirs in 100 l. and says not to whom he is bound, it shall be intended he is bound to the person to whom the bill is made. Rel. Abr. 748. A bill obligatory written in a book, with the party's hand and seal to it, is good. Cro. Eliz. 613.—See 2 Ro. Ab. 146.

These kinds of bills are now superseded in use, the single bills by the more modern traffick of Bills of Exchange, and the penal bills by Bonds or Obligations.—See those titles.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS, A writ directed to a Common law court, for an error in fact, apparent in the record, or for an error in law, where either party died before judgment, and it lay not for an error in law not appearing in the record, and therefore, where the plaintiff or defendant, or another defendant, alleged any thing ore tenus, which was over-ruled by the judge, this could not be assigned for error, not appearing within the record, not being an error in fact, but in law; and so the party grieved was without remedy. 2 Inst. 426. And therefore by the Stat. of H. 4m. 2, 15 E. 1. c. 31, "When one impleaded before any of the justices, alleges an exception, praying they will allow it, and if they will not, if he that alleges the exception writes the same, and requires that the justices will put to their seals, the justices shall so do; and if one will not, another shall; and if, upon complaint made of the justice, the King cause the record to come before him, and the exception be not found in the roll, and the plaintiff shew the written exception, with the seal of the justice thereto put, the justice shall be commanded to appear at a certain day, either to confess or deny his seal, and if he cannot deny his seal, they shall proceed to judgment according to the exception, as it ought to be allowed or disallowed."

This statute extends to the plaintiff as well as defendant, also to him who comes in loco tenentis, as one that prays to be received, or the vouchee; and in all actions whether real, personal, or mixt. 2 Inst. 427.

The statute extends not only to all pleas dilatory and peremptory, but to prayers to be received, oyer of records and deeds, &c. also to challenges of jurors, and any material evidence offered and over-ruled. 2 Inst. 427: Dyer 231. pl. 3: Raym. 486.

The exceptions ought to be put in writing sedente curiā, in the presence of the judge who tried the cause, and signed by the counsel on each side; and then the bill must be drawn up and tendered to the judge that tried the cause to be sealed by him; and when signed, there goes out a fiat facias to the same judge ad cognoscendum scriptum, and that is made part of the record, and the return of the judge with the bill itself, must be entered on the issue-roll; and if a writ of error be brought, it is to be returned as part of the record. 1 Nels. Abr. 373. If a bill of exceptions is drawn up, and tendered to the judge for sealing, and he refuses to do it, the party may have a compulsory writ against him, commanding him to seal it, if the fact alleged be truly stated: and if he returns that the fact is untruly stated, when the case is otherwise, an action will lie against him for making a false return. 3 Comm. 372: Reg. Br. 182: 2 Inst. 427.

If one of the justices sets his seal to the bill, it is sufficient; but if they all refuse, it is a contempt in them all. 2 Inst. 427: Raym. 182. S. P.: 2 Lev. 327. S. P.

When a bill of exceptions is allowed, the court will not suffer the party to move any thing in arrest of judgment on the point on which the bill of exceptions was allowed. 1 Vent. 366, 367: 2 Lev. 237: 2 Jones 217.

A bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal; examinable, not in the court out of which the record issues for the trial at Nisi Prius, but in the next immediate superior court, upon a writ of error after judgment given in the court below. 3 Comm. 372.

These bills of exceptions, are to be tendered before a verdict given; 2 Inst. 427; and extend only to civil Bills of exchange are now seldom used, since the liberality practised by the courts in granting new trials.

BILL OF EXCHANGE, A negotiable security for money, well known among merchants. The laws relating to this subject, and that of PROMISSORY (and negotiable) Notes, being implicated together, are here considered under one head, and thus arranged:

- I. Of the Nature of 1. Bills of Exchange; 2. Inland and Foreign; 3. Promissory Notes.—4. The Parties to them.—5. The Distinction and Resemblance between the several Kinds of Bills and Notes.—6. Bank and Bankers' Notes.—7. The essential Qualities, of Bills and Notes.
- II. Of the Acceptance of Bills; how, when, by and to whom made.
- III. Of the Transfer of Bills and Notes by Indorsement, &c.
- IV. Of the Engagements of the several Parties.
- V. Of 1. the Action and Remedy on Bills and Notes; 2. Manner of declaring and pleading; 3. The Evidence; and 4. the Defence.
- VI. Of bills lost, stolen, or forged: and see III.

I. 1. A BILL OF EXCHANGE is an open letter of request, addressed by one person to a second, desiring him to pay a sum of money to a third, or to any other to whom that third person shall order it to be paid: or it may be made payable to bearer.

The person who makes the bill is called the drawer; he to whom it is address the drawee; and when he undertakes to pay the amount, he is then called the acceptor. The person to whom it is ordered to be paid is called the payee; and if he appoint another to receive the money, that other is called the indorsee, as the payee is, with respect to him, the indorser; any one who happens for the time to be in possession of the bill is called the holder of it.

The time at which the payment is limited to be made is various, according to the circumstances of the parties and the distance of their respective residences. Sometimes the amount is made payable at sight; sometimes at so many days after sight; at other times at a certain distance from the date. Usance is the time of one, two or three months after the date of the bill according to the custom of the places between which the exchanges run; and the nature of which must therefore be shewn and averred in a declaration on such a bill.—Double or treble usance is double or treble the usual time; and half usance is half the time.—Where the time of payment is limited by months, it must be computed by calendar, not lunar, months: and where one month is longer than the succeeding one, it is a rule not to go in the computation into a third. Thus on a bill dated the 28, 29, 30 or 31st of January, and payable one month after date, the time expires on the 28th of February in common years, and in the three latter cases in leap years. The 28th [to which are to be added the day of grace, see post.]—Where a bill is payable at so many days after sight, or from the date, the day of presentment, or of the date is excluded. Thus where a bill payable 10 days after sight is presented on the 1st day of a month, the 10 days expire on the 11th, where it is dated the 1st, and payable 20 days after date, these expire on the 21st. Ed. Reym. 281 6 Str. 829.

A custom has obtained among merchants; that a person to whom a bill is address, shall be allowed a few days for payment beyond the terms mentioned in the bill called days of grace.—In Great Britain and Ireland three days are given; in other places more. If the last of these three days happen to be Sunday, the bill is to be paid on Saturday, but these days of grace are not allowed to bills payable at sight.

3. Bills of exchange are distinguished by the appellation of Foreign and Inland bills; the first being those which pass from one country to another, and the latter such as pass between parties residing in the same country and the universal consent of merchants has long since established a system of customs relative to Foreign bills which was adopted as part of the law in every commercial state.

It does not appear that inland bills of exchange were very frequent in England before the reign of Charles II. (see 6 Mod. 29): And when they were introduced, they were not regarded with the same favour as foreign bills. At length the Legislature by two different statutes; 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17: and 3 & 4 An. c. 9; set both on nearly the same footing: so that what was the law and custom of merchants with respect to the one, is now in most respects the established law of the country with respect to the other.

The following are the most general forms of inland and foreign bills of exchange; but which are varied according to circumstances.

BILL OF EXCHANGE 116.

The two other bills of the foreign set, are varied thus "first and third," and "first and second not paid."

3. A Promissory Note, is a less complicated kind of security, and may be defined to be, an engagement in writing to pay a certain sum of money, mentioned in it, to a person named, or to his order, or to the bearer at large. At first these notes were considered only as written evidence of a debt; for it was held that a promissory note was not assignable or indorsible over, within the custom of merchants; and that if in fact such a note had been indorsed or assigned over, the person to whom it was so indorsed or assigned, could not maintain an action within the custom against the drawer of the note; nor could even the person to whom it was in the first instance made payable, bring such action. 1 Salk. 129: 2 Ld. Raym. 757, 9. But at length they were recognized by the Legislature and put on the same footing with inland bills of exchange; by Stat. 3 & 4 An. c. 9; (made perpetual by Stat. 7 An. c. 25. § 3); which enacts that promissory notes payable to order or bearer, may be assigned and indorsed, and action maintained thereon, as on inland bills of exchange.

4. By the Stats. 15 Geo. 3. c. 51: and 17 Geo. 3. c. 30, made perpetual by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 16, all negotiable notes and bills for less than 20*l.* are declared void; and notes or bills between that sum and 5*l.* must be made payable within 21 days after date; must particularize the name and descriptions of the payees; must bear date at the time and place they are made; must be attested by a subscribing witness, and the indorsement of them must be attended with the same strictness in all respects, and made before the notes or bills become due.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes must now be drawn on stamp paper. The stamp is proportioned, under Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 25, to the amount of the bill, from 3*d.* to 2*s.*—If foreign bills are drawn here the whole set must be stamped—But bills drawn abroad of necessity are not liable to any stamp duty.

Bills of exchange having been first introduced for the convenience of commerce, it was formerly thought that no person could draw one, or be concerned in the negotiation of it, who was not an actual merchant; but it soon being found necessary for others, not at all engaged in trade, to adopt the same mode of remittance and security, it has been since decided that any person capable of binding himself by a contract, may draw or accept a bill of exchange, or be in any way engaged in the negotiation of it, (and, since the Stat. 3 & 4 An. c. 9, he a party to a promissory note,) and shall be considered as a merchant for that purpose. Clark, 20: 2 Burr. 285; Comb. 152: 1 Show. 125: 2 Show. 501: Lutt. 898, 1585: 10 Mod. 36, 380: Salk. 126.

But an infant cannot be sued on a bill of exchange. Carth. 160.—Nor a feme covert; except in such cases as she is allowed to act as a feme sole. 1 Ld. Raym. 147: Salk. 116. See title Baron and Feme.

Where there are two joint-traders, and a bill is drawn on both of them, the acceptance of one binds the other, if it concern the joint trade; but it is otherwise, if it concern the acceptor only, in a distinct interest and respect. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 175.

Sometimes exchange is made in the name and for the account of a third person, by virtue of full power and authority given by him, and this is commonly termed procuration; and such bills may be drawn, subscribed, indorsed, accepted and negotiated, not in the name or for the account of the manager or transactor of any or all of these branches of remittances, but in the name and for the account of the person who authorized him. Lex. Merc.

5. A promissory note in its original form of a promise from one man to pay a sum of money to another bears no resemblance to a bill of exchange. When it is indorsed, the resemblance begins, for then it is an order by the indorser to the maker of the note, who by his promise is his debtor, to pay the money to the indorsee. —The indorser of the note corresponds to the drawer of the bill; the maker to the drawee or acceptor; and the indorsee to the payee—When this point of resemblance is once fixed, the law is fully settled to be exactly the same in bills of exchange and promissory notes: and whenever the law is reported to have been settled with respect to the acceptor of a bill, it is to be considered as applicable to the (drawer, or) maker of a note; when with respect to the drawer of a bill, then to the first indorser of a note; the subsequent indorsers and indorsee bear an exact resemblance to one another. 2 Burr. 576.

Both bills and notes are in two different forms, being sometimes made payable to such a man or his order, or to the order of such a man; sometimes to such a man or bearer, or simply to bearer.

The first kind have always been held to be negotiable; but where they were made payable to the order of such a man, exception has been taken to an action brought by that man himself, on the ground that he had only an authority to indorse; but the exception was not allowed. 10 Mod. 286: 2 Show. 8: Comb. 401: Carth. 403:—And it is now decided law, that bills and notes payable to bearer, are equally transferable as those payable to order; and the transfer in both cases equally confers the right of action on the bona fide holder. 1 Black. Rep. 485: 3 Burr. 1516: Stat. 3 & 4 An. c. 9. § 5: 1 Burr. 452, 9. The mode of transfer however is different; bills and notes payable to bearer are transferred by mere delivery, the others by indorsement.

6. The bills and notes mentioned above are considered merely as securities for money; but there is a species of each which is considered as money itself. These are, Bank-notes, bankers' cash-notes, and drafts on bankers payable on demand.

Bank-notes are treated as money or cash in the ordinary course or transactions of business by common consent, which gives them the credit and currency of money

ney to every essential purpose; they are as much considered to be money as guineas themselves; 1 Burr. 457, and it seems are as lawful a tender. See Stat. 5 H. & M. c. 20. s. 28; 3 Term. Rep. 554.

Bankers' cash notes and drafts on bankers, are so far considered as money among merchants; that they receive them in payment as ready cash; and if the party receiving them do not within a reasonable time demand the money he must bear the loss in case of the bankers' failure. What shall be construed to be a reasonable time has been subject to much doubt; it was formerly considered as a question of fact depending on the circumstances of the case; to be determined by a jury; but it is now established to be a question of law to be decided by the court, though the precise time is necessarily undetermined. 1 Black. Rep. 1. See 1 Ld. Raym. 744: 1 Stra. 415, 6, 550: 2 Stra. 910, 1175, 1248. And on the whole the best rule in these cases seems to be, that drafts on bankers, payable on demand, ought to be carried for payment on the very day on which they are received; if from the distance and situation of the parties that may conveniently be done.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes, though according to the general principles of law, they are to be considered only as evidences of a simple contract, are yet in one respect regarded as specialties; and on the same footing with bonds; for unless the contrary be shewn by the defendant, they are always presumed to have been made on a good consideration; nor is it incumbent on the plaintiff either to shew a consideration in his declaration, or to prove it at the trial. 1 Black. Rep. 445: Peckham v. Wood, K. B. East. 18 Geo. 3.—However though foreign bills were always entitled to this privilege it was not without some difficulty that it was extended to inland bills; and notes are indebted for it to the statute 2 Ld. Raym. 758: 1 Black. Rep. 487.

7. Bills of exchange, contrary to the general nature of chofes in action, are by the custom of merchants, assignable or negotiable without any fiction, and every person to whom they are transferred may maintain an action in his own name against any one, who has before him in the course of their negotiation rendered himself responsible for their payment. The same privilege is conferred on notes by the Statute. But the instrument or writing which constitutes a good bill of exchange according to the custom, or a good note under the Statute must have certain essential qualities. 3 Wils. 213.

One of these qualities is, that the bill or note should be for the payment of money only; and not for the payment of money and the doing some other act; (2 Stra. 1271;) for these instruments being originally adopted for the convenience of remittance, and now considered only as securities for the future payment of money must undertake only for that; and it must be money in specie, not in good East India bonds, or any thing else, which can itself be only considered as a security. Bull. N. P. 273.

Another requisite quality is, that the instrument must carry with it a personal and certain credit, given to the drawer or maker, not confined to credit on any particular fund. 3 Wils. 213. But in the application of this principle there seems to be a material distinction between bills and notes. As to the former, where the fund is supposed to be in the hands of the drawee, the objection holds in its full force; not only because it may be uncertain whether the fund will be productive, but because the credit is not given to the person of the drawer; but where the fund on account of which the money is payable, either is in the hands of the drawer, or he is accountable for it, the objection will not hold, because the credit is personal to him, and the fund is only the consideration of his giving the bill.—With respect to a note, if the drawer promise to pay out of a particular fund, then within his power, the note will be good under the statute: the payment does not depend on the circumstance of the fund's proving unproductive or not, but there is an obligation on his personal credit; the bare making of the note being an acknowledgement that he has money in his hands. See Joscelyne v. Lassere, Fort. 281: 10 Mod. 294, 316—Jenny v. Harle, 1 Stra. 591: 2 Ld. Raym. 1361: 8 Mod. 265: Danvers & ux. v. Delamaine, 3 Wils. 207: 2 Black. Rep. 782.—On the principle which governed these cases an order from an owner of a ship to the freighter to pay money on account of freight, was held to be no bill of exchange. 2 Stra. 1211.—But such a bill from the freighters of a ship, to any other person, if good in other respects would certainly not be bad, though made payable on account of freight; because indisputably there is a personal credit given to the drawer, the words "on account of freight," only expressing the consideration for which the bill was given. See Pierfon v. Dunlop, Doug. 571.—And there may be cases where the instrument may appear at first sight to be payable out of a particular fund, but in reality be only a distinction how the drawer is to reimburse himself, or a recital of the particular species of value received by the maker of a note; in which cases their validity rests on the personal credit given to the acceptor of the bill, or drawer of the note. 2 Ld. Raym. 1481, 1545: 2 Stra. 762: Barn. K. B. 12.

Another essential quality to make a good bill or note is, that it must be absolutely payable at all events; and not depend on any particular circumstances which may or may not happen in the common course of things. 3 Wils. 213: 1 Burr. 325: See 2 Ld. Raym. 1362, 1396, 1563: 8 Mod. 363: 4 Vin. 240, pl. 16: 2 Stra. 1151: 4 Mod. 242: 1 Burr. 323. In the case of notes however it is not necessary, that the time of payment should be absolutely fixed; it is sufficient if, from the nature of the thing the time must certainly arrive, on which their payment is to depend; (2 Stra. 1217: 1 Burr. 227;) for here the words of engagement make the debt; and it is no direction to another person; the former part of the note is a promise to pay the money, and the rest is only fixing the particular time when it is to be paid. It is sufficient if it be certainly, and at all events payable at that time, whether the maker live till then, or die in the interim.—And it has been decided that a promise to pay "within two months after such a ship shall be paid off" will make a good note; for the paying off the ship is a thing of a publick nature and morally certain. See 1 Stra. 24: 1 Wils. 262, 3.—But this indulgence seems to have been carried almost too far; and such a latitude seems incompatible with the nature and original intention of a bill of exchange; its allowance in favour of promissory notes arising entirely from a liberal construction of the statute on which the negotiability of those notes depends.

BILL OF EXCHANGE II.

In most of the cases where the several instruments have been denied the privilege of bills and notes, it is not for that reason to be concluded that they are of no force: when the fund from which they are to be paid, can be proved to have been productive, or the contingency on which they depend has happened, they may be used as evidence of a contract, according to the circumstances of the case, or according to the relation in which the parties stand to one another. See 2 Black. Rep. 1072.

No precise form of words is necessary to make a bill of exchange or a note under the statute; any order which cannot be complied with, or promise which cannot be performed, without the payment of money, will make a good bill or note. Thus an order to deliver money, or a promise that such a one shall receive it. 10 Mod. 287: 2 Ld. Raym. 1396: 1 Str. 639, 706: 1 Wils. 263: 3 Wils. 313; 8 Mod. 364: Al. 1.

The words value received being in general inserted in bills and notes, there seems to have been some doubt, whether they were essential; in one case, (Banbury v. Lister, 2 Str. 1212,) where the want of these words was objected, a verdict was given on that account against the instrument, but that case seems a very doubtful authority.—On several occasions it appears to have been said incidentally by the court, and at the bar, that these words are unnecessary. Fort. 282: Barr. K. B. 88: 8 Mod. 267: 1 Show. 5, 497: 3 Lord Raym. 1556, 1481: Lutw. 889: 1 Mod. Ent. 310.—And the point is now fully settled that these words are not necessary; for as these instruments are always presumed to have been made on a valuable consideration, words which import no more, cannot be essential. White v. Ledwick, K. B. Hil. 25 Geo. 3.

Whether it be essential to the constitution of a bill of exchange, that it should contain words which render it negotiable, as to order or to bearer, seems not hitherto to have received a direct judicial decision. There are two cases in which the want of such words was taken as an exception; but as there were other exceptions, the point was not decided. 2 Str. 1212: 3 Wils. 212.—In another case, the same exception was taken and overruled, but under such circumstances that the point was not generally determined. 2 Wils. 353.—If in a doubtful point however it may be allowed to reason on general principles, it should seem, that it being the original intention and the actual use of bills of exchange that they should be negotiable, such drafts as want these operative words are not entitled to be declared on as specialties, however they may be sufficient as evidence to maintain an action of another kind. Kyd, 42.—But it has been ruled that such words are not necessary in notes, and that the person to whom they are made payable may maintain an action on them, within the statute against the maker. Moor v. Paine, Hardw. 288.

II. AN ACCEPTANCE is an engagement to pay a bill of exchange according to the tenor of the acceptance.—The circumstances which generally concur in an acceptance are that the party to whom it is addressed binds himself to the payment, after the bill has issued, before it has become due, and according to its tenor; by either subscribing his name or writing the word accept, or accepted, or accepted A. B. But a man may be bound as acceptor without any of these circumstances.

An acceptance may be either written or verbal; if the former, it may be either on the bill itself, or in some collateral writing, as a letter, &c. 1 Str. 648.—In foreign bills it has always been understood that a collateral or parol acceptance was sufficient; 1 Str. 648: 3 Burr. 1674: Hardw. 75. And it is now settled that such acceptance is also good in cases of inland bills; as by word, Lunley v. Palmer, 2 Str. 1000; or by letter, 1 Atk. 717 (613).

The acceptance is usually made between the time of issuing the bill and the time of payment; but it may also be made before the bill has issued, or after it has become due; when it is made before the bill is issued, it is rather an agreement to accept, than an actual acceptance; but such agreement is equally binding as an acceptance itself. 3 Burr. 1663: Doug. 284: 1 Atk. 715, (611).—When the acceptance is made after the time of payment is elapsed, it is considered as a general promise to pay the money: and if it be to pay according to the tenor of the bill, this shall not invalidate the acceptance, though the time being past, it be impossible to pay according to the tenor; but these words shall be rejected as surplusage. 1 Salk. 179: 1 Ld. Raym. 364, 574: 12 Mod. 214, 410. Carth. 4, 9.

Acceptance is usually made by the drawee, and when before the issuing of the bill, is hardly ever made by any other person; but after the issuing the bill it often happens, either that the drawee cannot be found, or refuses to accept, or that his credit is suspected, or that he cannot by reason of some disability render himself responsible: in any of these cases an acceptance by another person, in order either to prevent the return of the bill, to promote the negotiation of it, or to save the reputation of, and prevent an action against, the drawer, or some of the other parties, is not uncommon: such an acceptance is called an acceptance for the honour of the person on whose account it is made.

That engagement which constitutes an acceptance, is usually made to the holder of the bill, or to some person who has it in contemplation to receive it; and then the acceptor must answer to him, and to every one who either has had the bill before, or shall afterwards have it by indorsement: but it is frequently made to the drawer himself; and then it may be binding on the party making the engagement or not, according to the circumstances of the case.

The mere answer of a merchant to the drawer "that he will duly honour his bill" is not of itself an acceptance, unless accompanied with circumstances which may induce a third person to take the bill by indorsement: but if there be any such circumstances, it may amount to an acceptance, though the answer be contained in a letter to the drawer. Cowp. 572, 4: 1 Atk. 715, (611). And an agreement to accept, may be expressed in such terms as to put a third person in a better condition than the drawer. If one, meaning to give credit to another, make an absolute promise to accept his bill, the drawer or any other person may show such promise on the exchange to procure credit, and a third person advancing his money on it has nothing to do with the equitable circumstances which may subsist between the drawer and acceptor. Dougl. 285, (299).

BILL OF EXCHANGE III.

An acceptance is generally according to the tenor of the bill; and then it is called a general and absolute acceptance: but it may differ from the tenor in some material circumstances, and yet, as far as it goes, be binding on the acceptor.—Thus it may be for a less sum than that mentioned in the bill; or it may be for an enlarged period. 1 Str. 214: Marius 21.—So the drawee may accept a bill which has no time mentioned for payment, and which is held to be payable at sight, to pay, at a distant period; which acceptance will bind him. 11 Mod. 190.

A bill was payable the 1st of January; the drawee accepted to pay the 1st of March: the holder struck out the 1st of March, and inserted the 1st of January, and when it was payable according to that date, presented it for payment, which the acceptor refused; on which the holder restored the acceptance to the original form; and the court held that it continued binding. Price v. Shute, East. 33 Car. 2.—So the acceptance may direct the payment to be made at a different place from that mentioned in the bill, as at the house of a banker. See 2 Str. 1195.—So also the acceptance may differ from the tenor of the bill in its mode of payment, as to pay half in money, half in bills. Bull. N. P. 270.—An acceptance may also be conditional, as 'to pay when certain goods consigned to the acceptor, and for which the bill is drawn, shall be sold.' 2 Str. 1152.

What shall be considered as an absolute or conditional acceptance is a question of law to be determined by the court, and is not to be left to the jury. 1 Term Rep. 182: See 1 Str. 648: 1 Atk. 717, (612).—If the acceptance be in writing, and the drawee intend that it should be only conditional, he must be careful to express the condition in writing, as well as the acceptance; for if the acceptance should, on the face of it appear to be absolute, he cannot take advantage of any verbal condition annexed to it, if the bill should be negotiated and come to the hands of a person unacquainted with the condition; and even against the person to whom the verbal condition was expressed, the burthen of proof will be on the acceptor. Doug. 286.—A conditional acceptance, when the conditions on which it depends are performed, becomes absolute. Cowp. 571.—But if the conditions on which the agreement to accept a bill is made, be not complied with, that agreement will be discharged. Doug. 297.

An acceptance by the custom of merchants as effectually binds the acceptor, as if he had been the original drawer; and, having once accepted it, he cannot afterwards revoke it. Cro. Jac. 308: Hard. 487.

A very small matter will amount to an acceptance; and any words will be sufficient for that purpose, which shew the party's assent or agreement to pay the bill; as if upon the tender thereof to him, he subscribes, accepted, or accepted by me A. B. or, I accept the bill, &c. these clearly amount to an acceptance. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. sect. 15.

If the party under-writes the bill, presented such a day, or only the day of the month; this is such an acknowledgement of the bill as amounts to an acceptance. 3 New Abr. 610: Comb. 401. So if he order a direction to another person to pay it. Bull. N. P. 270.

If the party says, Leave your bill with me and I will accept it, or, call for it to-morrow and it shall be accepted;

these words, according to the custom of merchants, as effectually bind, as if he had actually signed or subscribed his name according to the usual manner.

But if a man says, Leave your bill with me; I will look over my accounts and books between the drawer and me, and call to-morrow, and accordingly the bill shall be accepted; this does not amount to a complete acceptance; for the mention of his books and accounts shews plainly that he intended only to accept the bill, in case he had effects of the drawer's in his hands. And so it was ruled by the Lord Chief Justice Hale, at Guilthall. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. sect. 20.

A foreign bill was drawn on the defendant, and being returned for want of acceptance, the defendant said, that if the bill came back again he would pay it; this was ruled a good acceptance. 3 New Abr. 610, cites Mitch. 6 Geo. 1. B. R. Gair v. Coleman.

If a merchant be desired to accept a bill, on the account of another, and to draw on a third, in order to reimburse himself, and in consequence he draw a bill on that third person; the bare act of drawing this bill, will not amount to an acceptance of the other. 1 Term Rep. 269.

An agreement to accept or honour a bill, will in many cases be equivalent to an acceptance, and whether that agreement be merely verbal, or in writing, is immaterial: If A. having given or intending to give credit to B. write to C. to know whether he will accept such bills as shall be drawn on him on B.'s account; and C. return for answer, that he will accept them; this is equivalent to an acceptance; and a subsequent prohibition to draw on him on B.'s account, will be of no avail, if in fact, previous to that prohibition the credit has been given. 3 Burr. 1663.

If a book-keeper or servant, or other person having authority, or who usually transacts business of this nature for the master, accept a bill of exchange, this shall bind such master. 3 New Abr. 611.

If a bill be drawn on a servant (as a clerk of a corporation, &c.) with a direction to place the money to the account of his employer, and the servant accept it generally, this renders him liable to answer personally to an indorsee. 2 Str. 955: Hardw. 1.

If a bill be accepted, and the person who accepted the same happens to die before the time of payment, there must be a demand made of his executors or administrators; and on non-payment, a protest is to be made, although the money becomes due before there can be administration, &c.

Forging the acceptance of any bill of exchange, or the number or principal sum of any accountable receipt, is made felony, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 22.

III. According to the difference in the stile of negotiability of bills and notes, the modes of their transfer also differ. Bills and notes payable to bearer are transferred by delivery: if payable to A. B. or bearer they are payable to bearer, as if A. B. were not mentioned. 1 Burr. 452: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485. But to the transfer of those payable to order, it is necessary in addition to delivery that there should be something, by which the payee may appear to express his order. This additional circumstance is an indorsement; so called from being usually (though not necessarily) written on the back of the note or bill.

Y

BILL or EXCHANGE III.

Where no regulation is made by act of parliament (see ante I. 4,) relative to the negotiation of bills or notes, no particular form of words is necessary to make an indorsement; only the name of the indorser must appear upon it, and it must be written or signed by him, or by some person authorized by him for that purpose.

Indorsements are either in full or in blank; a full indorsement is that by which the indorser orders the money to be paid to some particular person, by name: a blank indorsement consists only of the name of the indorser—Blank indorsements are most frequent, indeed almost universal in business.—A blank indorsement renders the bill or note afterwards transferable by delivery only, as if it were payable to bearer; for by only writing his name the indorser shews his intention that the instrument should have a general currency, and be transferred by every possessor. Doug. 617, (639), 611, (633).

Except where restrained by statute (See ante I. 4.) The transfer of a bill or note may be made at any time after it has issued, even after the day of payment; and, in case of bills, where the acceptor resides at a distance from the drawer, is frequently made before acceptance. 1 Ld. Raym. 575: See 3 Term Rep. 80: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485: Doug. 611, (633).

An indorsement may be made on a blank note, before the insertion of any date or sum of money, in which case the indorser is liable for any sum, at any time of payment that may be afterwards inserted; and it is immaterial whether the person taking the note on the credit of the indorsement knew whether it was made before the drawing of the note or not; for in such a case the indorsement is equivalent to a letter of credit for any indefinite sum. Doug. 496, (514).

On a transfer by delivery, it is said that the person making it ceases to be a party to, or security for, the payment of a bill or note; (1 Ld. Raym. 442: 12 Mod. 241: 1 Salk. 128;) yet it seems there can be little doubt that he is liable in another sort of action; as for money had and received, &c. See 3 Term Rep. 757: 4 Term Rep. 177.

Though a blank indorsement be a sufficient transfer, and may enable the person, in whose favour it is made, to negotiate the instrument, yet it is in his option, to take it either as indorsee, or as servant or agent to the indorser; and the latter may, notwithstanding his indorsement, declare as holder in an action against the drawer or acceptor. Nothing is more usual than for the holder of a bill or note to indorse it in blank, and send it to some friend for the purpose of procuring the acceptance or the payment; in this case it is in the power of the friend, either to fill up the blank space over the indorser's name, with an order to pay the money to himself, which shews his election to take as indorsee; or to write a receipt which shews he is only the agent of the indorser. 1 Salk. 125, 128, 130: 1 Shoeb. 163: 2 Ld. Raym. 871. And, on this principle one, to whom a bill was delivered with a blank indorsement, and who carried it for acceptance, was admitted, in an action of trover for the bill against the drawer, to prove the delivery of it to the latter. 1 Salk. 130: 2 Ld. Raym. 871.

The original contract on negotiable bills and notes is to pay to such person or persons, as the payee, or his indorsee, or their indorsee shall direct; and there is as much privacy between the last indorser and the last indorsee, as between the drawer and the original payee. When the payee assigns it over, he does it by the law of merchants, for as a thing in action, it is not assignable by the general law. The indorsement is part of the original contract, is incidental to it in the nature of the thing, and must be understood to be made in the same manner as the instrument was drawn; the indorsee holds it in the same manner and with the same privileges, qualities, and advantages as the original payee, as a transferable negotiable instrument, which he may indorse over to another, and that other to a third, and so on at pleasure; for these reasons an indorser for a valuable consideration cannot limit his indorsement by any restriction on the indorsee, so as to preclude him from transferring it to another as a thing negotiable. 2 Burr. 1222, 3, 6, 7—See also Com. 311: 1 Str. 457: 2 Burr. 1216: 1 Black. Rep. 295; and as to the effect of Restrictive Indorsements, see Doug. 615, (637): 617, (639, 640).

Where the transfer may be by delivery only, that transfer may be made by any person who by any means, whether accident or theft has obtained the possession; and any holder may recover against the drawer, acceptor or indorser in blank, if such holder gave a valuable consideration without knowledge of the accident. 1 Burr. 452: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485. The same principle applies also to the case of a bill negotiated with a blank indorsement. Parrott v. Roberts & al. Doug. 611, (613); where the court held, that there was no difference between a bill or note indorsed blank, and one payable to bearer. They both pass by delivery, and possession proves property in both cases. The holder of either cannot with propriety be considered as assignee of the payee: an assignee must take the thing assigned, subject to all the equity to which the original party was subject: if this rule were applied to bills and notes, it would stop their currency, and would render it necessary for every indorsee to enquire into all the circumstances, and the manner in which the bill came to the indorser; but the law is now clearly settled, that a holder coming fairly by a bill or note, is not to be affected with the transaction between the original parties.

But a transfer by indorsement where that is necessary, can only be made by him who has a right to make it, and that is strictly only the payee, or the person to whom he or his indorsee have transferred it, or some one claiming in the right of some of these parties.—Bills and notes in favour of partners must be indorsed by them all, or at least by one in the firm of the house; and a bill drawn by two persons payable to them or order, must be indorsed by both. Doug. 630, (653) in note.

If a bill or note be made or indorsed to a woman while single, and she afterwards marry, the right to indorse it over belongs to her husband, for by the marriage he is entitled to all her personal property. 1 Str. 516: Ca. L. E. 246.

If a man become bankrupt, the property of bills and notes of which he is the payee or indorsee, vests in his assignees, and the right to transfer is in them only.—If the holder of a bill or note die, it devolves to his executors or administrators, and they may indorse it, and their indorsee maintain an action, in the same manner as if the indorsement had been made by the testator or intestate.

BILL OF EXCHANGE IV.

intestate. But on their indorsement they are liable personally to the subsequent parties, for they cannot charge the effects of the testator.—They may also be the indorsee of a bill or note in their quality of executors or administrators; as where they receive one from their testator or intestate; and in that character they may bring an action on it against the acceptor, or any of the other parties. 3 Wils. 1: 2 Str. 1260: 2 Barnes 137: 2 Burr. 1225: 1 Term Rep. 487: 10 Mod. 315.

When a bill payable to order is expressed to be for the use of another person than the payee, yet the right of transfer is in the payee, and his indorsee may recover against the drawer or acceptor. Carth. 5: 2 Vent. 309: 2 Shew. 509.

It has been adjudged, that a bill of exchange cannot be indorsed for part, so as to subject the party to several actions. 3 New Abr. 610: Carth. 466: 1 Salk. 65.

IV. By the very act of drawing a bill, the drawer comes under an implied engagement to the payee, and to every subsequent holder, fairly entitled to the possession, that the person on whom he draws is capable of binding himself by his acceptance, that he is to be found at the place at which he is described to be, if that description be mentioned in the bill; that if the bill be duly presented to him, he will accept it in writing on the bill itself, according to its tenor; and that he will pay it when it becomes due, if presented in proper time for that purpose.

In default of any of these particulars, the drawer is liable to an action at the suit of any of the parties before mentioned, on due diligence being exercised on their parts, not only for the payment of the original sum mentioned in the bill, but also in some cases for damages, interest and costs; and he is equally answerable whether the bill was drawn on his own account, or on that of a third person; for the holder of the bill is not to be affected by the circumstances that may exist between the drawer and another; the personal credit of the drawer being pledged for the due honour of the bill. Beaves. See ante I. 7.

If a man write his name on a blank piece of paper, and deliver it to another, with authority to draw on it a bill of exchange to any amount, at any distance of time, he renders himself liable to be called on as the drawer of any bill so formed by the person to whom he has given the authority. 1 H. Black. Rep. 313.

If acceptance be refused and the bill returned, this is notice to the drawer of the refusal of the drawee; and then the period when the debt of the former is to be considered as contracted, is the moment he draws the bill; and an action may be immediately commenced against him; though the regular time of payment, according to the tenor of the bill, be not arrived. For the drawee not having given credit, which was the ground of the contract, what the drawer had undertaken has not been performed. Doug. 55, Mitford v. Mayor; See also 2 Str. 949, cited 3 Wils. 16, 17.

When a bill of exchange is indorsed by the person to whom it was made payable, as between the indorser and indorsee, it is a new bill of exchange; as it is also between every subsequent indorser and indorsee: the indorser therefore, with respect to all the parties subsequent to him, stands in the place of the drawer, being a collateral security for the acceptance and payment of the bill by the drawee: his indorsement imposes on him the same engagement that the drawing of the bill does on the drawer; and the period when that engagement attaches is the time of the indorsement. 1 Salk. 133: 2 Shew. 441, 494: 2 Burr. 674.

Nothing will discharge the indorser from his engagement but the absolute payment of the money, not even a judgment recovered against the drawer or any previous indorser. 3 Mod. 86: 2 Shew. 441, 494.—Neither is the engagement of an indorser discharged by an ineffectual execution against the drawer or any prior or subsequent indorser. 2 Black. Rep. 1235, and see 4 Term Rep. 825.

The engagement of the drawer and indorsors is however still but conditional.—The holder in order to intitle himself to call upon them in consequence of it, undertakes to perform certain requisites on his part, a failure in which precludes him from his remedy against them.—Where the payment of a bill is limited at a certain time after sight, it is evident the holder must present it for acceptance, otherwise the time of payment would never come: it does not appear that any precise time, within which this presentment must be made has in any case been ascertained: but it must be done as soon as, under all the circumstances of the case, that can conveniently be done; and what has been said on the presentment of bills and notes payable on demand, seems exactly to apply here. See ante I. 6.

Whether the holder of a bill, payable at a certain time after the date be bound to present for acceptance immediately on the receipt of it, or whether he may wait till it become due, and then present it for payment, is a question which seems never to have been directly determined: in practice however it frequently happens that a bill is negotiated and transferred through many hands, without acceptance; and not presented to the drawee till the time of payment, and no objection is ever made on that account. See 5 Burr. 2671: 1 Term Rep. 713.

If however, the holder in fact present the bill for acceptance, and that be refused, he is bound to give regular notice to all the preceding parties to whom he intends to resort for non-payment; to the drawer, that he may know how to regulate his conduct with respect to the drawee, and make other provision for the payment of the bill; and to the indorsors, that they may severally have their remedy in time against the parties on whom they have a right to call; and if on account of the holder's delay, any loss accrue by the failure of any of the preceding parties, he must bear the loss. 5 Burr. 2670: 1 Term Rep. 712.

It is also the duty of the holder of a bill, whether accepted or not, to present it for payment within a limited time; for otherwise the law will imply, that payment has been made; and it would be prejudicial to commerce if a bill might rise up to charge the drawer at any distance of time, when all accounts might be adjusted between him and the drawee.—For the old cases on this subject, see 1 Salk. 127, 132, 3. 1 Shew. 155: 1 Ld. Raym. 743: 2 Str. 829.—This time for demand of payment seems at present to be regulated by the cases as to notice to preceding indorsors immediately following.

A presentment either for payment or acceptance must be made at reasonable hours; which are the common hours of business in the place where the party lives to whom the presentment is to be made.

BILL of EXCHANGE IV.

If acceptance or payment be refused, or the drawee of the bill or maker of the note has become insolvent, or has absconded, notice from the holder himself must be given to the preceding parties; and in that notice it is not enough to say that the drawee or maker refuses, is insolvent, or has absconded, but it must be added, that the holder does not intend to give him credit. The purpose of giving notice is not merely that the indorser should know default has been made, for he is chargeable only in a secondary degree; but to render him liable, it must be shewn, that the holder looked to him for payment, and gave him notice that he did so. See 1 Str. 441, 515; 2 Black. Rep. 747; as to bills—and 1 Str. 649; 2 Str. 1087; 1 Term Rep. 170, as to notes.

What should be considered as a reasonable time within which notice should be given, either of non-acceptance or non-payment has been subject to much doubt and uncertainty; it was once held, that a fortnight was a reasonable time, but that is now much narrowed. 1 Moul. 27.

With respect to acceptance, it is usual to leave a bill for that purpose with the drawee till the next day, and that is not considered as giving him time; it being understood to be the usual practice; but if on being called on the next day, he delay or refuse to accept according to the tenor of the bill, the rule now established, where the parties, to whom notice is to be given, reside at a different place from the holder and drawee, is, that notice must be sent by the next post—Under the same circumstances, the same rule obtains in the case of non-payment. 1 Term Rep. 169.—So also in case the drawee or maker has absconded, or cannot be found, notice of these circumstances, either in case of non-acceptance or non-payment, must be sent by the first post.

The great difficulty has been to establish any general rule, where the party entitled to notice resides in the same place, or at a place at a small distance from that in which the holder lives. On this point as well as on the question of what shall be considered as a reasonable time for making the demand of payment, it has been an object of no little controversy, whether it was the province of the jury, or of the judge to decide; (See ante I. 6;) till lately it seems the jury had been permitted to determine on the particular circumstances of each individual case what time was reasonably to be allowed, either for making demand or giving notice. Doug. 515, (681.)

But it having been found that this was productive of endless uncertainty and inconvenience, the court on several occasions have laid it down as a principle, that what shall be considered as a reasonable time in either case is a question of law: juries have however struggled so hard to maintain their privilege in this respect, that in two cases they narrowed the time for demand, contrary to the opinion of the court; and on a second trial being granted, they in both cases adhered to their opinion, contrary to the direction of the judge. In one of them however, application being made for a third trial, the court would have granted it, had not the plaintiff precluded himself by proving his debt under a commission of bankrupt which had issued against the drawee of the bill between the time of the verdict and the application. See Doug. 515; 1 Term Rep. 171, and the cases there cited.—In a third case, where the struggle by the jury was to give a longer time for notice than was necessary, the court adhered to their principle and granted no less than three trials. 1 Term Rep. 167, 9; Tindal v. Brown. It seems therefore fully established that what shall be reasonable time is a question of law: and generally that a demand must be made, and notice given as soon as, under all the circumstances, it is possible so to do.

The reason why the law requires notice is, that it is presumed that the bill is drawn on account of the drawee's having effects of the drawer in his hands; and that if the latter has notice that the bill is not accepted, or not paid, he may withdraw them immediately. But if he have no effects in the other's hands, then he cannot be injured for want of notice; and if it be proved on the part of the plaintiff, that from the time the bill was drawn, till the time it became due, the drawee never had any effects of the drawer in his hands, notice to the latter is not necessary in order to charge him, for he must know this fact; and if he had no effects in the drawer's hands, he had no right to draw upon him, and to expect payment from him; nor can he be injured by the non-payment of the bill, or the want of notice that it has been dishonoured. 1 Term Rep. 410; and see 1 Term Rep. 405.

Yet though it appear that the drawer had no effects in the hands of the drawee, no action can be maintained against the indorser, if no notice was given him of the bill being dishonoured; for though the drawer may have received no injury, the indorser, who must be presumed to have paid a valuable consideration for the bill, probably has. 2 Term Rep. 714.

Though in the case where the drawer has effects in the hands of the drawee, the want of notice cannot be waived by a subsequent promise by the drawer, to discharge the bill; yet where he had no effects it may; though it appear that in fact he sustained an injury for want of such notice: such a subsequent promise is an acknowledgment that he had no right to draw on the drawee, and if he has in fact sustained damage it is his own fault.—But where damage in such a case has been sustained, and no subsequent promise appears, it may be very doubtful whether want of notice can be waived. See 2 Term Rep. 713, 714.

In the manner in which notice, either of non-acceptance or non-payment is given, there is a remarkable difference between inland and foreign bills; in the former no particular form of words is necessary, to entitle the holder to recover, against the drawer or indorsers, the amount of the bill on failure of the drawee or acceptor; it is sufficient if it appear that the holder means to give no credit to the latter, but to hold the former to their responsibility. 1 Term Rep. 170.—But in foreign bills other formalities are required; if the person to whom the bill is addressed, on presentment, will not accept it, the holder is to carry it to a person vested with a public character, who is to go to the drawee and demand acceptance, and if he then refuse, the officer is there to make a minute on the bill itself, consisting of his initials, the month, the day and the year, with his charges for minuting. He must afterwards draw up a solemn declaration, that the bill has been presented for acceptance, which was refused, and that the holder intends intends to recover all damages which he or the deliverer of the money to the drawer, or any other may sustain on account of the non-acceptance: the minute is in common language termed the noting of the bill; the solemn declaration, the protest, and the person whose office it is to do these acts a public notary: and to his protestation all foreign courts give credit. Mal. 264: Mar. 16.

This protest must be made within the regular hours of business, and in sufficient time to have it sent to the holder's correspondent by the very next post after acceptance refused; for if it be not sent by that time, with a letter of advice, the holder will be construed to have discharged the drawer and the other parties intitled to notice: and noting alone is not sufficient, there must absolutely be a protest to render the preceding parties liable. Bull. N. P. 271: 2 Term Rep. 713.

But in this case the holder is not to send the bill itself to his correspondent; he must retain it, in order to demand payment of the drawee when it becomes due.

When the bill becomes due, whether it was accepted or not, it is again to be presented for payment within the days of grace, and if payment be refused, the bill must be protested for non-payment, and the bill itself, together with the protest, sent to the holder's correspondent, unless he shall be ordered by him to retain the bill, with a prospect of obtaining its discharge from the acceptor. Braves.

As this protest on foreign bills must be made on the last day of grace, and immediate notice sent to the parties concerned, it seems established that such a bill is payable, en demand made, at any time that day within reasonable hours; and that the acceptor has not the whole day to pay the bill. 4 Term Rep. 170.

Besides the protest for non-acceptance, and non-payment, there may also be a protest for better security; this is usual when a merchant who has accepted a bill happens to become insolvent, or is publicly reported to have failed in his credit, or absents himself from 'Change, before the bill he has accepted has become due; or when the holder has any reason to suppose it will not be paid, in such cases he may cause a notary to demand better security, and on that being refused, make protest for want of it; which protest must also be sent to the parties concerned, by the next post. Mar. 27: 1 Ld. Raym. 743.

Where the original bill is lost, and another cannot be had of the drawer, a protest may be made on a copy, especially where the refusal of payment is not for want of the original bill, but merely for another cause. 1 Show. 164.

The effect of protest for non-acceptance or non-payment, is to charge the drawer or indorsors, not only with the payment of the principal sum, but with interest, damages, and expences; which latter consist usually of the exchange, re-exchange, provision and postage, together with the expences of the protest. See Stra. 649.

Whenever interest is allowed, and a new action cannot be brought for it, which is the case on bills and notes, the interest is to be calculated up to the time of signing final judgment. 2 Burr. 1086, 7: and see 2 Term Rep. 52.

The principal difference between foreign and inland bills of exchange at common law, seems to have been this. A protest for non-acceptance or non-payment of a foreign bill was, and still is, essentially necessary to charge the drawer on the default of the drawee; nothing, not even the principal sum, could or can at this time be recovered against him without a protest: no other form of notice having been admitted by the custom of merchants as sufficient: but on inland bills, simple notice, within a reasonable time, of the default of the drawee, was held sufficient to charge the drawer, without the solemnity of a protest; the disadvantage arising from thence was this, that notice entitled the holder to recover only the sum in the original bill, which in many cases might be a very serious disadvantage: to remedy this inconvenience in some degree, the Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17, and afterwards the Stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, were passed; the professed intention of which acts was to put inland bills on the same footing as foreign ones; so far as relates to the recovery of damages, interest and costs, (i. e. expences) by means of the protest they have done it; but there are several minute particulars, in which, from an attentive perusal of the acts, it will appear they still differ.

To the constitution of a bill of exchange, as has been said before, it is not necessary that the words, value received, should be inserted; and the want of these in a foreign bill, cannot deprive the holder of the benefit of a protest; but that benefit in case of non-payment is not given by the statutes to inland bills which want these words, and therefore they cannot be protested for non-payment; and the second act provides, that "where these words are wanting, or the value is less than 20/., no protest is necessary either for non-acceptance or non-payment," the safest construction of which seems to be, that inland bills, without the words value received, or under 20/., shall continue as at common law, and shall not be intitled to the privilege of a protest, either for non-acceptance or non-payment.

An inland bill, payable at so many days after sight, cannot be protested at all; and no inland bill can be protested, till after the expiration of the three days of grace; notice of which protest is by the statute to be sent within fourteen days after the protest. 4 Term Rep. 170.

There appears also to be another difference subsisting between foreign and inland bills of exchange; for where acceptance and payment both are refused on foreign bills, it seems necessary that there should be a protest for each; but under the Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9, it seems that one protest for either, on an inland bill is sufficient.

On inland bills where damages, interest and costs, [expences] are to be recovered, there is more indulgence in the time allowed for notice of non-payment than where only the principal sum is to be recovered; for when there is no protest for non-payment, presentation for payment must be made so early on the last day of grace, that the holder may give notice of non-payment by the next post. See before.

That part of the Stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, which puts notes on the same footing with inland bills, makes no express provision for protesting them for non-payment; but there can be no doubt that the practice under which such a protest is frequently made is founded in justice.

As to several niceties relative to qualified acceptances, and protests under peculiar circumstances. See Braves Lex Merc. See also 1 Wils. 185: Doug. 249.

next moment, even if the failure was before the acceptance.—The acceptor may however be discharged by an express declaration of the holder, or by something equivalent to such declaration. Doug. 237, (249).—But no circumstances of indulgence shown to the acceptor by the holder, nor an attempt by him to recover of the drawer, will amount to an express declaration of discharge. Doug. 235, (247).—Neither will any length of time short of the statute of limitations, nor the receipt of part of the money from the drawer or indorser, nor a promise by indorsement on the bill by the drawer to pay the residue, discharge the holder's remedy against the acceptor. Doug. 238, (250) in note; but see Str. 733.—See ante II.

Though the receipt of part from the drawer or indorser be no discharge to the acceptor, yet the receipt of part from the acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, is a discharge to the drawer and indorsors in the one case, and to the indorsors in the other, unless due notice be given of the non-payment of the residue; for the receipt of part from the maker or acceptor without notice, is construed to be a giving of credit for the remainder, and the undertaking of the preceding parties is only conditional, to pay in default of the original debtor on due notice given: but where due notice is given that the bill is not duly paid, the receipt of part of the money from an acceptor or maker, will not discharge the drawer or indorsors; for it is for their advantage, that as much should be received from others as may be. 1 Ld. Raym. 744; 2 Str. 745; 1 Will. 48; Bull. N. P. 271.—So the receipt of part from an indorser, is no discharge of the drawer or preceding indorser.

If the drawer of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, be sued by the indorsee, and the bail pay the debt and costs, this absolutely discharges the indorser as much as if the principal had paid the note or bill; and the bail cannot afterwards recover against the indorser in the name of the indorsee. 1 Will. 46.

Though in order to intitle himself to call on any of the preceding parties, in default of the acceptor of a bill, or maker of a note, it be necessary that the holder should give due notice of such default, to the party to whom he means to resort, yet notice to that party alone is sufficient as against him: it is not necessary that any attempt should be made to recover the money of any of the other collateral undertakers; or in case of such attempt being made, to give notice of its being without effect. Thus in order to intitle himself to recover against an indorser, it is not necessary for the indorsee to shew an attempt to recover against the drawer of a bill of exchange, or the payee indorser of a promissory note. See 1 Salk. 131, 3; 1 Str. 441; 1 Ld. Raym. 143; and finally, Hyson v. Adams, 2 Burr. 69; on the principles of all which cases it is now usually settled, that to intitle the indorsee to recover against the indorser of an inland bill of exchange, it is not necessary to demand the money of the first drawer.

By the said Stat. 3 Ed. 4 Ann. c. 9. § 7, it is enacted, "that if any person accept a bill of exchange for and in satisfaction of any former debt or sum of money formerly due to him, this shall be accounted and esteemed a full and complete payment of such debt; if such person accepting of any such bill for his debt, do not take his due course to obtain payment of it, by endeavouring to get the same accepted and paid, and make his protest according to the directions of the act, either for non-acceptance or non-payment."

V. I. Before the doctrine of Bills of Exchange was well understood, and the nature and extent of the customs relative to them fully recognized by the courts, the remedy on them was sought in different forms of action, according to the opinions which were entertained of the applicability of the several forms to the respective situations of the parties. See Hard. 485, 7: 1 Mod. 285; 1 Fent. 132; 1 Freem. 14; 1 Lev. 298; 11 Mod. 137; C. 16. 204; 1 Salk. 125; 12 Mod. 37, 345; Skins. 346; Str. 680; 8 Mod. 375; 1 Mod. Ent. 312. pl. 13; Mog. Prec. 548; K. J. Bowen v. Tims, B. R. E. 22 Geo. 3; Baily 47. The conclusion, resulting from all which cases seems to be, that where a privity exists between the parties, there an action of debt, or of indebitatus assumpsit may be maintained; but that where it does not exist, neither of these actions will lie.

A privity exists, between the payee and the drawer of a bill of exchange; the payee and drawer of a promissory note; the indorsee and his immediate indorser of either the one or the other; and perhaps between the drawer and acceptor of a bill; provided that in all these cases, a consideration pass respectively between the parties.

But it seems to be considered, that no privity exists between the indorsee and acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, or between an indorsee and a remote indorser of either.

The action which is now usually brought on a bill of exchange, is a special action on the case, founded on the custom of merchants.

That custom was not at first recognized by the court, unless it was specially set forth, and therefore it was deemed necessary to set forth by way of inducement, so much of it as applied to the particular case, and imposed on the defendant a liability to pay. See 1 Will. 189; 1 Ld. Raym. 21, 175; 3 Mod. 86; 4 Mod. 242.

But when the custom of merchants was recognized by the judges as part of the law of the land, and they declared they would take notice of it, as such, ex officio, it became unnecessary to recite the custom at full length; a simple allegation, that "the drawer, mentioning him by his name, according to the custom of merchants, drew his bill of exchange, &c." was sufficient. And if the plaintiff still adhering to former precedents, thought proper to recite the custom in general terms, and did not bring his case within the custom so set forth; yet if by the law of merchants, as recognized by the court, the case as stated, intitled him to his action, he might recover; and the setting forth of the custom was reckoned superfluous, and rejected. See 1 Shew. 317; 2 Ld. Raym. 1542.

Whether the drawer of a bill, or the indorser of a bill, or of a note, receiving the bill or the note in the regular course of negotiation before it has become due, can maintain an action on it against the acceptor or maker, in the character of indorsee, seems undecided; but there is a case which clearly shews that a drawer or indorser cannot maintain an action against the acceptor in the character of indorsee, where the indorsement is after the receipt of payment; because when a bill is returned unpaid, either on the drawer or indorser, its negotiability is at an end. Beck v. Robley, Tr. 14 Geo. 3. 1 H. Black. Rep. 89, in the notes.

BILL OF EXCHANGE V. 2. 3.

The action therefore in which the drawer or indorser, after payment of the money in default of the acceptor, may recover, the first against the acceptor, and the latter against any of the preceding parties, must be brought in their original capacity as drawer or indorser, and not as indorsee. Vis. Simonds v. Parminster, 1 Wils. 185; Vis. Morg. Prec. 43, 44, 50; 4 Term Rep. 82, 5.

If the drawee, without having effects of the drawer, accept and duly pay the bill without having it protested, he may recover back the money in an action for money paid, laid out and expended to the use of the drawer. Vis. Sumner v. Nisbet, 1 Term Rep. 269.

Instead of bringing an action on the custom or on the statute, the plaintiff may in many cases use a bill or note, only as evidence in another action; and where the instrument wants some of the requisites to form a good bill or note, the only use he can make of it is to give it in evidence; or if the count on the instrument be defective he may give it in evidence, in support of some of the other counts for money had and received, or money lent and advanced, according to the circumstances of the transaction. Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term Rep. 174.

The holder of the bill or note may sue all the parties who are liable to pay the money; either at the same time, or in succession; and he may recover judgment against all, if satisfaction be not made by the payment of the money before judgment obtained against all; and proceedings will not be laid in any one action but on payment of the debt and costs in that action, and the costs in all the others in which he has not obtained judgment. Vis. Golding v. Grace, 2 Bl. Rep. 747.

But though he may have judgment against all, yet he can recover but one satisfaction; yet though he be paid by one, he may sue out execution for the costs in the several actions against the others. 2 Wils. 115; and see 1 Str. 515; see ante IV. and title Bankrupt IV. 5. &c.

To this action the defendant may plead the statute of limitations; and by the express provision of the statute of Queen Anne, all actions on promissory notes must be brought within the same time as is limited by the statute of James, with respect to actions on the case. And it is no good replication to this plea, that it was on account between merchants, where it appears to be for value received. Comb. 100, 392.

2. As the action on a bill of exchange is founded on the custom of merchants, so that on a promissory note is founded on the statute 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9; and usually, though perhaps not necessarily, refers to it. In both cases however it is necessary, that all those circumstances should either be expressly stated, or clearly and inevitably implied, which, according to the characters of the parties to the action, must necessarily concur in order to intitle the plaintiff to recover.

In stating the bill or the note, regard must be had to the legal operation of each respectively. 1 Burr. 324, 5. It has been decided that the legal operation of a bill, or of a note, payable to a fictitious payee, is, that it is payable to the bearer, and therefore it is proper in the statement of such a bill, to alledge that the drawer thereby requested the drawee to pay so much money to the bearer; in the statement of such a note, that the maker thereby promised to pay such a sum to the bearer. Vere v. Lewis, 3 Term Rep. 183; Minot & al. v. Gibson & al. 11. 485; Conferred in Don. P. cc. See H. Black. Rep. 569;

Colles v. Emett, H. Black. Rep. 313, and more fully as to this subject post. 3. of this division.

Or in such a case, the plaintiff may state all the special circumstances, and if the verdict correspond with them, he will be intitled to recover. See 1 H. Black. Rep. 569.

A bill or note payable to the order of a man, may, in an action by him, be stated as payable to himself, for that is its legal import: or it may be stated in the very words of it, with an averment that he made no order.

If a note purport to be given by two, and be signed only by one, a declaration generally, as on a note by that one who signed it will be good; for the legal operation of such a note is, that he who signed, promised to pay. Semb. 1 Burr. 323.

On a note to pay jointly and severally, a declaration against one in the terms of the note will be good. Burchell v. Slack, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545. So on a note to pay jointly or severally, Coop. 832; contrary to former determinations.

Inland bills and notes may be stated to have been made at any place where the plaintiff chuses to lay his action, because the action on them is transitory, and may be stated to have arisen any where. In an action against the acceptor, it must be alledged that he accepted the bill, for the acceptance is the foundation of the action, but the manner of acceptance needs not to be alledged. 2 Ld. Raym. 1542: 1 Ld. Raym. 364, 5: 374, 5: 1 Salk. 127, 9: Carth. 459.

If the bill or note was payable to order, and the action by an indorsee, such indorsements must be stated as to shew his title; an indorsement by the payee must at all events be stated, because without that, it cannot appear that he made any order, on the existence of which depends the title of the indorsee. If the first indorsement was special, to any person by name, in an action by an indorsee after him, his indorsement must, for the same reason, be stated: so also must all special indorsements.

But if the indorsement was in blank, and the action be against the drawer, acceptor, or payee, no other indorsement is necessary to be stated than that of the payee; in an action against a subsequent indorser, his indorsement at least must be added: in an action on a bill or note payable to bearer, no indorsement need be stated, because it is transferable without indorsement. See ante III.

In an action against the drawer or indorser of a bill, or against the indorser of a note, it is absolutely necessary, on account of non-payment of the bill or note, to state a demand of payment from the acceptor of the bill, or the maker of the note, and due notice of refusal given to the party against whom the action is brought; for these circumstances are absolutely necessary to intitle the plaintiff to maintain his action; and a verdict will not help him on a writ of error. The general rule of pleading in this case is, that where the plaintiff omits altogether to state his title or cause of action, it is not necessary to prove it at the trial; and therefore there is no room for presumption that there was actual proof. Rushton v. Affinall, Doug. 679, (684): but if the title be only imperfectly stated, with the omission only of some circumstances necessary to complete the title, they shall, after a verdict, be presumed to have been proved; and in some cases no advantage can be taken of the want of them on a general demurrer. Doug. 684, in the notes.

BILL OF EXCHANGE V. 3.

3. Most part of what might be said as to the proof and defence in actions on bills or notes, necessarily arises out of the general doctrine already explained.

The plaintiff must in all cases prove so much of what is necessary to intitle him to his action, and of what must be stated in his declaration, as is not, from the nature of the thing and the situation of the parties, necessarily admitted.

In an action against the acceptor, it is a general rule that the drawer's hand is admitted; because the acceptor is supposed to be acquainted with the writing of his correspondent; and by his acceptance he holds out to every one who shall afterwards be the holder, that the bill is truly drawn. 1 Ld. Raym. 444: Str. 946: 3 Burr. 1354: See 1 Bl. 390.—In an action against the acceptor therefore, where the acceptance was on view of the bill, whether in writing on the bill, or by parol, it is not necessary to prove the hand-writing of the drawer.—That of the acceptor himself must of course be proved; and that of every person through whom the plaintiff, from the nature of the transaction, must necessarily derive his title.

On a bill payable to bearer, there is no person through whom the holder derives his title; in an action against the acceptor therefore, on such a bill, he has only to prove the hand-writing of the acceptor himself.—But in an action against the acceptor of a bill payable to order, the plaintiff must prove the hand-writing of the very payee who must be the first indorser. See 4 Term Rep. 28.—If the indorsement of the payee be general, the proof of his hand-writing is sufficient; if special, that of his indorsee must be proved; but otherwise that of any other of the indorsors is not requisite, though all the subsequent indorsements be stated in the declaration.—Any subsequent holder may declare as the indorsee of the first indorser; but in this case, in order to render the evidence correspondent to the declaration, all the subsequent names must be struck out, either at or before the trial. See ante III.

But the plaintiff in the case of a transfer by delivery (See ante III,) may be called upon to prove that he gave a good consideration for the bill or note, without the knowledge of its having been stolen, or of any of the names of the blank indorsors having been forged. 1 Burr. 542; Dougl. 633, Peacock v. Rhodes.—And though the acceptance be subsequent to the indorsements, yet the necessity of proving the payee's hand-writing is not; by this means, superseded. Say. 233: 1 Term Rep. 654.

In an action by an indorsee against the drawer, the same rules obtain with respect to proof of the hand-writing of the indorsors as in an action against the acceptor. See Collis v. Ematt, 1 H. Black. Rep. 313.—That of the drawer himself must of course be proved.—It must also be proved that the plaintiff has used due diligence. See ante IV.

From the rule, that in an action against the drawer or acceptor of a bill payable to order, there must be proof of the signature of the payee, first indorser, and of all those to whom an indorsement has been specially made, arose the question which long, and greatly, agitated the commercial world, on the subject of indorsements in the name of fictional payees. A bill payable to the order of a fictional person, and indorsed in a fictional name, is not a novelty among merchants and traders. See Stane

v. Finsland, B. R. Sittings after Easter 1769; alluded to in 3 Term Rep. 176.—But in the years 1786, 7 and 8, two or three houses, connected together in trade, entering into engagements far beyond their capital, and apprehending that the credit of their own names would not be sufficient to procure currency to their bills, adopted, in a very extensive degree, a practice which before had been found convenient on a smaller scale.—So long as the acceptors or drawers could either procure money to pay these bills, or had credit enough with the holder to have them renewed, the subject of these fictitious indorsements never came in question. But, when the parties could no longer support their credit, and a commission of bankrupt became necessary, the other creditors felt it their interest to resist the claims of the holders of these bills; and insisted that they should not be admitted to prove their debts, because they could not comply with the general rule of law requiring proof of the hand-writing of the first indorser. The question came before the Chancellor by petition.—He directed trials at law, and several were had; three against the acceptor in the King's Bench, and one against the drawer in the Common Pleas, though not all expressly by that direction. See Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term Rep. 174: Per v. Lewis, 3 Term Rep. 183: Minet & al. v. Gibson & al. 3 Term Rep. 483: Collis v. Ematt, 1 H. Black. Rep. 313. From the decisions on these cases, the principal of which was affirmed in the House of Lords, and which have settled that such bills are to be considered as payable to bearer, (see ante 2, of this division V.) it follows, that proof of the acceptor's hand only, is sufficient to entitle the holder to recover on the bill; and in the case of Tatlock v. Harris, where a bill was drawn by the defendant and others on the defendant, it was determined that a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration might recover the amount against the acceptor in an action for money paid, or money had and received.

[The principal case above alluded to, as affirmed in the House of Lords, is that of Minet & al. v. Gibson & al. already so often mentioned. It is better known by the name of Gibson and Johnson v. Minet and Pector; and the opinions of the Judges in the House of Lords, are very fully and accurately reported in 1 H. Black. Rep. 569. The effect of the determination, as there stated, is as follows.

If a bill of exchange be drawn in favour of a fictional payee, with the knowledge, as well of the acceptor as the drawer; and the name of such payee be indorsed on it by the drawer, with the knowledge of the acceptor, which fictional indorsement purports to be to the drawer himself or his order; and then the drawer indorses the bill to an innocent indorsee for a valuable consideration, and afterwards the bill is accepted; but it does not appear that there was an intent to defraud any particular person; such innocent indorsee for a valuable consideration may recover against the acceptor, as on a bill payable to bearer. Perhaps also, in such case, the innocent indorsee might recover against the acceptor, as on a bill payable to the order of the drawee; or on a count stating the special circumstances.

Other cases, Maister & al. v. Gibson & al. and Hunter v. Gibson & al. were afterwards brought before the House of Lords, (June 1793) on demurrers to evidence; on which the Judges gave their opinion, that it was not competent competent to the defendants to demand and that on the record, as stated, no judgment could be given.—The whole disclosed a system of bill-negotiation to the amount of a million a year, on fictitious credit, which ended in the bankruptcy of many; but which had at least the good effect of shewing that the obligations of law, are not so easily eluded, as those of honour and conscience.]

In an action by an indorsee against an indorser, it is not necessary to prove either the hand of the drawer or of the acceptor, or of any indorser, before him against whom the action is brought; every indorser being, with respect to subsequent indorses or holders, a new drawer. 1 Ld. Raym. 174: Str. 444: 2 Barr. 675.—Where an action is by one indorser who has paid the money, proof must be given of the payment. 1 Ld. Raym. 743.

In an action by the drawer against the acceptor, where the bill has been paid away and returned, it is necessary to prove the hand-writing of the latter, demand of payment from him, and refusal, the return of the bill and payment by the plaintiff. 10 Mod. 36, 7: 1 Wils. 185. See ante 1, of this Div. V.

In an action on the case by the acceptor against the drawer, the plaintiff must prove the hand-writing of the defendant, and payment of the money by himself; or something equivalent, as his being in prison on execution. 3 Wils. 18.

Where a bill is accepted, or a bill or note is drawn or indorsed by one of two or more partners, on the partnership account, proof of the signature of the partner accepting, drawing, or indorsing, is sufficient to bind all the rest. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 175: see Carvick v. Vickery, Doug. 633.

Where a servant has a general authority to draw, accept, or indorse bills or notes, proof of his signature is sufficient against the master; but his authority must be proved, as that it was a general custom for him to do so, &c. See Comb. 450: 12 Mod. 346.

An action on a bill of exchange, being by an executor, and upon a debt laid to be due to testator, it was held necessary to prove that the acceptance was in the testator's life-time. 12 Mod. 447.

Where the defendant suffers judgment by default, and the plaintiff executes a writ of enquiry, it is sufficient for the latter to produce the note or bill without any proof of the defendant's hand. See 2 Str. 1149: Barnes 233, 4: 2 Black. Rep. 748: 3 Wils. 155; and finally, 3 Term Rep. 301, Green v. Hednes; in which the Court said, that by suffering judgment to go by default, the defendant had admitted the cause of action to the amount of the bill, because that was set out on the record; and the only reason for producing it to the jury on executing the writ of inquiry, was to see whether any part of it had been paid.—And now it seems on such judgment, a writ of inquiry is not necessary; for the Court on application by the plaintiff, will, if no good reason be shewn to the contrary, refer it to the proper officer, to ascertain the damages and costs, and calculate the interest.—Ruled Ann. B. R. Hil. 26 Geo. 3. Bayly 67: Rafleigh v. Salmon, H. Black. Rep. C. P. 252.

4. Besides the different subjects of defence, which may be collected from the whole of the general principles here so fully entered into, the most usual are those which arise either, from the total want of consideration, or from the illegality of the consideration for which the bill or note was given. See this Div. title Consideration.

In general no advantage can be taken of the illegality of the consideration, but as between the persons immediately concerned in the transaction; any subsequent holder of the bill or note, for a fair consideration, cannot be affected by it.—But there are cases, in which it has been determined, that by the construction of certain statutes, even the innocent indorses shall not recover against the acceptor of the bill or drawer of the note.—As on Stat. 9 Ann. c. 14. § 1, which absolutely invalidates notes, bills, &c. given for money won at play. 2 Str. 1255.—So on Stat. 12 Ann. § 2. c. 16. § 1, as to securities on usurious contracts, Long v. Waller, Doug. 736. And reasoning by analogy, on Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 11, against notes given by a bankrupt to procure his certificate. See this Dict. title Bankrupt.

It has however been repeatedly ruled at Nisi prius, that wherever it appears that a bill or note has been indorsed over, after it is due, which is out of the usual course of trade, that circumstance alone throws such a suspicion on it, that the indorsee must take it on the credit of the indorser, and must stand in the situation of the person to whom it was payable. See 3 Term Rep. 80, 83.

VI. See ante III. and the general principles, already exemplified.

If a bank bill payable to A. B. or bearer, be lost, and it is found by a stranger, payment to him would indemnify the Bank; yet A. B. may have trover against the finder, though not against his assignee for valuable consideration, which creates a property. 3 Salk. 71.

If the possessor of a bill by any accident loses it, he must cause intimation to be made by a notary public before witnesses, that the bill is lost or mislaid, requiring that payment be not made of the same to any person without his privy. And by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17, if any inland bill of exchange for five pounds or upwards, shall be lost, the drawer of the bill shall give another bill of the same tenor, security being given to indemnify him, in case the bill so lost be found again.

If a bill lost by the possessor should afterwards come into the possession of any person paying a full and valuable consideration for it, without knowledge of its having been lost, the drawer (and acceptor, if the bill was accepted) must pay it when due to such fair possessor, so that the provision of the statute may in many cases be useless to the loser of the bill.—But against the person who finds the bill, the real owner may maintain an action of trover. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 738.

Stealing of bills of exchange, notes, &c. is felony in the same degree, as if the offender had robbed the owner of so much money, &c. And the forging bills of exchange, or notes for money, indorsements, &c. is felony, by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25: 9 Geo. 2. c. 18. And vide Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 78.

There are also BILLS OF CREDIT between merchants, of which the following is a form.

THIS present writing witnesseth, That I A. B. of London, merchant, do undertake, to and with C. D. of, &c. merchant, his executors and administrators, that if he the said C. D. do deliver, or cause to be delivered unto BILL.

E. F. of, &c. or to his use, any sum or sums of money amounting to the sum of, &c. of lawful British money, and shall take a bill under the hand and seal of the said E. F. confessing and shewing the certainty thereof; that then I, my executors or administrators, having the same bill delivered to me or them, shall and will immediately, upon the receipt of the same, pay, or cause to be paid unto the said C. D. his executors or assigns, all such sums of money as shall be contained in the said bill; at, &c. For which payment in manner and form aforesaid, I bind myself, my executors, administrators and assigns, by these presents. In witness, &c.

BILL OF LADING, A memorandum signed by masters of ships, acknowledging the receipt of the merchants' goods, of which there usually are three parts, one kept by the consignor, one sent to the consignee, and one kept by the captain. See titles Factor, Merchant.

BILL OF RIGHTS, The statute 1 Wm. and Mary, stat. 2. cap. 2, is so called; as declaring the true rights of British subjects. See title Liberty, where this important act is stated at large.

BILL OF SALE, Is a solemn contract under seal, whereby a man passes the right or interest that he hath in goods and chattels; for if a man promises or gives any chattels without valuable consideration, or without delivering possession; this doth not alter the property, because it is nudum pactum, unde non oritur actio; but if a man sells goods by deed under seal duly executed, this alters the property between the parties, though there be no consideration, or no delivery of possession; because a man is elopped to deny his own deed, or affirm any thing contrary to the manifest solemnity of contracting. Yelv. 196: Cro. Jac. 270: 1 Brown. 111: 6 Co. 18.

But what is chiefly to be considered under this head, is the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 5; by which it is enacted, "That all fraudulent conveyances of lands, &c. goods and chattels, to avoid the debt or duty of another, shall (as against the party only, whose debt or duty is so endeavoured to be avoided) be utterly void, except grants made bonâ fide, and on a good (which is construed a valuable) consideration."

A. being indebted to B. in 400*l.* and to C. in 20*l.* C. brings debt against him, and, pending the writ, A. being possessed of goods and chattels to the value of 300*l.* makes a secret conveyance of them all without exception, to B. in satisfaction of his debt; but, notwithstanding, continues in possession of them, and sells some of them, and others of them, being sheep, he sets his mark on: and resolved that it was a fraudulent gift and sale within the aforesaid statute, and shall not prevent C. of his execution for his just debt; for though such sale hath one of the qualifications required by the statute, being made to a creditor for his just debt, and consequently on a valuable consideration; yet it wants the other; for the owner's continuing in possession, is a fixed and undoubted character of a fraudulent conveyance, because the possession is the only *indiciu*m of the property of a chattel, and therefore this sale is not made bonâ fide. 3 Co. 80: Mo. 638: 2 Bull. 226.

As the owner's continuing in possession of goods, after his bill of sale of them, is an undoubted badge of a fraudulent conveyance, because the possession is the only *indiciu*m of the property of a chattel, which is a thing unixed and transitory; so there are other marks and cha-raacters of fraud; as a general conveyance of them all without any exception; for it is hardly to be presumed, that a man will strip himself entirely of all his personal property, not excepting his bedding and wearing apparel, unless there was some secret correspondence and good understanding settled between him and the vendee, for a private occupancy of all, or some part of the goods for his support; also a secret manner of transacting such bill of sale, and unusual clauses in it: as that it is made honestly, truly, and bonâ fide, are marks of fraud and collusion; for such an artful and forced dress and appearance give a suspicion and jealousy of some defect varnished over with it. 3 Co. 81: Mo. 638.

If goods continue in the possession of the vendor after a bill of sale of them, though there is a clause in the bill that he shall account annually with the vendee for them, yet it is a fraud: since, if such colouring were admitted, it would be the easiest thing in the world to avoid the provisions and cautions of the aforesaid act. Mo. 638.

If A. makes a bill of sale of all his goods, in consideration of blood and natural affection, to his son, or one of his relations, it is a void conveyance in respect of creditors; for the considerations of blood, &c. which are made the motives of this gift, are esteemed in their nature inferior to valuable considerations, which are necessarily required in such sales, by 13 Eliz. cap. 5.

If A. makes a bill of sale to B. a creditor, and afterwards to C. another creditor, and delivers possession at the time of sale to neither; afterwards C. gets possession of them, and B. takes them out of his possession, C. cannot maintain trespass, because though the first bill of sale is fraudulent against creditors, and so is the second, yet they both bind A. As therefore B.'s is the elder title, the naked possession of C. ought not to prevail against it.

See further on this subject title Fraud.—See also title Bankrupt II.

BILL OF STORE, A kind of licence granted at the Custom-house to merchants to carry such stores and provisions as are necessary for their voyage, custom-free. A bill of suffervance is a licence granted to a merchant, to suffer him to trade from one English port to another, without paying custom. See title Navigation Acts.

BILLET'S OF GOLD, Fr. billet.] Are wedges or ingots of gold, mentioned in the statute 27 E. 3. c. 27.

BILLET WOOD, Is small wood for fuel, which must be three foot and four inches long, and seven inches and a half in compass, &c. Justices of peace shall inquire by the oaths of six men of the assise of billet, and being under size, it is to be forfeited to the poor. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 14: vide 9 An. c. 15: 10 An. c. 6. See Fuel.

BILLINGSGATE market to be kept every day, and toll is appointed by statute: all persons buying fish in this market may sell the same in any other market by retail; but none but fishmongers shall sell them in shops; if any person shall buy any quantity of fish at Billingsgate for others, or any fishmonger shall ingross the market, they incur a penalty of 20*l.* And fish imported by foreigners shall be forfeited, and the vessel, &c. See 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 24: 1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 18. f. 1. &c. Vide Fish and Fishermen.

BILLUS, A bill, stick or staff, which in former times was the only weapon for servants.—It was long in use for watchmen, and we are told is still carried by those at Litchfield. See Steevens's Shakespeare.

BIOTHANETUS,

BIOCHANETUS, One who deserves to come to an untimely end. Ordericus Vitalis, writing of the death of William Rufus, who was shot by Walter Tyrrel, tells us, that the bishops, considering his wicked life and bad exit, adjudged him ecclesiastica veluti biochanetum absolute indignum. Lib. 10. p. 782.

BIRRETTUM, A thin cap fitted close to the shape of the head: and is also used for the cap or coif of a judge, or serjeant at law. Spelm.

BIRTHS, BURIALS, and MARRIAGES, &c. By statute, a duty was granted on births and burials of persons, from 50*l.* a duke, &c. down to 10*s.* and 2*s.* And the like on marriages; also bachelors, above twenty-five years of age, were to pay 1*s.* yearly. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 6. Exp. as to the duties. See tit. Stamps, Taxes.

BISACUTUS, An iron weapon double edged, so as to cut on both sides. Fleta. lib. 1. c. 33.

BISANTIUM, besantina, or besant, An antient coin first coined by the Western emperors at Bizantium or Constantinople. It was of two sorts, gold and silver; both which were current in England. Chaucer represents the gold besantine to have been equivalent to a duckat; and the silver besantine was computed generally at two shillings. In some old leases of land there have been reserved, by way of rent, unum bisantium, vel duos solidos.

BI-SCOT, At a session of sewers held at Wizenbale in Norfolk, 9 Ed. 3. it was decreed, That if any should not repair his proportion of the banks, ditches and caufeyes by a day assigned, xiii. for every perch unrepaired should be levied upon him, which is called a bilaw: and if he should not, by a second day given him, accomplish the same, then he should pay for every perch 2*s.* which is called bi-scot. Hist. of Imbanking and Draining, f. 254.

BISHOPS and ARCHBISHOPS.—A BISHOP (Episcopus) is the chief of the Clergy in his diocese, and is the archbishop's suffragan or assistant.

AN ARCHBISHOP (Archiepiscopus) is the chief of the clergy in his province, and is that spiritual secular person who hath supreme power under the king in all ecclesiastical causes: and the manner of his creation and consecration, by an archbishop and two other bishops, &c. is regulated by Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. (See post, Bishop.) An archbishop is said to be introned, when a bishop is said to be installed; and there are four things to complete a bishop or archbishop, as well as a parson: first, election, which resembles presentation; the next is confirmation, and this resembles admission; next, consecration, which resembles institution; and the last is installation, resembled to induction. 3 Salk. 72. In ancient times the archbishop was bishop over all England, as Austin was, who is said to be the first archbishop here; but before the Saxon conquest the Britons had only one bishop, and not any archbishop. 1 Roll. Rep. 328: 2 Roll. 440.

But at this day, the ecclesiastical state of England and Wales is divided into two provinces or archbishopricks, to wit, Canterbury and York. Each archbishop hath within his province bishops of several dioceses. The archbishop of Canterbury hath under him within his province, of ancient foundations, Rocheſter, London, Wincheſter, Norwich, Lincoln, Ely, Chicheſter, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath & Wells, Worceſter, Coventry and Litchfield, Hereford, Llandaff, St. David's, Bangor, and St. Aſaph; and four founded by King Henry 8. erected out of the ruins of dissolved monasteries, viz. Glouceſter, Bristol, Peterborough, and Oxford. The archbishop of York hath under him four, viz. the bishop of the county palatine of Cheſter, newly erected by King Henry 8. and annexed by him to the archbishoprick of York; the county palatine of Durham; Carlisle; and the Iſle of Man, annexed to the province of York by King Hen. 8; but a greater number this archbishop anciently had, which time hath taken from him. Co. Lit. 94.

Westminster was one of the new bishopricks created by Hen. 8. out of the revenues of the dissolved monasteries. 2 Burn. E. L. 78.—Thomas Thirlby was the only bishop that ever filled that see. He surrendered the bishoprick to Ed. 6. A. D. 1550, 30th March; and on the same day, it was dissolved and added again to the bishoprick of London. Rym. Fœd. 15. p. 228. Queen Mary afterwards filled the church with Benedictine monks, and Eliz. by authority of parliament, turned it into a collegiate church, subject to a dean.

The archbishop of Canterbury is now stiled metropolitanus & primus totius Angliæ; and the archbishop of York stiled primus & metropolitanus Angliæ. They are called archbishops in respect of the bishops under them; and metropolitans, because they were consecrated at first in the metropolis of the province. 4 Iaſt. 94. Both the archbishops have distinct provinces, wherein they have suffragan bishops of several dioceses, with jurisdiction under them. The archbishop hath also his own diocese, wherein he exercises episcopal jurisdiction, as in his province he exercises archiepiscopal; thus having two concurrent jurisdictions, one as Ordinary, or the bishop himself within his diocese; the other as superintendant, throughout his whole province, of all ecclesiastical matters, to correct and supply the defects of other bishops.

The archbishop is entitled to present by lapse to all the ecclesiastical livings in the disposal of his diocesan bishops, if not filled within six months. (See title Advowson.) And the archbishop has a customary prerogative, when a bishop is consecrated by him, to name a clerk or chaplain of his own, to be provided for by such suffragan bishop; in lieu of which it is now usual for the bishop to make over by deed to the archbishop, his executors and assigns, the next presentation of such dignity or benefice in the bishop's disposal within that see, as the archbishop himself shall choose; which is therefore called his Option, which options are only binding on the bishop himself who grants them, and not on his successors. The prerogative itself, seems to be derived from the legatine power formerly annexed, by the Popes, to the Metropolitan of Canterbury.

The Archbishop of Canterbury hath the privilege to crown all the Kings of England; and to have prelates to be his officers; as for instance; the bishop of London is his provincial dean; the bishop of Wincheſter, his chancellor; the bishop of Lincoln, his vice-chancellor; the bishop of Salisbury, his precentor; the bishop of Worceſter, his chaplain, &c. It is the right of the archbishop to call the bishops and clergy of his province to convocation, upon the king's writ: he hath a jurisdiction in cases of appeal, where there is a supposed default of justice in the ordinary; and hath a standing jurisdiction over his suffragans: he confirms the election of bishops, and afterwards consecrates them, &c. And he may appoint coadjutors to a bishop that is grown infirm. He may confer degrees of all kinds; and censure and excommuni-cate, suspend or depose, for any just cause, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 223. And he hath power to grant dispensations in any case, formerly granted by the see of Rome, not contrary to the law of God: but if the case is new and extraordinary, the king and his council are to be consulted. Stats. 25 H. 8. c. 21: 28 H. 8. c. 16. § 6. This dispensing power is the foundation of the archbishop's granting special licenses, to marry at any place or time; to hold two livings and the like; and in this also is founded the right he exercises of conferring degrees in prejudice of the two Universities. He may retain eight chaplains: and, during the vacancy of any see, he is guardian of the spiritualties. Stats. 21 H. 8. c. 13: 25 H. 8. c. 21: 28 H. 8. c. 16.

The archbishop of Canterbury hath the precedency of all the clergy; next to him the archbishop of York; next to him the bishop of London; next to him the bishop of Durham; next to him the bishop of Winchester; and then all the other bishops of both provinces after the seniority of their consecration; but if any of them be a privy councillor, he shall take place next after the bishop of Durham. Co. Lit. 94: 1 Ought. Crd. Jud. 486.

The first archbishop of York, that we read of, was Paulinus; who, by Pope Gregory's appointment, was made archbishop there, about the year of our Lord 622. Godol. 14.

The Archbishop of York hath the privilege to crown the Queen-consort, and to be her perpetual chaplain.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the first peer of the realm, and hath precedence, not only before all the other clergy, but also (next and immediately after the blood royal) before all the nobility of the realm: and as he hath the precedence of all the nobility, so also of all the great officers of state. God. 13.

The Archbishop of York hath the precedence over all dukes, not being of the blood royal; as also before all the great officers of state, except the Lord Chancellor. God. 14.

A Bishop is elected by the king's congé d'essire, or licence to elect the person named by the king, directed to the dean and chapter; and if they fail to make election in twelve days, they incur the penalty of a præmunire, and the king may nominate whom he pleases by letters-patent. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. This was to avoid the power of the see of Rome. This election or nomination, if it be of a bishop, must be signified by the king's letters-patent to the archbishop of the province; if it be of an archbishop, to the other archbishop and two bishops, or to four bishops; requiring them to confirm, invest and consecrate the person so elected, which they are bound to perform immediately. After which the bishop elect shall sue to the king for his temporalities, shall make oath to the king and none other, and shall take restitution of his secular possessions out of the king's hands only. Archbishops and bishops refusing to confirm such election, incur the penalties of a præmunire. On confirmation, a bishop hath jurisdiction in his diocese; but he hath not a right to his temporalities till consecration. The consecration of bishops, &c. is confirmed by act of parliament.

It is directed in the form of consecrating bishops, that a bishop when consecrated must be full thirty years of age.

It is held a bishop hath three powers; 1st. His power of ordination, which is gained on his consecration, and not before; and thereby he may confer orders, &c. in any place throughout the world. 2. His power of jurisdiction, which is limited and confined to his see. 3. His power of administration and government of the revenues; both which last powers he gains by his consecration; and some are of opinion, that the bishop's jurisdiction, as to ministerial acts, commences on his election. Palm. 473: 4. 5.

The king may not seize into his hands the temporalities of bishops but upon just cause, and not for a contempt, which is only finable; See title Temporalities. Bishops are allowed four years for payment of their first fruits, by stat. 6 An. c. 27. Every bishop may retain four chaplains. Vide Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. f. 16: 3 Edm. c. 1.

A Bishop hath his consistory court, to hear ecclesiastical causes; and is to visit the clergy, &c. He consecrates churches, ordains, admits, and institutes priests; confirms, suspends, excommunicates, grants licences for marriage, makes probate of wills, &c. Co. Lit. 96: 2 Roll. Abr. 230. He hath his archdeacon, dean and chapter, chancellor, and vicar-general, to assist him: may grant leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, of land usually letten, reserving the accustomed yearly rents. Stats. 32 H. 8. c. 28: 1 El. c. 19. f. 5. See this Dict. title Leases.

The chancellor to the bishop is appointed to hold his courts for him, and to assist him in matters of ecclesiastical law; who as well as all other ecclesiastical officers, if lay or married, must be a doctor of the civil law so created in some University. St. 37 H. 8. c. 17.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 35, The Bishop of London, or any bishop by him appointed, may admit to the order of deacon or priest, subjects of countries out of his majesty's dominions, without requiring the oath of obedience.—But no person shall be thereby enabled to exercise such offices within his majesty's dominions.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 84, The Archbishops of Canterbury or York, with such other bishops as they shall call to their assistance, may consecrate subjects of countries out of his majesty's dominions to be bishops, without requiring the usual oaths; pursuing the forms prescribed by the act. But no such bishops or their successors, or persons ordained by them, shall exercise their functions within his majesty's dominions.

The right of trial by the Lords of Parliament, as their Peers, it is said, does not extend to bishops; who though they are Lords of Parliament, and sit there by virtue of their baronies, which they hold jura ecclesiæ, yet are not ennobled in blood, and consequently not peers with the nobility. 3 Inft. 30, 1: see 1 Comm. 401: 4 Comm. 264: and this Dict. title Parliament.

Archbishopricks and Bishopricks may become void by death, deprivation for any very gross and notorious crime, and also by resignation. All resignations must be made to some superior. Therefore a bishop must resign to his metropolitan, but the archbishop can resign to none but the king himself. 1 Comm. 382.

The following are some of the popular distinctions between archbishops and bishops. The archbishops have the stile and title of Grace, and Most Reverend Father in God by Divine Providence. The bishops, those of Lord, and Right Reverend Father in God by Divine permission. Archbishops are enthroned; bishops installed.

Mr. Christian in his notes on 1 Comm. 380, says, that the supposed answer of a bishop on his consecration, "Nolo episcopari," is a vulgar error.

BISSEXTILE, bissextilis.] Leap year, so called because the sixth day before the calends of March is twice reckoned, making an additional day in the month of February; so that the bissextile year hath one day more than the others, and happens every fourth year. This intercalation of a day was first invented by Julius Cæsar, to make the year agree with the course of the sun. And, to prevent all doubt and ambiguity that might arise thereupon, it is enacted by the statute de anno bissextili, 21 H. 3, that the day increasing in the leap-year, and the day next before, shall be accounted but one day. *Brit. 209: Dyer 17. BLACK ACT, or WALTHAM BLACK ACT. The Stat. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. is so called, having been occasioned by some devastations committed near Waltham, in Hampshire, by persons in disguise, or with their faces blacked.—By this act, persons hunting armed and disguised, and killing or stealing deer, or robbing warrens, or stealing fish out of any river, &c. or any persons unlawfully hunting in his majesty's forests, &c. or breaking down the head of any fish-pond, or killing, &c. of cattle, or cutting down trees, or setting fire to house, barn, or wood, or shooting at any person, or sending anonymous letters, or letters signed with fictitious name, demanding money, &c. or rescuing such offenders, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. This act is made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42. And see further, Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37: 27 Geo. 2. c. 15.

See also Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30. against deer-stealers; the milder punishment inflicted by which act has been thought a virtual repeal of the punishment inflicted by the Black Act above recited. Leach's Hawk. P. C. 1. c. 49. § 7. and this Dict. titles Foist, Game, Deer-stealing.

BLACK-BOOK, Is a book lying in the Exchequer. See State Annals 154.

BLACK LEAD. By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 10. Entering mines of black lead, with intent to steal, is made felony; and by the same act offenders committed or transported for entering mines of black lead with intent to steal, escaping, or breaking prison, or returning from transportation, are excluded from clergy.

BLACK MAIL, Fr. maille, a link of mail, or small piece of metal or money.] Signifies in the North of England, in the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, &c. a certain rent of money, corn, or other thing, anciently paid to persons inhabiting upon or near the borders, being men of name and power, allied with certain robbers within the said counties; to be freed and protected from the devastations of those robbers. But by Stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 13. to take any such money or contribution, called black-mail to secure goods from rapine, is made a capital felony, as well as the offences such contribution was meant to guard against.

It is also used for rents reserved in work, grain, or biffer money; which were called reditus nigri in contradistinction to the blanch farms, reditus albi. See tith. Alba Firma and Blanch Fumes.

garter and hath his name from the black rod, on the top whereof sits a lion in gold, which he carrieth in his hand. He is called in the Black Book, fol. 255, Latus virgatus niger, & basiliarius; and in other places virga bajulus. His duty is ad portandum virgam coram domino rege ad festum sancti Georgii infra castrum de Windfore: and he hath the keeping of the chapter-house door, when a chapter of the order of the garter is sitting; and in the time of parliament, he attends on the house of peers. His habit is like to that of the register of the order, and garter king at arms; but this he wears only at the solemn times of the festival of St. George, and on the holding of chapters. The black rod he bears, is instead of a mace, and hath the same authority; and this officer hath anciently been made by letters patent under the great seal, he having great power; for to his custody all peers, called in question for any crime, are first committed.

BLACKWELL-HALL. The public market of Blackwell-hall, London, is to be kept every Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, at certain hours; and the hall-keepers not to admit any buying or selling of woollen cloth at the said hall upon any other days or hours, on penalty of 100 l. Factors selling cloth out of the market, shall forfeit 5 l. &c. Registers of all the cloths bought and sold are to be weekly kept: and buyers of cloth otherwise than for ready money, shall give notes to the sellers for the money payable; and factors are to transmit such notes to the owners in twelve days, or be liable to forfeit double value, &c. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 9.—See also Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 5. § 26: 39 Eliz. c. 20. § 12: 1 Geo. 1. c. 15.

BLADARIUS, A corn-monger, meal-man, or corn-chandler. It is used in our records for such a retailer of corn. Pat. 1 Ed. 3. par. 3. m. 13. See tit. Clothiers.

BLANCH FIRMES, In ancient times the crown-rents were many times reserved in libris albis, or blanch firmes: In which case the buyer was holden de-albais firmam, viz. his hase money or coin, worse than standard, was molten down in the Exchequer, and reduced to the fineness of standard silver; or instead thereof, he paid to the King 12 d. in the pound by way of addition. Lewin's Essay upon Coins, p. 5.

BLANKS, Were a kind of white money coined by Hen. 5. in those parts of France which were then subject to England, the value whereof was 8 d. Stow's Annals, p. 586. These were forbidden to be current in this realm. 2 Lien. 6. c. 9. See tit. Alba Firma.

BLANKS,

BLANKS. In judicial proceedings, certain void spaces sometimes left by mistake. A blank (supposing some-thing material wanting) in a declaration, abates the same. 4 Ed. 4, 14: 20 H. 6, 18. And such a blank, is a good cause of demurrer. Blanks in the imparlance-roll aided after verdict for the plaintiff. Hob. 76; Parker v. Parker.

BLASARIUS, Is a word used to signify an incendiary. Blount.

BLASPHEMY, blasphemia.] Is an injury offered to God, by denying that which is due and belonging to him, or attributing to him what is not agreeable to his nature. Livew. cap. 1. And blasphemies of God, as denying his being, or providence, and contumelious reproaches of Jesus Christ, &c. are offences by the Common Law, punished by fine, imprisonment, pillory, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. And by statute 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 32, if any one shall by writing, speaking, &c. deny any of the Persons in the Trinity, to be God; assert there are more Gods than one, &c. he shall be incapable of any office; and for the second offence, be disabled to sue any action, to be executor, &c. and suffer three years imprisonment. Likewise by Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 21, persons jestingly or prophanely using the name of God, or of Jesus Christ, or of the Holy Ghost, or of the Trinity, in any stage play, &c. incurs a penalty of 10*l.*

BLE, Signifies sight, colour, &c. And blee is taken for corn: As Boughton under the Blee, &c.

BLENCH, BLENCH-HOLDING. See tit. Alba Firma.

BLLENHEIM. See Marlborough Duke of.

BLETA. Fr. bleche.] Peat or combustible earth dug up and dried for burning. Rot. Parl. 35 Ed. 1.

BLINKS, Boughs broken down from trees, and thrown in a way where deer are likely to pass.

BLISSOM, Corruptly called bloffom, is when a ram goes to the ewe, from the Teutonick, Blats, the bowels.

BLOATED FISH OR HERRING, Are those which are half dried. See tit. Fishery.

BLODEUS, Sax. blad.] Deep red colour; from whence comes bloat and bloated, viz. sanguine and high coloured, which in Kent is called a blousing colour; and a blouse is there a red-faced wench. The prior of Burcester, A. D. 1425, gave his liveries of this colour. Paroch. Antiq. 376.

BLOOD, sanguis.] Is regarded in descents of lands; for a person is to be the next and most worthy of blood to inherit his ancestor's estate. Co. Lit. 13: See Jenk. Cent. 203: See tit. Descent, Heir.

BLOODWIT, or bloudwite, compounded of the Sax. blad, i. e. sanguis; and wyte, old English, miseriordia.] Is often used in ancient charters of liberties for an amercement for bloodshed. Skene writes it bloudwite; and says wite in English is injuria; and that bloudwite is an amercement or unlaw (as the Scotch call it) for wrong or injury, as bloodshed is: for he that hath bloudwite granted him, hath free liberty to take all amercements of courts for effusion of blood. Fleta saith, Quod significat quietantium misericordiae pro effusione sanguinis. Lib. 1. cap. 47. And according to some writers, blodwite was a customary fine paid as a composition and amercement for shedding or drawing of blood; for which the place was answerable, if the party was not discovered; and therefore a privilege or exemption from this fine or penalty, was granted by the King, or supreme Lord, as a special favour. So king Henry II. granted to all tenants within the honour of Willingford, Ut quieti sint de Hildagio, & blodewite, &c. — Paroch. Antiq. 114.

BLOODY-HAND, Is one of the four kinds of circumstances by which an offender is supposed to have killed deer in the king's forest; and it is where a trespasser is apprehended in the forest, with his hands or other parts bloody, though he be not found chasing or hunting of the deer. Manwood. In Scotland, in such like crimes, they say taken in the fact, or with the red hand. See Backberind.

BLUBBER. Whale oil, before it is thoroughly boiled and brought to perfection. It is mentioned Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18.

BOCK-HORD, or book-board, librorum borreum.] A place where books, evidences, or writings are kept.

BOCKLAND, Sax. quasi bookland.] A possession or inheritance held by evidence in writing. See LL. Al-luredi, cap. 36. Bockland signifies deed land or charterland; and it commonly carried with it the absolute property of the land; wherefore it was preserved in writing, and possessed by the Thanes or nobler sort, as Prædium nobile, liberum & immune à servitiis vulgaribus & servilibus, and was the same as allodium, descendible unto all the sons, according to the common course of Nations and of Nature, and therefore called gavelkind; devisable only by will, and thereupon termed Terræ Testamentales. Spelm. of Feuds. This was one of the titles which the English Saxons had to their lands, and was always in writing: there was but one more, and that was Folkland, i. e. Terra Popularis, which passed from one to another without any writing. See Squire on the Anglo-Saxon Government, and this Dist. tit. Tenure.

BOIA, Chains or fetters, properly what we call bernicles. Hist. Elien. apud Whartoni Angl. Sax. part. 1. p. 618.

BOIS, Fr.] Wood, and sub-bois, underwood. See Boscus.

BOLHAGIUM, or boldagium, a little house or cottage. Blount.

BOLT, A bolt of silk or stuff, seems to have been a long narrow piece: in the accounts of the priory of Burcester. It is mentioned, Paroch. Antiq. p. 574.

BOLTING, A term of art used in our Inns of Court, whereby is intended a private arguing of cases. The manner of it at Gray's Inn is thus: An ancient and two barristers sit as judges, three students bring each a case, out of which the judges chuse one to be argued, which done, the students first argue it, and after them the barristers. It is inferior to mooting, and may be derived from the Sax. bolt, a house, because done privately in the house for instruction. In Lincoln's Inn, Mondays and Wednesdays are the bolting-days, in vacation time; and Tuesdays and Thursdays the moot days.

BONA FIDE. That we say is done bonâ fide, which is done really, with a good faith, without any fraud or deceit.

BONA GESTURA, Good abearing, or good behaviour. See Good Behaviour.

BONAIGHT, or bonaghty, Was an exaction in Ireland, imposed on the people at the will of the lord, for relief of the knights called bonaghty, who served in the wars. Antiq. Hibern. p. 60.

BONA NOTABILIA. See title Executor. V. 3.

BOND I.

BONA PATRIA, An assise of country-men or good neighbours: It is sometimes called assisa bone patrie; when twelve or more men are chosen out of any part of the county to pass upon an assise; otherwise called juratores, because they are to swear judicially in the presence of the party, &c. according to the practice of Scotland. Skene. See Assisors.

BONA PERITURA, Goods that are perishable. The Stat. Westm. 1, 3 E. 1. cap. 4, as to wrecks of the sea, ordains, that if the goods within the ship be bona peritura, such things as will not endure for a year and a day, the sheriff shall sell them, and deliver the money received to answer it. See this Dict. tit. Wreck.

BONCHA, A bunch, from the old Lat. bonna or bunna, a rising bank, for the bounds of fields: and hence bonum is used in Norfolk, for swelling or rising up in a bunch or tumour, &c.

BOND, A Bond of Obligation, is a deed whereby the obligor, or person, bound obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another (the obligee) at a day appointed.

- I. General Rules as to the Nature, and Form of this Security.
- II. Who may be obligors, and Obligees.
- III. The Ceremonies necessary to constitute a Bond or Obligation.
- IV. Of the Condition; and what shall be a Performance or Breach thereof.
- V. Of the Discharge and Satisfaction of Bonds; 1, by the Act of the Party; or 2, by the Act of Law.
- VI. Of Actions and Pleadings, on Bonds.

I. If the bond be without a condition, it is called a single one, simplex obligatio; but there is generally a condition added, that if the obligor does some particular act, the obligation shall be void, or else shall remain in full force, as payment of rent, performance of covenants in a deed, or repayment of a principal sum of money borrowed of the obligee, with interest; which principal sum is usually one half of the penal sum specified on the bond. In case this condition is not performed, the bond becomes forfeited, or absolute at law, and charges the obligor while living, and after his death the obligation descends on his heir, who (on defect of personal assets) is bound to discharge it, provided he has real assets by descent as a recompence. So that it may be called, though not a direct, yet a collateral charge upon the lands.

The condition may be either in the same deed, or in another, and sometimes it is included within, and sometimes indorsed upon the obligation: but it is commonly at the foot of the obligation. Bro. Obl. 67. A memorandum on the back of a bond may restrain the same by way of exception. Moor 67.

This security is also called a specialty; the debt being therein particularly specified in writing, and the party's seal; acknowledging the debt or duty, and confirming the contract; rendering it a security of a higher nature than those entered into without the solemnity of a seal.

As to the assignment of bonds, See tit. Assignment.

If the condition of a bond be impossible at the time of making it, or be to do a thing contrary to some rule of law that is merely positive; or if it be uncertain or insensible, the condition alone is void, and the bond shall stand single, and unconditional; for it is the folly of the obligor to enter into such an obligation, from which he can never be released. If it be to do a thing that is malum in se, the obligation itself is void; for the whole is an unlawful contract, and the obligee shall take no advantage from such a transaction. And if the condition be possible at the time of making it, and afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God, the act of law, or the act of the obligee himself, there the penalty of the obligation is saved; for no prudence or foresight of the obligor could guard against such a contingency. Co Litt 206. See post, IV; and tit. Condition.

On the forfeiture of a bond, or its becoming single, the whole penalty was formerly recoverable at law, but here the courts of equity interposed, and would not permit a man to take more than in conscience he ought, viz. his principal, interest, and expences, in case the forfeiture accrued by non-payment of money borrowed, the damages sustained, upon non-performance of covenants; and the like. And this practice having gained some footing in the courts of law, (See 2 Keb. 553: Salk. 596, 7. 6 Mod. 11, 60, 101:) the Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, at length enacted, in the same spirit of equity, that in case of a bond conditioned for the payment of money, the payment or tender of the principal sum due, with interest and costs, even though the bond be forfeited, and suit commenced thereon, shall be a full satisfaction and discharge.

And this rule of compelling the party to do equity who seeks equity, seems to be the reason why an obligee shall have interest after he has entered up judgment; for though in strictness it may be accounted his own fault why he did not take out execution, and therefore not intitled to interest; yet, as by the judgment he is intitled to the penalty, it does not seem reasonable that he should be deprived of it, but upon paying him the principal and interest, which incurred as well before as after the entering up of the judgment. Abr. Eq. 92, 288.

The Court of Chancery will not generally carry the debt beyond the penalty of a bond. Yet where a plaintiff came to be relieved against such penalty, though it was decreed, it was on the payment of the principal money, interest and costs; and notwithstanding they exceeded the penalty, this was affirmed. 1 Vern. 350: 1 Eq. Ab. 92: 16 Vin. tit. Penalty. 3 Comm. 435.—And where the condition of a bond is to perform a collateral act, damages may be recovered beyond the penalty, and the court of K. B. will not stay the proceedings on payment of the money into court. 2 Term Rep 382. See White v. Sealy, Doug. 49, Semb. contra; but the authority of which is much shaken by the case in 2 Term Rep. 388, where Buller, J. remarked, that there were several cases where the judgment had been carried beyond the penalty. In Elliot v. Davis (Bunb 23.) interest on a bond was decreed (in Scac.) to be paid, though it exceeded the penalty. See also Collins v. Collins, the case of an annuity. Burr. 820: Holdip v. Orway, 2 Saund. 106: Dewall v. Price, Show. P. C. 15.

BOND II.

FORM of a BOND or OBLIGATION, with Condition for the Payment of Money.

KNOW all men by these presents, That I David Edwards, of Lincoln's Inn, in the county of Middlesex, esquire, am held and firmly bound to Abraham Barker, of Dale Hall, in the county of Norfolk, esquire, in the penal sum of ten thousand pounds, of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said Abraham Barker, or his certain attorney, executors, administrators or assigns; for which payment well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents, sealed with my seal. Dated the fourth day of September, in the twenty first year of the reign of our sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king defender of the Faith and so forth, and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ———.

The Condition of this obligation is such, that if the above bounden David Edwards, his heirs, executors or administrators, do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid unto the above-named Abraham Barker, his executors, administrators or assigns, the full sum of five thousand pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, with lawful interest for the same, on the fourth day of March next ensuing the date of the above written obligation, then this obligation shall be void, and of none effect, or else shall be and remain in full force and virtue.

Sealed and delivered being first duly stamped in the

David Edwards (L.S.)

For irregular forms of bonds or obligations, See 1 Leon. 25: 3 Leon. 299: Cro. Jac. 208, 607: Bro. tit. Obligation, &c. from whence, and other authorities, which the regularity of modern practice has rendered uninteresting, it appears that the courts always inclined to support the justice of the plaintiff's case, without much regard to mere errors in form, or arising from accident.

II. All persons who are enabled to contract, and whom the law supposes to have sufficient freedom and understanding for that purpose, may bind themselves in bonds and obligations. 5 Co. 119: 4 Co. 124: 1 Rol. Abr. 340.

But if a person is illegally restrained of his liberty, by being confined in a common gaol or elsewhere, and, during such restraint, enters into a bond to the person who causes the restraint, the same may be avoided for duress of imprisonment Co. Lit. 253: 2 Inst. 482. vid. tit. Duress.

So in respect of that power and authority which a husband has over his wife, the bond of a feme covert is ipso facto void, and shall neither bind her nor her husband. See tit. Baron and Feme.

So though an infant shall be liable for his necessities, such as meat, drink, cloaths, physic, schooling, &c. yet if he bind himself in an obligation, with a penalty for payment of any of those, the obligation is void. Duff. and Stud. 113: Co. Lit. 172: Cro. Jac. 494, 566: 1 Sid. 112: 1 Salk. 279: Cro. Eliz. 920. See tit. Infants.

BOND II.

Also though a person non compos mentis shall not be allowed to avoid his bond, by reason of insanity and distraction, yet may a privy in blood, as the heir, and privies in representation, as the executor and administrator, avoid such bonds; also if a lunatick after office found, enters into a bond, it is merely void. 4 Co. 124, B. v. Wiley's case. But see 2 Stra. 1104, that lunacy may be given in evidence on the general issue. See tit. Lunatics.

But if an infant, feme covert, &c. who are disabled by law to contract, and to bind themselves in bonds, enter, together with a stranger, who is under none of these disabilities, into an obligation, it shall bind the stranger, though it be void as to the infant, &c. 1 Rol. Rep. 41.

If a servant makes a bill in form, "Memoandum, that I have received of A. B. to the use of my master C. D. the sum of 40*l.* to be paid at Michaelmas following," and thereto set his seal, this is a good obligation to bind himself; for though, in the beginning of the deed, the receipt is said to be to the use of his master, yet the repayment is general, and must necessarily bind him who sealed; and the rather, because otherwise the obligee would lose his debt, he having no remedy against the master. Filv 137, Talbot v. Gorbolt.

Infants, idiots, as also feme coverts may be obligees; and here the husband is supposed to assent, being for his advantage; but if he disagrees, the obligation hath lost its force; so that after the obligor may plead non est factum; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the bond is good, for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to his advantage. 5 Co. 119 b: Co. Lit. 3 a.— See tit. Baron and Feme.

An alien may be an obligee, for since he is allowed to trade and traffick with us, it is but reasonable to give him all that security which is necessary in his contracts, and which will the better enable him to carry on his commerce and dealings amongst us Co. Lit. 129 b: Moor 431: Cro. Eliz. 142, 683: Cro. Car. 9. 1 Salk. 46: 7 Mod. 15: See tit. Alien.

Sole Corporations, such as bishops, prebends, parsons, vicars, &c. cannot be obligees, and therefore a bond made to any of these, shall enure to them in their natural capacities; for no sole body politick can take a chattel in succession, unless it be by custom; but a corporation aggregate may take any chattel, as bonds, leases, &c. in its political capacity, which shall go in succession, because it is always in being. Cro. Eliz. 464: Dyer 48 a: Co. Lit. 9 a. 46 a: Mob. 64. 1 Rol. Abr. 515.

If a drunken man gives his bond it binds him; and a bond without consideration is obligatory, and no relief shall be had against it, for it is voluntary, and as a gift. Jenk. Cent. 109. But see Cole v. Robins, Hil. 2 Ann. per Holt, referred to in Bull. N. P. 172, that on the general issue, defendant may give in evidence that they made him sign the bond when he was so drunk he knew not what he did. A person enters voluntarily into a bond, though there was not any consideration for it, if there be no fraud used in obtaining the same, the bond shall not be relieved against in equity: but a voluntary bond may not be paid in a course of administration, so as to take place of real debts, even by simple contract; yet it shall be paid before legacies. 1 Chan. Caf. 157. An heir is not bound, unless he be named expressly in the bond; though the executors and administrators are. Dy. 13.

BOND III.

It is clearly agreed that two or more may bind themselves jointly in an obligation, or they may bind themselves jointly and severally; in which last case, the obligee may sue them jointly, or he may sue any one of them at his election; but if they are jointly and not severally bound, the obligee must sue them jointly; also, in such case, if one of them dies, his executor is totally discharged, and the survivor and survivors only chargeable. 2 Rol. Abr. 148: Dyer 19, 310: 5 Co. 19: Dul. 85. pl. 42: 1 Salk. 393: Carth. 61: 1 Lutw. 696.

If three enter into an obligation, and bind themselves in the words following, Obligamus nos & utrumque nostrum per se pro toto & in solido, these make the obligation joint and several. Dyer 19 b. pl. 114.

III. It is said, that there are only three things essentially necessary to the making a good obligation, viz. writing in paper or parchment, sealing and delivery; but it hath been adjudged not to be necessary, that the obligor should sign or subscribe his name; and that therefore if in the obligation the obligor be named Eslen, and he signs his name Eslewin, that this variation is not material; because subscribing is no essential part of the deed, sealing being sufficient. 2 Co. 5 a: Godard's case. Noy 21, 85: Moor 28: Stile 97: 2 Salk. 462: 5 Mod. 281.

And though the seal be necessary, and the usual way of declaring on a bond is, that the defendant by his bond or writing obligatory sealed with his seal, acknowledged, &c. yet if the word sealed be wanting, it is cured by verdict and pleading over, for all necessary circumstances shall be intended; and if it were not sealed, it could not be his deed or obligation. Dyer 19 a: Cro. Eliz. 571, 737: Cro. Jac. 420: 2 Co. 5: 1 Vent. 70: 3 Lev. 348: 1 Salk. 141: 6 Mod. 306.

Also though sealing and delivery be essential in an obligation, yet there is no occasion in the bond to mention that it was sealed and delivered; because as Lord Coke says, these are things which are done afterwards. 2 Co. 5 a.

The name of the obligor subscribed, 'tis said, is sufficient, though there is a blank for his christian name in the bond. Cro. Jac. 261: Vide Cro. Jac. 558: 1 Mod. 107. In these cases, though there be a verdict, there shall not be judgment. Where an obligor's name is omitted to be inserted in the bond, and yet he signs and seals it; the court of Chancery may make good such an accident; and in case a person takes away a bond fraudulently, and cancels it, the obligee shall have as much benefit thereby, as if not cancelled. 3 Chan. Rep. 99, 184.

An obligation is good though it wants a date, or hath a false or impossible date; for the date, as hath been observed, is not of the substance of the deed; but herein we must take notice, that the day of the delivery of a deed or obligation is the day of the date, though there is no day set forth. 2 Co. 5, Godard's case: Noy 21, 85, 86: Hob. 249: Stile 97: Cro. Jac. 136, 264: Yelv. 193: 1 Salk. 76.

If a man declare on a bond, bearing date such a day, but does not say when delivered, this is good: for every deed is supposed to be delivered and made on the day it bears date; and if the plaintiff declare on a date, he cannot afterwards reply, that it was first delivered; at another day, for this would be a departure. Cro. Eliz.

Vol. I.

BOND IV.

773: 2 Lev. 348: 1 Salk. 141: Vide 1 Brownl. 104: 1 Lev. 196.

A plaintiff may suggest a date in a bond, where there is none, or it is impossible, &c. where the parties and sum are sufficiently expressed. 5 Mod. 282. A bond dated on the same day on which a release is made of all things up to the day of the date, is not thereby discharged. 2 Rol. Rep. 255.

If the bond was delivered before the date, on issue, non est factum, joined on such a deed, the jury are not estopped to find the truth, viz. that it was delivered before the date, and it is a good deed from the delivery. 2 Co. 4, 6: 3 Keb. 332.

A person shall not be charged by a bond, though signed and sealed, without delivery, or words, or other thing, amounting to a delivery. 1 Leon. 140: But a bond or deed may be delivered by words, without any act of delivery; as where the obligor says to the obligee, go and take the said writing, or take it as my deed, &c. So an actual delivery, without speaking any word, is sufficient: otherwise, a man that is mute could not deliver a deed. Co. Lit. 36 a: Cro. Eliz. 835: Leon. 193: Cro. Eliz. 122.

Interlineation in a bond in a place not material, will not make the bond void; but if it be altered in a part material, it shall be void. 1 Nelf. Abr. 391. And a bond may be void by rasure, &c. As where the date, &c. is rased after delivery; which goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23. If the words in a bond at the end of the condition, That then this obligation to be void, are omitted, the condition will be void; but not the obligation.

IV. The condition of a bond was, that A. L. should pay such a sum upon the 25th of December, or appear in Hilary term after, in the court of B. R. He died after the 25th of December, and before Hilary term, and had not paid any thing: in this case the condition was not broken for non-payment, and the other part is become impossible by the act of God. 1 Mod. Rep. 265. And when a condition is doubtful, it is always taken most favourably for the obligor, and against the obligee; but so as a reasonable construction be made as near as can be according to the intention of the parties. Dyer 51.

If no time is limited in a bond for payment of the money, it is due presently and payable on demand. 1 Brownl. 53. But the judges have sometimes appointed a convenient time for payment, having regard to the distance of place, and the time wherein the thing may be performed. And if a condition be made impossible in respect to time, as to make payment of money on the 30th of February, &c. it shall be paid presently; Jones 140. See 1 Leon 101.

A bond made to enfeoff two persons; if one dies before the time is past, wherein it should be done, the obligor must enfeoff the survivor of them, or the condition will be broken; and if it be that B. and others shall enjoy land, and the obligor and B. the obligee do disturb the rest; by this the condition is broken. 4 Hen. 7. 1: Co. Lit. 384. Where one is bound to do an act to the obligee himself, the doing it to a stranger by appointment of the obligee, will not be a performance of the condition. 2 Elfst. 149. But in such case equity would relieve, and probably a judge, on such action coming before him, would order plaintiff to be non-suited. If the act be to be done at a certain place, where the obligor is to go, to Rome, &c. and he is to do the sole act without limitation of time, he hath term during life to perform the same: if the concurrence of the obligor and obligee is requisite, it may be hastened by the request of the obligee. 6 Rep. 30: 1 Rel. Abr. 437. Where no place is mentioned for performance of a condition, the obligor is obliged to find out the person of the obligee, if he be in England, and tender the money, otherwise the bond will be forfeited: but when a place is appointed, he need seek no further. Co. Lit. 210: Lit. 340. And if, where no place is limited for payment of money due on a bond, the obligor, at or after the day of payment, meets with the obligee, and tenders him the money, but he goes away to prevent it, the obligor shall be excused. 8 E. 4.

The obligor, or his servant, &c. may tender the money to save the forfeiture of the bond, and it shall be a good performance of the condition, if made to the obligee, though refused by him; yet if the obligor be afterwards sued, he must plead that he is still ready to pay it, and tender the money in court. Co. Lit. 208.

In the performance of the condition of an obligation, the intention of the parties is chiefly to be regarded; and therefore a performance in substance is sufficient, though it differ in words or some material circumstance; as if one be bound to deliver the testament of the testator, if he plead that he had delivered letters testamentary, it is sufficient. Bro. Condition, 158: 17 E. 4, 3: 1 Rel. Abr. 426.

If the condition of an obligation be to procure a lawful discharge, this must be by a release, or some discharge that is pleadable, and not by acquittance, which is but evidence. 1 Keb. 739.

If the party, who is bound to perform the condition disables himself, this is a breach; as where the condition is, that the feoffee shall re infeoff, or make a gift in tail, &c. to the feoffor, and the feoffee, before he performs it, make a feoffment or gift in tail, or lease for life or years in presenti or future to another person, or marry or grant a rent-charge, or be bound in a statute, or recognizance, or become professed; in all those cases the condition is broken; for the feoffee has either disabled himself to make any estate, or to make it in the same plight or freedom in which he received it; and being once disabled, he is ever disabled, though his wife should die, or the rent, &c. should be discharged, or he should be de-wigged, &c. before the time of the reconveyance. Co. Lit. 221, 222: Poph. 110: 1 Co. 25 a: 1 Rel. Abr. 447: 5 Co. 21 a.

Where the condition is in the conjunctive, regularly both parts must be performed; yet, to supply the intention of the parties, it is held, that if a condition in the conjunctive be not possible to be performed, it shall be taken in the disjunctive; as if the condition be, that he and his executors shall do such a thing, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because he cannot have an executor in his life-time; so if the condition be, that he and his assigns shall sell certain goods, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because both cannot do it. 1 Rel. Abr. 444: Overen 52: 1 Leon. 74: Gouldj. 71.

the special matter. 2 Wilson 341, &c. Condition of a bond to indemnify a person from any legal prosecution is against law, and void. 1 Lutw. 667. And if a sheriff takes a bond as a reward for doing of a thing, it is void. 3 Salk. 75.

V. 1. Where a lesser sum is paid before it is due, and the payment is accepted, it shall be good in satisfaction of a greater sum; but after the money is due, then a lesser sum, though accepted, shall not be a satisfaction for a greater sum. Thus in debt upon bond conditioned to pay 8*l.* defendant pleaded payment of 5*l.* before the day mentioned in the condition, which the obligee accepted in satisfaction of the bond, and upon demurrer this was adjudged a good plea. Moor 677: Vide 3 Bulst. 301.—Payment after the day, of a less sum, is not good, as the bond is forfeited, at common law; and there is not any statute to relieve.

Debt upon bond of 16*l.* conditioned to pay 8*l.* 10*s.* on a certain day; the defendant pleaded, that, before that day, he, at the request of the plaintiff, paid to him 5*l.* which he accepted in satisfaction of the debt; and upon demurrer, the plaintiff had judgment, because the defendant had pleaded the payment of the 5*l.* generally, without alledging, that it was in satisfaction of the debt. It is true, he sets forth, that it was accepted in satisfaction of the debt, but it ought likewise to be paid in satisfaction. 5 Rep. 117. Debt upon bond, conditioned, that in consideration the plaintiff had paid 12*l.* to the defendant; he became bound to pay the plaintiff 12*l.* if he lived one month after the date of that bond; and if not paid at that time, then to pay him 14*l.* if he lived six months after the date of the bond; the defendant pleaded, that after the six months he paid the plaintiff 8*l.* and then gave him another bond in the penalty of 20*l.* conditioned to pay him 10*l.* on a certain day, in full satisfaction of the other bond, and that the plaintiff did accordingly accept the said bond; upon a demurrer to this plea it was held ill; for admitting that one bond might be given in satisfaction of another, yet it cannot be after the other is forfeited, as it was in this case; because after the forfeiture, the penalty is vested in the obligee, and a less sum cannot be a satisfaction for a greater. 1 Lut. 464.

It hath been adjudged, that the acceptance of one bond cannot be pleaded in satisfaction of another bond. Cio. Car. 85: Moore 872: Cro. Eliz. 716, 727: 2 Cro. 579. Thus in debt on a bond of 100*l.* conditioned for the payment of 52*l.* 10*s.* on a certain day, the defendant pleaded that at the day, &c. he and his son gave a new bond of 100*l.* conditioned for the payment of 52*l.* 10*s.* at another day then to come, which the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction of the old bond; and upon demurrer it was adjudged for the plaintiff, because the acceptance of a new bond to pay money at another day, could not be a present satisfaction for the money due on the day when it was to be paid on the old bond. Hob. 68. But it is otherwise where the second bond is not given by the obligor; as in debt upon bond against the defendant as heir, &c. he pleaded that his ancestor, the obligor, died intestate and that W. R. administered, who gave the plaintiff another bond in satisfaction of the former: there was a verdict for the defendant: and it being moved in arrest of judgment, this distinction was made; made; that if the obligor, who gave the first bond, had likewise given the second, it would not have discharged the first; but in this case the second bond was not given by him who gave the first, but by his administrator, which had mended the security, because he may be chargeable de bonis propriis; and for that reason the second bond was held to be a discharge of the first. 1 Mod. 225

V. 2. A bond on which neither principal nor interest has been demanded for 20 years, will be presumed in equity to be satisfied, and be decreed to be cancelled; and a perpetual injunction granted to stay proceedings thereon. 1 Ch. Rep. 79: Pinch. Rep. 78: See Mod. Ca. 22.—But satisfaction may be presumed within a less period, if any evidence be given in aid of the presumption; as if an account between the parties has been settled in the intermediate time, without any notice having been taken of such a demand.—Yet length of time is no legal bar, it is only a ground for the jury to presume satisfaction. 1 Term Rep. 270.

If several obligors are bound jointly and severally, and the obligee make one of them his executor, it is a release of the debt, and the executor cannot sue the other obligor. 8 Co. 136: 1 Salk. 300. And vide 1 Jon. 345. But though it be a release in law, in regard it is the proper act of the obligee, yet the debt by this is not absolutely discharged, but it remains assets in his hands, to pay both debts and legacies. Cho. Car. 373: Yelv. 160. See tit. Executor. IV. 8.

If a feme sole obligee take one of the obligors to husband, this is said to be a release in law of the debt, being her own act. 8 Co. 136 a: March 128.

If one obligor makes the executor of the obligee his executor, and leaves assets, the debt is deemed satisfied, for he has power, by way of retainer, to satisfy the debt; and neither he nor the administrator de bonis non, &c. of the obligee can ever sue the surviving obligor. Hob. 10.

But if two are bound jointly and severally to A. and the executor of one of them makes the obligee his executor, yet the obligee may sue the other obligor. 2 Lev. 73. See tit. Executor. IV. 8.

If two are jointly and severally bound in an obligation, and the obligee release to one of them, both are discharged. Co. Lit. 232 a.

Three were bound jointly and severally in an obligation, and an action was brought against one of them, who pleaded, that the seal of one of the others was torn off, and the obligation cancelled, and therefore void against all. Upon demurrer it was adjudged, that the obligation, by the tearing off the seal of one of the obligors, became void against all, notwithstanding the obligors were severally bound. 2 Lev. 220: 2 Show. 289. Sed qu.

If the condition of a bond be, that a clerk shall faithfully serve, and account for all money, &c. to the obligee and his executors; this does not make the obligor liable for money received by the clerk in the service of the executors of the obligee, who continue the business, and retain the clerk in the same employment, with the addition of other business, and an increase of salary. 1 Term Rep. 287.—But such a bond is not discharged by the obligees' taking another partner into their house, it is only a security to the house of the obligees. Ib. 291. n.

BOND VI.

VI. In a bond where several are bound severally, the obligee is at his election to sue all the obligors together, or all of them apart, and have several judgments and executions; but he shall have satisfaction but once, for if it be of one only, that shall discharge the rest. Dyer 19, 310. Where two or more are bound in a joint bond, and only one is sued, he must plead in abatement, that two more sealed the bond, &c. and aver that they are living, and so pray judgment de billa, &c. And not demur to the declaration. Sid. 420.

If action be brought upon a bond against two joint and several obligors jointly, and both are taken by capias, here the death or escape of one, shall not release the other; but the same kind of execution must be taken forth against them: it is otherwise when they are sued severally. Hob. 59.

Also, if two or more be jointly bound, though regularly one of them alone cannot be sued, yet if process be taken out against all, and one of them only appears, but the others stand out to an outlawry, he who appeared shall be charged with the whole debt. 9 Co. 119.

If a bond is made to three, to pay money to one of them, they must all join in the action, because they are but as one obligee. Yelv. 177.

So if an obligation be made to three, and two bring their action, they ought to shew the third is dead. 1 Sid. 238, 420: 1 Vent. 34.

Though there be several obligees, yet a person cannot be bound to several persons severally; and therefore an obligation of 200 l. to two, to pay the one 100 l. to the one, and the other to the other, is a void condition. Dyer 350 a. pl. 20. Hob. 172: 2 Brownl. 207: Yelv. 177.

If A. bind himself in a sum to B. to pay to C. who is a stranger, a payment to C. is a payment to B. and in an action upon it, the count must be upon a bond payable to B. 1 Sid. 295: 2 Keb. 81.

In debt the declaration was, that the defendant became bound in a bond of —, for the payment of — to him, his attorney or assigns, and on oyer of the bond it appeared, that it was to pay to the plaintiff's attorney or assigns, without mention of himself; and on demurrer for this variance 'twas said that the declaration must not be according to the letter of the obligation, but according to the operation of the law thereupon. 6 Mod. 228, Robert v. Hannage.

So if A. makes a bond to B. to pay to such person as he shall appoint; if B. does appoint one, payment to him is a payment to B. and if B. appoint none, it shall be paid to B. himself. 6 Mod. 228.

If A. by his bill obligatory, acknowledges himself to be indebted to B. in the sum of 10 l. to be paid at a day to come, and binds himself and his heirs in the same bill in 20 l. but does not mention to whom he is bound, yet the obligation is good, and he shall be intended to be bound to B. to whom he acknowledged before the 10 l. to be due. 2 Roll. Abr. 148. Franklin v. Turner.

If an infant seal a bond, and be sued thereon, he is not to plead non est factum, but must avoid the bond by special pleading; for this bond is only voidable, and not in itself void. 5 Rep. 119. But if a bond be made by a feme covert, she may plead her coverture, and conclude non est factum, &c. her bond being void. 10 Rep. 119.

Or plead non est factum, and give coverture in evidence. If a bond depends upon some other deed, and the deed becomes void, the bond is also void.

As to the pleading of performance, the defendant must set forth in what manner he hath performed it. Thus, In debt on a bond, with condition for performance of several things, the defendant pleads that the condition of the said deed was never broken by him, and held an ill plea: because, for saving the bond, it is necessary for the defendant to shew how he hath performed the condition; and this sort of pleading was never admitted. 2 Vent. 156.

So if he had pleaded that he performed every thing, it had been ill; for the particulars being expressed in the condition, he ought to plead to each particularly; but if the condition were for performance of covenants in an indenture, performance were generally a good plea. 1 Lev. 302. This must be understood where the covenants are set forth and appear to be all in the affirmative. For if some are in the affirmative, some in the negative, or any in the disjunctive, the defendant should plead specially.

In debt on an obligation for payment of money, &c. the defendant pleads, that at the time and place, he was ready to pay the money, but that no-body was there to receive it; and held ill on a general demurrer, for want of stating a tender, for the tender only is traversable. 3 Lev. 104.

In debt on a bond with condition, the defendant pleads a collateral plea, which is insufficient; the plaintiff demurs, and hath judgment, without assigning a breach; for the defendant, by pleading a defective plea, by which he would excuse his non-performance of the condition, saves the plaintiff the trouble of assigning a breach, and gives him advantage of putting himself on the judgment of the court whether the plea be good or not; but if the plaintiff had admitted the plea, and made a replication which shewed no cause of action, it had been otherwise; but if the replication were idle, and the defendant demurred, yet the plaintiff should have judgment, without assigning a breach. 1 Lev. 55, 84; 3 Lev. 17, 24. This must mean, if the plea was bad in substance.

And in all cases of debt on an obligation with condition, (that of a bond to perform an award only excepted,) if the defendants plead a special matter, that admits and excuses a non-performance, the plaintiff need only answer, and falsify the special matter alleged; for he that excuses a non-performance admits it, and the plaintiff need not shew that which the defendant hath supposed and admitted. Salk. 138.

But if the defendant pleads a performance of the condition, though it be not well pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication must shew a breach; for then he has no cause of action, unless he shew it; and this difference will give the true reason, and reconcile the following cases. 1 Salk. 138; 1 Lev. 55, 84, 226; 1 Saund. 102, 159, 317; 3 Lev. 17, 24; 1 Vent. 114; Cro. Eliz. 320; Telv. 78.

But by Stat. 4 An. c. 16, If an action of debt be brought on single bill, or judgment, after money paid, such payment may be pleaded in bar. So of a bond with a condition, upon payment of principal and interest due by the condition, though such payment was not strictly made according to the condition, yet it may be pleaded in bar.

By Stat. 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 11. § 8, In actions on bonds for performance of covenants, the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, and the jury may assess damages. The defendant paying the damages, execution may be staid; but the judgment to remain to answer any future breach, and plaintiff may then have sci. fa. against the defendant; and so toties quoties.

In debt on a bond, the defendant may have several pleas in bar; as if the plaintiff sue as executor, the defendant may plead the release of the testator for part, and for the residue the release of the plaintiff, so he may plead payment as to part, and as to the rest an acquittance. 1 Salk. 180.

But a defendant in an action on a bond cannot plead non est factum, and a tender as to part. 5 Term Rep. 97.

In debt on an obligation the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but must deny the deed by pleading non est factum; for the seal of the party continuing, it must be dissolved eo ligamine quo ligatur. Hard. 332; Hob. 218.

In bonds to save harmless, the defendant being prosecuted, is to plead non damnificatus, &c.

The sole right of printing books, bequeathed to the two Universities of England, the four Universities of Scotland, and the Colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester is secured to them, by Stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 53.

From the seventh to the eleventh century, books were very scarce. To that was chiefly owing the universal ignorance which prevailed, during that period. After the Saracens conquered Egypt in the seventh century, the communication with that country (as to Europe, &c.) was almost entirely broken off, and the papyrus no longer in

in use. So that paper was used, and as the price of that was high, books became extremely rare, and of great value. Vide Robertson's History of Charles the Fifth, 1 Vol. 233, 234.

In the eleventh century the art of making paper was invented, the number of manuscripts was thereby increased, and the study of the Sciences greatly facilitated. See further as to Books, title Literary Property.

BOOTING, or BOTING-CORN, Rent-corn, anciently so called. The tenants of the manor of Haadenham in com. Bucks, formerly paid booting-corn to the prior of Rocheſter. Antiq. of Purveyance, fol. 418. It is thought to be so called, as being paid by the tenants by way of bote, or boot, viz. as a compensation to the lord for his making them leases, &c.

BORDAGIUM, See Bordlode.

BORDARIA, A cottage, from the Sax. bord, domus.

BORDARII, or BORDIMANNI, These words often occur in Domesday, and some think they mean boors, husbandmen, or cottagers. In the Domesday inquisition they were distinct from the villani; and seemed to be those of a less servile condition, who had a bord or cottage, with a small parcel of land allowed to them, on condition they should supply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other small provisions for his board or entertainment. Some derive the word bordarii from the old Gall. bords, the limits or extreme parts of any extent; as the borderers of a country, and the borderers inhabitants in those parts. Spelm.

BORD-HALFPENY, Sax. bord, a table and halpeny, or half-penny. Spelm.] A small toll, by custom paid to the lord of the town for setting up board, tables, booths, &c. in fairs and markets.

BORLANDS, The demesnes which lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Brañ. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 9: Spelm.

BORDLODE, or BORDAGE. A service required of tenants to carry timber out of the woods of the lord to his house: or it is said to be the quantity of food or provision, which the bordarii, or bordmen, paid for their bord lands. The old Scots had the term of burd, and meet-burd for victuals and provisions; and burden sack, for a sack full of provender: from whence it is probable came our word burden. Spelm.

BORD SERVICE, A tenure of bord-lands; by which some lands in the manor of Fulham in com. Mid. and elsewhere, are held of the bishop of London, and the tenants do now pay six-pence per acre in lieu of finding provision, anciently for their lord's board or table. Blount.

BORD-BRIGCH, borg-bryce, or burg-brych, Sax.] A breach or violation of surety-ship, pledge-breach, or breach of mutual fidelity.

BOREL-FOLK, i. e. Country people, from the Fr. bourre, flocus, because they covered their heads with such stuffs. Blount.

BOROUGH, Fr. burg. Lat. burgus, Sax. borboe.] Signifies a corporate town, which is not a city; and also such a town or place as sends burgesses to parliament. Verstegan saith, that burg, or burgh, whereof we make our borough, metaphorically signifies a town having a wall, or some kind of inclosure about it: and all places that in old time had among our ancestors the name of borough, were, one way or other fenced or fortified. Lit. sect. 164. But sometimes it is used for villa insignior, or a country town of more than ordinary note, not walled. A borough is a place of safety, protection and privilege, according to Sommer; and in the reign of King Hen. 2. burghs had so great privileges, that if a bond-man or servant remained in a borough a year and a day, he was by that residence made a freeman. Glanville. And why these were called free burghs, and the tradesmen in them free burgesses, was from a freedom to buy and sell, without disturbance, exempt from toll, &c. granted by charter. It is conjectured that borboe, or borough, was also formerly taken for those companies consisting of ten families, which were to be pledges for one another; and we are told by some writers that it is a street or row of houses close to one another. Brañ. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10: Lamb. Duty of Const. p. 8. Vide Squire's Anglo Saxon Government, 236, 247, 251, 254, 258, 262, 264. Trading boroughs were first formed in the time of Alfred. Squire 247, 251.

A borough is now understood to be a town, either corporate or not, that sends burgesses to parliament. 1 Comm. 114. See title Burgage-Tenure, Parliament.

BOROUGH COURTS, Vide Courts.

BOROUGH-HOLDERS, BORSHOLDERS, or BURSHOLDERS, quasiborholders. See title Headborough.

BOROUGH-ENGLISH, A custom relative to the descent of lands, in some ancient boroughs, and copyhold manors, that estates shall descend to the youngest son; or, if the owner hath no issue, to his younger brother; Litt. § 165. as in Edmuntou, &c. Kitch. 102.

This is so named in contradistinction as it were to the Norman customs, and is noticed by Glanville, lib. 7. c. 3.

Littleton gives the following reason for this custom. Because the younger son by reason of his tender age, is not so capable as the rest of his brethren to help himself. Other authors have indeed given a much stranger reason for this custom, as if the lord of the fee had anciently a right of concubinage with his tenant's wife on her wedding night; and that therefore the youngest son was most certainly the tenant's offspring. But it does not appear that this custom ever prevailed in England, though it certainly did in Scotland (under the name of Marcheta, or Marcheta) till abolished by Malcolm III.—Possibly this custom of Borough English may be the remnant of the pastoral state of our British and German ancestors, in which the youngest child was necessarily most helpless. See 2 Comm. 83.

This custom goes with the land, and guides the descent to the youngest son, although there be a devise to the contrary. 2 Lev. 138. If a man seised in fee of lands in borough-english, makes a feoffment to the use of himself and the heirs male of his body, according to the course of the common law; and afterwards die seised, having issue two sons, the youngest son shall have the lands by virtue of the custom, notwithstanding the feoffment. Dyer 179.

If a copyhold in borough-english be surrendered to the use of a person and his heirs, the right will descend to the youngest son according to the custom. 1 Mod. 102. And a youngest son shall inherit an estate in tail in borough-english. Noy 106. But an heir at common law shall take advantage of a condition annexed to borough-english english land ; though the youngest son shall be intitled to all actions in right of the land, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 396. And the eldest son shall have tithes arising out of land borough-english ; for tithes of common right are not inheritances descendible to an heir, but come in succession from one clergyman to another. Ibid. 347.

Borough-english land being descendible to the youngest son, if a younger son dies without issue male, leaving a daughter, such daughter shall inherit jure representationis. 1 Salk. 243. It hath been adjudged where a man hath several brothers, the youngest may inherit lands in borough-english : yet it is said where a custom is, that land shall go to the youngest son, it doth not give it to the youngest uncle, for customs shall be taken strictly ; and those which fix and order the descents of inheritance, can be altered only by parliament. Dyer 179 : 4 Leon. 384 : Jenk. Cent. 220.

By the custom of Borough-English, the widow shall have the whole of her husband's lands in dower, which is called her free-bench ; and this is given to her the better to provide for the younger children, with the care of whom she is intrusted. Co. Lit. 33, 111 : F. N. B. 150 : Mo. pl. 566.

Borough-English is one of those customs of which the law takes particular notice ; there is no occasion to prove that such custom actually exists, but only that the lands in question are subject thereto. 1 Comm. 76.—But the extension of the custom to the collateral line must be specially pleaded. Robins. on Gavelk. 38, 43, 93.—And as borough-english may be extended by special custom, so may it be restrained ; and therefore the customary descent may be confined to fee simple. Mar. 54. cited Robins. Appendix.—See 1 Inst. 110 b. in n.

BOTE, Sax.] A recompence, satisfaction or amends. The Saxon bote is synonymous to the word effovers. See title Common of Effovers.—House-bote is a sufficient allowance of wood to repair, or burn in the house ; which latter is sometimes called fire-bote. Plough-bote, and cart-bote, are wood to be employed in making and repairing all instruments of husbandry : and hay-bote or bedge-bote, is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences. 2 Comm. 29. Hence also comes man-bote, compensation, or amends for a man slain, &c. In King Ina's laws it is declared what rate was ordained for expiation of this offence, according to the quality of the person slain. Lamb. cap. 99. From hence likewise we have our common phrase, to-boot, i. e. compensationis gratia.

BOTELESS, In the charter of H. 1. to Tho. archbishop of York, it is said, that no judgment or sum of money shall acquit him that commits sacrilege ; but he is in English called boteless, viz. without emendation. Lib. Albus penes Cap. de Subnot. int. Plac. Trin. 12 Ed. 2. Ebor 48. We retain the word still in common speech ; as it is boteless to attempt such a thing ; that is, it is in vain to attempt it.

BOTELLARIA, A buttery or cellar, in which the butts and bottles of wine, and other liquors are deposited.

BOTHA, A booth, stall, or standing in a fair or market. Mon. Angl. 2 par. fol. 132.

BOTHAGIUM, Boothage, or customary dues paid to the lord of the manor or soil, for the pitching and standing of booths in fairs or markets. Paroch. Antiq. p. 680.

BOTHNA, or buthna, seems to be a park where cattle are inclosed and fed. Heftor Boethius, lib. 7. cap. 123. Bothena, also signifies a barony, lordship, &c. Skens.

BOTILER OF THE KING, (pincerna regis). Is an officer that provides the king's wines, who (according to Fleta) may by virtue of his office choose out of every ship laden with sale wines, one cask before the mast, and one behind. Fleta lib. 2. cap. 21. This officer shall not take more wine than he is commanded, of which notice shall be given by the steward of the king's house, &c. on pain of forfeiting double damages to the party grieved ; and also to be imprisoned, and ransomed at the pleasure of the king. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. ft. 5. cap. 21. See title Customs.

BOTTOMRY, or bottomree, fœnus nauticum.] Is generally where a person lends money to a merchant, who wants it to traffick, and is to be paid a greater sum at the return of a certain ship, standing to the hazard of the voyage ; and in this case, though the interest be greater than that allowed by law, it is not usury. See this subject more fully treated under title Insurance.

BOVATA TERRÆ, As much land as one ox can plough. Mon. Angl. par. 3. fol. 91. See Oxgang.

BOUCHE OF COURT, Commonly called budge of court, was a certain allowance of provision from the king, to his knights and servants, that attended him in any military expedition. The French avoir bouche à court, is to have an allowance at court, of meat and drink : from bouche, a mouth. But sometimes it extended only to bread, beer, and wine. And this was anciently in use as well in the houses of noblemen, as in the king's court.

BOVERIUM, or boveria, An ox-house. Mon. Angl. par. 2. fol. 210.

BOVETTUS, A young steer or castrated bullock. Paroch. Antiq. p. 287.

BOVICULA, An heifer, or young cow ; which in the East-riding of Yorkshire is called a wbee, or whey.

BOUGH OF A TREE, Seisin of land given by it, to hold of the donor, incapite, Mad. Exeb. i. 62. See tit. Entry.

BOUND, or boundary, bunda.] The utmost limits of land, whereby the same is known and ascertained. See 4 Inst. 318, and title Abutals.

BOUND-BAILIFFS, See title Bailiffs.

BOUNTIES ON EXPORTATION, See title Navigatio Art.

B O U N

BOUNTY OF Q. ANNE, for maintaining poor clergymen. See First Fruits.

BOW-BEARER, An under officer of the forest, whose office is to oversee, and true inquisition make, as well of sworn men as unsworn in every bailiwick of the forest; and of all manner of trespasses done, either to vert or venison, and cause them to be presented, without any concealment in the next court of attachment, &c. Crompt. Jurisf. fol. 201.

BOWYERS, One of the ancient companies of the city of London. By Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 10, a bowyer dwelling in London, was to have always ready fifty bows of elm, witch-hazel, or ash, well made and wrought, on pain of 10s. for every bow wanting; and to sell them at certain prices, under the penalty of 40s. And by Stat. 12 E. 4. c. 2, parents and masters were to provide for their sons and servants, a bow and two shafts, and cause them to exercise shooting, on pain of 6s. 8d. &c. See also Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 6; and title Game.

BRACELETS, Hounds, or rather beagles of the smaller and slower kind. Pat. 1 Rich. 2. p. 2. m. 1.

BRACENARIUS, Fr. bracconier.] A huntsman, or master of the hounds. Anno 26 Ed. 1. Rot. 10. in dorso.

BRACETUS, A hound: bracetus is in Fr. brachet, braco canis sagax, indagator leporum: so braco was properly the large fleet hound; and brachetus, the smaller hound; and brachete the bitch of that kind. Monast. Ang. tom. 2. pag. 283.

BRACINUM, A brewing: the whole quantity of ale brewed at one time, for which tolseffor was paid in some manors. Brecina a brew house, MS.

BRANDING in the hand, or face, with a hot iron, a punishment inflicted by law, for various offences, after the offender hath been allowed clergy. See title Clergy, benefit of.

BRANDY, A liquor made chiefly in France, and extracted from the lees of wine. In the Stat. 20 Car. 2. cap. 1, upon an argument in the Exchequer Anno 1668, whether brandy were a strong water or spirit, it was resolved to be a spirit: but in the year 1669, by a grand committee of the whole House of Commons, it was voted to be a strong water perfectly made. See the Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 4.

The duty on brandy is regulated by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.—By Stat. 4 W. c. 5. § 8, no brandy shall be imported in any cask or vessel, not containing sixty gallons at least, on pain of forfeiture. See further titles Customs, Excise, and Burn's Justice title Excise XVI. See also title Navigation Acts.

BRASIUM, Malt: in the ancient statutes brasiator is taken for a brewer, from the Fr. brasseur; and at this day is used for a maltster or malt-maker. Paroch. Antiq. p. 496.

BRASS, Is to be sold in open fairs and markets, or in the owners' houses, on pain of 10l. and to be worked according to the goodnels of metal wrought in London, or shall be forfeited: also searchers of brass and pewter are to be appointed in every city and borough by head officers, and in counties by justices of peace, &c. and in default thereof, any other person skilful in that mystery, by oversight of the head officer, may take upon him the search of defective brays, to be forfeited, &c. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 6. Brass and pewter, bell-metal, &c. shall not be sent out of the kingdom, on pain of forfeiting double value, &c. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 7: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 37.

BREACH OF CLOSE, See title Trespass.

BREACH OF COVENANT, The not performing of any covenant, expressed or implied in a deed; or the doing an act, which the party covenanted not to do. See title Covenant.

BREACH OF DUTY, The not executing any office, employment, or trust, &c. in a due and legal manner.

BREACH OF PEACE, Offences against the public peace, are either such as are an actual breach of the peace or constructively so, by aiding to make others break it. See title Peace.

BREACH OF POUND, The breaking any pound or place where cattle or goods distrained are deposited, to rescue such distress. See title Distress; Pound-breach.

BREACH OF PRISON, See title Escape; Prison-breaking.

BREACH OF PROMISE, violatio fidei.] A breaking or violating a man's word, or undertaking; as where a person commits any breach of the condition of a bond, or his covenant, &c. entered into, in an action on the bond, &c. the breach must be assigned. In debt on bond, conditioned to give account of goods, &c. a breach must be alleged, or the plaintiff will have no cause of action. 1 Saund. 102. See titles Bond, Condition, Covenant.

BREAD AND BEER, The assize of bread, beer, and ale, &c. is granted to the Lord Mayor of London and other corporations: Bakers, &c. not observing the assize to be set in the pillory. Stat. 51 H. 3. St. 1. Ord. Pistor. & 51 H. 3. St. 6: Vide 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 29, containing regulations concerning the assize of bread, and to prevent adulteration, so much of Stat. 51 H. 3, intitled, assisa panis & cervisie, as relates to the assize of bread, and the Stat. 8 An. c. 18, and all amendments by subsequent acts are repealed.—The weight of the peck loaf, when well baked, is fixed at 17 lb. 6 oz. Awdps. and the rest in proportion.—The weight of a sack of flour, at 2 cwt. 2 qrs. or 280 lb. net, which is to produce twenty peck loaves, weighing 347 lb. 8 oz. So that 3 lb. 6 oz. is added to the weight of the flour by the materials of each peck loaf, when baked. And see farther Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 18. how penalties not appropriated by Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 29, shall be distributed. See also Stat. 3 Geo. 3. c. 6. (for Scotland) &c. wherein there are farther regulations concerning the assize of bread, and for preventing the adulteration thereof.

See also Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 62. as to standard wheaten bread. And see title Corn.

Under these statutes, bread deficient in weight or quality, may be seized by justices, mayors, &c. and bread is to be marked by the bakers according to its quality, W. for wheaten, and H. for household.

BREAD OF TREET, or TRITE, panis tritici.] Is bread mentioned in the statute 51 Hen. 3, of assize of bread and ale; wherein are particularised waistel bread, cocket bread, and bread of treet, which answer to the three sorts of bread now in use, called whee, wheaten, and house-hold bread. In religious houses they heretofore distinguished bread by these several names, panis armigerum, panis conventualis, panis pauperum, & panis famularum. Antiq. Not.

BRECC, from the Fr. brecche] A breach or decay. In some ancient deeds there have been covenants for repairing pairing maras & breccas, portas & fossata, &c.—De brecca aquæ inter Woolwich & Greenwich supervidendi. Pat. 16. Ric. 2. A duty of 3d. per ton on shipping was granted for amending and stopping of Dagenham breach, by Stat. 12 Ann. c. 17.

BRECINA. Vide Bracium.

BREDE, A word used by Bracton for broad; as too large and too brede, is proverbially too long and too broad. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15. There is also a Sax. word brede signifying deceit. Leg. Canut. c. 44.

BREDWITE, Sax. bread and wite.] A fine or penalty imposed for defaults in the assise of bread: to be exempt from which, was a special privilege granted to the tenants of the honour of Wallingford by king Hen. II. Paroch. Antiq. 114.

BREHON and BREHON LAW. See tit. Ireland.

BREISNA, Weather-sheep, Mou. Angl. 1. c. 406.

BRENAGIUM, A payment in bran, which tenants anciently made to seed their lords' hounds. Blount.

BRETOYSE, or BRETOISE, The law of the marches of Wales, in practice among the ancient Britons.

BREVE, A writ; by which a man is summoned or attached to answer in action; or whereby any thing is commanded to be done in the King's courts, in order to justice, &c. It is called breve from the brevity of it; and is directed either to the chancellor, judges, sheriffs, or other officers. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. cap. 17: See Skene de verb. Breve, and this Dict. tit. Writ.

BREVE PERQUIRERE, To purchase a writ or licence of trial, in the King's courts, by the plaintiff, qui breve perquisivit: and hence comes the usage of paying 6s. 8d. fine to the king, where the debt is 40*l.* and of 10*s.* where the debt is 100*l.* &c. in suits & trials for money due upon bond, &c.

BREVE DE RECTO, A writ of right, or licence for a person ejected out of an estate, to sue for the possession of it when detained from him. See tit. Right.

BREVI TESTATA. It is mentioned by the feudal writers. Vide Fend. l. 1. 64. Our modern deeds are in reality nothing more than an improvement or amplification of the brevia testata. See tit. Dred.

BREVBUS & ROTULIS LIBERANDIS, A writ or mandate to a sheriff to deliver unto his successor the county, and the appurtenances, with the rolls, brieis, remembrances, and all other things belonging to that office. Reg. Orig. fol. 295.

BREWERS.—As to the dimensions of their casks. See tit. Coopers.—By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. ft. 2. c. 41, Brewers of strong and small beer, are to take out annual licences from the officers of excise—Brewers are by this and other acts subject to various regulations under the excise laws.—The duty on beer and ale is settled by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.—Notice to the Excise Office must be given, and entry made of places for brewing beer and ale. See Stats. 12 C. 2. c. 24: 15 C. 2. c. 11; and 5 Geo. 3. c. 43.—See also Stats. 1 W. & M. ft. 1. c. 24: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 30: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 19, to prevent frauds by brewers.—Private persons may brew beer in their own houses, for their family or to give away, but must not lend their brewhouse for other purposes, on penalty of 50*l.* Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 5. § 10.—By Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 8. § 1, Common brewers must not sell beer in less quantities than casks of 4½ gallons. See Burn's Justice tit. Excise I.—By a By-law of the common council, brewers' drays shall not be in the streets of London after 11 in the forenoon in Summer, and 1, in Winter. 2 Stra. 1085: Hardw. 405: Andr. 91.

BRIBERY, From the Fr. briber, to devour or eat greedily.] Is a high offence, where a person in a judicial place takes any fee, gift, reward or brocage, for doing his office, or by colour of his office, but of the king only. 3 Inft. 145: Hawok. P. C. i. c. 67.

Taken more largely, it signifies the receiving, or offering, any undue reward, to or by any person concerned in the administration of public justice, whether judge, officer, &c. to influence his behaviour in his office; and sometimes it signifies the taking or giving a reward for appointing another to a public office. 3 Inft. 9: 4 Comm. 139. To take a bribe of money, though small, is a great fault; and judges' servants may be punished for receiving bribes. If a judge refuse a bribe offered him, the offerer is punishable. Fortescue, cap. 51.

Bribery in interior judicial or ministerial officers is punished by fine and imprisonment, which may also be inflicted on those who offer a bribe though not taken. 4 Comm. 140. 3 Inft. 147. Bribery in a judge was anciently looked upon as so heinous an offence, that it was sometimes punished as high treason; and it is at this day punishable with forfeiture of office, fine and imprisonment; and chief justice Thorpe was hanged for this offence in the reign of Edw. III.—And by a Stat. 11 H. 4, all judges and officers of the king, convicted of bribery, shall forfeit treble the bribe, be punished at the king's will, and be discharged from the king's service for ever. 4 Comm. 140: cites 3 Inft. 140.—In the reign of King James I. the earl of Mildmay, lord treasurer of England, being impeached by the commons for refusing to hear petitions referred to him by the king till he had received great bribes, &c. was, by sentence of the lords, deprived of all his offices, and disabled to hold any for the future, or to sit in parliament; also he was fined fifty thousand pounds, and imprisoned during the king's pleasure. 1 Hawok. P. C. c. 67. § 7. but the fine was remitted on the accession of C. I. and the proceeding appears to have been instigated rather by revenge than justice. In 11th King George I. the lord chancellor was impeached by the commons with great zeal, for bribery, in selling the places of masters in chancery, for exorbitant sums, and other corrupt practices, tending to the great loss and ruin of the suitors of that court; and the charge being made good against him, being before divested of his office, he was sentenced by the lords to pay a fine of thirty thousand pounds, and imprisoned till it was paid. See 6 S. T. 112.

By Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 2, the chancellor, treasurer, justices of both benches, barons of the exchequer, &c. shall be sworn not to ordain or nominate any person in any office for any gift, brocage, &c. And the sale of offices concerning the administration of public justice, &c. is prohibited on pain of forfeiture and disability, &c. by 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16.—In the construction of the last mentioned statute, it has been resolved that the offices of the ecclesiastical courts are within the meaning of that act, as well as the offices in the courts of Common law; but no office in fee is within the statute, and it hath been adjudged, that one who contracts for an office, contrary to the purport of the said statute 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 16, is so disabled to hold the same, that he cannot be restored to a capacity of holding it by any grant or dispensation what-whatsoever. Cro. Jac. 269, 386: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67.—It is said the Stat. does not extend to the plantations. Salk. 411: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67. § 5.

To bribe persons either by giving money or promises, to vote at elections of members of corporations, which are erected for the sake of publick government, is an offence for which an information will lie. 12 Mod. 314: 2 Ld. Raym. 1377: 1 Blackst. 383.—But the Court will grant such information very cautiously, since the additional penalties by Statute. 1 Black. 380. See title Parliament.

An attempt to induce a man to advise the king, under the influence of a bribe, is criminal, though never carried into execution. 4 Burr. 2499.—Offering money to a privy councillor, to procure the reversion of an office in the gift of the crown, has been adjudged demeanour and punishable by information. Rev. Fauson. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67. § 7 in note.

As to officers of the Customs, &c. taking bribes, See tit. Customs.

Taking money to excuse persons from serving on juries, subjects the offender to a fine, not exceeding ten pounds, at the discretion of the judge. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 6.

As to bribe in elections to parliament. See title Parliament.

BRIBOUR, Fr. brasseur.] Seems to signify in some of our old statutes, one that bilfers other men's goods. 28 Ed. 2. cap. 1.

BRICOLLS An engine mentioned in Cham. which walls were beat down.

BRICKS AND TILES.—By Statute 17 E. 4. c. 4. The earth for tiles is to be digged and call up before the 1st of November yearly, stored and turned before the 1st of February, and wrought before the 1st of March following.—Every common tile must be 10½ inches long 6½ broad and ½ an inch thick.—Roof tiles 13 inches long, &c. And persons selling tiles contrary hereto, forfeit double the value, and are liable to fine.

By Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 42, Bricks when burnt are to be 8½ inches long 2½ thick and 4 wide.—Contracts for ingrossing and enhancing the price of bricks made void, and a penalty of 20*l.* imposed on the parties.

The last excise duty imposed on bricks and tiles, made in Great Britain, by 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.—And the regulations to enforce the excise on bricks or tiles, are settled by Stats. 24 Geo. 3. sect. 2. c. 24. and 25 Geo. 3. c. 66.

BRIDGE, pous.] A building of stone or wood erected across a river, for the common ease and benefit of travellers. Public bridges, which are of general convenience, are of common right to be repaired by the whole inhabitants of that county in which they lie. Hale's P. C. 143: 13 Co. 33: Cro. Car. 365.

Where a particular district re-build a foot-bridge over a more convenient part of the stream, and converted it into a bridge for horses, carts and carriages; as the district was not bound by custom to build or repair such a bridge, but a foot-bridge only, and as they built quite a different bridge in a different place, which proved of common publick utility to the county, the County, and not the district, are bound to repair it. Burr. 2594: Blackst. 685.

But a corporation aggregate, either in respect of a special tenure of certain lands, or in respect of a special prescription; also any other person, by reason of such a special tenure, may be compelled to repair them. Hale's P. C. 143: Dalt. c. 14: 6 Mod. 307.

A tenant at will of a house which adjoins to a common bridge, although he is not bound as between landlord and tenant to repair the house, yet if it become dangerously ruinous to the necessary intercourse of the bridge, the tenant is bound by reason of his possession, to repair it so far as to prevent the Public being prejudiced. Ld. Raym. 856.

At Common law those who are bound to repair public bridges, must make them of such height and strength, as shall be answerable to the course of the water; and they are not trespassers if they enter on any land adjoining to repair them, or lay the materials necessary for the repairs thereon. Dalt. cap. 16. If a man erects a bridge for his own use, and the people travel over it as a common bridge, he shall notwithstanding repair it: though a person shall not be bound to repair a bridge, built by himself for the common good and public convenience, but the county must repair it. 2 Inst. 701: 1 Salk. 359. Where inhabitants of a county are indicted for not repairing a bridge, they must set forth who ought to repair the same, and traverse that they ought. 1 Vent. 256. Unless perhaps, where the real question is, whether it be a public or a common bridge.

A vill may be indicted for a neglect in not repairing a bridge; and the justices of peace in their sessions may impose a fine for defaults. And any particular inhabitant of a county, or tenant of land charged to repairs of a bridge, may be made defendants to an indictment for not repairing it, and be liable to pay the fine assessed by the court for the default of the repairs, who are to have their remedy at law for a contribution from those who are bound to bear a proportionable share of the charge. 6 Mod. 307.

If a manor is held by tenure of repairing a bridge; or highway, which manor afterwards comes into several hands, in such case every tenant of any parcel of the demesnes and services, is liable to the whole charge, but shall have contribution of the rest: and this though the lord may agree with the purchasers to discharge them of such repairs, which only binds the lord, and doth not alter the remedy which the Public hath. 1 Danv. Abr. 744: 1 Salk. 358.

So if a manor, subject to such charge, comes into the hands of the crown, yet the duty upon it continues; and any person claiming afterwards under the crown, the whole manor, or any part thereof, shall be liable to an indictment or information, for want of due repairs. 1 Salk. 358.

If part of a bridge lie within a franchise, those of the franchise may be charged with the repairs for so much: also, by a special tenure, a man may be charged with the repairs of one part of a bridge, and the inhabitants of a county are to repair the rest. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 77. § 2: Raym. 384, 385.

Indictments for not repairing of bridges, will not lie but in case of common bridges on highways; though it hath been adjudged they will lie for a bridge on a common footway. Mod. Caf. 256. Not keeping up a ferry, being a common passage for all the King's people, is indictable, as well as not keeping up bridges. 1 Salk. 12.

By Stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5, All householders dwelling in any county or town, whether they occupy lands or not; and all persons who have land in their own possession, whether they dwell in the same county or not, are liable to be taxed as inhabitants, towards the repairs of a publick bridge. Where it cannot be discovered who ought to repair a bridge, it must be presented by the grand jury in quarter-sessions; and after their inquiry, and the order of sessions upon it, the justices may send for the constables of every parish, to appear at a fixed time and place, to make a tax upon every inhabitant, &c. but it has been usual, in the levying of money for repairs of bridges, to charge every hundred with a sum in gross, and to send such charge to the high constables of each hundred, who send their warrants to the petty constables, to gather it, by virtue whereof they assess the inhabitants of parishes in particular sums, according to a fixed rate, and collect it; and then they pay the same to the high constables, who bring it to the sessions.

This method of raising money was long observed; but by statute 1 Ann. cap. 18, justices in sessions, upon presentment made of want of reparations, are to assess every town, parish, &c. in proportion, towards the repairs of a bridge; and the money assessed is to be levied by the constables of such parishes, &c. and being demanded, and not paid in ten days, the inhabitants shall be distrained; and when the tax is levied, the constables are to pay it to the high constable of the hundred; who is to pay the same to such persons as the justices shall appoint, to be employed according to the order of the justices, towards repairing of the bridge: and the justices may allow any person concerned in the execution of the act, 3 d. per pound out of the money collected. All matters relating to the repairing and amending of bridges, are to be determined in the county where they lie, and no presentment or indictment shall be removed by certiorari. And by this statute, the evidence of the inhabitants of those places where the bridges are in decay, shall be admitted at any trial upon an information or indictment, &c.

By 14 Geo. 2. c. 33, The justices at their general sessions, may purchase or agree with persons for any piece of land, not above one acre, near to any county-bridge, in order to enlarge or more conveniently rebuild it; and the ground shall be paid for out of the money raised by statute of 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, for better assessing, collecting and levying of county rates, &c. See tit. County-Rates.

By the said Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 14, When any publick bridges, &c. are to be repaired at the expence of the county, the justices at their general or quarter sessions, after presentment made by the grand jury, of their want of reparation, may contract with any person for rebuilding or repairing the same, for any term not exceeding 7 years, at a certain annual sum.—They are to give publick notice of their intention to make such contracts, which are to be made at the most reasonable prices, and security given by the contractors for performance; which contracts are to be entered with the clerk of the peace.

No persons are compellable to make a new bridge but by act of parliament; and the inhabitants of the whole county cannot, of their own authority, change a bridge from one place to another.

If a man has toll for men and cattle passing over a bridge, he is to repair it; and toll may be paid in three cases, by prescription, or statute.

BRIDGE-MASTERS. There are bridgemasters of London-bridge, chosen by the citizens, who have certain fees and profits belonging to their office, and the cure of the said bridge, &c. Lex London. 283.

BRIEF, brevis.] An abridgment of the client's case, made out for the instruction of counsel, on a trial at law; wherein the case of the party is to be briefly but fully stated, the proofs must be placed in due order, and proper answers made to whatever may be objected against the client's cause, by the opposite side; and herein great care is requisite, that nothing be omitted to endanger the cause.

An attachment has been granted against a party and his attorney for surreptitiously getting possession of the brief of a counsel on the other side, and applying the same to an improper purpose in his defence. See Bateman v. Conway, 1 Bro. P. C. 519. 8vo. ed.

Though a brief is not of itself evidence against the party for whom it is prepared, yet, as a discovery of the secrets and merits of his case, may be productive of perjury or subornation of perjury, and thereby obstruct the justice of the court in which the suit is depending; the obtaining of it in a surreptitious manner is an offence highly deserving censure and punishment Id.

BRIEF AL'EVESQUE, A writ to the bishop, which in Quare Impedit, shall go to remove an incumbent, unless he recover, or be presented pendente lite. 1 Keb. 386.

BRIEFS, or licences to make collection for repairing churches, restoring lofs by fire, &c. See tit. Churchwards, III. 1

BRIGA, Fr. brigue.] Debate or contention.

BRIGANDINE. Fr. Lat. lorica.] A coat of mail or ancient armour, consisting of many jointed and scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body. This word is mentioned in Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. cap. 2, and some confound it with haubergeon; and others with brigantine, a long but low-built vessel, swift in sailing.

BRIGANTES. The antient name for the inhabitants of Yorkshire, Lancashire, bishoprick of Durham, Westmorland and Cumberland. Blount.

BRIGBOTE, or BRUG-BOTE, Sax. brig, pontus, and bote, compensatio.] The contribution to the repair of bridges, [walls and castles] which by the old laws of the Anglo-Saxons might not be remitted; but by degrees immunities were granted by our kings, even against this duty; and then to be quit of brig-bote signified to be exempt from tribute or contribution towards the mending or re-edifying of bridges. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47; Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 622.—Spelm. v. Brigbote and Burghote.

BRISTOL, A great city, famous for trade: the mayor, burgesses and commonalty of the city of Bristol, are conservators of the river Avon from above the bridge there to King-road, and so down the Severn to the two islands called Holmes; and the mayor and justices of the said city, may make rules and orders for preserving the river, and regulating pilots, masters of ships, &c. Also for the government of their markets; and the streets are to be kept clean and paved; and lamps or lights hung out at night. Stat. 14 & 12 H. 3. c. 23.—No person shall act as a broker in the city of Bristol, till admitted and licensed by the mayor and aldermen, &c. on pain of forfeiting 500 l. and those who employ any such, to forfeit 50 l. &c. by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 31.—By the Stat. 22 G. 2. c. 20, the Stat. 11 & 12 H. 3, is rendered more effectual so far as it relates to the paving and enlightening the streets; and divers regulations are made in relation to the hackney-coachmen, balliers, draymen, and carters, and the the markets and sellers of hay and straw, within the said city and liberties thereof.

BROCAGE, brocagium] The wages or hire of a broker: which is also termed brokerage. 12 R. 2. c. 2.

BROCELIA, This word, as interpreted by Dr. Thoresen, signifieth a wood; and it is said to be a thicket or covert of bushes and brush wood, from the obsolete Lat. brusca, terra bruscosa & brocia, Fr. bruce, brocelle: and hence is our broace of wood, and broysing of cattle.

BROCHA, Fr. broche.] An awl, or large packing needle. A spit in some parts of England is called a broche; and from this word comes to pierce or broach a barrel.

BROCHIA, A great can or pitcher. Brach, lib. 2. tract. 1. cap. 6. Where it seems that he intends facere to carry dry, and brochia liquid things.

BRODEHALFPENY, or BROADHALFPENY. See Bordhalfpeny.

BROKERS, broccatores, broccarii & auximarii.] Are those that contrive, make and conclude bargains and contracts between merchants and tradesmen, in matters of money and merchandize, for which they have a fee or reward. These are Exchange brokers; and by the Stat. 10 R. 2. cap. 1. they are called brogers; also brogers of corn is used in a proclamation of Queen Elizabeth, for badgers, Baker's Chron. fol. 411. The original of the word is from a trader broken, and that from the Sax. bioc, misfortune, which is often the true reason of a man's breaking; so that the name of broker came from one who was a broken trader by misfortune, and none but such were formerly admitted to that employment; and they were to be freemen of the city of London, and allowed and approved by the lord mayor and aldermen, for their ability and honesty.

By the stat. 6 Ann. c. 16, they are to be annually licensed in London by the lord mayor and aldermen who administer an oath, and take bond for the faithful execution of their offices: if any persons shall act as brokers, without being thus licensed and admitted, they shall forfeit the sum of 500*l*. And persons employing them 50*l*. and brokers are to register contracts, &c. under the like penalty: also brokers shall not deal for themselves, on pain of forfeiting 200*l*. they are to carry about them a silver medal, having the king's arms and the arms of the city, &c. and pay 40*s*. a year to the chamber of the city.

As to brokers in Bristol, See tit. Bristol.—And as to Pawnbrokers, see that title. As to Brokers illegally dealing in the funds or stocks, who are usually known by the appellation of stock-jobbers, See title Funds.

BROK, An old sword or dagger.

BROSSUS, Bruised or injured with blows, wounds, or other casualty. Cousal.

BROTHEL-HOUSES, Lewd places, being the common habitations of prostitutes. A brothelman was a loose idle fellow; and a frane bordelier or brothelier, a common whore. And boiselman is a contraction of brothelman. Chaucer. See Barvy House.

BRUDBOIE. See Brigbote.

BRUEBRE, Lat. crica.] Signifies heath ground; and bruera, briars, thorns, or heath, from the Sax. brær, bruær. Paroch. Antiq. 620.

BRUILLUS, a wood or grove; Fr. breil, breuil, a thicket or clump of trees in a park or forest. Hence the abbey of Bruer, in the forest of Wichwood in com. Oxon.

and Brail, Brabul, or Brill, a hunting feat of our ancient kings in the forest of Burnwood in com. Buck.

BRUILLETUS, a small coppice or wood.

BRUNETA, properly Burgeta which see.

BRUSCIA, seems to signify a wood. Monast. tom. 1. pag. 773.

BRUSUA and BRUSULA, Brouse or brushwood. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 773.

BUBBLES. The South-sea project, and various other schemes, similar in the end intended, that of defrauding the subject, though different as to the means, were called by the name of bubbles. The Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18, makes all unwarrantable undertakings by unlawful subscriptions subject to the penalties of a perjury.—See title Funds.

BUCKLARIUM, A buckler. Clavf. 26 Ed. 1. m. 8. intus.

BUCKSTALL, A toil to take deer, which by the Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 11, is not to be kept by any person that hath not a park of his own, under penalties. See also 3 Jac. 1. c. 13. There is a privilege of being quit of americiaments for buckstalls. Privileg. de Semplingham. See 4 Inst. 306.

BUCKWHEAT, French wheat, used in many counties of this kingdom: in Essex it is called brank; and in Worcestershire, &c. It is mentioned in the Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 5.

BUCINUS, A military weapon for a footman. Trommes, pag. 74.

BUGGERY, or Sodomy, Comes from the Italian buggerone or buggerare, and it is defined to be a carnal copulation against nature, and this is either by the confusion of species; that is to say, a man or a woman with a brute beast; or of sexes, as a man with a man, or man unnaturally with a woman. 3 Inst. 58: 12 Co. Rep. 36. This sin against God, nature, and the law, it is said was brought into England by the Lombards. Rot. Parl. 50 Ed. 3. numb. 58. In ancient times, according to some authors, it was punishable with burning, though, others say with burying alive: but at this day it is felony excluded clergy and punished as other felonies by Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 6, enforced by 5 Edw. 17.

By the articles of the navy, (Art. 29. stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33.) If any person in the fleet shall commit the unnatural and detestable sin of buggery or sodomy, with man or beast; he shall be punished with death by the sentence of a court martial.

It is felony both in the agent and patient consenting, except the person on whom it is committed be a boy under the age of discretion; (which is generally reckoned at fourteen;) when it is felony only in the agent; all persons present, aiding and abetting to this crime, are all principals, and the statutes make it felony generally: there may be accessaries before and after the fact; but though none of the principal offenders shall be admitted to clergy, the accessaries are not excluded it. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 670.

In every indictment for this offence, there must be the words, rem habuit veneream & carvaster cognovit, &c. and of consequence some kind of penetration and emission must be proved; but any the least degree is sufficient. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. The general words of these indictments are, that A. B. on such a day, at, &c. with force and arms, made an assault upon C. D. and then and there wickedly, devilishly, feloniously, and against the order of nature, committed the venereal act with the said C. D. and carnally knew him, and then and there wickedly, &c. did with him that sodomitical and detestable sin called buggery, (not to be named among Christians) to the great displeasure of God, and disgrace of all mankind, &c. This crime is excepted out of our acts of general pardon.—This says Blackstone is a crime which ought to be strictly and impartially proved, and then as strictly and impartially punished. But it is an offence of so dark a nature, so easily charged, and the negative so difficult to be proved, that the accusation should be clearly made out: for if false, it deserves a punishment inferior only to that of the crime itself.

BUILDINGS. If a house new built exceeds the ancient foundation, whereby that is the cause of hindering the lights or air of another house, action lies against the builder. Hob. 131. In London a man may place ladders or poles upon the ground, or against houses adjoining for building his own; but he may not break ground: and builders of houses ought to have licence from the mayor and aldermen, &c. for a boord in the streets, which are not to be incumbered. Cit. Lib. 30, 146. In new building of London, it was ordained, that the outsidcs of the buildings be of brick or stone, and the houses for the principal streets to be four stories high, having in the front, balconies; &c. by Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 3.

The laws for regulating of all buildings in the cities of London and Westminster, and other parishes and places in the weekly bills of mortality, the parishes of St. Mary-le-bone, and Paddington, St. Pancras and St. Luke at Chelsea, for preventing mischiefs by fire, are reduced into one act by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. The regulations of this law being very minute and technical, we must refer the reader to the statute itself.—See title Fire.

BULL, bulla. A brief or mandate of the pope or bishop of Rome, from the lead or sometimes gold seal affixed thereto, which Mat. Paris, anno 1237, thus describes: In bulla domini papæ stat imago Pauli in dextris crucis in medio bullæ figurata, & Petri a sinistris. These decrees of the pope are often mentioned in our statutes, as 25 Ed. 3. 28 H. 8. cap. 16: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. and 23 Eliz. cap. 2: They were heretofore used, and of force, in this land: but by the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 16, it was enacted, That all bulls, briefs and dispensations had or obtained from the bishop of Rome, should be void. And by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, (See Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1.) If any person shall obtain from Rome any bull or writing to absolve or reconcile such as forsake their due allegiance, or shall give or receive absolution by colour of such bull, or use or publish such bull, &c. it is high treason. See Rome, Papist.

BULL AND BOAR. By the custom of some places, a parson may be obliged to keep a bull and a boar for the use of the parishioners, in consideration of his having tithes of calves and pigs, &c. 1 Rel. Abr. 559: 4 Mod. 241.

BULLIO SALIS, As much salt as is made at one wealing or boiling: a measure of salt, supposed to be twelve gallons. Mon. Ang. tom. 2.

BULLION, Fr. billon. The ore or metal whereof gold is made; and signifies with us gold or silver in billets, in the mass before it is coined. Anno 9 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 2. See titles Coin, Money.

BULTEL, The bran or refuse of meal after dressed: also the bag wherein it is dressed is called a bulter, or ra- ther bouter. The word is mentioned in the statute Assisa panis & cervisie, anno 51 Hen. 3. Hence comes bulled or bouted bread, being the coarsest bread.

BUNDLES. A sort of records of the Chancery, lying in the office of the Rolls; in which are contained, the files of bills and answers; of hab. cor. cum causâ; certiorari's; attachments; &c. seire fucias's; certificates of statute-fugate; extents and liberates; superfedeas's; bails on special parcons; bills from the Exchequer of the names of sheriffs; letters patent surrendered; and deeds cancelled; inquisitions; privy seals for grants; bills signed by the king; warrants of escheators; cutomers, &c.

BURCHETA, from the Fr. berche. A kind of gun used in forests.

BURCIFER REGIS, Purse-bearer, or keeper of the king's privy purse. Pat. 17 Hen. 8.

BURDARE, Tojestorifice. Mat. Paris, Addit. p. 149.

BURGAGE TENURE. See title Tenures. III. 11.

TENURE IN BURGAGE, is described by Glanvil, (lib. 7. c. 3.) and is expressly said by Littleton, § 162, to be but tenure in socage: And it is where the king or other person is lord of an ancient borough, in which the tenements are held by a rent certain. Litt. § 162, 3.

It is indeed only a kind of town-socage; as common socage by which other lands are holden, is usually of a rural nature. A borough is usually distinguished from other towns by the right of sending members to parliament; (See title Borough;) and where the right of election is by burgage-tenure, that alone is a proof of the antiquity of the borough. Tenure in Burgage or Burgage-Tenure therefore is, where houses, or lands which were formerly the site of houses, in an ancient borough, are held of some lord in common socage by a certain established rent. 2 Comm. 82.

The free socage in which these tenements are held seems to be plainly a remnant of Saxon liberty: which may also account for the great variety of customs, affecting many of these tenements so held in ancient burgage, the principal and most remarkable of which is, that called Borough-English.—See that title.

Other special customs there are, in different burgage tenures; as in some, that the wife shall be endowed of all her husband's tenements, and not of the third part only, as at common law. Litt. § 166.—In others that a man might (previous to Stat. H. 8.) dispose of his tenements by will. Litt. § 167—though this power of disposal was allowable in the Saxon times—a pregnant proof that these liberties of socage tenure were fragments of Saxon liberty. 2 Comm. 84.

BURG, A small walled town, or place of privilege, &c. See Borough.

BURG-BOTE, from burg, castellum, and bote, compensatio. Is a tribute or contribution towards the building or repairing of castles, or walls of a borough or city: from which divers had exemption by the ancient charters of the Saxon kings. Rapin. burg-bote significat quietantiam reparationis murorum civitatis vel burgi. Flota, lib. 1. c. 47: Spelm. v. Burgb-bote.

BURGESSES, burgarii & burgenſes. Properly men of trade, or the inhabitants of a borough or walled town; but this name is usually given to the magistrates of corporate towns.

In Germany, and other countries, they confound burgess and citizen; but we distinguish them, as appears by the the Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 4., where the classes of the common wealth are thus enumerated, count, baron, banneret, chevalier de countee; citizen de citie; burghs de burgh. See Co. Lit. 80. Those are also called burghesses, who serve in parliament, for any borough or corporation. See title Parliament. Burgesses of our towns are called, in Domesday, the homines of the king, or of some other great man; but this only shews whose protection they were under, and is not any infringement of their civil liberty. Squire Ang. Sax. Gov. 260 n. Burgenfes & homines burzorum & willarum, Madox Excheq. 1 V. 333. The aid of burghs, ib. 1 V. 600, 601. See title Borough.

BURGH BRECHE, Fidejussionis violatio. A breach of pledge, Spelm.] It is used for a fine imposed on the community of a town, for a breach of the peace, &c. Leg. Canuti, cap. 55.

BURGHERISTHE, or burgheriche, Used in Domesday-book, for a breach of the peace in a city. Blount.

BURGBOTE. See Burgbote.

BURGMOTE, A court of a borough. LL. Canuti, MS. cap. 44 — Bergmote is different; which see.

BURGHWARE, quasi burgiver.] A citizen or burghs.

BURGLARY, Burgi latrocinium; by our ancient law called hamefecken, as it is in Scotland to this day. 4 Comm. 223.] A Felony at common law, in (1) breaking and entering (2) the mansion house of another, or the walls or gates of a walled town, or a church, (3) in the night, (4) to the intent to commit some felony within the same; whether the felonious intent be executed or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 1, 10: 4 Comm. 224.

It seems the plainest method to consider the subject according to the four parts of the above definition; and 5. to add something on the punishment of this offence.

1. There must be both a breaking and an entry to complete this offence. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 7.

Every entrance into the house by a trespasser is not a breaking in this case, but there must be an actual breaking. As if the door of a mansion house stand open, and the thief enters, this is no breaking. So it is if the window of the house be open, and a thief with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is no burglary, because there is no actual breaking of the house. But if the thief breaketh the glass of the window, and with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is burglary, for there was an actual breaking of the house. 3 Inst. 64. But the following acts amount to an actual breaking, viz. opening the casement, or breaking the glass window, picking open the lock of a door, or putting back the lock, or the leaf of a window, or unlatching the door that is only latched. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 552.

Having entered by a door which he found open, or having lain in the house by the owner's consent, unlatching a chamber door; or coming down the chimney. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 4.

If thieves pretend business to get into a house by night, and thereupon the owner of the house opens his door, and they enter and rob the house, this is burglary. Kel. 42.

So if persons designing to rob a house, take lodgings in it and then fall on the landlord and rob him; or where persons intending to rob a house, raise a hue and cry, and prevail with the constable to make a search in the house, and having got in by that means, with the owner's consent, bind the constable, and rob the inhabitants; in both these instances they are guilty of burglary, for these evasions rather increase the crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 5.

If a person be within the house and steal goods, and then open the house on the inside, and go out with the goods, this is burglary, though the thief did not break the house. 3 Inst. 64. But this was not admitted to be law with any certainty; and therefore by Stat. 12 An. c. 7, it is enacted, "that if any person shall enter into the mansion house of another, by day or by night, without breaking the same, with an intent to commit felony, or being in such house shall commit any felony, and shall in the night-time break the said house to get out, he shall be guilty of burglary, and ousted of the benefit of clergy, in the same manner as if he had broken and entered the house in the night-time, with intent to commit felony."

Any the least entry, either with the whole, or with but part of the body, or with any instrument or weapon, will satisfy the word entered in an indictment for burglary: as if one do put his foot over the threshold, or his hand, or a hook, or pistol, within a window, or turn the key of a door which is locked on the inside, or discharge a loaded gun into a house, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 7, and the authorities there cited.—But where thieves had bored a hole through the door, with a center-bit, and part of the chips were found in the inside of the house, yet as they had neither got in themselves, nor introduced a hand or instrument for the purpose of taking the property, the entry was ruled incomplete. Id. ib. in note.

When several come with a design to commit burglary, and one does it, while the rest watch near the house, here his act is, by interpretation, the act of all of them. And upon a like ground, if a servant confederating with a rogue, let him in to rob a house, it has been determined by all the judges, upon a special verdict, that it is burglary both in the servant and the thief. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 9. and n.

2. It is certainly a dangerous, if not an incurable fault to omit the word dwelling house in an indictment, for burglary in a house. But it seems not necessary or proper in an indictment for burglary in a church, which by all the ancient authorities is taken as a distinct burglary. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 10. and the authorities there cited.

If a man hath two houses, and resides, sometimes in one of the houses, and sometimes in the other, if the house he doth not inhabit is broken by any person in the night, it is burglary. Popb. 52.

A chamber in an inn or court, &c. where one usually lodges, is a mansion-house; for every one hath a several property there. But a chamber where any person doth lodge as an inmate, cannot be called his mansion; though if a burglary be committed in his lodgings, the indictment may lay the offence to be in the mansion-house of him that let them. 3 Inst. 65: Kel. 83. If the owner of the house breaks into the rooms of his lodgers, and steals their goods, it cannot be burglary to break into his own house, but it is felony to steal their goods. Wood's Inst. 378. But see contra, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 13, 14, 15.

If the owner live under the same roof with the inmates, there must be a separate outer door, or the whole is the mansion of the owner; but if the owner inhabit no part of the house, or even if he occupy a shop, or a cellar in it, it, but do not sleep therein, it is the mansion of each lodger, although there be but one outer door. Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 15. in n.—There being only one door in common to all the inhabitants, makes no difference, where the owner does not sleep in any part of the house, for in that case, each apartment is a separate mansion. Id. ib. § 14. n.

Chambers, in inns of court, &c. have separate outward doors, which are the extremity of obstruction, and are enjoyed as separate property, as estates of inheritance, for life, or during residence.—So a house divided into separate tenements, with a distinct outward door to each, will be separate houses. Id. ib. § 13. n.

Part of a house divided from the rest, having a door of its own to the street, is a mansion-house of him who hires it. Kel. 84.

To break and enter a shop, not parcel of the mansion-house, in which the shop-keeper never lodges, but only works or trades there in the day-time, is not burglary, but only larceny; but if he, or his servant, usually or often lodge in the shop at night, it is then a mansion-house, in which a burglary may be committed. 1 H. H. P. C. 557, 558.—But see Stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 38, respecting burglary in the work shops of the plate-glass manufactory, which is made single felony, and punishable with transportation for seven years.—If the shop-keeper sleep in any part of the building, however distinct that part is from the shop, it may be alleged to be his mansion-house; provided the owner does not sleep under the same roof also. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 16. in n.

A lodger in an inn hath a special interest in his chamber, so that if he opens his chamber door, and takes it in the house, and goes away, it seems not to be burglary. And where A. enters into the house of B. in the night, by the doors open, and breaks open a chest, and steals goods without breaking an inner door; it is no burglary by the common law, because the chest is no part of the house: though it is felony ousted of clergy by statute 3 W. & M. c. 9; and if one break open a counter or cupboard, fixed to a house, it is burglary. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 554.

All out-buildings, as barns, stables, ware-houses, &c. adjoining to a house, are looked upon as part thereof, and consequently burglary may be committed in them. And if the ware-house, &c. be parcel of the mansion-house, and within the same, though not under the same roof, or contiguous, a burglary may be committed therein.—But an out-house occupied with, but separated from the dwelling-house by an open passage eight feet wide, and not within or connected by any fence, inclosing both, is not within the curtilage or homestead. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 12. n: 4 Comm. 225.

No burglary can be committed by breaking into any ground inclosed, or booth, or tent, &c. but by Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 9, clergy is taken from this offence.

3. In the day-time there is no burglary.—As to what is reckoned night, and what day for this purpose, antiently the day was accounted to begin only at sun rising, and to end immediately upon sun set; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be day light, or crepusculum enough begun or left to discern a man's face without, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moonlight; the malignity of the offence, not so properly arising from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night, when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless. 4 Comm. 224: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 1.

4. The breaking and entry must be with a felonious intent, otherwise it is only a trespass; and it is the same whether such intent be actually carried into execution, or only demonstrated by some attempt, of which the jury is to judge. And therefore such breaking and entry, with intent to commit a robbery, a murder, a rape, or any other felony, is burglary. Nor does it make any difference, whether the offence were felony at common law, or only created so by statute. 4 Comm. 227: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 18, 19.

One of the servants of the house opened his lady's chamber door, which was fastened with a brass bolt, with design to commit a rape; and it was ruled to be burglary, and the defendant was convicted and transported. Stran. 481: Kel. 67.

A servant embezzled money intrusted to his care; left ten guineas in his trunk: quitted his master's service; returned; broke and entered the house in the night, and took away the ten guineas, and adjudged no burglary. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 18 n. See vide 1 Show. 53.

5. Every man's house is considered as his castle, as well for defence against injury and violence, as for repose. 5 Co. 92.—To violate this security is considered of so atrocious a nature, that the alarmed inhabitant, whether he be an owner or a mere inmate, (Cro. Car. 544) is by Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 5, expressly permitted to repel the violence by the death of the assailants, without incurring the penalties even of excusable homicide.—For a course of time however, the life of a burglar was saved by the plea of clergy; but as the increase of national opulence furnished further temptations, additional terrors became necessary; therefore by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, clergy is taken away from the offence; and by Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, from accessories before the fact.

Still further to encourage the prosecution of offenders, it is enacted by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23, that whoever shall convict a burglar, shall be exempted from parish and ward offices, where the offence was committed. To this, Stats. 5 An. c. 31, and 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, have superadded a reward of 40*l.* And if an accomplice, being out of prison, shall convict two or more offenders, he is entitled also to a pardon of the felonies as enumerated in the act. See title Accessory.

See likewise Stats. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36: 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, and 18 Geo. 3. c. 19, which provide, That the charges of prosecuting and convicting a burglar shall be paid by the treasurer of the county where the burglary was committed, to the prosecutor, and poor witnesses.

To remove one inducement to the frequent commission of burglaries, Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 48, provides that buyers or receivers of stolen jewels, gold, or silver plate, where the stealing shall have been accompanied by burglary, (or robbery) may be tried and transported for fourteen years, before the conviction of the principal.

And to check this offence in its progress, Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 84, enacts, That any person apprehended, having upon him any pick-lock key, &c. or other implement, with intent to commit a burglary, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, within Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.

For further matter, See titles Clergy, Felony, Larceny, BURGL, Husbandmen. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 183.

BURIALS,

BURIALS. Persons dying are to be buried in woollen, on pain of forfeiting 5*l*. And assizes to be made of such burying before a justice, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3.

BURNETA. Cloth made of dyed wool. A burnet colour must be dyed; but brunus color may be made with wool without dying, which are called medleys or ruffets: Lyndeswood. Thus much is mentioned because this word is sometimes wrote bruneta.

BURNING IN THE HAND, Vide Branding.

BURNING of houses, out-houses, malicious burnings, &c. See title Arson—To the malicious burnings mentioned under title Arson, may be added, that by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, assaulting with intention to burn the garments of another in the public street, (by aqua-fortis, &c.) is punishable with transportation—By Stat. 23 & 24 Car. 2. c. 11: and 1 An. fl. 2. c. 9, to burn any ship to the prejudice of the owners or freighters; and by Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 12, to the prejudice of the underwriters, is made felony without clergy.—By Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 24, to burn the king's ships of war, or any of the arsenals or stores, &c. therein, is also made felony without clergy.—By Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 15, threatening by anonymous or fictitious letters, to burn houses, barns, &c. is felony without clergy.—As to penalty on servants setting fire to houses by negligence. See title Fire. See further titles Felony, N. y., Ships, Insurance.

BURNING TO DEATH, See titles Felony, Treason.

BURRO-HIUM, A burrock, or small wear over a river, where wheels are laid for the taking of fish. Cowel.

BURSARIA, The bursery, or exchequer of collegiate and conventual bodies; or the place of receiving and paying, and accounting by the bursarii, or bursers. Paraph. Antiq. p. 288. But the word bursarii did not only signify the bursars of a convent or college; but formerly stipendiary scholars were called by the name of bursarii, as they lived on the burse or fund, or public stock of the University. At Paris, and among the Cistercian monks, they were particularly termed by this name. Johan. Major. Gift Stat. lib. 1. c. 5.

BURSE, bur, a, cambium, basilica.] An exchange, or place of meeting of merchants.

BURSHOLDERS, See title Headborough.

BUSONES COMITAIUS: Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 1. Blount says b fones is used for barones.

BUSSA, A ship. Blount's Dict—The vessels used in the herring fisheries are called buffes and Smacks.

BUSSELLUS, A bushel; from buxa, butta, buttis, a standing measure: and hence butticella, butticellus, buffellus, a less measure. Some derive it from the old Fr. bouts, leather continents of wine; whence come our leather budget and bottles. Kanmer's Gloss.

BUSTA and BUSTUS, busca, and buscus, &c. See Brucia and Busula.

BUSTARD, A large bird of game, usually found on downs and plains, mentioned in the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 11. See title Game.

BUTCHERS. These were anciently compelled by statute to sell their meat at reasonable prices, or forfeit double the value, to be levied by warrant of two justices of peace, &c. And were not to buy any fat cattle to sell again, on pain of forfeiting the value; but this not to extend to selling calves, lambs, or sheep dead, from one butcher to another. Stat. 23 Ed. 3. c. 6.—By Stat.

2 & 3 E. 3. 15, (revived, continued and confirmed by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10, which is now expired, Butchers (and others) conspiring to sell their victuals at certain rates, are liable to 10*l*. penalty, or twenty days imprisonment, for the first offence—20*l*. or pillory for the second—and 40*l*. or pillory, and loss of ear for the third.—The offence to be tried by the sessions or leet.—See title Conspiracy.—By Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 3, no butcher shall stay any beast within any walled town, except Carlisle and Berwick.—By the ordinance for hoblers, insert. 1600, butchers are not to sell swine's flesh mangled, or flesh dead of the murrain.—By Stat. 5 C. 1. c. 1, butchers are not to sell or kill meat on Sunday.—By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21: and 9 An. c. 11, regulations are made as to the watering and gashing hides; and the selling putrified and rotten hides by butchers; and by the said Stat. 1 Jac. 1 no butcher shall be a tanner, or carrier.

See further titles Cattle; Forestalling; Villains.

BUTLER, See Butler.

BUTT, butticum.] A measure of wine, &c. well known among merchants, and containing 126 gallons of Malmsey wine, by Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

BUTLER and CHEESE.—By Stat. 9 H. 6. c. 8, A weigh of cheese shall contain thirty-two cloves, each clove 7*lb*. = 2 cwt. Every kilderkin of butter shall contain 112 pounds, the firkin 56, and pot 14 pounds of good butter, (every pound 160*z*.) besides the casks and pots; and old bad butter shall not be mixed with good, nor shall butter be repacked for sale, which incurs forfeiture of double value, &c. And sellers and packers of butter shall pack it in good casks, and set their names thereon, with the weight of the cask and butter, on pain of 10*s*. per cwt. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 26.—Buyers of butter are to put marks on casks; and persons opening them afterwards, or putting in other butter, &c. shall forfeit 20*s*. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 7. The said Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 7, also contains regulations to compel warehouse-keepers, weighers, searchers, and shippers, to receive all butter and cheese for the London market, without undue preference.—The Stats. 8 Geo. 1. c. 27: and 17 Geo. 2. c. 8, regulate the sale of butter; the former in the city of York, the latter at New Malton.—See titles Weights and Measures.

BUTTONS, Foreign buttons are not to be imported on penalty of 100*l*. on the importer, and 50*l*. on the seller, by Stats. 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 13: and 4 W. & M. c. 10.—And by the same statutes, a justice may issue his warrant to search for and seize the same.

By Stat. 10 W. 3. c. 2, No person shall make, sell, or set on, any buttons made of wood only, and turned in imitation of other buttons, under penalty of 40*s*. a dozen. A thimble of wire being added to the button makes no difference. Ed. Raym. 712.

By the said Stat. W. 3. no person shall make, sell, or set on, buttons made of cloth, or other stuffs of which clothes are usually made, on penalty of 40*s*.

By Stat. 8 An. c. 6, no taylor, or other person, shall make, sell, set on, use, or bind, on any clothes, any buttons or button holes of cloth, &c. on pain of 5*l*. a dozen—By this act no power is given to make distress.

Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 7, is said in burn's Justice, (title Buttons) to be a loose, injudicious, ungrammatical act, and which by its verb may seem to have been drawn up by taylor, or button makers. This act imposes, (indulgent enough,) 40*s*. a dozen, on all such buttons; and button holes, with an exception of velvet; it seems levelled against the taylor only, but clothes with such buttons and button holes exposed to sale, are to be forfeited and seized.

By Stat. 7 Geo. 1. §. 1. c. 12, No person shall use, or wear, on any clothes, (velvet excepted) any such buttons or button holes, on pain of 40s. a dozen, half to the witness on whose oath they are convicted; an application of the penalty deservedly reprobated as nearly singular, and on a principle not reconcilable to the usual rules of evidence.—This statute is also incorrect, particularly in making no disposal of a moiety of the penalty, in case of conviction or confession by the party.

These acts are seldom enforced, and do not seem very consistent with general policy. See title Taylor.

BUTTS, The place where archers meet with their bows and arrows to shoot at a mark, which we call shooting at the butts. Also butts are the ends or short pieces of land in arable ridges and furrows: buttum terminus, a butt of land. See title Abbuttals.

BUTLERAGE OF WINES, See title Customs.

BUTHSCARLE, butscarle, butcarle, (butcarle & butscarle.) Mariners or seamen. See Scot. & Marc. Clausum, fol. 184.

BUZONIS, The shaft of an arrow, before it is flegged or feathered. St. Ed. 1.

BYE, Words ending in by or bee, signify a dwelling place or habitation, from the Sax. by, habitatio.

BY-LAWS, bilagines, from Sax. by, pagus, civitas, and lagen, lex. i. e. the laws of cities, Spelm. v. bellagines. Or perhaps laws made abiter, or by the by.] Certain orders and constitutions of corporations, for the governing of their members; of courts leet and court-baron; commoners or inhabitants in villis, &c. made by common assent, for the good of those that made them, in particular cases, whereunto the public law doth not extend; so that they lay restrictions on the parties, not imposed by the common or statute law: guilds and fraternities of trades, by letters-patent of incorporation, may likewise make by-laws, for the better regulation of trade among themselves, or with others. Kitch 45, 72: 6 Rep. 63.

In Scotland those laws are called laws of by-law, or by-law; which are made by neighbours elected by common consent in the by-law courts, wherein knowledge is taken of complaints betwixt neighbour and neighbour; which men so chosen are judges and arbitrators, and styled by-law-men. And by-laws, according to Skene, are leges rusticorum, laws made by husbandmen, or townships, concerning neighbourhood amongst them. Skene, pag. 33.

The power of making By-laws, being included in the very act of incorporating a corporation; and most by-laws being made by corporations, it seems more regular to consider the nature and effect of them under that head. See title Corporations.

In this place therefore we shall chiefly consider, 1, who may make by laws, and 2, the general requisites of them.

1. The inhabitants of a town, without any custom, may make ordinances or by-laws, for repairing of a church, or highway, or any such thing, which is for the general good of the Public: and in such cases, the greater part shall bind all: though if it be for their own private profit, as for the well ordering of their common, or the like; they cannot make by-laws without a custom to warrant it; and if there be a custom, the greatest part shall not bind the rest in these cases, unless it be warranted by the custom. 5 Rep. 63.—A custom to make a by-law, may be alleged in an ancient city or borough—So in an upland town, which is neither city nor borough. 1 Inst. 110 b: Cro. Car. 498: Hob. 212.

The freeholders in a court leet may make By-laws relating to the public good, which shall bind every one within the leet. 2 Daro. 457: Mo. 579, 584. And a court-baron may make By-laws, by custom, and add a penalty for the non-performance of them.—So by custom the tenants of a manor may make by-laws for the good order of the tenants. 1 Ro. Ab. 366. l. 35: Mo. 75: Hob. 212.—So may the homage. 1 Ro. Ab. Dy. 322 (a). But not without a custom. Sav. 74.—And a custom that the steward with the consent of the homage may make them, is not good. 3 Lev. 49.

2. All By-laws are to be reasonable; and ought to be for the common benefit, and not private advantage of any particular persons; and must be consonant to the public laws and statutes, as subordinate to them. And by Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 7, By-laws made by corporations are to be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40l.

A By-law may be reasonable, though the penalty be to be paid to those who make the By-law. 1 Salk. 397. And generally it shall be reasonable, if it be for the public good of the corporation. Carth. 482.

By laws made in restraint of trade are not favoured, but the distinction between such as are made to restrain, and those made to regulate trade seems very nice. See title Corporation.—Under a general power to make by-laws, a by-law cannot be made to restrain trade. 1 Burr. 12.—A custom that no foreign tradesman shall use or exercise a trade in a town, &c. will warrant that which a grant cannot do; and where custom has restrained, a by-law may be made that upon composition foreigners may exercise a trade. Carter 120. See 4 Burr. 1951.

So By-laws may regulate, but not totally restrain a private right, as in cases of common, &c. See Com. Dig. title By Law, (B. 2.) and (C. 4.)

If a By-law impose a charge without any apparent benefit to the party, it will be void. R. Raym. 328.—And a By-law being entire, if it be unreasonable for any particular, shall be void for the whole, 2 Vent. 183.

A By-law cannot impose an oath, nor empower any person to administer it. Str. 536.

Where By-laws are good, notice of them is not necessary, because they are presumed for the better government and benefit of all persons living in those particular limits where made; and therefore all persons therein are bound to take notice of them. 1 Lut. v. 404: Cro. Car. 498: 5 Mod. 442: 1 Salk. 142: Carth. 484.

If a By-law does not mention how the penalty shall be recovered, debt lies for it. 1 Ro. Ab. 366. l. 48. See 5 Co. 64: Hob. 279.—Or action on the case on assumpsit. 2 Lev. 252.—It seems that a By-law to levy the penalty by distress, sale, or imprisonment, is void, unless by custom. See Com. Dig. title By Law, (D. 2.) (E. 1, 2.)

The court of K. B. will not enter into a question on the validity of a By-law, on the return of a hab. cor. cum causa, from any Corporation except the city of London, where it always doth; but the plaintiff must declare there, and defendant may demur if he has objections to the By-law. 2 Burr. 775.

CABALEA, from the Lat. caballus. Belonging to a horse. Domestica.

CABBAGES; See Turnips.

CABLISH, cablicium. Signifies brushwood, according to the writers of the forest laws: but Spelman thinks it more properly windfall-wood, because it was written of old cadibulum, from cadere: or if derived from the Fr. cabillis, it also must be windfall-wood.

CABLES for shipping; made of old or damaged materials, liable to forfeiture; and the regulations for manufacturing them settled by Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 56.

CACHEPOLUS or CACHERELLUS, An inferior bailiff, & catchpole. See Constitution. domus de Parendu. MS. fol. 23: and Thorn.

CADE, Of herrings is 500, of sprats 1000. But it is said, that anciently 600 made the cade of herrings, and six score to the hundred, which is called Magnum Centum.

CADET, The younger son of a gentleman; particularly applied to a volunteer in the army, waiting for some post.

CAEP GILDUM, See Caepgilde.

CAGIA, A cage or coop for birds. Rev. Clauf. 38 H. 3.

CALANGIUM AND CALANGIA, A challenge, claim, or dispute. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 225.

CALCETUM, CALCEA, A causey or common hard way, maintained and repaired with stones and rubbish, from the Lat. calx, chalk, Fr. chaux, whence their chaussée and our causeway, or path raised with earth, and paved with chalk-stones, or gravel. Calcearium operationes were the work and labour done by the adjoining tenants: and calcagium was the tax or contribution paid by the neighbouring inhabitants towards the making and repairing such common roads; from which some persons were especially exempted by royal charter. Kenner's Gloss.

CALEFAGIUM, A right to take fuel yearly. Blount.

CALENDAR. See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 23, for the establishment of the new stile, and Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, which enacts, that the opening of common lands, and other things depending on the moveable feasts shall be according to the new calendar. See title Distress, Year.

CALENDAR MONTH, Consists of 30 or 31 days, (except Feb. 28, and in Leap-year 29,) according to the calendar. See the preceding article, and Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 7. See title Time.

CALENDAR OR PRISONERS, A list of all the prisoners' names, in the custody of each respective sheriff. Where prisoners are capitally convicted at the assize, the judge may command execution to be done, without any writ. And the usage now is, for the judge to sign the calendar, which contains all the prisoners' names, with their several judgments in the margin, and this calendar is left with the sheriff. As, for a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, "hanged by the neck." Formerly in the days of Latin and abbreviation,

-Vol. I.

"for call" for "for call." Statute-book. P. C. 188. See 1 Comm. 465, and the Trist. Bk. Pardon.

CALENDS, calende. Among the Romans was the first day of every month, being spoken of it by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happens together; and if prima, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month: as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month, which comes so much before the month named; as the tenth calende of October is the tenth day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, the twentieth day of September makes the tenth day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following month. Klapp's Concord, p. 69. In the dates of deeds, the day of the month, by ones, ides, or calende, is sufficient. 2 Inst. 675. See Idem.

CALIBURNE, The famous sword of the great King Arthur. Bruden and Bruden in Vita R.

CALICO, No person shall wear in apparel any printed or dyed calico, on pain of forfeiting 5*l*. And whoever selling any such calico, shall forfeit 20*l*. But this doth not extend to calicoes dyed all blue. Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 7. Persons may wear stuff, made of linen yarn, and cotton wool, manufactured and printed with any colours in Great Britain; so as the warp be all linen yarn, without incurring any penalty, by Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 4.—By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 72, stuffs wholly made of raw cotton wool within this kingdom, are not to be considered as calicoes, and every person may use the same. These are distinguished by three blue stripes in the selvage. See title Linen, and Burn J. title Excise X.

CALLING THE PLAINTIFF, It is usual for a plaintiff, when he or his counsel perceives that he has not given evidence sufficient to maintain his issue, or he voluntarily non-fitted, or withdraw himself: whereupon the clerk is ordered to call the plaintiff; when neither he nor any for him appears. See title Nonfit, Trial.

CALLS, The king's highway mentioned in some of our ancient authors. Huntingdon. lib. 1.

CAMBRICK, There were formerly several statutes against the importation and sale of Cambricks, or French lawns. (Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 36, 21 Geo. 3. c. 26;) but now by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, 27 Geo. 3. c. 34, § 19, Cambricks, or French lawns, legally imported, may be worn, or sold, and no person shall be prosecuted for having the same in his possession.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 37, and 7 Geo. 3. c. 41, several regulations are made concerning the manufacturing and stamping cambricks and lawns made in England; and forbidding counterfeiting the same is felony without clergy. See further titles Linen, Navigation Acts.

CAMERA,

CAMERA, From the old Germ. Cam. Cammen, crooked; whence comes our English kembo, arms in kembo. But camera, as first signified any winding or crooked plat of ground; as nam camera terre, i. e. a nook of land. De Feud. Afterwards the word was applied to any vaulted or arched building; and it was used in the Latin law proceedings, for the judge's chamber, &c. Camera Stellata, the Star Chamber, &c.

CANCELLING DEEDS AND WILLS, See those titles.

CANDLES AND CHANDLERS, If any wax-chandlers mix with their wares any thing deceitfully, &c. the candles shall be forfeited. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8. Tallow-chandlers and wax-chandlers, are by Stat. 24 Geo. 3. A. 2. c. 41, to take out annual licenses. And by Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 74, makers of candles shall be only such persons as are rated to the parish rates. The duties are regulated by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. (2d. per lb. of which was repealed by Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 7.)—These duties, and the various regulations to enforce them, form one of the numerous branches of the Excise laws, and depend on a variety of statutes; a provision in one of which is not much known, though generally interesting, viz. "during the continuance of the duties upon candles, no person shall use in the inside of his house any lamp, wherein any oil or fat, (other than oil made of fish within Great Britain) shall be burned for giving light, on pain of 40*s.* Stat. 8 An. c. 9. § 18. The makers of candles are not to use melting-houses without making a true entry, on pain of 100*l.* and to give notice of making candles to the Excise officer for the duties, and of the number, &c. or shall forfeit 50*l.* Stats. 8 An. c. 9: 11 Geo. 1. cap. 30: Vide Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 21.

CANDELMAS-DAY, The feast of the purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, being the second day of February, instituted in memory and honour of the purification of the virgin in the temple of Jerusalem, and the presentation of our blessed Lord. It is called Candlemas, or a Mass of candles, because before mass was said that day, the Romish Church consecrated and set apart, for sacred use, candles for the whole year; and made a procession with hallowed candles in remembrance of the divine light, which with our Saviour illuminated the whole church at his presentation in the temple.

This festival is no day in court, for the judges sit not; and it is the grand day in that term of all the inn of court, whereas the judges anciently observed many ceremonies, and the societies danced to us with each other, in sumptuous entertainments, accompanied with musick, and almost all kinds of diversions.

CANON, A law or ordinance of the church; from the Greek word canon, a rule.

THE CANON LAW consists partly of certain rules taken out of the scriptures; partly of the writings of the ancient fathers of the church; partly of the ordinances of general and provincial councils; and partly of the decrees of the Popes in former ages. And it is contained in two principal parts, the decrees and the decretals: the decrees are ecclesiastical constitutions made by the Pope and Cardinals, and were first gathered by Ivo bishop of Canterbury, who lived about the year 1114, but afterwards perfected by Gratian, a Benedictine monk, in the year 1149, and allowed by Pope Eugenius, to be read in schools, and alledged for law. They are the most ancient, as having their beginning from the time of Constantine the Great, the first Christian Emperor of Rome.

The decretals are canonical epistles written by the Pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons for the ordering and determining of some matter of controversy, and have the authority of a law; and of these there are three volumes, the first whereof was compiled by Raymondus Baroniinus, chaplain to Gregory the Ninth, and at his command about the year 1231. The second volume is the work of Boniface the Eighth, collected in the year 1298. And the third volume, called the Clementines, was made by Pope Clement the Fifth, and published by him in the council of Vienna, about the year 1308. And to these may be added some novel constitutions of John the 22d, and some other bishops of Rome.

As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities and decrees of ecclesiastical persons with their manner of election, ordination, &c. so the decretals contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts; and the first title in every of them, is the title of the Blessed Trinity, and of the catholic faith, which is followed with constitutions and customs, judgments and determinations in such matters and causes as are liable to ecclesiastical cognizance, the lives and conversation of the clergy, of matrimony and divorces, inquisition of criminal matters, purgation, penance, excommunication, &c. But some of the titles of the canon law are now out of use, and belong to the common law; and others are introduced, such as trial of wills, bastardy, defamation, &c.

Trial of tithes were anciently in all cases had by the ecclesiastical law; though at this time this law only takes place in some particular cases.

Thus much for the canon law in general; and as to the canon laws of this kingdom, by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8.

of the revenue and consents of the king. 1. Stat. 1. c. 1. It is declared that all canons not repugnant to the king's prerogative, nor to the laws, statutes and customs of the realm, shall be used and executed.

As for the canons made by the clergy under Jas. 1. A. D. 1604, and never confirmed in parliament, it has been solemnly adjudged upon the principles of law and the constitution, that where they are not merely declaratory of the ancient canon law, but are introductory of new regulations, they do not bind the laity: whereas regard the clergy may think proper to pay them. Sive. 1057.

Lord Hardwicke cites the opinion of Lord Holt, and declares it is not denied by any one, that it is very plain all the clergy are bound by the canons, confirmed by the king only; but they must be confirmed by the parliament to bind the laity. 2 Atk. 605.—Hence if the Archbishop of Canterbury grants a dispensation to hold two livings distinct from each other, more than thirty miles, no advantage can be taken of it by lapse, or otherwise in the temporal courts; for the restriction to thirty miles was introduced by a canon made since the Stat. 25 H. 8. See 2 Black. Rep. 968.

There are four species of courts in which the canon laws, (and the civil laws also, See title Civil Laws;) are permitted under different restrictions to be used. 1. The courts of the archbishops and bishops, and their derivative officers; usually called in our law Courts Christian, or the Ecclesiastical Courts.—2. The military courts, or Courts of Chivalry.—3. The Courts of Admiralty.—4. The Courts of the two Universities. In all, the reception of those laws in general, and the different degrees of that reception, are grounded entirely upon custom; corroborated as to the Universities by act of parliament, ratifying those charters which confirm their customary laws. 1 Comm. 83.

For the peculiar jurisdiction, &c. of these courts. See this Dict. title Courts.—The following particulars relate to them all, and to this subject, in general.

1. The courts of common law, have the superintendency over these courts; to keep them within their jurisdictions, to determine wherein they exceed them, to restrain and prohibit such excess; and in case of contumacy, to punish the officer who executes, and in some cases the judge who enforces, the sentence so declared to be illegal. See titles Jurisdiction; Prohibition.

2. The common law has reserved to itself the exposition of all such statutes, as concern either the extent of these courts, or the matters depending before them. And therefore if these courts either refuse to allow those acts of parliament, or will expound them in any other sense than what the law puts on them, the courts at Westminster will grant prohibitions to restrain and controul them. See title Statutes.

3. An appeal lies from all these courts to the king in the last resort; which proves that the jurisdiction exercised in them, is derived from the crown of England, and not from any foreign potentate, or intrinsic authority of their own. See Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21.

From these three strong marks and ensigns of superiority, it appears beyond a doubt that the canon (and civil) laws, though admitted in some cases by custom in some courts, are only subordinate, et legi sub jacentia; and that thus admitted, restrained, altered, newmodelled and amended, they serve to make a distinct independent branch of law, but inferior branches of the ordinary or universal law of England, properly called the King's Ecclesiastical, Military, Maritime, or Admiralty Law. 1 Comm. 84.

CANON RELIGIOSORUM. A book wherein the Religion of each order had a full transcript of the rules of their order, which were frequently read among them as their local statutes; and this book was therefore called Regula and Canon. The public books of the religious were the four following: 1. Missal, which contained all their offices of devotion. 2. Martryologium, a register of their peculiar saints and martyrs, with the place and time of passion. 3. Canon or Regula, the institution and rules of their order. 4. Necrologium or Obituarium, in which they entered the deaths of their founders and benefactors, to observe the days of commemoration of them. Kamer's Gloss.

CANTEL, cautelum.] Seems to signify the same with what we now call lump, as to buy by measure, or by the lump; but according to Blount it is that which is added above measures. Sep. de Pysor. cap. 9. Also a piece of any thing, as a canal of bread, and the like.

CANTRED, cantredus, a British word from cant, or castrum, Brit. castrum, and trek, a town or village. In Wales an hundred villager: for the Welsh divide their counties into cantreds, as the English do into hundreds. This word is used Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 3.—See Max. Angl. part. 1. fol. 319, where it is written Kantrep.

CAPACITY, capacitas.] An ability, or fitness to receive; and in law it is where a man, or body politick, is able to give or take lands, or other things, or to sue actions. Our law allows the king two capacities, a natural and a politick: in the first, he may purchase lands to him and his heirs; in the latter, to him and his successors. An alien born hath sufficient capacity to sue in any personal action, and is capable of personal estate; but he is not capable of lands of inheritance. See title Alien. Persons attainted of treason or felony, idiots, lunatics, infants, feme covert without their husbands, &c. are not capable to make any deed of gift, grant or conveyance, unless it be in some special cases. Ex. Lit. 171, 172.—See titles Age, Infant, and other suitable titles.

CAPE, Lat.] A writ judicial, touching plea of lands or tenements; so termed, as most writs are, of that ward in it, which carries the chief intention or end thereof; and this writ is divided into capa magnum and capa parvum, both of which concern things immovable. Termes de la ley.

CAPE MAGNUM, or the grand cape. Is a writ that lies before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant: and in the Old Nat. Brev. it is defined to be, where a man hath brought a praecipe quod reddat of a thing touching plea of land, and the tenant makes default at the day to him given in the original writ, then this writ shall go for the king to take the land into his hands; and if the tenant come not at the day given him thereby, he loseth his land, &c. See Reg. Jud. fol. 1: Bract. lib. 3. tract. 3. c. 1.

CAPE PARVUM, or petit cape. Is where the tenant is summoned in plea of land, and comes on the summons, and his appearance is recorded; if at the day given him he prays the view, and having it granted makes default; then this writ shall issue for the king, &c. Old Nat. Bro. 162. The difference between the grand cape and petit cape is, that the grand cape is awarded upon the tenant's not appearing or demanding the view in such real actions, where the original writ does not mention the particulars demanded; and the petit cape is after appearance or view granted; but whereas the grand cape summons the tenant to answer for the default, and likewise over to the demandant; petit cape summons the tenant to answer the default only: and therefore it is called petit cape; though some say it hath its name, not because it is of small force, but by reason it consists of few words. Reg. Jud. fol. 2. Fluk. lib. 2. c. 44. Termes de la ley.

CAPE.

CAPE AD VALENTIAM. This is a species of cape magnam, and is where I am impleaded of lands, and vouch to warrant another, against whom the summons ad warrantandum hath been awarded; and if he comes not on the day given; then if the demandant recover against me, I shall have this writ against the vouchor, and recover so much in value of the lands of the vouchor, if he hath so much; if not, I shall have execution of such lands and tenements as shall after descend to him in fee; or if he purchases afterwards, I shall have redemption in a redemption, &c. And this writ lies before appearance. Old Nat. Bro. 161.—See title Fine and Recovery.

CAPELLA. Before the word chapel was restrained to an oratory or depending place of divine worship: it was used also for any sort of chest, cabinet, or other repository of precious things, especially of religious reliques. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 380.

CAPELLUS. A cap, bonnet, or other covering for the head. Treasures, p. 32. Capellus ferreus, an helmet or iron head-piece. Hoveden, p. 61. Capellus militis is likewise an helmet or military head-piece. Conferend. Dicitur de Parochon, MS. fol. 21.

CAPIAS. A writor process of two sortes; one whereof in the court of C. P. is called capias ad respondendum, before judgment, where an original is sued out; &c. to take the defendant and make him answer the plaintiff: and the other a writ of execution, after judgment, being of divers kinds, as capias ad satisfaciendum, capias ulagatum, &c.

The CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM in C. B. is drawn from the præcipe, which serves both for the original and capias, and the return of the original is the test of the capias. If a capias be special, in case, covenant, &c. the cause of action must be recited at large, and the substance of the intended declaration set forth, as also in the original.

This Capias is a writ commanding the sheriff to take the body of the defendant, if he may be found in his bailiwick or county, and him safely to keep, so that he may have him in court, on the day of the return to answer to the plaintiff of a plea of debt, trespass, &c. as the case may be.

In cases of injury accompanied with force, the law, to punish the breach of the peace, and prevent its disturbance, provided a process against the defendant's person, in case he neglected to appear on the process of attachment against his goods, or had no substance whereby to be attached; (See titles Attachmenta domum and Processus.) subjecting his body to imprisonment by this writ of Capias ad respondendum. 3 Rep. 12. But the immunity of the defendant's person, in case of præsumptio, though fraudulent injuries, producing a great contempt of the law in indigent wrong-doers, a capias was also allowed to arrest the person in actions of assumpsit, though no breach of the peace be suggested by Stat. Marth. 2. c. 23. Westm. 2. 23. E. 1. c. 12. In actions of debt and detinue by Stat. 25. E. 3. c. 17. And in all actions on the case by Stat. 19. H. 7. c. 6.

Before this last statute, a practice had been introduced of commencing the suit, by bringing an original writ of trespass quare clausum fregit, for breaking the plaintiff's close vi et armis; which by the old common law, subjected the defendant's person to be arrested by writ of capias; and then afterwards by connivance of the court, the plaintiff might proceed to prosecute for any other less forcible injury. This practice (through custom rather than necessity, and for saving some trouble and expence, in suing out a special original adapted to the particular injury,) still continues in almost all cases, except in actions of debt; though now by virtue of the above and other statutes, a capias might be had upon almost every species of complaint. See titles Common Pleas, Assumpsit, Processus.

It is now also usual in practice to sue out the capias in the first instance, on a supposed return of the sheriff, (that the defendant being summoned or attached, made default, or that he had no substance whereby to be attached); and afterwards a fictitious original is drawn up, if the party is called upon so to do, with a proper return thereupon, in order to give the proceedings a colour of regularity. When this capias is delivered to the sheriff, he, by his under-sheriff, grants a warrant to his bailiffs to execute it.

If the sheriff of the county in which the injury is supposed to be committed, and the action is laid, cannot find the defendant in his jurisdiction, he returns non est inventus; whereupon another writ issues, called a testatum capias, directed to the sheriff of the county where the defendant is supposed to reside, reciting the former writ, and that it is refused, testatum est, that the defendant lurks or wanders in his bailiwick, wherefore he is commanded to take him, as in the former capias. Here also when the action is brought in one county, and the defendant lives in another, it is usual for saving trouble, time and expence, to make out a testatum capias at the first; supposing not only an original, but also a former capias to have been granted. And this fiction being beneficial to all parties, is readily acquiesced in, and is now become the settled practice.

But where the defendant absconds, and the plaintiff would proceed to an outlawry against him, an original writ must then be sued out regularly, and after that a capias. And if the sheriff cannot find the defendant upon the first writ of capias, and returns a non est inventus, there issues out an alias writ, and after that a pluries, to the same effect as the former; only after these words, We command you, this clause is inserted, as we have formerly, [or often] commanded you, sicut alias, or pluries præcepimus. See further title Outlawry. On the subject also of process in C. P. See this Dist. title Common Pleas, and 3 Comm. 284 &c.

A CAPIAS is also in use in criminal cases. The proper process on an indictment for any petty misdemeanor, or on a penal statute, is a writ of venire facias, which is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear. And

CAPIAS.

And by the Statute to that effect, it appears, that the party taken under the writ, whether he may be detained there a certis diebus, until he is bailed from time to time till he appears. But if the sheriff returns that he hath no lands in his bailiwick, then upon his non-appearance, a writ of capias shall issue, which commands the sheriff to take his body, and have him at the next assize; and if he cannot be taken upon the first capias, an alias and a pluries shall issue. But an indictment for treason or felony; a capias is, the first process; and for treason or homicide, only one shall be allowed to issue, or two in the case of other felonies, by Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 14; though the usage is to issue only one in any felony; the provisions of this statute being in most cases found impracticable. 2 H. P. C. 195.—And so in the case of misdemeanors, it is now the usual practice for any judge of the court of K. B. upon certificate of an indictment found, to award a writ of capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant. But in this, as in civil cases, if he absconds, and it is thought proper to pursue him to an outlawry, a greater exactness is necessary. 4 Comm. 318. See title Outlawry.

CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM, (Shortly termed a Ca. Sa.) A judicial writ which issues out on the record of a judgment, where there is a recovery in the courts at Westminster, of debt, damages, &c. And by this writ the sheriff is commanded to take the body of the defendant in execution, and him safely to keep, so that he have his body in court at the return of the writ, to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and damages. Vide 1 Lill. Abr. 249. And if he does not then make satisfaction he must remain in custody till he does. When the body is taken upon a ca. sa. and the writ is returned and filed, it is an absolute and perfect execution of the highest nature against the defendant, and no other execution can be afterwards had against his lands or goods: except where a person dies in execution, when his lands and goods are liable to satisfy the judgment, by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. See Rel. Abr. 904.

Properly speaking this writ cannot be sued out against any but such as were liable to be taken upon the capias mentioned in the preceding article. 3 Rep. 12: 356, 367. The intent of it is to imprison the body of the debtor, till satisfaction be made for the debt, costs and damages; this writ therefore doth not lie against any privileged persons, peers, or members of parliament; nor against executors or administrators; (except on a debt returned by the sheriff. 1 Lill. 250.) nor against such other persons as could not be originally held to bail.

This writ may be sued out, (as may all other executory process) for costs, against a plaintiff as well as a defendant, where judgment is had against him.

In case two persons are bound jointly and severally, and prosecuted in two courts, whereupon the plaintiff hath judgment, and execution by ca. sa. against one of them; if he after have an elegit against the other, and his lands and goods are delivered upon it, then he that is in prison shall have audita querela. Hob. 2, 57. Where one taken on a ca. sa. escapes from the sheriff, and no return is made of the writ, nor any record of the award of the capias; the plaintiff may bring a scire fac. against him, and on that what execution he will. Rel. 904. And if the defendant rescue himself, the plaintiff shall have a new capias, the first writ not being returned. Ibid. 901.

CAPITE.

If a defendant cannot be taken upon a ca. sa. in the county where the action is laid, there may thus a habeas corpus be taken into another county, and so of the other writs. See title Capias.

For further matter, see title Executions, Pluries, &c.

CAPIAS ULTRA VIAM. It is a writ that lies against a person who is outlawed in any action, by which the sheriff is commanded to apprehend the body of the party outlawed, for not appearing upon the return, and keep him in safe custody till the day of return, and then present him to the Court, there to be dealt with for his contempt; who, in the Common Pleas, was in former times to be committed to the Fleet, there to remain till he had paid out the king's pardon, and appeared to the action. And by a special capias ultra viam (against the body, lands, and goods in the same writ) the sheriff is commanded, so that all the defendant's lands, goods and chattels, for the contempt to the king; and the plaintiff, (after an inquisition taken thereupon, and returned into the Exchequer) may have the lands extended, and a grant of the goods, &c. whereby to compel the defendant to appear; which when he doth, if he reverse the outlawry, the same shall be restored to him. Old Nat. Br. 154. When a person is taken upon a capias ultra viam, the sheriff is to take an attorney's engagement to appear for him, where special bail is not required; and his bond with sureties to appear, where it is required. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. See Outlawry.

CAPIAS PRO FINE. Anciently, when judgment was given in favour of the plaintiff, in any action in the king's courts, it was considered that the plaintiff be arrested for his willful delay of justice, or capias pro fine, till he paid a fine to the king, considering it as a public misdemeanor coupled with the private injury. But now in cases of trespass, ejectment, assault and false imprisonment, it is provided, by Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 12, that no writ of capias shall issue for the fine, nor any fine be paid; but the plaintiff shall pay 6 s. 8 d. to the proper officer, and be allowed it against the defendant among his other costs. See title Judgments. See also title Fines for Offences.

CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM. A writ lying (where a distress taken is driven out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot make deliverance in replevin,) commanding the sheriff to take as many beasts of the distrainer, &c. Reg. Orig. 82, 83. See titles Distress; Withernam.

CAPITULUM. See title Capias pro fine.

CAPITA, distribution per j. i. e. To every man an equal share of personal estate, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jura representationis. See title Executor, V. 8.

CAPITA, Succession per j. Where the claimants are next in degree to the ancestor, in their own right, and not by right of representation. See title Descent.

CAPITALE. A thing which is stolen, or the value of it. Leg. H. 1. cap. 59.

CAPITALE VIVENS. Live cattle. Leg. Athelstan.

CAPITE, from caput, i. e. Refr. unde tenere in capite, & tenere de capite, omnium terrarum capite. TENURE IN CAPITE, was an ancient tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately as of the crown, whether by knight's service, or in socage. This tenure was likewise called, tenure holding of the person of the king; and a person might hold of the king, and not in capite; that is, not immediately of the crown, but by means means of some honour, castle, or manor belonging to it. According to Kitchin, one might hold land of the king by knight's service, and not in capite; because it might be held of some honour in the king's hands, descended to him from his ancestors, and not immediately of the king, as of his crown. Kitch. 129: Dyer 44: P. N. R. 5.

The very ancient tenure in capite, was of two sorts; the one principal and general, and the other special or subaltern; the principal and general was of the king as caput regni, et caput generalissimum, omnium feodorum, the fountain whence all feuds and tenures have their main original: the special was of a particular subject, as caput feudi, seu terre illius, so called from his being the first that granted the land in such manner of tenure; from whence he was styled capitalis dominus, &c. But tenure in capite is now abolished; and by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. All tenures are turned into free and common socage: so that tenures hereafter to be created by the king are to be in common socage only; and not by capite, knight's service, &c. Blount. See title Tenures.

CAPITULITIMUM, Poll-money. Blount.

CAPITITUM, A covering for the head. It is mentioned in the Stat. 1 Hen. 4. and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses shall be worn by all degrees of persons.

CAPITULI AGRI, The head-lands, lands that lie at the head or upper end of the lands or furrows. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 137.

CAPITULA RURALIA, Assemblies or chapters held by rural deans and parochial clergy within the precinct of every distinct deanery; which at first were every three weeks, afterwards once a month, and more solemnly once a quarter. Cowell.

CAPTAIN, capitaneus.] One that leadeth or hath the command of a company of soldiers: and is either general, as he that hath the governance of the whole army: or special, as he that leads but one band.—There is also another sort of captains. Qui urbium preefecti sunt, &c. Blount.

CAPTION, captio.] That part of a legal instrument, as a commission, indictment, &c. which shews where, when, and by what authority it is taken, found or executed. Thus when a commission is executed, the commissioners subscribe their names to a certificate, declaring when and where the commission was executed.—These kind of captions relate chiefly to business of three kinds, i. e. to commissions to take fines of lands, to take answers in chancery, and depositions of witnesses: on the taking of a fine it is thus.—Taken and acknowledged the — day of, &c. at, &c.—The word caption is also used (rather vulgarly) for an arrest.—See title Indictments.

CAPTIVES. An act was made for relief of captives, taken by Turkish, Moorish, and other pirates, and to prevent taking of others in time to come. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 24. See title Negro; Slavery.

CAPTURE, captura.] The taking of a prey, an arrest, or seizure: and it particularly relates to prizes taken by privateers, in time of war. See title Admiral, Insurance, Navy, Privateer.

CAPUTAGIUM Some think this word signifies head poll-money, or the payment of it: but it seems rather what we otherwise call chevageum.

CAPUT ANNI, New-year's day, upon which of old was observed the solemn Quinquagesima.

CAPUT BARONIE, In the castle or chief seat of a nobleman; which descends to the eldest daughter, if there be no son, and must not be divided amongst the daughters, like unto lands, &c. See title Coparceners, Dowry.

CAPUT JEJUNII, In our records is used for Ash Wednesday, being the head, or first day of the beginning of the Lent-Fast. Paroch. Antiq. p. 131.

CAPUT LOCI, The head or upper end of any place; ad caput ville, at the end of the town.

CAPUT LUPINUM, Anciently an outlawed felon was said to have caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf.—Now the wilful killing of such a one would be murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497: Vide Bracton fo. 125.—See title Outlawry.

CAR AND CHAR, The names of places beginning with car and char signify a city, from the Brit. caer, Crutis; as Carlisle, &c.

CARAVANNA, A caravan, or joint company of travellers in the Eastern countries, for mutual conduct and defence. Gaufrid. Pinesau Richards Regis, Iter Hierosol. lib. 5. cap. 52.

CARCAN, Is sometimes expounded for a pillory; as is carcanum for a prison. LL. Canon. Regis.

CARCATUS, Loading; a ship freighted. Pat. 10 R. 2.

CARDS AND DICE. A duty of two shillings (four six-pences) is imposed on all playing cards; and a duty of fifteen shillings (two 5s. and two 2s. 6d.) by Stat. 9 Ann. c. 23: 29 Geo. 2. c. 13: 16 Geo. 3. c. 34: and 29 Geo. 3. c. 30.—These duties are under the control of the Stamp Commissioners.

By Stat. 10 Ann. c. 19, No playing cards or dice shall be imported.—Selling second-hand cards incurs a penalty of 20s. Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 13. § 10; and of 5s. per pack by Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 34.—Several other regulations are made by statute to prevent frauds in manufacturing the above articles.—If cards or dice unstamped are used in any publick gaming house, a penalty of 5s. attaches on the seller. 10 Ann. c. 19. § 162.—See also Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 9—17.

CARECTA AND CARECTATA. A cart and cart-load. Man. Angl. rem. 2. f. 340.

CARETARIUS, or CARECTARIUS, A carter. Blount. See Carretts.

CARISTIA, Dearth, scarcity, dearthness. Pat. 8 Ed. 1.

CARITAS, Ad caritatem, peculum caritatis.] A gracecup; or an extraordinary allowance of the best wine, or other liquor, wherein the religious at festivals drank in commemoration of their founders and benefactors. Cartular. Abat. Glaston. A. S. f. 29: See Cowell.—It is sometimes written Karrie.

CARK, A quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a sarper. Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 2.

CARLE See Karle.

CARNARIUM, A charnel house, or repository for the bones of the dead.

CARNO. This word hath been used for an immunity or privilege, as appears in Crompt. Jurisd fol. 191.

CARPEMEALS, Cloth made in the Northern parts of England, of a coarse kind; mentioned in 7 Jac. 1. cap. 16.

CARR,

CARRIER. II.

CARRIAGE, is called, in law, with wheels. Vide Commons. CARRIAGE. A weight of four pounds in diamonds. See Stat. 2 R. 2. c. 4. This word is in fact, was formerly used for any weight or burden.

CARRIAGE. A carriage, cart, or wain load; as Carriage is used in an old charter for a load of hay. See Stat. 2 R. 2. c. 4.

CARRIAGE. Closets, or apartments, for privacy and retirement. — Three pews or carrels, where every one of the old monks, after they had dined, did resort, and there study. Devil's Man. of Durham. p. 31.

CARRICK; or CARRACK, carrocha. A ship of great burden, so called of the Italian word carica or cargo, which signifies a burden or charge: it is mentioned in the Statute 2 R. 2. c. 4. They were not only used in trade, but also in war. See Walsingham. in Hen. 5. fol. 394.

CARRIER. A person that carries goods for others for his hire.

I. Who are to be considered as Carriers; and generally how chargeable.

II. For what Defaults unfavourable; and the Exceptions in their favour.

III. What Circumstances must concur to charge them.

I. All persons carrying goods for hire, as masters and owners of ships, lightermen, stage-coachmen, (but not hackney-coachmen in London,) and the like, come under the denomination of common carriers; and are chargeable on the general custom of the realm for their faults or miscarriages. See 1 Com. Rep. 25; Bull. N. P. 70. — And as to the duty and engagement of a carrier. See title Bailment 5. and V.

In an action on the case upon the custom of the realm against the defendant, master of a stage-coach, the plaintiff set forth, that he took a place in the coach for such a town, and that in the journey the defendant, by negligence, lost the plaintiff's trunk; upon Not-guilty pleaded, the evidence was, that the plaintiff gave the trunk to the man who drove the coach, who promised to take care of it, but lost it; and the question was, whether the master was chargeable; and adjudged that he was not, unless the master takes a price for the carriage of the goods as well as for the carriage of the person, and then he is within the custom as a carrier; that a master is not chargeable for the acts of his servant, but when they are done in execution of the authority given by the master, then the act of the servant is the act of the master, 1 Salk. 282. — But by the custom and usage of stages, every passenger pays for the carriage of goods above a certain weight; and there the coachman shall be charged for the loss of goods beyond such weight. 1 Com. Rep. 25.

If a common carrier loses goods he is intrusted to carry, a special action on the case lies against him, on the custom of the realm; and so of a common carrier by boat. 1 Rel. Abr. 6. An action will lie against a porter, carrier or bargeman, upon his bare receipt of the goods, if they are lost by negligence. 1 Sid. 36. Also a lighterman spoiling goods he is to carry, by letting water come to them, action on the case lies against him on the common custom. Palm 528.

If one be not a common carrier, and takes hire, he may be charged on a special assumpsit; for where hire is taken, a promise is implied. Cro. Jac. 262. So if a man take hire of a common carrier, and who is not to receive a premium, undertakes to carry goods for hire, he is answerable for any damages they may sustain through his neglect or default. This was the explicit point determined in Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Com. Rep. 25, 1 W. & A. 262.

Where a carrier entrusted with goods, opens the pack, and takes away and disposes of part of the goods, this, showing an intent of stealing them, will make him guilty of felony. H. P. C. 61. And it is the same if the carrier receives goods to carry them to a certain place, and carrieth them to some other place, and not to the place agreed. 3 Ass. 307. That is, if he do it, with intent to defraud the owner of them. If a carrier, after he hath brought goods to the place appointed, take them away privately, he is guilty of felony; for the possession which he received from the owner being determined, his second taking is in all respects the same as if he were a mere stranger. 1 Howk. P. C. c. 43. § 1. See Barbery, 201.

If a common carrier, who is offered his hire, and who has convenience, refuses to carry goods, he is liable to an action in the same manner as an innkeeper who refuses to entertain a guest, or a smith who refuses to shoe a horse. 2 Shew. Rep. 327. — But a carrier may refuse to admit goods into his warehouse at an unreasonable time, or before he is ready to take his journey. Ld. Raym. 652.

A common carrier may have action of trover or trespass for goods taken out of his possession by a stranger; he having a special property in the goods, and being liable to make satisfaction for them to the owner; and where goods are stolen from a carrier, he may bring an indictment against the felon as for his own goods; though he has only the possessory, and not the absolute property; and the owner may likewise prefer an indictment against the felon. Kel. 39.

By Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 1, Carriers are not to travel on the Lord's Day.

By the Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12, The justices are annually to assess the price of land-carriage of goods to be brought into any place within their jurisdiction, by any common carrier, who is not to take more, under the penalty of 5 l. And by the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 3, A carrier is not to take more, for carrying goods from any place in London, than is settled by the justices for the carrying goods from London to such a place, under the same penalty.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 8. sect. 9, Commissioners for regulating the navigation of the river Thames are to rate the price of water carriage.

By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 22. sect. 3, Justices of the city of London are to assess the rates of carrying goods between London and Westminster.

Carriers and waggoners are to write or paint on their waggons or carts their names and places of abode. See titles Carts, Highways.

II. At common law a carrier is liable by the custom of the realm to make good all losses of goods entrusted to him to carry, except such losses as arise (1) from the act of God, or inevitable accident; or (2) from the act of the king's enemies—to which may be added (3) the default of the party sending them. 1 Inst. 89; Coggs v. Bernard. 2 Ld. Raym. 909; E/p. N. P. 619.

1. Where

1. Where the defendant's boy in coming through London bridge, was by a sudden gust of wind driven against the arch and sunk, the owner of the boy was held not to be liable, the damage having been occasioned by the act of God, which no care of the defendant could provide against or foresee.—But in this case it was held that if the boy-man had gone out voluntarily in bad weather, so that there was a probability of his being lost, he would have been liable.—Amies v. Stephens, 1 Str. 128.

Upon this ground of its being the act of God, if a bargeman in a tempest, for the safety of the lives of his passengers, throws over-board any trunks or packages of value, he is not liable for the loss, 1 Rol. Rep. 79, and see Bull. 280, and 1 Vent. 190: 1 Wils. 281.

The defendant having lodged his waggon in an inn, an accidental fire broke out, which consumed it—he was adjudged liable; and it was held that negligence does not enter into the grounds of this action, for though the carrier uses all proper care, yet in case of a loss he is liable. Forward v. Pittard, 1 Term Rep. 27.

But where a common carrier, between two places, (Stourport and Manchester), employed to carry goods from one place to the other, is to be forwarded from thence to a third place (Stockport), carries them to Stourport, there put them in his warehouse, in which they were destroyed by an accidental fire, before he had an opportunity of forwarding them; in this case the carrier was held not to be liable, the keeping them in the warehouse in this case being not for the convenience of the carrier, but of the owner.

2. If a carrier is robbed, he shall be liable for the loss; not on the ground that he may charge the hundred under the statute of Winchester, but because if it were otherwise he might by collusion with robbers, defraud the owner of the goods; and so in other cases, where the grounds are the same. 1 Ro. Ab. 338: 1 Salk. 143.

But if a carrier be robbed of goods, either he or the owner may bring an action against the hundred, to make it good. 2 Saund. 380.

Where in the case of a master of a ship it appeared there was a sufficient crew for the ship, but that at night eleven persons boarded the ship as pirates, under pretence of pressing, and plundered her of the goods, it was adjudged the master (the ship being infra corpus comitatus) was liable, for superior force shall not excuse him. Morse v. Slue, 1 Vent. 109: 2 Lev. 69: 2 Mod. 85: Barclay v. Higgins, 1 Geo. 3; cited 1 Term Rep. 53.

3. In an action against a carrier, for negligently carrying a pipe of wine, which by that means burst, and the wine was spilt, it was good evidence for the defendant that the loss happened while he was driving quickly, and arose from the wine being in a ferment; so that the loss was occasioned by its being sent in that state. Bull. N. P. 74.—So if a carrier's waggon is full, and yet a person forces goods on him, and they are lost, the carrier is not liable. Lovett v. Hobbs, 2 Show. 127.

4. But the following exemptions by statute have been found necessary for the security of owners of ships.

By Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 15, No owners of any ship shall be liable to answer any loss, by reason of embarkment by the master or mariners, of any [gold, silver, &c. see now post Stat. 26 Geo. 3. or other] goods shipped on board, or for any act done by the master or mariners, without the owner's privity; beyond the value of the ship and freight.

By Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 25, No owner of any ship shall be subject to make good any loss by reason of any robbery, embarkment, stealing or making away with any gold, silver, jewels, diamonds, precious stones or other goods from on board; or for any act or forfeiture done or occasioned without the knowledge of such owner, beyond the value of the ship and freight, although the master or mariners shall not be concerned in, or privy to, such robbery, &c.

These acts do not impeach any remedy for fraudulent embarkment, and if several proprietors or freighters sustain such loss, and the value of the ship and freight is not sufficient to make full compensation, the loss shall be averaged amongst them.

No owner shall be subject to answer for loss happening by fire on board ship. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 86. § 2.

No master or owners shall be subject to answer for any loss of gold, silver, diamonds &c. by reason of any robbery, &c. unless the shipper of such goods insert the true nature, quality and value of the gold, &c. in his bills of lading. Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 86.

Previous to this last statute it was determined, that the owner of a ship was not liable beyond the value of the ship and freight, under Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 15; in the case of a robbery (of dollars) in which one of the mariners was concerned, by giving intelligence, and afterwards sharing the spoil; Sutton v. Mitchell, 1 Term Rep. 18; where it was said, the statute was made to protect the owners against all treachery in the master or mariners.

III. In order to charge the carrier, these circumstances are to be observed.

1. The goods must be lost while in the possession of the carrier himself, or in his sole care.—Therefore where the plaintiffs, the East India Company, sent their servants with the goods in question on board the vessel, who took charge of them, and they were lost, defendant was held not to be liable. 1 Str. 690.

2. The carrier is liable only so far as he is paid, for he is chargeable by reason of his reward.

One brought a box to a carrier, in which there was a large sum of money, and the carrier demanded of the owner what was in it; he answered it was filled with silks, and such like goods; upon which the carrier took it, and was robbed: and adjudged, that the carrier was liable to make it good: but a special acceptance, as provided there is no charge of money, would have excused the carrier. 1 Vent. 238: 4 Rep. 83.

A person delivered to a carrier's book-keeper two bags of money sealed up, to be carried from London to Exeter, and told him that it was 200 l. and took his receipt for the same, with promise of delivery for 10 s. per cent. carriage and risk: though it be proved that there was 400 l. in the bags, if the carrier be robbed he shall answer only for 200 l. because there was a particular undertaking for the carriage of that sum and no more, and his reward, which makes him answerable, extends no farther. Carth. 486.

3. Under a special or qualified acceptance the carrier is bound no further than he undertakes.

For where the owner of a stage-coach puts out an advertisement "That he would not be answerable for money, plate or jewels above the value of 5 l. unless he had notice, and was paid accordingly;" all goods received quired by that coach are under that special acceptance; and if money or plate be sent by it, without notice and being paid for; if lost, the coach-owner is not liable: Gibson v. Paynton, 4 Burr. 2298; not even to the extent of the 5 l. or the sum paid for booking: Clay v. Willan, H. Black. Rep. 298.—In these cases a personal communication is not necessary to constitute a special acceptance. Advertisements, notices in the warehouse, and handbills, which it is probable the plaintiff saw, or which he might have seen, are sufficient.

From these cases and the opinion of Lord Mansfield, it seems safest, that in all instances of sending things of value by a carrier, the carrier should have notice and be paid accordingly. See ante II. 4.

4. A delivery to the carrier's servant is a delivery to himself, and shall charge him; but they must be goods, such as it is his custom to carry, not out of his line of business. Salk. 282.

5. Where goods are lost which have been put on board a ship, the action may be brought, either against the master or against the owners. 2 Salk. 440.—If one owner only is sued, he must plead it in abatement, that there are other partners; for he shall not be allowed to give it in evidence, and nonsuit the plaintiff. 5 Burr. 2611. See ante II. 4.

6. It is not necessary in order to charge the carrier that the goods are lost in transitu, while immediately under his care; for he is bound to deliver them to the consignee, or send notice to him according to the direction, and though they are carried safely to the inn, yet if left there till they are spoiled, and no notice given to the consignee, the carrier is liable. 3 Wils. 429; 2 Bl. Rep. 916.

As to the proof necessary in an action against a carrier, See title Bailment 5.—That a carrier may retain goods for his hire, See 1 Ld. Rym. 166, 758.

CART-BOTE. See title Bote.

CARIS, By the Stat. 2 W. & M. Stat. 2. c. 8. sect. 19, 20; 18 Geo. 2. c. 33, the wheels of every cart or dray for the carriage of any thing from and to any place where the streets are paved, within the bills of mortality, &c. shall contain six inches in the felly, not to be shod with iron, nor be drawn with above two horses, under the penalty of 40 s.—By the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 33, they may be drawn with three horses and not more, and the wheels being of six inches breadth, when worn, may be shod with iron, if the iron be of the full breadth of six inches, made flat, and not set on with rose-headed nails; and no person shall drive any cart, &c. within the limits aforesaid, unless the name of the owner, and number of such cart, &c. be placed in some conspicuous place of the cart, &c. and his name be entered with the commissioners of hackney-coaches, under the penalty of 40 s. and every person may seize and detain such cart till the penalty be paid.—By the Stat. 1 Q. 3. & 2. c. 57; 24 Geo. 2. c. 43, The driver of any such cart, &c. riding upon such cart, &c. not having a person on foot to guide the same, shall forfeit 10 s. And by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 43, the owner so guilty shall forfeit 20 s. and any person may apprehend the offender.

On changing property new owners' names to be affixed, 30 Geo. 2. c. 12. sect. 2, and to be entered with the commissioners of hackney-coaches. And see Stat. 24 Geo. 3. & 2. c. 27, to compel the entry of all carts driven, within five miles of Temple Bar.

CARVAGE, See post Curator.

CARUCA, Fr. charrue.] A plough; from the old Gallic carv, which is the present Irish word for any sort of wheeled carriage (hence charl and car, a plowman or rustic. Vide Kerle.

CARUCAGE, carucagium.] A tribute imposed on every plough, for the public service; and as hidage was a taxation by hides, so carucage was by carucates of land. Mon. Angl. rom. 1. f. 294.

CARUCATE, or CARVE or LARA; carucata terra.] A plough-land; which in a deed of Thomas de Arden, 19 Edw. 2, is declared to be one hundred acres, by which the subjects have sometimes been taxed; whereupon the tribute so levied was called carucagium, or carucagium. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 26. But Stow says, it is as great a portion of land as may be tilled in a year and a day by one plough; which also is called hilda, or hilda terra, a word used in the old British laws. And now by Statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 29, a plough-land, which may contain houses, mills, pasture, meadow, wood, &c. is 50 l. per annum.

Luttrell, in his chapter of tenure in forage, saith, that foca idem est quod carucata, a foke or plough-land are all one. Stow says, King Hen. III. took carvage, that is, two marks of silver of every knight's fee, towards the marriage of his sister Isabella to the Emperor. Stow's Annals, page 271.

Rafel, in his exposition of words, says carvage is to be quit, if the king shall tax all the lands by carves; that is, a privilege whereby a man is exempted from carvage. The word carve is mentioned in the Stat. 28 Ed. 1, of wards and reliefs, and in Magna Charta, c. 5. And A. D. 1200, on peace made between England and France, King John sent the King of France thirty thousand marks, for which carvage was collected in England, viz. iii s. for each plow. Spelm. v. Carua. Kennet's Gloss. 1 Inst. 69. and n.

CARUCATARIUS, He that held lands in carvage, or plough-tenure. Paroch. Antiq. p. 354.

CASE Action on; See title Action, and also Com. Dig. 3 V. tit. Action.

CASSATUM AND CASSATA, By the Saxons called hida; by Bede, familia, is a house with land sufficient to maintain one family; Rex Ang. Ethelred, de 310 Callata, annum triarem, &c. Hoveden anno 1008. And Hen. Huntingdon, mentioning the same thing, instead of cassata writes hiden.

CASHLITE, Saxon. A mulct or fine, Blount.

CASIDILE, A little sack, purse, or pocket. Mat. Westm.

CASK, An uncertain quantity of goods; and of sugar contains from eight to eleven hundred weight. There are also casks for liquors, of divers contents; and by Stat. 25 Eliz. c. 11, none were to transport any wine casks, &c. except for victualling ships, under a certain penalty.

CASSOCK, or CASSULA, A garment belonging to the priest, quasi minor cassia. See Tassale.

CASTEL, or CASTLE, castellum.] A fortress in a town; a principal mansion of a nobleman. In the time of H. 8. there were in England 1115 castles; and every castle contained a manor; but during the civil wars in this kingdom these castles were demolished, so that generally there are only the ruins or remains of them at this day. 2 Inst. 31.

CASTELLAIN, castellanus.] The lord, owner, or captain of a castle, and sometimes the constable of a fortified house. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 2. cap. 16: 3 Ed. 1. cap. 7. It hath likewise been taken for him that hath the custody of one of the king's mansion-houses, called by the Lombards curier; in English courts; though they are not castles or places of defence. 2 Inst. 31. And Mareward, in his Forest-Laws, says, there is an officer of the forest called castellanus.

CASTELLARIUM, CASTELLARI, The precinct or jurisdiction of a castle.—Et unum iustum iuxta castellarium. Men. Angl. tom. 2. f. 402.

CASTELLORUM OPERATIO, Castle-work, or service and labour done by inferior tenants, for the building and upholding of castles of defence; towards which some gave their personal assistance, and others paid their contribution. This was one of the three necessary charges, to which all lands among our Saxon ancestors were expressly subject. And after the conquest an immunity from this burden was sometimes granted. As king Hen. II. granted to the tenants within the honour of Wallingford — Ut sint quieti de oper. hominum castellorum. Paroch. Antiq. page 114. It was unlawful to build any castle without leave of the king, which was called castellatio. Du Fresne.

CASTIGATORY for scolds. A woman indicted for being a common scold, if convicted, shall be sentenced to be placed on a certain engine of correction, called the tre bucket, tambrel, tymborella, castigatory, or cucking-stool, which in the Saxon language signifies the scolding stool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking stool, because the residue of the judgment is, that, when she is so placed therein, she shall be plunged in the water for her punishment. 3 Inst. 219: 4 Comm. 169.—It is also termed gogin-stole and coke-stole and by some is thought corrupted from chocking stool. Though this punishment is now disused, a former Editor of Jacob's Dict. (Mr. Morgan.) mentions that he remembers to have seen the remains of one, on the estate of a relation of his in Warwickshire, consisting of a long beam, or rafter moving on a fulcrum, and extending to the centre of a large pond, on which end the stool used to be placed.

At Banbury in Oxfordshire, this punishment has been used towards common whores, within the memory of persons now (1793) living—and the pool for the purpose yet retains the name of the cucking pool, but the engine was not long since removed. See Lamb. Biron. lib. 1. f. 12.

In Domesday-book it is called Cathedra Stercoralis, and was used by the Saxons for the same purpose, and by them called secastrig stole. It was anciently also a punishment inflicted on brewers and bakers transgressing the laws, who were ducked in stercore, in stinking water.

CASTLE-WARD, Castlegardum, vel windum castri.] An imposition laid upon such persons as dwelled within a certain compass of any castle, towards the maintenance of such as watch and ward the castle. Magna Charta, cap. 15, 20: 32 Hen. 8 cap. 48. It is sometimes used for the circuit itself, which is inhabited by those that are subject to this service. Castle guard rents were paid by persons dwelling within the liberty of any castle, for the maintaining of watch and ward within the same. By Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. sect. 2, these and other rents in the Dutchy of Lancaster, payable to the king, were vested in trustees to be sold.

CASTER, and CHESTER: The names of places ending in these words are derived from the Lat. castrum; for this termination at the end was given by the Romans to those places where they built castles.

CASTRATION, See title Maiming.

CASUAL EJECTOR, In ejectment, a nominal defendant, and who continues such until appearance by or for the tenant in possession. See title Ejectment.

CASU CONSIMILI, is a writ of entry granted where tenant by the curtesy, or tenants for life, aliens in fee or in tail, or for another's life; and is brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so aliens to his prejudice, and in the tenant's life time. It takes its name from this, that the clerks of the Chancery did, by their common assent, frame it to the likeness of the writ called in casu proviso, according to the authority given them by the Stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) cap. 24, which statute, as often as there happens a new case in Chancery something like a former, yet not specially fitted by any writ, authorises them to frame a new form answerable to the new case, and as like the former as they may. 7 Rep. 4: See Fitz. Nat. Br. fo. 206: Termes de la ley. See 3 Comm. 51.

CASU PROVISIO, A writ of entry, given by the statute of Gloucester cap. 7, where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for life, &c. and it lies for him in reversion against the alienor. Fitz. N. B. 205. This writ, and the writ of casu consimili, supposes the tenant to have aliened in fee, though it be for life only: and a casu proviso may be without making any title in it, where a lease is made by the demandant himself to the tenant that doth alien; but if an ancestor lease for life, and the tenant alien in fee, &c. the heir in reversion must have this with the title included therein. F. N. B. 206, 207.

CASUS OMISSUS, Is where any particular thing is omitted out of, and not provided against by a statute, &c.

CATALS, Catalla, Goods and chattels. See Chattels.

CATALIS CAPTIS NOMINE DISTRICTIO, Anciently a writ that lay where a house was within a borough, for rent going out of the same; and which warranted the taking of doors, windows, &c. by way of distress for rent, Old Nat. Br. 66. This writ is now obsolete.

CATALIS REDDENDIS, An ancient writ which lay where goods being delivered to any man to keep till a certain day, are not, upon demand, delivered at the day. It may be otherwise called a writ of detinere: and is answerable to actio depositi in the Civil law. See Reg. Orig. 139, and Old Nat. Br. 63.

CATAPULTA, A warlike engine to shoot darts: or rather a cross bow.

CATASCOPUS. An archdeacon. Du Cange.

CATCHLAND. In Norfolk there are some grounds which it is not known to what parish they certainly belong, so that the minister who first seizes the tithes, does by that right of pre-occupation enjoy them for that year: and the land of this dubious nature is there called catchland, from this custom of seizing the tithes. Cowel.

CATCHPOLE, See Catchpollus. Sheriff's officers are commonly so called.

CATHEDRAL, ecclesia cathedralis.] The church of the bishop, and head of the diocese: wherein the service of the church is performed with great ceremony. See title Church.

CATHEDRATICK,

CATHEDRATICK, [ecclesiasticus.] A title of respect, held at the bishop by the inferior clergy, in argument of their rank at hohen cathedra. Brit. precure. & Synodals, p. 52.

CATZURUS, A hunting horse. Tamara, page 68. Vide Chazars.

CATTLE. Several ancient laws were made to regulate the number of sheep to be kept by any farmer: See title Sheep.

As to the importation of cattle.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 43, Beasts may be freely imported from the Ile of Man.—By the 6th article of the Union, 5 Ann. c. 8, No Scotch cattle carried into England shall be liable to any other duties than the cattle of England are.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 10, which was of temporary continuance, but made perpetual by Stat. 16 G. 3. c. 8, all sorts of cattle may be imported from Ireland duty free.—And this notwithstanding Stat. 18 G. 2. c. 2; 20 G. 2. c. 7; and 32 G. 2. c. 2.

As to buying and selling cattle, &c.—No person shall buy any ox, cow, calf, &c. and sell the same again alive in the same market or fair, on pain of forfeiting double the value. Stat. 3 Ed. 6. c. 19; 5 G. 1. c. 49, 7, 8.—And the said act 3 Ed. 6. c. 19, is not repealed by Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 71, which repeals the general forfeiting act of 5 Ed. 6. c. 14, and other subsequent acts enforcing the same, but hath no reference to any preceding act.—By Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 46, No salesman, broker, or factor employed in buying cattle for others, shall buy and sell for himself, in London, or within the bills of mortality, on penalty of double the value of the cattle bought or sold.

By several statutes made from time to time, the king has been empowered to make regulations to prevent the spreading of distempers among huddled cattle: And by Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 39, he may prohibit the importation of hides, skins, horns, &c.

By Stat. 3 Car. 1. cap. 1, No drovers are to travel with cattle on Sundays, on penalty of 20s.

By Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 67, Several wholesome regulations are made, to prevent the cruelties of drovers and others, in driving cattle in London, Westminster, and the bills of mortality, by which a fine from 20s. to 50s. is imposed on them for misbehaviour; or one month's imprisonment; and power is given to the lord mayor and aldermen of London, to make regulations to further the purposes of the act, and which was accordingly done.

As to killing, maiming, and stealing cattle.—By Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 6, Whoever shall take out the tongue of any tame beast, the property of another person, the beast being alive, shall pay treble damages and forfeite 10s.

By Stat. 23 & 24 Geo. 2. c. 7, Maliciously, unlawfully, and willingly to kill any horses, sheep, or other cattle in the night-time, is felony; but the felon may make his election to be transported for seven years.

And if any shall maliciously maim, wound or hurt such cattle in the night-time, he shall forfeit treble damages, by action of trespass, or on the oath, to be tried before three justices of peace and a jury.

By Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 6, and 19 Geo. 2. c. 34, feloniously driving away or stealing any oxen, bullocks, cows, sheep, &c. or killing them with intent to steal the carcass, or any part of it, is made felony without benefit of clergy; and any person prosecuting an offender to conviction shall have a reward of 10s.

By the Stat. 48, (see that title) 9 Geo. 3. c. 22, Unlawfully and maliciously, to maim or wound any cattle, is felony without clergy, and the hundred shall be answerable as for an assize; and persons convicting offenders shall receive 5s. reward.

To prevent the stealing of horses and other cattle for the purpose of selling them, merely for their skin, the Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 81, provides that every person keeping a slaughter-house for cattle, not killed for butchers' meat, shall take out licenses and be subject to an inspector—and shall not slaughter, but at certain times, &c. &c.

CAUDA TERRE. A land's end, or the bottom of a ridge in arable land. Opus. Agric. Glouc. fol. 117.

CAVEAT, is a kind of process in the spiritual courts to stop the institution of a clerk, or a benefice, or probate of a will, &c. When a caveat is entered against an institution, if the bishop afterwards institutes a clerk, it is void; the caveat being a superior; but a caveat has been adjudged void when entered in the life-time of the incumbent. A caveat entered against a will stands in force for three months; and this is for the caution of the ordinary, that he do no wrong; though it is said the temporal courts do not regard these sorts of caveats. 2 Rel. Rep. 191: 1 Nat. Ab. 416, 417.

CAVERS, Offenders relating to the mines in Derbyshire, who are punishable in the bergheims, or miners' court.

CAULCEIS, See Stat. 6 H. 6. cap. 5, respecting sewers. Ways pitched with flint, or other stones.—See Colcum.

CAURCINES, [Carmeni.] Italians that came into England about the year 1235, terming themselves the Rapa merchants, but driving no other trade than lending out money; and having great banks in England, they differed little from Jews, save (as history says) that they were rather more merciful to their debtors; Cowell says, they have their name from Carmum, Carm, a town in Lombardy, where they first practised their art of usury and extortion; from whence spreading themselves, they carried their cursed trade through most parts of Europe, and were a common plague to every nation where they came. The then bishop of London excommunicated them; and King Hen. 3. banished them from this kingdom in the year 1240. But being the pope's solicitors and money-changers, they were permitted to return in the year 1250; though in a very short time after, they were driven out of the kingdom again for their intolerable extortions. Mat. Paris 403.

CAUSA MATRIMONII PRÆLOCUTI, Is a writ which lies where a woman gives land to a man in fee-simple, &c. to the intent he should marry her, and he refuseth to do it in any reasonable time, being thereunto required. Rep. Orig. 66. If a woman makes a feoffment to a stranger of land in fee, to the intent to infee her, and one who shall be her husband; if the marriage shall not take effect, she shall have the writ of causa matrimonii prælocuti against the stranger, notwithstanding the deed of feoffment be absolute. New Nat. Br. 456. A woman infeoffed a man upon condition that he should take her to wife, and he had a wife at the time of the feoffment; and afterwards the woman, for not performing the condition, entered again into the land, and her entry was adjudged lawful, though upon a second feoffee. Lib. Aff.

anno 40 Ed. 3. The husband and wife may sue the writ causa matrimonii prelocuti against another who ought to have married her: but if a man give lands to a woman to the intent to marry him, although the woman will not marry him, &c. he shall not have his remedy by writ causa matrimonii prelocuti. New Nat. Br. 455.

CAUSAM NOBIS SIGNIFICES, A writ directed to a mayor of a town, &c. who was by the king's writ commanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee, on his delaying to do it, requiring him to show cause why he so delays the performance of his duty.

CAUSES and EFFECTS. In most cases the law hath respect to the cause, or beginning of a thing, as the principal part on which all other things are founded: and herein the next, and not the remote cause is most looked upon, except it be in covinous and criminal things; and therefore that which is not good at first will not be so afterwards; for such as is the cause, such is the effect. Plowd. 208, 268. If an infant or feme-covert make a will, and publish it, and after die of full age, or sole, the will is of no force, by reason of the original cause of infancy and coverture. Finch 12. Where the cause ceaseth, the effect or thing will cease. Co. Lit. 13.

CAUTIONE ADMITTENDI, A writ that lies against a bishop, who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandment of the church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66. And if a man be excommunicated, and taken by a writ of significavit, and after offers caution to the bishop to obey the church, and the bishop refuseth it; the party may sue out this writ to the sheriff to go against the bishop, and to warn him to take caution, &c. But if he stands in doubt whether the sheriff will deliver him by that writ, the bishop may purchase another writ, directed to the sheriff reciting the case, and the end thereof; Tibi precipimus, quod ipsum A. B. à prisona prædicti. nisi in præsentia tua cautionem pignorat. ad minus eidem episc. de satisfaciend. abtulerit, nullatenus deliveras absque mandato nostro seu ipsius episcopi in hac parte specialiter, &c. When the bishop hath taken caution, he is to certify the same in the Chancery, and thereupon the party shall have a writ unto the sheriff to deliver him. New Nat. Br. 142.

CEAPGILDE, From Sax. ceap, pecus, cattle; and gild, i. e. solutio;] Hence it is solutio pecudis: from this Saxon word gild, it is very probable we have our English word yield; as yield, or pay. Cowel.

CÉLER LECTI, The top, head, or tester of a bed. Hist. Elen apud Wharton, Angl. Sax. par. 1. p. 673.

CELLERARIUS, The butler in a monastery: in the Universities they are sometimes called maniple, and sometimes caterer, and steward.

CENDULÆ, Small pieces of wood laid in form of tiles, to cover the roof of a house. Pat. 4 Hen. 3. p. 1. m. 10.

CENEGILD, An expiatory mulct, paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelm.

CENELLÆ, Acorns, from the oak. In our old writings, peffona cenellarum, is put for the pannage of hogs, or running of swine, to feed on acorns.

CENNINGA, Notice given by the buyer to the seller, that the thing sold was claimed by another, that he might appeal and justify the sale: it is mentioned in the laws of Athelstan, apud Brompton, cap. 4.

CENSARIA, A farm, or house and land, let at cenfum at a standing rent: it comes from the Fr. censt, which signifies a farm.

CENSARII, Farmers, Blount.

CENSUALES, A species or class of the oblatis, or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries, i. e. those who, to procure the protection of the church, bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent out of their estates to a church or monastery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain services. Robert. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 271, 2: Potgiesserus de Statu Ser-vorum, lib. 1. cap. 1. sec. 6, 7.

CENSURE, from Lat. cenfus.] A custom called by this name, observed in divers manors in Cornwall and Devon, where all persons residing therein above the age of sixteen are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11 d. per poll, and 1 d. per ann. ever after: and these thus sworn are called cenfers. Survey of the Dutchy of Cornwall.

CENTENARII, Petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, that had rule of an hundred, and judged smaller matters among them. 1 Vent. 211.

There were anciently inferior judges so called in France: who were set over every hundred freemen, and were themselves subject to the count or comes. 1 Comm. 115.

CEOLA, A large ship. Malmshury, lib. 1. c. 1.

CEPI CORPUS, A return made by the sheriff, upon a capias, or other process to the like purpose, that he hath taken the body of the party. F. N. B. 26.

CEPPAGIUM, The stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 41.

CERAGIUM, Cerage, a payment to find candles in the church. Mat. Paris. See Waxfat.

CERTAINTY, Is a plain, clear, and distinct setting down of things, so that they may be understood. 5 Rep. 121. A convenient certainty is required in writs, declarations, pleadings, &c. But if a writ abate for want of it, the plaintiff may have another writ: 'tis otherwise if a deed become void by uncertainty, the party may not have a new deed at his pleasure. 11 Rep. 25, 121: Dyer 84. That has certainty enough, that may be made certain: but not like what is certain of itself. 4 Rep. 97. See generally title Pleading—and particularly titles Deed; Fine; Will.

CERAMIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULE. A writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the Lord Chancellor a statute staple taken before him, where the party himself detains it, and refuseth to bring in the same. Reg. Orig. 152. There is the like writ to certify a statute-merchant; and in divers other cases. Ibid. 148, 151, &c.

CERTIFICATE, A writing made in any court to give notice to another court of any thing done therein; which is usually by way of transcript, &c. And sometimes it is made by an officer of the same court, where matters are referred to him, or a rule of court is obtained for it; containing the tenor and effect of what is done. The clerks of the crown, assize and peace, are to make certificates into B. R. of the tenor of indictments, convictions, &c. under penalties, by the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 14: 3 W. & M. c. 9. See tit. Clergy, benef. of.

CERTIFICATE.

The question of certificatio arises in the course of a cause in Chancery, (as whether by the words of a will, an estate for life or in tail is created, or whether a future interest devised by a testator, shall operate as a remainder, or an executory devise,) it is the practice of that court, to refer it to the opinion of the judges of the court of K. B. or C. P. upon a case stated for the purpose; wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is submitted to their decision, who thereupon hear it solemnly argued by counsel on both sides, and certify their opinion to the chancellor. And upon such certificate, the decree is usually founded. 3 Comm. 453.

THE TRIAL BY CERTIFICATE, is allowed in such cases, where the evidence of the person certifying, is the only proper criterion of the point in dispute. Thus, 1. The question whether one were absent with the king in his army out of the realm, in time of war, might be tried by the certificate of the marshal of the king's host under seal. Litt. § 102.—2. If in order to avoid an outlawry, it be alledged the defendant was in prison, &c. at Bourdeaux or Calais; this when those places belonged to the crown of England, was allowed to be tried by the certificate of the mayor. 9 Rep. 31: 2 Ro. Ab. 583. And therefore by parity of reason, it should now hold that in similar cases arising at Jamaica, &c. the trial should be by certificate from the governor 3 Comm. 334.

3. For matters within the realm; the customs of the city of London shall be tried by the certificate of the mayor and aldermen, certified by the mouth of the recorder, upon a surmise from the party alledging it, that it should be so tried; else it must be tried by the country, as it must also if the corporation of London be a party, or interested in the suit. 1 Inst. 74. 4 Burr. 248: Bro. Ab. 1. Trial, pl. 96: Hob. 85: But see 1 Term Rep. 423. If the recorder has once certified a custom, the court are in future bound to take notice of it. Doug. 380.

4. In some cases the Sheriff of London's certificate shall be the final trial; as if the issue be whether the defendant be a citizen of London, or a foreigner, in case of privilege pleaded to be sued only in the city courts. 1 Inst. 74. Of a nature somewhat similar to which is the trial of the privilege of either University when the Chancellor claims cognizance of the cause; in which case the charters confirmed by parliament, allow the question to be determined by the certificate of the chancellor under seal—But in case of an issue between two parties themselves, the trial shall be by jury. 2 Ro. Ab. 583: 3 Comm. 335.

5. In matters of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, as marriage, general bastardy, excommunication, and orders, these and other like matters shall be tried by the bishop's certificate See titles Bastardy, &c. Ability of a clerk presented, admission, institution and deprivation of a clerk, shall also be tried by certificate from the ordinary or metropolitan. 2 Inst. 632: Show P. C. 88: 2 Ro. Ab. 583, &c. But induction shall be tried by a jury; being the corporal investiture of the temporal profits. Dy. 229. Resignation of a benefice may be tried either way, but seems most properly to fall within the bishop's cognizance. 2 Ro. Ab. 583; 3 Comm. 336.

6 The trial of all customs and practice of the courts shall be by certificate from the proper officer of those courts respectively: and what return was made on a writ

by a sheriff or under-sheriff, shall be only tried by his own certificate. 9 Rep. 31: 3 Comm. 336

As to certificates in cases of Cass, of Bankrupts, or relative to the settlement of the Poor, See those titles in this Dict.

CERTIFICATE OF CERTIFICATION OF ASSISE, certificatio assise nove diffinitive, &c.] A writ anciently granted for the re-examining or re-trial of a matter passed by assise before justices: used where a man appearing by his bailiff to an assise, brought by another, lost the day; and having something more to plead for himself, which the bailiff did not, or might not plead for him, desired a farther examination of the cause, either before the same justices, or others, and obtained letters-patent to them to that effect; whereupon he brought a writ to the sheriff to call both the party for whom the assise passed, and the jury that was impanelled on the same, before the said justices at a certain day and place, to be re-examined. It was called a certificate, because therein mention is made to the sheriff, that upon the party's complaint of the defective examination, as to the assise passed, the king hath directed his letters-patent to the justices for the better certifying of themselves, whether all points of the said assise were duly examined. Reg. Orig. 200: F. N. B. 181: Bracton, lib. 4. c. 13: Horn's Mirr. lib. 3.—This writ is now entirely superseded by the remedy afforded by means of new trials. See 3 Comm. 389.

CERTIORARI.

This is an Original Writ, issuing out of the court of Chancery or K. B. directed in the king's name to the judges or officers of inferior courts, commanding them to certify, or to return the records of a cause depending before them; to the end the party may have the more sure and speedy justice before the king, or such justices as he shall assign to determine the cause. See F. N. B. 145, 242.

This writ is either returnable in the king's bench, and then hath these words, "send to us;" or in the Common Bench, and then has "to our justices of the bench;" or in the Chancery, and then hath "in our Chancery, &c."

On this subject we may briefly consider, 1. In what cases this writ is grantable; or not.—2. In what manner.—3. The effect of it when granted, and 4. Of the return, with the form of that and the writ.

1. A writ of certiorari may be had at any time before trial, to certify and remove indictments, with all the proceedings thereon from any inferior court of criminal jurisdiction, into the court of K. B. the sovereign ordinary court of justice in causes criminal. And this is frequently done for one of four purposes, 1. To consider and determine the validity of appeals and indictments, and the proceedings thereon; and to quash or confirm them accordingly.—2. To have the prisoner or defendant tried at the bar of the courts, or before justices of Nisi Prius where it is surmised that a partial or insufficient trial will probably be had in the inferior court.—3. To plead the king's pardon in the court of K. B.—4. To issue process of outlawry against the offender, in those counties or places where the process of inferior judges will not reach him 2 H. P. C. 210: 4 Comm 320

A certiorari lies in all judicial proceedings, in which a writ of error does not lie; and it is a consequence of all interior jurisdictions, erected by act of parliament, to have have their proceedings returnable in K. B. Ld. Raym. 469, 580.

But without laying a special ground before the court, it cannot be sued out to remove proceedings in an action from the courts of the counties palatine. Doug. 749.—It does not lie to judges of oyer and terminer to remove a recognisance of appearance. Lucas 378.—Nor to remove a poor's rate. Sira. 932, 975. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 23. in n.

A certiorari lies to justices of the peace and others, even in such cases, which they are empowered by statute finally to hear and determine; and the superintendency of the court of K. B. is not taken away without express words. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 23, 23.

That a certiorari does not lie to remove any other than judicial acts, See Cald. 309: Sny. 6.

Where a certiorari is by law grantable for an indictment, at the suit of the king, the Court is bound to award it, for it is the king's prerogative to sue in what court he pleases: but it is at the discretion of the court to grant or not, in case of private prosecutions, and at the prayer of the defendant: and the court will not grant it for the removal of an indictment before justices of gaol-delivery, without some special cause; or where there is so much difficulty in the case, that the judge desires it may be determined in B. R. &c. Burr. 2456. Also on indictments of perjury, forgery, or for heinous misdemeanors, the court will not generally grant a certiorari to remove at the instance of the defendant. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 27, 28. But see 2 Ld. Raym. 1452.

But in particular cases, the court will use their discretion to grant a certiorari; as if the defendant be of good character, or if the prosecution be malicious or attended with oppressive circumstances. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 28. n.

Where issue is joined in the court below, it is a good objection against granting a certiorari: and if a person doth not make use of this writ till the jury are sworn, he loses the benefit of it. Mod. Ca. 16: Stat. 43 Elix. c. 5. After conviction, a certiorari may not be had to remove an indictment, &c. unless there be special cause; as if the judge below is doubtful what judgment is proper to be given, when it may. See Sira. 1227: Burr. 749. And after conviction, &c. it lies in such cases where writ of error will not lie. 1 Salk. 149. The court on motion in an extraordinary case will grant a certiorari to remove a judgment given in an inferior court; but this is done where the ordinary way of taking out execution is hindered in the inferior court. 1 Lill. Abr. 253.

In common cases a certiorari will not lie to remove a cause out of an inferior court, after verdict. It is never sued out after a writ of error, but where diminution is alleged: and when the thing in demand does not exceed 5*l.* a certiorari shall not be had, but a writ of error or attain. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 23: See Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. A certiorari is to be granted on matter of law only; and in many cases there must be a judge's hand for it. 1 Lill. 252. Certiorari's to remove indictments, &c. are to be signed by a judge: and to remove orders, the fiat for making out the writ must be signed by some judge. 1 Salk. 150.

Certiorari lies to the courts of Wales; and the ports, counties palatine, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 25.

Things may not be removed from before justices of peace, which cannot be proceeded in by the court where removed; as in case of refusing to take the oaths, &c. which is to be certified and inquired into, according to the statute. 1 Salk. 145. And where the court which awards the certiorari cannot hold plea on the record, there but a tenor of the record shall be certified; for otherwise if the record was removed into B. R. as it cannot be sent back, there would be a failure of right afterwards. 1 Dartv. Abr. 792. But a record sent by certiorari into B. R. may be sent after by mittimus into C. B. Ibid. 789. And a record into B. R. may be certified into Chancery, and from thence be sent by mittimus into an inferior court, where an action of debt is brought in an inferior court, and the defendant pleads that the plaintiff hath recovered in B. R. and the plaintiff replies Nul tial record, &c. 1 Saund. 97, 99.

The court of B. R. will grant a new certiorari to affirm a judgment, &c. though generally one person can have but one certiorari. Cro. Jac. 369.

A certiorari may not be had to a court superior, or that has equal jurisdiction, in which case day is given to bring in the record, &c.

Besides the statutes hereafter mentioned, there are several which restrain, and many which absolutely prohibit a certiorari; in order to avoid frivolous and unfounded delays in justice. For a complete list of these, if needed, the student should consult the index to the statutes.—The following seem to have deserved a short mention in this place.

By Stats. 12 Car. 2. cc. 23, 24. no certiorari shall be allowed in certain cases of transgression of the Excise-Laws.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, (which see at large title Highways) no presentment, &c. of any highway shall be removed from the sessions, until it be traversed, except the right to repair be the question.—Or by Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, may come in question.—But this means on the part of the defendant only, for on the part of the prosecution it lies before.—No other proceedings under the highway-act may be removed by certiorari.—But if the sessions manifestly exceed their authority in making orders, they may be removed into K. B. by certiorari and quashed. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 37. and v.

By Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, against deer-stealers, no certiorari shall issue, unless the party convicted shall become bound to the prosecutor in 100*l.* to pay full costs and damages within thirty days, and to the Justice in 60*l.* to prosecute the certiorari with effect.—But in appeal to the sessions, he may sue out a certiorari 'on six days' notice, to prosecute. And the like in effect is enacted by Stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. and 5 An. Jess. 2. c. 44, concerning game. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 60, 61.

Also by Stat. 1 An. c. 18, concerning the repair of bridges, no certiorari shall be allowed.—Nor by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20 for punishing destroyers of turnpikes.—Nor by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, for assessing county rates.—Nor on Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21, against carrying and stowring.—Nor on Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13, against seducing artificers.—Nor on Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, against bawdy-houses.—Nor on 29 Geo. 2. c. 40, against stealing lead, iron, &c.—Nor on 30 Geo. 2. c. 21, for preserving fish in the Thames.—Nor on 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, for restraining gaming in public houses.—Nor on 31 Geo. 2. c. 29, for regulating bread.—Nor on

2 Geo. 3. c. 39, for preventing thefts in bumb-boats.—
Not on 10 Geo. 3. c. 18, against dog-stealers.

For a long detail of further matter on the subject of certiorari. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27

2. By Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, no [Habeas Corpus or] Certiorari shall be granted to remove any recognizances, unless signed by the Chief Justice, or in his absence by one of the other judges.

By Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11. and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 33, A certiorari may be granted in vacation time by any of the judges of B. R. and security is to be found before it is allowed. No certiorari is to be granted out of B. R. to remove an indictment, or presentment, before justices of peace at the sessions before trial, unless motion be made in open court, and the party indicted and security by two persons in 20*l.* each to plead to the indictment in B. R. &c. And if the defendant prosecuting the certiorari be convicted, the court of B. R. shall order costs to the prosecutor of the indictment. In case of certiorari granted in vacation, the name of the judge and party applying to be indorsed on the writ. See title Habeas Corpus.

If on a certiorari to remove an indictment the party do not find manueptors in the sum of 20*l.* to plead to the indictment and try it, according to the statute, it is no superfedeas. Mish. Ca. 33. And a procedendo may be granted where bail is not put in before a judge, on a certiorari. As to costs, See 1 Wils. 139; 1 Burr. 54; 2 Term Rep. 47.

No judgment or order to be removed by certiorari, without sureties found to the amount of 50*l.* Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Certiorari, to remove convictions, orders or proceedings of justices, to be applied for within six calendar months, and upon six days' notice to the justices. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. See Stra. 991.

It is said a certiorari to remove an indictment is good, although it bear date before the taking thereof: but on a certiorari the very record must be returned, and not a transcript of it; for if so, then the record will still remain in the inferior court. 2 Lil. 253. In B. R. the very record itself of indictments is removed by certiorari; but usually in Chancery, if a certiorari be returnable there, it removes only the tenor of the record; and therefore, if it be sent from thence into the King's Bench, they cannot proceed either to judgment or execution, because they have but such tenor of the record before them. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 215. In London a return of the tenor only is warranted by the city charters. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 26, 76.

On a certiorari to remove a record out of an inferior court, the file of their court, and power to hold plea, and before whom, ought to be shewn on their certificate. Jenk. Cent. 214, 232.

A certiorari to remove an order of bastardy should be applied for in six months, Rex v. Howlett, 1 Wils. 35.

If a certiorari be prayed to remove an indictment out of London or Middlesex, three days' notice must be given the other side, or the certiorari shall not be granted. Raym. 74.

3. After a certiorari is allowed by the inferior court, it makes all the subsequent proceedings, on the record that is removed by it, erroneous. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 62, 64. But if a certiorari for the removal of an indictment before justices of peace, be not delivered before the jury be sworn for the trial of it, the justices may proceed. 2 Hist. P. C. c. 27. § 64.—And the justices may sit to see to complete their judgment after a certiorari delivered. Ld. Raym. 1315. See ante 1.

A certiorari removes all things done between the writ and return. Ld. Raym. 835, 1305.—And as it removes the record itself out of the inferior court, therefore if it removes the record against the principal, the accessory cannot be tried there. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 54.—And if the defendant be convicted of a capital crime, the person of the defendant must be removed by Habeas Corpus, in order to be present in court, if he will move in arrest of judgment.—And herein the case of a conviction differs from that of a special verdict. Burr. 930.

Although on a habeas corpus to remove a person, the court may bail or discharge the prisoner: they can give no judgment upon the record of the indictment against him, without a certiorari to remove it, but the same stands in force as it did, and new process may issue upon it: a H. P. C. 211. If an indictment be one; but the offences several, where four persons are indicted together; a certiorari to remove this indictment against two of them, removes it not as to the others, but as to them the record remains below. 2 Hale's Hist. 214.

If a cause be removed from an inferior court by certiorari, the pledges in the court below are not discharged; because a defendant may bring a certiorari, and thereby the plaintiff may lose his pledges. Stir. Rep. 244, 246. A certiorari from K. B. is a superfedeas to restitution in a forcible entry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. § 62.

4. The return of a certiorari is to be under seal: and the person to whom a certiorari is directed may make what return he pleases, and the court will not stop the fillog of it, on affidavit of its falsity, except where the public good requires it: the remedy for a false return is action on the case, at the suit of the party injured; and information, &c. at the suit of the king. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 70.

If the person to whom the certiorari is directed, do not make a return, then an alias, then a pluries, vel causam nobis significes quare, shall be awarded, and then an attachment. Crompt. 116.

FORM OF A CERTIORARI

TO CERTIFY THE RECORD OF A JUDGMENT.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the Mayor and Sheriffs of our city of E. and to every of them, in our court at the Guildhall thus greeting: Whereas A. B. hath lately in our said court in the said city, according to the custom of the same court, impleaded C. D. late of, &c. in an action of debt upon demand of thirty pounds and thereupon, in our said court before you, obtained judgment against the said C. for the recovery of the said debt; and we, being desirous for certain reasons, that the said record should by you be certified to us, Do command you, that you find under your seals the record of the said recovery, with all things touching the same, into our court before us at Westminster, on the day, &c. plainly and distinctly, and in as full and ample manner as it now remains before you, together with this writ; so that we on the part of the said A. may be able to proceed to the execution of the said judgment, and do what shall appear to us of right ought to be done. Witness, &c.

The return of a certiorari may be thus.—First, on the back of the writ indorse these or similar words, “The execution of this writ appears in a schedule to the same writ annexed.” Which schedule may be in the following form, on a piece of parchment, (not paper, 1 Barn. K. B. 113;) by itself, and filed to the writ.

“Middlesex.—I A. B. one of the keepers of the peace and justices of our lord the king, assigned to keep the peace within the said county, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanors in the same county committed by virtue of this writ to me delivered, do under my seal certify unto his Majesty in his court of King’s Bench; the indictment, of which mention is made in the same writ, together with all matters touching the said indictment. In witness whereof I the said A. B. have to these presents set my seal. Given at — in the said county, the — day of —, in the — year of the reign of —.

Then take the record of the indictment, and close it within the above schedule, and seal up, and send them both together with the certiorari.

CERT-MONEY, quasi certain money.] Head-money, paid yearly by the tenants of several manors to the lords thereof, for the certain keeping of the keet; and sometimes to the hundred: as the manor of Hook, in Dorsetshire, pays cert-money to the hundred of Egerdon. In ancient records this is called centum lota. See Common Fine.

CERVISARII, The Saxons had a duty called chinclean, that is retributio posus, payable by their tenants; and such tenants were in Domesday called cervisarii, from cervisia, ale, their chief drink: though cervisarius vulgarly signifies a beer or ale brewer.

CERURA, A mound, fence, or inclosure. Cart. priorat. de Thelesford MS.

CESSAT EXECUTIO, In trespass against two persons, if it be tried and found against one, and the plaintiff takes his execution against him, the writ will abate as to the other; for there ought to be a cessat executio till it is tried against the other defendant. 10 Ed. 4. 11. See title Execution, &c.

CESSAVIT, A writ which lies (by the Stat. of Gloucester, 6 E. 1. c. 4: and Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. cc. 21, 41.) when a man who holds lands by rent or other services, neglects or ceases to perform his services for two years together; or where a religious house hath lands given it, on condition of performing some certain spiritual service, as reading prayers, or giving alms, and neglects it, in either of which cases if the cessat or neglect shall have continued for two years, the lord or donor and his heirs shall have a writ of cessavit to recover the land itself. F. N. B. 208.—In some instances relating to religious houses, called Cessavit de Cantuariâ.

By the Stat. of Gloucester, the cessavit does not lie for lands let upon fee farm rents, unless they have lain fresh and uncultivated for two years, and there be not sufficient distress upon the premises, or unless the tenant hath so enclosed the land, that the lord cannot come upon it to distrain. F. N. B. 209: 2 / 298. For the law prefers the simple and ordinary remedies, by distress, &c. to this extraordinary one of forfeiture; and therefore the same statute has provided farther, that on tender of rears, and damages before judgment, and giving security for the future performance of the services, (that he will no more cease) the process shall be at an end, and the tenant shall retain his land, to which the Stat. of Westm. 2. conforms so far as may stand with convenience and reason of law. 2 Inst. 401, 460.

The Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, and 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, seem evidently borrowed from the above ancient writ of cessavit.—The former of these statutes permits landlords who have a right of re-entry for non-payment of rent, to serve an ejectment on their tenants when half a year’s rent is due, and no sufficient distress on the premises. See title Ejectments. And the same remedy is in substance adopted by the Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 16, which enacts, that where any tenant at rack-rent shall be one year’s rent in arrear, and shall desert the demised premises, leaving the same uncultivated or unoccupied, so that no sufficient distress can be had, two justices of the peace, (after notice affixed on the premises for fourteen days) may give the landlord possession thereof; and the lease shall be void. See title Distress, Lease, Rent.

By Stat. Westm. 2. § 2, the heir of the demandant may maintain a cessavit against the heir or assignee of the tenant. But in other cases, the heir may not bring this writ for cessure in the time of his ancestor: and it lies not but for annual service, rent, and such like; not for homage or fealty. Termes de la ley: New Nat. Br. 463, 464.

The lord shall have a writ of cessavit against tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee to another: but the donor of an estate tail shall not have a cessavit against the tenant in tail: though if a man make a gift in tail, the remainder over in fee to another, or to the heirs of the tenant in tail, there the lord of whom the lands are holden immediate, shall have a cessavit against the tenant in tail, because that he is tenant to him, &c. Ibid. If the lord distrains pending the writ of cessavit against his tenant, the writ shall abate. The writ cessavit is directed to the sheriff, To command A. B. that, &c. he render to C. D. one messuage, which he holds by certain services, and which ought to come to the said C. by force of the Statute, &c. because the said A. in doing those services had ceased two years, &c. Dict.

CESSE, Signifies an assessment or tax, and is mentioned in the Stat. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 3. Cesse or cessse, in Ireland, is an exaction of victuals, at a certain rate, for soldiers in garrison. Antiq. Hiberniæ.

CESSIO BONORUM. A process in the law of Scotland, similar in effect to that under the statutes relating to Bankruptcy in England.

CESSION, Cessio.] A ceasing, yielding up, or giving over. When an ecclesiastical person is created bishop, or a parson of a parsonage takes another benefice, without dispensation or being otherwise not qualified, &c. in both cases their first benefices are become void, and are in the law said to be void by cession; and to those benefices that the person had who was created bishop, the king shall present for that time, whoever is patron of them; and in the other case, the patron may present. Convel.

But cession in the case of bishops does not take place till consecration. Dyer 223. See title Commendam, Advowson II.

No person is entitled to dispensation, but chaplains of the king and others mentioned in the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13; the the brethren, and the sons of lords and knights (not of barons) and doctors and bachelors of divinity and law in the Universities of this realm. 1 Comm. 392. See title Chaplain.

Both the livings must have cure of souls; and the statute expressly excepts deaneries, archdeacons, chancellorships, treasurerhips, chanterhips, prebends and sinecure rectories. See tit. Chaplain, Parson.

In case of a cession under the statute, the church is so far void upon institution to the second living, that the patron may take notice of it, and present if he pleases; but it seems that a lapse will not incur from the time of institution against the patron, unless notice be given him; but it will from the time of induction. 2 Wils. 200; 3 Burr. 1504. See title Advowson II.

CESSOR, Lat.] He who cesset, or neglects so long to perform a duty, that he thereby incurs the danger of the law. Old Nat. Br. 136.—See title Cessavit.

CESSURE, or cessur; cessing, giving over; or departing from. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 1. See title Cessavit.

CESTUI QUE TRUST, Is he in trust for whom, or to whose use or benefit, another man is enfeoffed or seised of lands or tenements. By Stat. 29 Car. 2. s. 3, lands of cestui que trust may be delivered in execution. See title Trusts, Uses.

CESTUI QUE USE, Fr. cestui à l'usage de qui.] He to whose use any other man is enfeoffed of lands or tenements. 1 Rep. 133. Feoffees to uses were formerly deemed owners of the lands; but now the possession is adjudged in cestui que use, and without any entry he may bring assise, &c. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10: Cro. Eliz. 46. See tit. Use.

CESTUI QUE VIE, He for whose life any lands or tenements are granted. Perk. 97. See title Overpursuants.

CHACEA, A station of game more extended than a park, and less than a forest: and is sometimes taken for the liberty of chafing or hunting within such a district. And according to Blount it hath another signification, i. e. the way through which cattle are drove to pasture, commonly called in some places a choue way. Bracton, lib. 4. c. 44. Vide Chafe.

CHACFARE ad lepores, vel vulpes: To hunt hare or fox. Cartular. Abbat. Glasen. MS. 87.

CHACURUS, from the Fr. chasseur.] A horse for the chase; or rather a hound or dog, a courser. Rot. 7 Johan.

CHAFE, from the Fr. chauffer to heat, whence our chafing dish.

CHAFEWAX, An officer in Chancery, that fitteth the wax for sealing of the writs, commissions and such other instruments as are there made to be issued out.

CHAFFERS, Seem to signify wares or merchandise; and chaffring is yet used for buying and selling, or rather a kind of bartering of one thing for another. The word is mentioned in the Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 4.

CHAINS, Hanging in. See title Murder.

CHAIRS, See Coaches.

CHALDRON or CHALDER of coals. See title Coals.

CHALKING, The merchants of the staple require to be eased of divers new impositions, as chalking, ironage, wharfage, &c. Rot. Parl. 50 Ed. 3.

CHALLENGE, Culmina, from the Fr. challenger.] An exception taken either against persons or things. Persons as to jurors, or any one or more of them: or in case of felony, by the prisoner at the bar against things, as a declaration, &c. Terms de la ley, 109.—The former is the most frequent signification in which this term is used, and which shall here be shortly mentioned; referring for further matter to titles Jury, Trial, in this Dictionary.

There are two kinds of challenge; either to the array, by which is meant the whole jury as it stands arrayed in the panel, or little square pane of parchment, on which the jurors' names are written; or to the polls; by which are meant the several particular persons or heads in the array. 1 Inst. 156, 8.

Challenge to jurors is also divided into challenge principal or peremptory; and challenge per cause, i. e. upon cause or reason alleged: challenge principal or peremptory, is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or further examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned for felony, may challenge peremptorily the number allowed him by law, one after another, alleging no cause, but his own dislike, and they shall be put off, and new taken in their places: but yet there is a difference between challenge principal, and challenge peremptory; the latter being used only in matters criminal, and barely without cause alleged; whereas the former is in civil actions for the most part, and by assigning some such cause of exception, as being found true the law allows. Stamdf. P. C. 124, 157: Lamb. Eiren lib. 4. cap. 14.

Challenge to the favour, which is a species of challenge for cause, is where the plaintiff or defendant is tenant to the sheriff, or if the sheriff's son hath married the daughter of the party, &c. and is also when either party cannot take any principal challenge, but sheweth cause of favour; and causes of favour are infinite. If one of the parties is of affinity to a juror, the juror hath married the plaintiff's daughter, &c. If a juror hath given a verdict before in the cause, matter or title; if one labours a juror to give his verdict; if after he is returned, a juror eats and drinks at the charge of either party; if the plaintiff, &c. be his master, or the juror hath any interest in the thing demanded, &c. these are challenges to the favour. 2 Roll. Abr. 636: Hob. 294.

CHALLENGE TO FIGHT.—It is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge, or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight; as by dispersing letters to that purpose, full of reflections, and insinuating a desire to fight, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63. § 3.

By Stat. 9 An. c. 14. § 8; (See title Gaming;) "Whoever shall [assault and beat,] or challenge, or provoke to fight, any other person or persons whatsoever, upon account of any money won by gaming, playing, or betting at any of the games mentioned in that act, shall on conviction by indictment or information, forfeit all their goods, chattels and personal estate, and suffer imprisonment without bail, in the county prison for two years."

It is now every day's practice for the court of K. B. to grant informations against persons sending challenges to justices of the peace, and in other heinous cases.

For further matter, See title Murder.

CHAMBERDEKINS, or Chamber-deacons, were certain poor hish scholars, clothed in mean habit, and living under no rule; or rather beggars banished England by Stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 7, 8.

CHAM

CHAMBERLAIN, Camērarius.] Is variously used in our laws, statutes and chronicles: as first there is Lord Great Chamberlain of England, to whose office belongs the government of the palace at Westminster; and upon all solemn occasions the keys of Westminster-Hall, and the court of Richests are delivered to him; he disposes of the sword of state to be carried before the king when he comes to the parliament, and goes on the right hand of the sword next to the king's person: he has the care of providing all things in the House of Lords in the time of parliament; to him belongs livery and lodgings in the king's court, &c. And the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeoman usher, &c. are under his authority.

The office of Lord Great Chamberlain of England is hereditary; and where a person dies seized in fee of this office, leaving two sisters, the office belongs to both sisters, and they may execute it by deputy: but such deputy must be approved of by the king, and must not be of a degree inferior to a knight. 2 Bro. P. C. 146, 840. ed.

The Lord Chamberlain of the Household has the oversight and government of all officers belonging to the king's chamber, (except the bed-chamber, which is under the groom of the stole), and also of the wardrobe; of artificers retained in the king's service, messengers, comedians, revels, musick, &c. The serjeants at arms are likewise under his inspection; and the king's chaplains, physicians, apothecaries, surgeons, barbers, &c. And he hath under him a vice-chamberlain, both being always privy councillors.

There were formerly chamberlains of the king's courts. 7 Ed. 6. cap. 1. And there are chamberlains of the Exchequer, who keep a controlment of the pells, of receipts and exitus, and have in their custody the leagues and treaties with foreign princes, many ancient records, the two famous books of antiquity called Domesday, and the Black book of the Exchequer; and the standards of money, and weights, and measures are kept by them. There are also under chamberlains of the Exchequer, who make searches for all records in the treasury; and are concerned in making out the tallies, &c. The office of chamberlain of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 16. Besides these, we read of a chamberlain of North Wales. Stowe, p. 641.

A chamberlain of Chester, to whom it belongs to receive the rents and revenues of that city; and when there is no Prince of Wales, and Earl of Chester, he hath the receiving and returning of all writs coming thither out of any of the king's courts. See title Counties-Palatine.

The chamberlain of London, who is commonly the receiver of the city rents payable into the chamber; and hath great authority in making, and determining the rights of freemen; as also concerning apprentices, orphans, &c. See title London.

CHAMBERS OF THE KING, Regie camere.] The havens or ports of the kingdom are so called in our ancient records. Mari Claus. fol. 242.

CHAMBRE DEPINCT, anciently St. Edward's chamber, now called the painted chamber.

CHAMPARTY, or CHAMPERTY, campi partitio, because the parties in champerty, agree to divide the land, &c. in question.] A bargain with the plaintiff or defendant in any suit, to have part of the land, debt, or other thing sued for, if the party that undertakes champerty vails thereof. Whereupon the Chancellor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expence. See 4 Comm. 435: 1 Inst. 368. It is a species of maintenance, and punished in the same manner. This seems to have been an ancient grievance in our nation; for notwithstanding the several statutes of Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 35: Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 49: 28 Ed. 1. St. 3. c. 11. and 35 Ed. 1. Stat. 3. c. 11. and a form of a writ framed to them; yet Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11. and 32 Hen. 8. cap. 9. enacted, That whereas former statutes provided redress for this evil in the King's Bench only, from henceforth it should be lawful for justices of the Common Pleas, justices of assize, and justices of peace in their quarter sessions, to inquire, hear and determine this and such like cases, as well at the suit of the king, as of the party: and this offence is punishable by common law and statute; the Stat. 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 3. makes the offenders liable to three years' imprisonment, and a fine at the king's pleasure. By the Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 11. it is ordained, that no officer, nor any other, shall take upon him any business in suit, to have part of the thing in plea; nor none upon any covenant, shall give up his right to another; and if any do, and be convicted thereof, the taker shall forfeit to the king so much of his lands and goods as amounts to the value of the part purchased.

In the construction of these statutes, it hath been adjudged, that under the word covenant, all kinds of promises and contracts are included, whether by writing, or parol: that rent granted out of land in variance, is within the statute of champerty: and grants of part of the thing in suit made merely in consideration of the maintenance, or champerty, are within the meaning of this statute; but not such as are made in consideration of a precedent honest debt, which is agreed to be satisfied with the thing in demand when recovered. F. N. B. 172: 2 Inst. 209: 2 Roll. Abr. 113.

It is said not to be material, whether he who brings a writ of champerty, did in truth suffer any damage by it; or whether the plea wherein it is alledged be determined or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84. A conveyance executed pending a plea, in pursuance of a bargain made before, is not within the statutes against champerty: and if a man purchase land of a party, pending the writ, if it be bonâ fide, and not to maintain, it is not champerty. F. N. B. 272: 2 Roll. Abr. 113. But it hath been held, that the purchase of land while a suit of equity concerning it is depending, is within the purview of the statute 28 E. 1. Stat. 3. c. 11: Moor 665. A lease for life, or years, or a voluntary gift of land, is within the statutes of champerty; but not a surrender made by a lessee to his lessor: or a conveyance relating to lands in suit, made by a father to his son, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84.

The giving part of the lands in suit, after the end of it, to a counsellor for his reward, is not champerty, if there be no precedent bargain relating to such gift; but if it had been agreed between the counsellor and his client before the action brought, that he should have part for his reward, then it would be champerty. Bro. Champert. 3. And it is dangerous to meddle with any such gift, since it carries with it a strong presumption of champerty. 2 Inst. 564. If any attorney follow a cause to be paid in gross, when the thing in suit is recovered, it hath been adjudged, adjudged, that this is champerty, Hob. 117. Every champerty implies maintenance; but every maintenance is not champerty. Grom. Jur. 39: 2 Inst. 208.

[To this head may be referred the provision of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9, that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant; or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder; on pain that both purchaser and vendor, shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor. See title Maintenance.

CHAMPERTORS, By statute, are those who move pleas or suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own procurement, or by others, and sue them at their proper costs, to have part of the land in variance, or part of the gain. 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 2. See the preceding article CHAMPION, campio.] Is taken in the law not only for him that fights a combat in his own cause, but also for him that doth it in the place or quarrel of another. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 21. And in Sir Edmond Bysshe's notes on Upon, fol. 36, it appears that Hemy de Feneburg, for thirty marks fee, did by charter covenant to be champion to Roger abbot of Glastenbury. Ar. 42 Hen. 3. These champions, mentioned in our law books and histories, were usually hired; and any one might hire them, except parricides, and those who were accused of the highest offences: before they came into the field, they shaved their heads, and made oath that they believed the persons who hired them, were in the right, and that they would defend their cause to the utmost of their power; which was always done on foot, and with no other weapon than a stick or club, and a shield: and before they engaged, they always made an offering to the church that God might assist them in the battle. When the battle was over, the punishment of a champion overcome, and likewise of the person for whom he fought, was various: if it was the champion of a woman for a capital offence, she was burnt, and the champion hanged: if it was of a man, and not for a capital crime, he not only made satisfaction, but had his right hand cut off; and the man was to be close confined in prison, till the battle was over. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35. See title Battel.

Victory in the trial by battel is obtained, if either champion proves recrout; that is, yields and pronounces the horrible word of craven; a word of disgrace and obloquy, rather than of any determinate meaning. But a horrible word it indeed is to the vanquished champion: since as a punishment to him for forfeiting the land of his principal, by pronouncing that shameful word, he is condemned as a recreant to become infamous, and not to be accounted liber & legalis homo; being supposed by the event to be proved forsworn, and therefore never to be put upon a jury, or admitted as a witness in any cause. 3 Comm. 345.

CHAMPION OF THE KING, campio regis.] An ancient officer, whose office it is at the coronation of our kings, when the king is at dinner, to ride armed cap-à-pied into Westminster-Hall, and by the proclamation of a herald make a challenge, That if any man shall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat, &c. Which being done, the king drinks to him, and sends him a gilt cup with a cover full of wine, which the champion drinks, and hath the cup for his fee. This office, ever since the coronation of King Richard II. when Baldwin Freville exhibited his petition for it, was adjudged from him to Sir John Dymocke his competitor, (both claiming from Marion), and hath continued ever since in the family of the Dymockes: who hold the manor of Scrivelsby in Lincolnshire, hereditary from the Marions; by grand serjeanty, viz. That the lord thereof shall be the king's champion, as aforesaid. Accordingly Sir Edward Dymocke performed this office at the coronation of King Charles II. And a person of the name of Dymocke performed it, at the coronation of his present Majesty George the Third.

CHANCE, Where a man commits an unlawful act, by misfortune, or chance, and not by design, it is a deficiency of the will; as here it observes a total neutrality, and doth not co operate with the deed; which therefore wants one main ingredient of a crime. Of this as it affects the life of another, See title Murder.—It is to be observed however generally, that if any accidental mischief happens to follow from the performance of a lawful act, the party stands excused from all guilt: but if a man be doing any thing unlawful, and a consequence ensues which he did not foresee or intend, as the death of a man or the like, his want of foresight shall be no excuse; for being guilty of one offence, in doing antecedently what is in itself unlawful, he is criminally guilty of whatever consequence may follow the first misbehaviour. 1 Hal. P. C. 39. See title Chance meley.

CHANCELLOR, Cancellarius.] Was at first only a chief notary or scribe under the emperor, and was called cancellarius, because he sat intra cancellos, to avoid the crowd of the people. This word is by some derived from cancello, and by others from cancellis, an inclosed or separated place, or chancel, encompassed with bars, to defend the judges, and other officers from the press of the public. And cancellarius originally, as Lupanus thinks, signified only the register in court; Grapharius, scilicet qui conscribendis & excipiens judicium actus dant operam. but this name and officer is of late times greatly advanced, not only in this, but in other kingdoms; for he is the chief administrator of justice, next to the Sovereign, who anciently heard equitable causes himself.

All other justices in this kingdom are tied to the strict rules of the law, in their judgments; but the Chancellor hath power to moderate the written law, governing his judgment by the law of nature and conscience, and ordering all things juxta æquum & bonum: and having the king's power in these matters, he hath been called the keeper of the king's conscience. It has been suggested, that the Chancellor originally presided over a political college of secretaries, for the writing of treaties, grants, and other public business; and that the court of equity under the old constitution was held before the king and his council in the palace, where one supreme court for business of every kind was kept: and at first the Chancellor became a judge to hear and determine petitions to the king, which were referred to him; and in the end, as business increased, the people intitled their suits to the chancellor, and not the king: and thus the chancellor's equitable power had by degrees commencement by prescription. Hist. Chan. p. 3. 10, 44. &c.

Stamford says, the Chancellor hath two powers; one absolute, the other ordinary; meaning, that although by his ordinary power, in some cases, he must observe the form of proceeding as other inferior judges; in his absolute power he is not limited by the law, but by conscience and equity, according to the circumstances of things. See post title Chancery.

And though Polydore Virgil, in his history of England, makes William the First, called the Conqueror, the founder of our chancellors; yet Dugdale has shewn that there were many chancellors of England long before that time, which are mentioned in his Origines Juridicales, and catalogues of chancellors; and Sir Edward Coke in his fourth Institute saith, it is certain, That both the British and Saxon kings had their chancellors, whose great authority under their kings were in all probability drawn from the reasonable custom of neighbouring nations and the civil law.

He that bears this chief magistracy, is styled the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, which is the highest honour of the long robe. A chancellor may be made so at will, by patent, but it is said not for life, for being an ancient office, it ought to be granted as hath been accustomed. 2 Inst. 87. But Sir Edward Hyde, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, had a patent to be lord chancellor for life, though he was dismissed from that office, and the patent declared void. 1 Sid. 338.

By the Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 18, The Lord Chancellor and Keeper have one and the same power; and therefore since that statute, there cannot be a Lord Chancellor and Lord Keeper at the same time; before, there might, and had been. 4 Inst. 78. King Hen. V. had a great seal of gold, which he delivered to the Bishop of Durham, and made him Lord Chancellor, and also another of silver, which he delivered to the Bishop of London to keep. But the Lord Bridgman was Lord Keeper, and Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, at the same time; which offices were held not to be inconsistent. Ibid. By Stat. 1 W. & M. cap. 21, Commissioners appointed to execute the office of Lord Chancellor, may exercise all the authority, jurisdiction, and execution of laws, which the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, of right ought to use and execute, &c. since which statute this high office hath been several times in commission.

The office of LORD CHANCELLOR or LORD KEEPER, is now created by the mere delivery of the King's great seal into his custody: whereby he becomes, without writ or patent, an officer of the greatest weight and power of any now subsisting in the kingdom, and superior in point of precedence to every temporal lord.—And the act of taking away this seal by the king, or of its being resigned or given up by the Chancellor, determines his office. (See 1 Sid. 338).—He is a privy councillor by his office; and, according to Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, prolocutor of the House of Lords by prescription.—To him belongs the appointment of all Justices of peace throughout the kingdom. Being formerly usually an Ecclesiastical (for none else were then capable of an office so conversant in writings) and presiding over the Royal Chapel, he became keeper of the King's conscience; visitor, in right of the king of all hospitals and colleges of the king's foundation, and patron of all the king's livings under the value of twenty marks a year in the king's books. (38 Ed. 3. 3: F. N. B. 35. though Hob. 214. extends this value to twenty pounds).—He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots and lunatics; and has the general superintendence of all charitable uses in the kingdom.

And all this over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction, which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the Court of Chancery. 3 Comm. 47.

The Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 2, declares it to be treason to slay the Chancellor (and certain other judges) being in their places doing their offices; and it seems that the Lord Keeper and Commissioners of the great seal, are within this statute by virtue of Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 18; and 1 W. & M. c. 21, already mentioned. See title Treason.

The Lord Chancellor, now there is no Lord High Steward, is accounted the first officer of the kingdom; and he not only keeps the king's great seal, but all patents, commissions, warrants, &c. from the king, are perused and examined by him before signed; and Lord Coke says the lord chancellor is so termed à cancellando, from cancelling the king's letters patent, when granted contrary to law; which is the highest point of his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. 88. He by his oath swears well and truly to serve the king, and to do right to all manner of people, &c. In his judicial capacity, he hath divers assistants and officers, viz. The master of the rolls, the masters in chancery, &c. And in matters of difficulty, he calls one or more of the chief justices, and judges to assist him in making his decrees; though in such cases they only give their advice and opinion, and have no share whatever of the judicial authority.

The Master of the Rolls, however has judicial power, and is an assistant to the Lord Chancellor when present, and his deputy when absent; but he has certain causes assigned him to hear and decree, which he usually doth on certain days appointed at the chapel of the Rolls, being assisted by one or more Masters in chancery: he is, by virtue of his office, chief of the masters of chancery, and chief clerk of the petty-bag office.

The Twelve Masters in Chancery sit some of them in court, and take notice of such references as are made to them, to be reported to the court, relating to matters of practice, the state of the proceedings, accounts, &c. and they also take affidavits, acknowledge deeds and recognisances, &c.

The Six Clerks in chancery transact and file all proceedings by bill and answer; and also issue out some patents that pass the great seal; which business is done by their under clerks, each of whom has a feat there, and whereof every six clerk has a certain number in his office, usually about ten; the whole body being called the sixty clerks.

The Curstors of the court, four and twenty in number, make out all original writs in chancery, which are returnable in C. B. &c. and among these the business of the several counties is severally distributed.

The Register is a place of great importance in this court, and he hath several deputies under him, to take cognizance of all orders and decrees, and enter and draw them up, &c.

The Master of the Subpœna Office issues out all writs of subpœna.

The Examiners are officers in this court, who take the depositions of witnesses, and are to examine them, and make out copies of the depositions.

The Clerk of the Affidavits files all affidavits used in court, without which they will not be admitted.

The Clerk of the Rolls sits constantly in the rolls to make searches for deeds, offices, &c. and to make out copies.

The

The Clerks of the Petty-Bag Office, in number three, have great variety of business that goes through their hands, in making out writs of summons to parliament, congés d'élire for bishops, patents for customers; liberates upon extent of statute-staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, &c. And also relating to suits for and against privileged persons, &c. And the clerks of this office have several clerks under them.

The Usher of the Chancery had formerly the receiving and custody of all money ordered to be deposited in court, and paid it back again by order: but this business was afterwards assumed by the Masters in Chancery; till by Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32, a new officer was appointed, called The Accountant General, to receive the money lodged in court, and convey the same to the Bank, to be there kept for the suitors of the court.

There is also a Serjeant at Arms, to whom persons standing in contempt are brought up by his substitute as prisoners.

A Warden of the Fleet, who receives such prisoners as stand committed by the court, &c.

Besides these offices, there is a clerk of the crown in Chancery; clerk and controller of the hanaper; clerk for inrolling letters patent, &c. not employed in proceedings of equity, but concerned in making out commissions, patents, pardons, &c. under the great seal, and collecting the fees thereof. A clerk of the faculties, for dispensations, licences, &c.; clerk of the presentations, for benefices of the crown in the chancellor's gift; clerk of appeals, on appeals from the courts of the archbishop to the court of chancery: and divers others officers, who are constituted by the chancellor's commission.—See post title Chancery.

CHANCELLOR of a DIOCESE; or, of a BISHOP—A person appointed to hold the Bishop's courts, and to assist him in matters of ecclesiastical law. This officer, as well as all other ecclesiastical ones, if lay or married, must be a Doctor of the civil law so created in some university. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 17.

CHANCELLOR of the DUTCHY of LANCASTER.—An officer before whom, or his deputy the court of the Dutchy Chamber of Lancaster is held. This is a special jurisdiction concerning all matter of equity relating to lands holden of the king in right of the Dutchy of Lancaster. Hob. 77. 2 Lev. 24.—This is a thing very distinct from the county palatine, which hath also its separate Chancery for sealing of writs and the like. 1 Vent. 257.—This Dutchy comprizes much territory which lies at a vast distance from the county, as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as on the Equity side in the courts of Exchequer and Chancery. 4 Inst. 206. So that it seems not to be a court of record: and it has been holden that those courts have a concurrent jurisdiction with the Dutchy Court, and may take cognizance of the same causes. 1 C. R. 55: Talb. 145: Hard. 171.

This court is held in Westminster-Hall, and was formerly much used. Under the chancellor of the Dutchy are an attorney of the court, one chief clerk or register, and several auditors, &c.—see further title Counties Palatine.

CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, Is likewise a great officer, who, it is thought by many, was originally appointed for the qualifying extremities in the Exchequer: he sometimes sits in court, and in the Exchequer-Chamber; and with the judges of the court, orders things to the king's best benefit. He hath by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 30. power, with others, to compound for the forfeitures upon penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into to the king: he hath also great authority in the management of the royal revenue, &c. which seems of late to be his chief business, being commonly the first commissioner of the treasury. And though the court of equity in the Exchequer-chamber, was intended to be holden before the treasurer, chancellor, and barons, it is usually before the barons only. When there is a lord-treasurer, the chancellor of the exchequer is under treasurer.

As to the Chancellor of the Order of the Garter. See Stow's Annals, pag. 706.—Chancellor of the Universities. See title Courts of the Universities.—The office of Chancellor in Cathedral Churches, is thus described in the Monasticon. Lectiones legendas in ecclesia per se vel per suum vicarium audire, male legentes emendare, scholas conferre, sigilla ad causas conferre, literas capituli facere & consignare, libros servare, quotiescumque voluerit predicare, predicationes in ecclesia vel extra ecclesiam predicare, & cui voluerit predicationis officium assignare. See Mon Angl. tom. 3. p. 24, 339.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, From the Fr. chance, lapsus and mêler, miscere.] Such killing of a man as happens either [in self-defence] on a sudden quarrel; or in the commission of an unlawful act, without any deliberate intention of doing any mischief at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 1.

The self-defence here meant, is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault or the like in the course of a sudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. And this is what the law expresses by this word chance-medley, or as some rather choose to write it, chaud-medley; the former of which, in its etymology signifies a casual asray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or passion; both of them of pretty much the same import: but the former is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of homicide, by misadventure; whereas it appears by Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 5, and in ancient law-books, that it is properly applied to such killing as happens to self-defence, in a sudden encounter. 4 Comm. 183; cites Starin. P. C. 16: 3 Inst. 55, 7: Foster 275, 6.—This being in fact a species of excusable homicide, comes more properly under the division of murder, and is therefore treated of in that place. See title Murder.—In chance-medley the offender forfeits his goods, but hath a pardon of course. See Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9.

CHANCERY.

CANCELLARIA] The highest court of judicature in this kingdom next to the parliament, and of very ancient institution. The jurisdiction of this court is of two kinds; ordinary and extraordinary. The ordinary jurisdiction, is that wherein the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, &c. in his proceedings and judgments, is bound to observe the order and method of the common law; and the extraordinary jurisdiction is that which this Court exercises in cases of equity.

The Ordinary Court holds plea of recognizances acknowledged in the Chancery, writs of scire facias for repeal of letters patent, writs of partition, &c. and also of all personal actions, by or against any officer of the court, and by acts of parliament of several offences and causes. All original writs, commissions of bankrupt, of charitable uses, and other commissions, as ideots, lunacy, &c. issue out of this court, for which it is always open; and sometimes a superfetas, or writ of privilege, hath been here granted to discharge a person out of prison. An habeas corpus, prohibition, &c. may be had from this in the vacation; and here a subpoena may be had to force witnesses to appear in other courts, when they have no power to call them. 4 Inst. 79: 1 Danv. Abr. 776.

The Extraordinary Court, or Court of Equity, proceeds by the rules of equity and conscience, and moderates the rigour of the Common law, considering the intention rather than the words of the law. Equity being the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient.—On this ground therefore, to maintain a suit in Chancery, it is always alledged that the plaintiff is incapable of obtaining relief at common law; and this must be without any fault of his own, as by having lost his bond, &c. Chancery never acting against, but in assistance of the common law, supplying its deficiencies, not contradicting its rules. A judgment at law not being reversible by a degree in chancery. Cio. Eliz. 220. But a bill in chancery may be brought to compel the discovery of the contents of a letter which would discharge the plaintiff of an action at law, before verdict obtained. 3 C. Rep. 17.

A sensible modern writer remarks, that it is not a very easy task, accurately to describe the jurisdiction of our courts of equity.—They who have attempted it have generally failed.—The following extract from that writer on the subject may perhaps prove more acceptable than any thing which could fall from the Editor's own pen.

Early in the history of our jurisprudence, the administration of justice by the ordinary courts, appears to have been incomplete. To supply the defect, the courts of equity have gained an establishment, assuming the power of enforcing the principles, upon which the ordinary courts also decide when the powers of those courts or their modes of proceeding are insufficient for the purpose;—of preventing those principles, when enforced by the ordinary courts, from becoming, contrary to the purpose of their original establishment, instruments of injustice;—and of deciding on principles of universal justice, where the interference of a court of judicature is necessary to prevent a wrong, and the positive law is silent. The courts of equity also administer to the ends of justice, by removing impediments to the fair decision of a question in other courts; by providing for the safety of property in dispute, pending a litigation; by restraining the assertion of doubtful rights, in a manner productive of irreparable damage; by preventing injury to a third person from the doubtful title of others; and by putting a bound to vexatious and oppressive litigations, and preventing unnecessary multiplicity of suits; and, without pronouncing any judgment on the subject, by compelling a discovery which may enable other courts to give their judgment; and by preserving testimony, when in danger of being lost, before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation. This establishment has obtained throughout the whole system of our judicial policy; most of the inferior branches of that system having their peculiar courts of equity: [e. g. the court of exchequer, courts of Wals., the counties palatine, cinque-ports, &c.]

and the Court of Chancery assuming a general jurisdiction in cases which are not within the bounds, or which are beyond the powers, of other jurisdictions. Merrivord's Treatise on the Pleadings in Chancery, 8vo. 1787. 2d edition.

It is not therefore to be expected that all the cases within the jurisdiction of this court can be enumerated with any degree of accuracy in such a work as this.—What confusedly follows may serve to shew the leading principles of its decisions.—They who desire further and more precise information, will consult VINER's and the other Abridgment and Digests, which enter so much more fully into the subject.

This Court gives relief for and against infants, notwithstanding their minority: and for and against married women, notwithstanding their coverture: in some cases a woman may sue her husband for maintenance; she may sue him when he is beyond sea, &c. and be compelled to answer without her husband. All frauds and deceptions, for which there is no remedy at Common Law may here be redressed; as also unreasonable and deceitful engagements and agreements entered into, without consideration. 1 Vern. 205. See title Fraud.—All breaches of trust and confidence; and accidents; as to relieve obligors, mortgagors, &c. against penalties and forfeitures, where the intent was only to pay the debt; Titles to lands, where the deeds are lost, or supposed, may by this court be confirmed, conveyances rendered defective by mistake, may be made perfect, &c.

In this Court executors may be called upon to give security and pay interest for money that is to lie long in their hands. Here executors may sue one another, or one executor alone be sued by the legatees or others, without the rest: order may be made for performance of a will: it may be decreed who shall have the tuition of a child, and other matters are regulated as to the disposal of the goods of testators and intestates. See 3 Comm. 437.—Under this head it may be observed that money articulated to be laid out in land, shall be taken as land in equity and descend to the heir. 1 Salk. 154. Personal estate in the hands of executors, shall be applied in discharge of the heir, where there are sufficient assets to pay the debts and legacies. 1 Danv. 770. There shall be no bill in equity against an executor, to discover assets before a suit commenced at law. Hard. 115. Sed. qu. Legal assets shall be applied in a course of administration; but equitable assets amongst all the creditors proportionably, on a bill brought, &c. 2 Vern. 62. See title Assets, Executor.

Mortgages are not relievable in equity after twenty years, where no demand has been made, or interest paid, or where other particular circumstances do not interfere, &c. 2 Vent. 340. See title Mortgage.

Copyhold tenants may be relieved against the lords of manors—inclosures of common lands may be decreed—assignments of choses in action for a good consideration, though not valid in law, may be carried into effect—accounts are compelled to be rendered—the limitation of actions by statute may be relieved against.

A deed appearing to be cancelled, has been decreed to be a good deed, on special circumstances. 1 Ch. Caf. 249. Articles of agreement upon marriage reduced into writing, though not signed by either party, being proved to be agreed to, were decreed to be performed. 2 Vern. 200.

an agreement in writing made since the statute of frauds, has been decreed to be discharged by parol. 1 Fern. 240.

A release shall be avoided for fraud, where there is suppositio veri, or suppositio falsi; and a release may be set aside in Chancery on reason of the apprehension of the party that gave it. 1 Fern. 20, 32. A will concerning lands may be avoided in a court of equity when obtained by fraud; 2 Gb. Rep. 97. Heirs may be relieved in equity against unconscionable contracts made during their fathers' lives in payment of large sums of money on their out-living their fathers, and the securities are frequently decreed to be delivered up, on payment of the sum actually advanced. 2 Chan. Rep. 397: 1 Fern. 467.

A purchaser of land, without notice of an incumbrance, shall not be hurt thereby in equity; and in pleading a purchase the defendant ought to deny notice of incumbrances, &c. Indentures of apprenticeship have been decreed to be delivered up, and the money given with the apprentice to be paid back by the master, on ill usage of the apprentice, &c. Finch Rep. 125. Charity lands being let at a great under-value, as was found by inquisition, on a commission of charitable uses, the lease was avoided in equity, and the lessee decreed to pay the arrears in rent according to the first value, and to yield up the possession. 2 Fern. 415. Other cases of relief, with respect to public charities and charitable corporations, come also under the immediate direction of the Court of Chancery.

It is common to give relief in chancery, notwithstanding there is an agreement between the parties that there shall be no relief in law or equity. 1 Mol. 141, 305. In cases which tend to restrain freedom, or introduce corruption into marriage contracts, the court are always most ready to afford relief. If a portion be given to a woman, provided she marries not without the consent of a certain person, although she marries without such consent, she shall be relieved in Chancery, and have her portion: unless the portion, on such marriage, had been limited over to another, in which case it is otherwise. 1 Danv. 752: 1 Mol. 300. If a father, on the marriage of his son, take a bond of the son that he shall pay him so much, &c. this is void in equity, being adjudged by coercion while he is under the awe of his father. 1 Salk. 158. Also where a son, without privity of the father, treating the match, gives bond, to return any part of the portion, in equity it is void. Ibid. 156. But a man is not bound to discover the consideration of a bond generally given, which in itself implies a consideration. Hurd. 200. See titles Fraud, Marriage, &c.

If a factor to a merchant hath money in his hands, it shall be accounted his own; for equity cannot follow money; but it may goods to make them the merchant's which may be known, though money cannot. 1 Salk. 260.

Where trustees convert money raised out of land for payment of debts, to their own use, the heir shall have the land discharged, which hath borne its burden, and the trustees are liable to the debts in equity. 1 Salk. 153. If lessee for years, without impeachment of waste, about the end of his term cuts down timber-trees, the court of chancery may stop him by injunction. 1 Roll. Ab. 380. And tenant after possibility of issue extinct, or for life, punishable of waste, may be stopped in equity from pulling down houses, &c. 1 Danv. 761.

The following is a general and comprehensive view of the nature and reason of the pleadings in Chancery, extracted and abridged from Mr. Mifford's Treatise.

Previous to entering on the subject, it should be remembered, that Chancery will not retain a suit for any thing under 10 l. value, except in cases of charity, nor for lands under 40 s. per annum.

A suit to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the court of chancery, on behalf of a subject merely, is commenced by preferring a bill (signed by counsel) in the nature of a petition to the lord chancellor, lord keeper or lords commissioners of the great seal; or to the king himself, in his court of Chancery, in case the person holding the seal is a party, or the seal is in the king's hand. But if the suit is instituted on behalf of the crown, or of those who partake of it's prerogative, or whose rights are under its particular protection, as the objects of a publick charity, the matter of complaint is offered by way of information, given by the proper officers [usually the attorney general]. Except in some few instances, bills and informations have been always in the English language; and a suit thus preferred is therefore commonly termed a suit by English bill, by way of distinction from the proceedings in suits within the ordinary jurisdiction of the court, which 'till the stat. of 4 Geo. II. c. 26, were entered and enrolled more anciently in the French or Roman tongue, and afterwards in the Latin; in the same manner as the pleadings in the other courts of common law.

Every bill must have for its object one or more of the grounds upon which the jurisdiction of the court is founded; and as that jurisdiction sometimes extends to decide on the subject, and in some cases is only ancillary to the decision of another court, or a future suit, the bill may 1, either complain of some injury which the person exhibiting it suffers, and pray relief, according to the injury; or, 2, without praying relief, may seek a discovery of matter necessary to support or defend another suit; or, 3, although no actual injury is suffered, it may complain of a threatened wrong; and, stating a probable ground of possible injury, may pray the assistance of the court to enable the plaintiff, or person exhibiting the bill to defend himself against the injury whenever it shall be attempted to be committed.

As the court of Chancery has general jurisdiction in matters of equity which are not within the bounds, or which are beyond the powers, of inferior jurisdictions, it assumes a controul over those jurisdictions, by removing from them suits which they are incompetent to determine. To effect this it requires the party injured to institute a suit in the court of Chancery, the sole object of which is, the removal of the former suit, by means of the writ of certiorari; and the prayer of the bill used for this purpose is confined to that object.

The bill, except it merely prays the writ of certiorari, [in which case it does not require any defence, nor can there be any pleading beyond the bill.] requires the answer of the defendant or party complained of, upon oath; unless the party is entitled to privilege of peerage, or as a lord of parliament, or unless a corporation aggregate is made a party. In the first case the answer is required upon the honour of the defendant, and in the latter under the corporation seal.

[In the case of exhibiting a bill against a peer, the Lord Chancellor writes a letter to him, called a letter in chancery.

missive, and if he does not put in his answer, a subpœna issues, and then an order to shew cause, why a sequestration should not issue, and if he still stands out, then a sequestration is granted; for there can be no process of contempt against the person of a peer: The process is the same against a member of the house of commons, except the latter missive.]

An answer is thus required in the case of a bill, seeking the decree of the court on the subject of the complaint, with a view—1, To obtain an admission of the case made by the bill either in aid of proof; or—2, to supply the want of it—3, To obtain a discovery of the points in the plaintiff's case, controverted by the defendant, and—4, of the grounds on which they are controverted—5, To gain a discovery of the case on which the defendant relies; and—6, of the manner in which he means to support it.

If the bill seeks only the assistance of the court to protect the plaintiff against a future injury, the answer of the defendant, upon oath, may be required to obtain an admission of the plaintiff's title, and a discovery of the claims of the defendant, and the grounds on which those claims are intended to be supported.

When the sole object of the bill is a discovery of matter necessary to support or defend another suit, the oath of the defendant is required to compel that discovery; which oath however the plaintiff may, if he thinks proper dispense with, by consenting to or obtaining an order of court for the purpose; and this is frequently done for the convenience of parties.

To the bill thus preferred (unless it is merely for a certiorari) it is necessary for the person or persons complained of to make defence, or to disclaim all rights to the matters in question.

As the bill calls upon the defendant to answer the several charges it contains, he must do so, unless he can dispute the right of the plaintiff to compel such answer; either, 1, From some impropriety in requiring the discovery sought; or 2, From some objection to the proceeding to which the discovery is proposed to be assent; or 3, Unless by disclaiming all right to the matters in question, he shews a further answer from him to be unnecessary.

The grounds on which defence may be made to a bill either by answer, or by disputing the right of the plaintiff to compel such answer, are various. 1. The subject of the suit may not be within the jurisdiction of a court of Equity; 2. Some other court of Equity may have the proper jurisdiction. 3. The plaintiff may not be entitled to sue, by reason of some personal disability. 4. The plaintiff may not be the person he pretends to be.—5. He may have no interest in the subject, or 6, Though he has such interest he may have no right to call upon the defendant concerning it. 7. The defendant may not be the person he is alledged to be by the bill; or 8, He may not have that interest in the subject to make him liable to the claims of the plaintiff.—And notwithstanding all these requisites concur. 9. Still the plaintiff may not be entitled in the whole, or in part to the relief or assistance he prays; or 10. Even if he is so entitled, the defendant may also have rights in the subject which may require the attention of the court, and call for its interference to adjust the rights of all parties.—The effecting complete justice, and finally determining as far as possible, all questions concerning the subject being the constant aim of courts of Equity.

Some of these grounds may extend only to entitle the defendant to dispute the plaintiff's claim to the relief prayed by the bill; and may not be sufficient to protect him from making the discovery sought by it: and where there is no ground for disputing the plaintiff's right to relief, or if no relief is prayed, the impropriety or immateriality of the discovery may protect the defendant from making it.

The form of making defence varies according to the foundation on which it is made, and the extent in which it submits to the judgment of the court.—If it rests on the bill, and, on the foundation of the matter there apparent, demand the judgment of the court, whether the suit shall proceed at all, it is termed A Demurrer. If on the foundation of new matter offered, it demands judgment whether the defendant shall be compelled to answer further, it assumes a different form, and is termed A Plea. If it submits to answer generally the charges in the bill, demanding the judgment of the court on the whole case made on both sides, it is offered in a shape still different, and is simply called An Answer.—If the defendant disclaims all interest in the matters in question, his answer to the complaint made is different from all the others, and is termed A Disclaim.—And these several forms, or any of them may be used together, if applied to separate and distinct parts of the bill.

A Demurrer being founded on the bill itself, necessarily admits the truth of the facts contained in the bill, or in that part of it to which the demurrer extends; and therefore as no fact can be in question between the parties, the court may immediately proceed to pronounce its definitive judgment on the demurrer; which, if favourable to the defendant, puts an end to so much of the suit as the demurrer extends to. A demurrer thus allowed consequently prevents any further proceeding.

A Plea is also intended to prevent further proceeding at large, by resting on some point founded on matter stated in the plea; and it therefore admits, for the purposes of the plea, the truth of the facts contained in the bill, so far as they are not controverted by facts stated in the plea.—Upon the sufficiency of this defence the court will also give immediate judgment, supposing the facts stated in it to be true; but the judgment if favourable to the defendant, is not definitive; for the truth of the plea may be denied by A Replication, and the parties may then proceed to examine witnesses, the one to prove and the other to disprove the facts stated in the plea. The replication in this case concludes the pleadings, though if the truth of the plea is not supported, further proceedings may be had, which will be noticed presently.

An Answer generally controverts the facts stated in the bill, or some of them; and states other facts to shew the rights of the defendant, in the subject of the suit; but sometimes it admits the truth of the case made by the bill, and either with or without stating additional facts, submits the questions arising upon the case, thus made, to the judgment of the court. If an answer admits the facts stated in the bill, or such of them as are material to the plaintiff's case; and states no new facts, or such only as the plaintiff is willing to admit, no further pleading is necessary; the court will decide on the answer, considering considering it as true. So if the sole object of the suit is to obtain a discovery, there can be no proceeding beyond an answer by which the discovery is obtained. But if necessary to maintain the plaintiff's case, the truth of the answer, or of any part of it, may be denied, and the sufficiency of the bill may be asserted by a replication, which in this case also concludes the pleadings according to the present practice of the court.

If a Demurrer or Plea is over-ruled upon argument, the defendant must make a new defence. This he cannot do by a second demurrer of the same extent with that over-ruled; for although, by a standing order of the court, a cause of demurrer must be set forth in the pleading, yet if that is over-ruled, any other cause appearing on the bill may be offered on argument of the demurrer, and if valid, will be allowed, the rule of court affecting only the costs. But after a demurrer has been over-ruled, new defence may be made by a demurrer less extended, or by plea or answer.—And after a plea has been over-ruled, defence may be made by demurrer, by a new plea, or by an answer, and the proceedings upon the new defence will be the same as if it had been originally made.

A Disclaimer neither asserting any fact, nor denying any right sought by the bill, admits of no further pleading.

Suits thus instituted are sometimes imperfect in their frame, or become so by accident before their end has been obtained; and the interests in the property in litigation may be changed, pending the suit, in various ways.—To supply the defects arising from any such circumstances, new suits may become necessary, to add to, or continue, or obtain the benefit of, the original suit. A litigation commenced by one party, sometimes renders necessary a litigation by another party, to operate as a defence, or to obtain a full decision on the rights of all parties. [And bills filed for this purpose are termed cross-bills.]—Where the court has given judgment on a suit, it will in some cases permit that judgment to be controverted, suspended or avoided by a second suit; and sometimes a second suit becomes necessary to carry into execution a judgment of the court.—Suits instituted for any of these purposes are also commenced by bill; and hence arises a variety of distinctions of the kinds of bills necessary to answer the several purposes; [as bills of review, (which among other causes may be brought, where new matter is discovered, in time, after the decree made) bills of revivor, &c. See 3 Com. 448, &c.] and on all the different kinds of bills there may be the same pleadings as on a bill used for instituting an original suit.

It frequently happens, that pending a suit, the parties discover some error or defect in some of the pleadings; and if this can be rectified by amendment of the pleadings, the court will in many cases permit it.—If his indulgence is most extensive in the case of bills; which being often framed upon an inaccurate state of the case, it was formerly the practice to supply their deficiencies, and avoid the consequences of errors by special replications. but this tending to long and intricate pleading, the special replication, requiring a rejoinder in which the defendant might in like manner supply defects in his answer, and to which the plaintiff might sur-rejoinder, the special replication is now disused, for this purpose: and the court will in general permit a plaintiff to rectify any error, or supply any defect in his bill, either by amendment or by a supplemental bill, and will also permit, in some cases, a defendant in like manner to complete his answer, either by amendment or by a further answer.

If the plaintiff conceives a defendant's answer to be insufficient to the charges contained in the bill, he may take exceptions against it, on which it is referred to a Master to report, whether it be sufficient or not; to which report exceptions may be also made. The answer, replication, and rejoinder, &c. being settled, and the parties come to issue, witnesses are examined upon interrogatories, either in court, or by commission in the country, wherein the parties usually join; and when the plaintiff and defendant have examined their witnesses, publication is made of the depositions, and the cause is set down for hearing, after which follows the decree.

If however in the process of the cause the parties come to an issue of fact, which by the common law is triable by a jury, the Lord Chancellor in this case, delivers the record into the King's Bench to be tried there; and after trial had, the record is remanded into Chancery, and judgment given there. Trials and issues at law are frequently directed by the Court, which in that case makes an interlocutory decree or order, that after trial the parties shall resort to the court on the equity referred.

Interlocutory orders and decrees are also made on other occasions; as for injunctions till a hearing, where the injury sustained by the plaintiff requires such immediate interference. See title Injunction.

If the plaintiff dismisses his own bill, or the defendant obtains the dismissal of it for want of prosecution, or if the decree is in behalf of the defendant, the bill is dismissed with costs to be taxed by a Master. Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. If the defendant does not appear, on being served with the process of subpoena, in order to answer, upon affidavit of the service of the writ, an attachment issues out against him: and if a non est inventus is returned, an attachment with proclamation goes forth against him; and if he stands further out in contempt, then a commitment of rebellion may be issued, for apprehending him, and bringing him to the Fleet prison; in the execution whereof the persons to whom directed may justify breaking open doors. If the defendant stands further in contempt, a serjeant at arms is to be sent out to take him; and if he cannot be taken, a sequestration of his land may be obtained till he appears. And if a decree, when made, is not obeyed, being served upon the party under the seal of the court, all the aforementioned processes of contempt may issue out against him, for his imprisonment till he yields obedience to it.—The court of Chancery, notwithstanding its very extensive power binding the person only, and not the estate or effects of the defendant. And in the last, we presume, it is said that it is no court of record. 1 Danv. Ab. 749, and Chan. Rep. 193, Howard v. Suffolk.

Where there is any error in a decree in matter of law, there may be a bill of review, which is in nature of a writ of error; or an appeal to the House of Lords. Ordinances have been quoted, that a writ of error lies returnable in B. R.—And that a judgment of Chancery may be referred to the twelve judges. 4 Inq. 80 3 Bull. 116. But it is now usual to appeal to the House of Lords; which appeals are to be signed by two counsel of eminence, and exhibited by way of petition; the petition or appeal is lodged with the clerk of the House of Lords, and read in the house, whereon the appellee is ordered to put in his answer, and a day fixed for hearing the cause; and after counsel heard, and evidence given on both sides, the Lords affirm or reverse the decree of the Chancery, and finally determine the cause by a majority of votes. &c. Though it is to be observed on an appeal to the Lords from a decree in Chancery, no proofs will be permitted to be read as evidence, which were not made use of in the Chancery. Preced. Canc. 212.

For further matter as to the jurisdiction of the court, its modes of proceeding, and the various cases wherein it relieves, &c. vide Com. Dig. (2 V.) tit. Chancery, and Mr. Misford's treatise before quoted.

There are several statutes relating to the court of Chancery. By Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 5, the court of Chancery is to follow the king. By Stat. 18 Ed. 3. Stat. 5, the oaths of the clerks in Chancery are appointed. The chancellor and treasurer may correct errors in the Exchequer. Whoever shall find himself grieved with any statute, shall have his remedy in Chancery 36 Ed. 3. c. 9: 31 Ed. 3. Stat. 1. c. 12. And see 15 R. 2. c. 12: 17 R. 2. c. 6: & 4 H. 8. c. 9.

No subpoena, or other process of appearance, shall issue out of Chancery, &c. till after a bill is filed, (except bills for injunctions to stay waste, or to stay suits at law commenced), and a certificate thereof brought to the subpoena office. Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. Persons in remainder, or reversion of any estate, after the death of another, on making affidavit in the court of Chancery, that they have cause to believe such other person dead, and his death concealed by the guardian, trustees or others, may move the lord chancellor to order such guardian, trustees, &c. to produce the person suspected to be concealed; and if he be not produced, he shall be taken to be dead, and those in reversion, &c. may enter upon the estate: and if such person be abroad, a commission may be issued for his being viewed by commissioners. Stat. 6 An. c. 18.

Infants under the age of twenty-one years, seised of estates in trust, or by way of mortgage, are enabled by statute to make conveyances thereof; or they may be compelled thereto, by order of the court of Chancery, &c. upon petition and hearing of the parties concerned. 7 An. c. 9. And see the statute of 4 Geo. 2. c. 10. whereby ideots and lunatics seised of estates in trust, &c. may make conveyances by order of the Chancery, &c. See titles Infant, Lunatic.

By 12 Geo. 1. c. 32 and 33, the power of the Masters was abridged, with respect to the suitors' money, which is now to be paid into the Bank of England: and an additional stamp-duty, on writs, processes, &c. is granted for relief of the suitors, and as a common stock of the Court of Chancery.

All orders and decrees made and signed by the Master of the Rolls, shall be deemed and taken to be good and valid orders and decrees of the court of Chancery; but not to be enrolled till signed by the lord chancellor, and subject to reversal, &c. by him. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Where a defendant does not appear after subpoena issued, but keeps out of the way to avoid being served with the process; on affidavit that he is not to be found, and suspected to be gone beyond sea, or to abscond, &c. the court of Chancery will make an order for his appearance at a certain day; a copy of which order is to be published in the London Gazette, &c. and then, if he do not appear, the plaintiff's bill shall be taken pro confesso, and the defendant's estate sequestered, &c. But persons out of the kingdom, returning in seven years, may have a rehearing in six months, and be admitted to answer; otherwise to be barred, by final decree. 5 Geo. 2. c. 25.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 24, Part of the suitors' cash is to be placed out at interest, for defraying the charge of the Accountant General's office. And see 23 Geo. 2. c. 25, for making good deficiencies to the clerk of the Hanaper, and for augmenting the income of the Master of the Rolls.

By 1 Geo. 3. c. 1, The king is empowered to grant a sum not exceeding 5000*l.* per annum to the chancellor.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 32, Part of the suitors' cash unclaimed to be placed at interest, to be applied to the Accountant-General's third clerk, and other purposes.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 28, 80,000*l.* of the suitors' cash was placed at interest; and 200*l.* per annum paid thereout half-yearly, to each of the eleven masters of the court.

By 9 Geo. 3. c. 19, 20,000*l.* more of the suitors' money was placed at interest: out of which 460*l.* per annum is paid in salaries, viz. 250*l.* to the accountant-general; 50*l.* to his first clerk; 40*l.* to his second clerk; and 120*l.* to his 4th clerk, in lieu of all fees. The residue being brought to account.

By 14 Geo. 3. c. 43, 50,000*l.* more was in like manner placed out; and out of the interest thereof, and the surplus interest under 12 Geo. 2. c. 24; 5 Geo. 3. c. 28; and 9 Geo. 3. c. 19, the Chancellor is by his order to direct the re-building of the Six Clerks' office, and apply 10,000*l.* (and by 20 Geo. 3. c. 33, 3000*l.* more) for building the Register's and Accountant-General's offices; to be vested in the Accountant-General and his successors.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 22, Part of Lincoln's-Inn garden was vested in the Accountant General, in trust, for the purposes in the last act, as to the Register's and Accountant-General's office.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 56, the Lord Chancellor may apply certain sums to be raised, as mentioned in 14 Geo. 3. for the purposes of this and that act; the Six Clerks' Office to be built on part of Lincoln's-Inn garden, and the same vested in the Six Clerks.

The Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 59, regulates the leases to be made from time to time, by the Master of the Rolls for the time being.

By Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 42, 300,000*l.* further is to be employed in building offices for the Masters in Chancery, &c.

For other parts of this subject. See titles Injunction, Interrogatories, &c.

CHANGER, An officer belonging to the king's mint, whose office consists chiefly in exchanging coin for bullion, brought in by merchants or others: it is written after the old way, chaunger. Stat. 2 Hen. 6. cap. 12.

CHANTER, cantator.] A Singer in the choir of a cathedral church; and is usually applied to the chief of the singers. This word is mentioned in 13 Eliz. c. 10. At St. David's cathedral in Wales, the chanter is next to the bishop; for there is no dean. Camb. Britan.

CHANTRY, or CHAUNTRY, cantaria.] A little church, chapel, or particular altar, in some cathedral church, &c. endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass, and officiate divine service for the souls of the donors.

CHAPEL:

nors, and such others as they appointed. See Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 14, which in effect put an end to these chantries, by declaring it not to be lawful for any person to enter for non-performance of the conditions on which they were founded.

Of these chantries, mention is made of forty-seven belonging to St. Paul's church in London, by Dugdale, in his history of that church.

CHAPEL, capella, Fr. chapelle.] Is either adjoining to a church, for performing divine service; or separate from the mother-church, where the parish is wide, which is commonly called a Chapel of ease. And chapels of ease are built for the ease of those parishioners who dwell far from the parochial church, in prayer and preaching only; for the sacraments, [marriages,] and burials ought to be performed in the parochial church. 2 Vol. Abr. 340.

These chapels are served by inferior curates, provided at the charge of the rector, &c. And the curates are therefore removable at the pleasure of the rector or vicar: but chapels of ease may be parochial, and have a right to sacraments and burials, and to a distinct minister, by custom; (though subject in some respects to the mother-church.) and parochial chapels differ only in name from parish churches, but they are small, and the inhabitants within the district are few. In some places chapels of ease are endowed with lands or tithes, and in other places by voluntary contributions; and in some few districts there are chapels which baptize and administer the sacraments, and have chapel-wardens; but these chapels are not exempted from the visitation of the Ordinary, nor the parishioners who resort thither from contributing to the repairs of the mother-church; especially if they bury there; for the chapel generally belongs to, and is as it were a part of the mother-church; and the parishioners are obliged to go to the mother church, but not to the chapel. 2 Vol. Abr. 289. And hence it is said, that the offerings made to any chapel, are to be rendered to the mother-church; unless there be a custom that the chaplain shall have them.

Public chapels, annexed to parish churches, shall be repaired by the parishioners, as the church is; if any other persons be not bound to do it. 2 Inst. 489. Besides the fore-mentioned chapels, there are free chapels, perpetually maintained and provided with a minister, without charge to the rector or parish; or that are free and exempt from all ordinary jurisdiction; and these are where some lands or rents are charitably bestowed on them Stat. 37 Hen. 8. cap. 4: 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. There are also private chapels, built by noblemen, and others, for private worship, in or near their own houses, maintained at the charge of those noble persons to whom they belong, and provided with chaplains and stipends by them; which may be erected without leave of the bishop, and need not be consecrated, though they anciently were so, nor are they subject to the jurisdiction of the Ordinary.

There are likewise chapels in the Universities, belonging to particular colleges, which, though they are consecrated, and sacraments are administered there, yet they are not liable to the visitation of the bishop, but of the founder. 2 Inst. 363.—See title Marriage.

CHAPELRY, capellania.] Is the same thing to a chapel, as a parish to a church; being the precinct and limits thereof.

CHAPLAIN.

CHAPERON, Fr.] A hood or bonnet, anciently worn by the knights of the garter, as part of the habit of that noble order: but in heraldry it is a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of the horses that draw a hearse at a funeral.

CHAPTERS, Lat. capitula, Fr. chapitres, i. e. chapters of a book] Signify in our common law a summary of such matters as are to be enquired of, or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assize, or of peace, in their sessions. Britton, cap 3, useth the word in this signification: and chapters are now most commonly called articles, and delivered by the mouth of the justice in his charge to the inquest; whereas, in ancient times, (as appears by Bracton and Britton) they were, after an exhortation given by the justices for the good observance of the laws and the king's peace, first read in open court, and then delivered in writing to the grand inquest, for their better observance, and the grand jury were to answer upon their oaths to all the articles thus delivered them, and not put the judges to long and learned charges to little or no purpose, for want of remembering the same, as they do now, when they think their duty well enough performed, if they only present those few of many misdeemeanors which are brought before them by way of indictment.

It is to be wished that this order of delivering written articles to grand juries were still observed, whereby crimes would be more effectually punished in some inferior courts, as the court leet, &c. in several parts of England, it is usual at this day for stewards of those courts to deliver their charges in writing to the juries sworn to enquire of offences. Hume, in his Mirror of Justice, expresses what those articles were wont to contain. Lib. 3. cap. des Articles in Eyre. And an example of articles of this kind, may be found in the book of assizes. F. 138.

CHAPLAIN, capellanus] Is most commonly taken for one that is depending upon the king, or other noble person, to instruct him and his family, and say divine service in his house, where there is usually a private chapel for that purpose. The King, Queen, Prince, Princess, &c. may retain as many chaplains as they please; and the king's chaplains may hold any such number of benefices of the king's gift, as the king shall think fit to bestow upon them.

An Archbishop may retain eight chaplains; a Bishop, six; Marquis or Earl, five; Vicomte, four; Baron, Knight of the Garter, or Lord Chancellor, three; a Duchess, Marchioness, Countess, Baroness, (being widows) the Treasurer, and Controller of the king's house, the King's Secretary, Dean of the Chapel, Almoner, and Master of the Rolls, each of them two; the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, one; all which chaplains may purchase a licence or dispensation, and take two benefices with cure of souls. Stat. 21 Hen. 8. cap. 13.

But both the livings must have cure of souls; and the statute expressly excepts deaneries, archdeaconries, chancellorships, treasurerhips, chinterhips, prebends, and sinecure rectories. A dispensation in this case can only be granted to hold one benefice more, except to clerks who are of the privy council, who may hold three by dispensation. By the canon law, no person can hold a second incompatible benefice, without a dispensation. and in that case, if the first is under 8*l.* per annum, [in the king's book] it is so far void, that the patron may present another clerk, or the bishop may deprive; but till deprivation, no advantage can be taken by lapse. See title Advowson.—But independent of the statute, a clergyman by dispensations may hold any number of benefices, if they are all under 8*l. per ann. m.*, except the last, and then by a dispensation under the statute, he may hold one more. 1 Comm. 392 in n.

By the 41*st*. canon of 1603, the two benefices must not be further distant from each other than thirty miles; and the person obtaining the dispensation, must at least be a Master of Arts in one of the Universities. But the provisions of this canon are not enforced or regarded in the temporal courts. 2 Bl. Rep. 968. See ante title Canon Law.

Also every Judge of the King's Bench and Common Pleas; and Chancellor and Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the King's Attorney and Solicitor General, may each of them have one chaplain, attendant on his person, having one benefice with cure, who may be non resident on the same, by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 16.

And the Groom of the stole, Treasurer of the king's chamber, and Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, may retain each one chaplain. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 28. But the chaplains under these two last statutes, are not entitled to dispensations under Stat. 21 Hen. 8. If a nobleman hath his full number of chaplains allowed by law, and retains one more, who has dispensation to hold plurality of livings, it is not good. Cro. Eliz. 723.

If one person has two or more of the titles or characters mentioned in Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, united in himself, he can only retain the number of chaplains limited to his highest degree. 4 Co. 90. The king may present his own chaplains, i. e. waiting chaplains in ordinary, to any number of livings in the gift of the crown, and even in addition to what they hold upon the presentation of a subject without dispensation; but a king's chaplain being beneficed by the king, cannot afterwards take a living from a subject, but by a dispensation according to the Stat. § 29: 1 Salk. 161.

A person retaining a chaplain, must not only be capable thereof at the time of granting the instrument of retainer, but he must continue capable of qualifying till his chaplain is advanced: and therefore if a duke, earl, &c. retain a chaplain, and die; or if such a noble person be attainted of treason; or if an officer, qualified to retain a chaplain, is removed from his office, the retainer is determined: but where a chaplain hath taken a second benefice before his lord dieth, or is attainted, &c. the retainer is in force to qualify him to enjoy the benefices.

And if a woman that is noble by marriage, afterwards marries one under the degree of nobility, her power to retain chaplains will be determined; though it is otherwise where a woman is noble by descent, if she marry under degree of nobility, for in such case her retainer before or after marriage is good. A Banquet, &c. during the coverture, may not retain chaplains; if the doth, the lord, her husband, may discharge them; as likewise her former chaplains, before their advancement. 2 Rep. 118.

A Chaplain must be retained by letters testimonial under hand and seal, or he is not a chaplain within the statute; so that it is not enough for a spiritual person to be retained by word only to be a chaplain, by such person as may qualify by the statutes to hold livings, &c. although he abide and serve as chaplain in the family. And where a nobleman hath retained and thus qualified his number of chaplains, if he dismisses them from their attendance upon any displeasure, after they are preferred, yet they are his chaplains at large, and may hold their livings during their lives; and such nobleman, though he may retain other chaplains in his family, merely as chaplains, he cannot qualify any others to hold pluralities while the first are living: for if a nobleman could discharge his chaplain when advanced, to qualify another in his place, and qualify other chaplains, during the lives of chaplains discharged, by these means he might advance as many chaplains as he would, whereby the statutes would be evaded. 4 Rep. 90.—See further tit. Advowson, Parson.

CHAPTER, capitulum.] A congregation of clergymen under the Dean in a cathedral church: congregatio clericorum in ecclesia cathedrali, conventuali, regulari, vel collegiata. This collegiate company is metaphorically termed capitulum, signifying a little head, it being a kind of head, not only to govern the diocese in the vacation of the bishoprick, but also in many things to advise and assist the bishop when the see is full, for which, with the Dean, they form a council. Co. Lit. 103. The chapter consists of prebendaries or canons, which are some of the chief men of the church, and therefore are called capita ecclesie: they are a spiritual corporation aggregate, which they cannot surrender without leave of the bishop, because he hath an interest in them; they with the dean, have power to confirm the bishop's grants; during the vacancy of an archbishoprick, they are guardians of the spiritualities, and as such have authority by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 21, to grant dispensations; likewise as a corporation they have power to make leases. &c.

When the Dean and Chapter confirm grants of the bishop, the Dean joins with the Chapter, and there must be the consent of the major part; which consent is to be expressed by their fixing of their seal to the deed, in one place, and at one time, either in the chapter-house, or some other place; and this consent is the will of many joined together. Dyer 233. They had also a check on the bishop at common law; for 'till Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, his grant or lease would not have bound his successors, unless confirmed by the Dean and Chapter. 1 Inst. 103.

A chapter is not capable to take by purchase or gift, without the dean, who is the head of the body: but there may be a chapter without a dean, as the chapter of the collegiate church of Southwell; and grants by, or to them, are as effectual as other grants by dean and chapter. Yet where there are chapters without deans, they are not properly chapters: and the chapter in a collegiate church, where there is no episcopal see, as at Westminster and Windsor, is more properly called a college.

Chapters are said to have their beginning before Deans; and formerly the bishop had the rule and ordering of things without a dean and chapter, which were constituted afterwards; and all the ministers within his diocese were as his chapter, to assist him in spiritual matters. 2 Roll. Rep. 454: 3 Co. 75. The bishop hath a power of visiting the dean and chapter: but the dean and chapter have nothing to do with what the bishop transacts as ordinary. 3 Rep. 75. Though the bishop and chapter are but one body, yet their possessions are for the most part divided;

vided; as the bishop hath his part in right of his bishopric; the dean hath a part in right of his deanery; and each prebendary hath a certain part in right of his prebend; and each too is incorporated by himself.

Deans and Chapters have some of them ecclesiastical jurisdiction in several parishes, (besides that authority they have within their own body), executed by their officials; also temporal jurisdiction in several manors belonging to them, in the same manner as bishops, where their stewards keep courts, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 229. It has been observed, that though the chapter have distinct parcels of the bishop's estate assigned for their maintenance, the bishop hath little more than a power over them in his visitations, and is scarce allowed to nominate half of those to their prebends, who were originally of his family: but of common right it is said he is their patron. Roll. ibid.—They are now sometimes appointed by the king, sometimes by the bishop, and sometimes elected by each other. 1 Comm. 383 see further title Dean.

CHARGE of Justices in Sessions, &c. See title Chapiters.

CHARGE and DISCHARGE, A charge is said to be a thing done that bindeth him that doth it, or that which is his, to the performance thereof and discharge is the removal, or taking away of that charge. Terms de Ley Land may be charged divers ways; as by grant of rent out of it, by statutes, judgments, conditions, warrants, &c. Lands in fee-simple may be charged in fee: and where a man may dispose of the land itself, he may charge it by a rent, or statute, one way or other. Lit. sect. 648 Moor Ca. 129 Dyer 10. If one charge land in tail, and land in fee simple, and die; the land in fee only shall be chargeable. Bro. Cha. 9

Lands intailed may be charged in fee, if the estate-tail be cut off by recovery: if tenant in tail charge the land, and after levy a fine or suffer a recovery of the lands, to his own use; this confirms the charge, and it shall continue 1 R. p. 61. A tenant for life charges the land, and then makes a feoffment to a stranger, or doth waste, &c. whereby it is forfeited, he in reversion shall hold it charged during his (the tenant's) life: and if one have a lease for life or years of land, and grant a rent out of it, if after he surrenders his estate, yet the charge shall continue so long as the estate had endured, in case it had not been surrendered 1 Rep. 67, 145: Dyer 10.

If one jointenaut charge land, and after release to his companion and die, the survivor shall hold it charged: but if it had come to him by survivorship, it would be otherwise. 6 Rep. 76. 1 Shrop. Abr. 345. He that hath a remainder or reversion of land may charge it, because of the possibility that the land will come into possession, and then the possession shall be charged. But where one leases land for life, and grants the reversion or remainder over to A. B. who charges the land, and dies, and the tenant for life is heir to the fee, in this case he shall hold it discharged, for he had the possession by purchase, though he had the fee by descent Bro. 11, 16 1 R. p. 62.

If a rent be issuing out of a house, &c. and it falls down, the charge shall remain upon the soil 9 E. 4. 20. But when the estate is gone upon which the charge was grounded, there, generally, the charge is determined. Ca. Lit. 349. And in all cases where any executory thing is created by deed, there by consent of all the parties it may be estate, Limitations, Mortgage, &c. 10 Rep. 49. See titles

CHARITABLE CORPORATION. A Society of persons in the late reign obtained a statute to lend money to industrious poor, at 5 l. per cent. interest on pawns and pledges, to prevent their falling into the hands of the pawn-brokers, and therefore they were called the Charitable Corporation: but they likewise took 5 l. per cent. for the charge of officers, warehouses, &c. And in the fifth year of King Geo. 2 the chief officers of this corporation, by connivance of the principal directors, absconded and broke, and defrauded the public proprietors of great sums; for relief of the sufferers wherein, as to part of their losses, several statutes were made and enacted. See Stats. 5 Geo. 2 c. 31, 32; 7 Geo. 2 c. 11.

CHARITABLE USES. The laws against devises in Mortmain (see that title) do not extend to any thing but superstitious uses, it is therefore held, that a man may give lands for the maintenance of a school, an hospital, or any other charitable uses. But as it was apprehended, from recent experience, that persons on their death beds might make large and improvident dispositions, even for these good purposes, and defeat the political end of the statutes of Mortmain, it is therefore enacted by Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, that no lands or tenements, or money to be laid out thereon, shall be given for, or charged with, any charitable uses whatsoever, unless by deed indented, executed in the presence of two witnesses, twelve calendar months before the death of the donor; and enrolled in the court of Chancery within six months after its execution; (except stock in the public funds, and which must be transferred at least six calendar months previous to the donor's death;) and unless such gift be made to take effect immediately and be without power of revocation, and that all other gifts shall be void. The two Universities, then colleges, and the scholars on the foundation of the colleges of Paton, Winchester and Westminster, are exempted out of this act, but with this proviso, that no college shall be at liberty to purchase more advowsons than are equal in number to one moiety of the fellows or students on their foundations.

Corporations are excepted out of the statutes of Wills (32 H. 8 c. 1 34 H. 8 c. 5 See titles Devise, Will), to prevent the extension of gifts in mortmain, but now by construction of Stat. 43 E. 2 c. 4, (See the next paragraph) it is held that a devise to a corporation for a charitable use is valid, as operating in the nature of an appointment, rather than of a bequest. And indeed the piety of judges hath formerly carried them great lengths in supporting such charitable uses (Pier. Ch. 272) it being held that the Stat. of Eliz. which favours appointments to charities, supercedes and repeals all former statutes (Gibb. R. p. 45 1 P. Wms. 248) and supplies all defects of assurances (D. k. 54, And therefore not only a devise to a corporation, but a devise by a copyhold tenant, without surrender, to the use of his will, and a devise, nay even a settlement by tenant in tail, without either fine or recovery, if made to a charitable use, is good by way of appointment Moor 890 2 Roll. 433 Pier. Ch. 16: 2 Comm. 375.

The king as paterfamilias has the general superintendence of all charities, which he exercises by the Lord Chancellor. And therefore whenever it is necessary, the Attorney-General, at the relation of some informant, who is usually called the relator, files ex officio, an information in the court of Chancery, to have the Charity properly established. Also by Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, authority is given to the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, and to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, respectively, to grant commissions under their several seals, to enquire into any abuses of charitable donations, and rectify the same by decree; which may be reviewed in the respective courts of the several chancellors, upon exceptions taken thereto. But, though this is done in the Petty Bag Office in the court of Chancery, because the commission is there returned, it is not a proceeding at common law, but treated as an original cause in the court of Equity. The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the respondent in his answer to the exceptions may allege what new matter he pleases; upon which they go to proof, and examine witnesses in writing upon all the matters in issue. and the court may decree the respondent to pay all the costs, though no such authority is given by the statute. An appeal lies from the Chancellor's decree to the House of Peers, notwithstanding any loose opinion to the contrary 3 Comm. 427.

Lands given to alms and aliened, may be recovered by the donor. 13 Ed. 1. c. 41.

Lands, &c. may be given for the maintenance of houses of correction, or of the poor, Stat. 35 Eliz. c. 7. § 27. Commissioners to inquire of money given to poor prisoners, Stats. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20. § 11: 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 9, 10. See tit. Prisoners.

Money given to put out apprentices, either by parishes or publick charities, to pay no duty, 8 Ann. c. 9. § 40. See title Apprentices.

See this subject treated at length under title Mortmain; and Higbman's Law of Charitable Uses.

CHARKS, Are pit-coal when charied or charked; so called in Worcestershire; as sea-coal thus prepared at Newcastle is called coke.

CHARRE OF LEAD. A quantity of lead consisting of thirty pigs, each pig containing six stone wanting two pounds, and every stone being twelve pounds. Affix de ponderibus. Rob. 3. R. Scot. cap. 22.

CHARTA, A word made use of not only for a charter, for the holding an estate; but also a statute. See Magna Charta.

CHARTE, A cart, chart, or plan which mariners use at sea, mentioned in Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 33.

CHARTEL, Fr. cartel.] A letter of defiance, or challenge to a single combat; in use heretofore to decide difficult controversies at law, which could not otherwise be determined. Blount—A Cartel is now used for the instrument or writing for settling the exchange of prisoners of war: and a cartel-ship, for the ship used on such occasion, which is privileged from capture.

CHARTER, Lat. charta, Fr. chartres, i. e. instrumentum] Is taken in our law for written evidence of things done between man and man whereof Bracton lib. 2. cap. 26, says thus, Fiunt aliquando donationes in scriptis, sicut in chartis, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, propter brevitatem hominum vitam, &c. And Britton, in his 39th chapter, divides charters into those of the king, and those of private persons. Charters of the king are those whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or body politick; as a charter of exemption, of privilege, &c.—See tit. King.

Charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence committed against the king's crown and dignity; and of these there are several sorts. See title Pardon.

Charter of the forest, wherein the laws of the forest are comprised, such as the charter of Canutus, &c. Kitch. 314: Fleta, lib. 3. c. 14.

Charters of private persons are deeds and instruments for the conveyance of lands, &c. And the purchaser of lands shall have all the charters, deeds and evidences as incident to the same, and for the maintenance of his title. Co. Lit. 6. Charters belong to a feoffee, although they be not sold to him, where the feoffor is not bound to a general warranty of the land; for there they shall belong to the feoffor, if they be sealed deeds or wills in writing: but other charters go to the tertenant. Moor. Ca. 687. The charters, belonging to the feoffor in case of warranty the heir shall have, though he hath no land by descent, for the possibility of descent after. 1 Rep. 1. See tit. Magna Charta.

CHARTERER. In Cheshire, a freeholder is called by this name. Sir P. Ley's Antiq. fol. 356.

CHARTER GOVERNMENTS in AMERICA. See title Plantations.

CHARTER LAND, terra per chartam.] See title Blackland.

CHARTER-PARTY, Lat. charta partita, Fr. chartre parti, i. e. a deed or writing divided.] Is what among merchants and sea-faring men is commonly called a pan of indentures, containing the covenants and agreements made between them, touching their merchandize and maritime affairs. 2 Inst. 673. Charter-parties of affreightment settle agreements, as to the cargo of ships, and bind the master to deliver the goods in good condition at the place of discharge, according to agreement; and the master sometimes obliges himself, ship, tackle and furniture, for performance.

The Common law construes charter-parties, as near as may be, according to the intention of them, and not according to the literal sense of traders, or those that merchandise by sea; but they must be regularly pleaded. In covenant by charter-party, that the ship should return to the river of Thames, by a certain time, dangers of the sea excepted, and after, in the voyage, and within the time of the return, the ship was taken upon the sea by pirates, so that the master could not return at the time mentioned in the agreement; it was adjudged that this impediment was within the exception of the charter-party, which extends as well to any danger upon the sea by pirates and men of war, as dangers of the sea by ship-wreck, tempest, &c. Stile 132: 2 Rol. Abr. 248.

A ship is freighted at so much per month that she shall be out, covenanted to be paid after her arrival at the port of London; the ship is cast away coming up from the Dorset, but the lading is all preserved, the freight shall in this case be paid; for the money becomes due monthly by the contract, and the place mentioned is only to ascertain where the money is to be paid, and the ship is intitled to wages, like a mariner that serves by the month, who if he dies in the voyage, his executors are to be answered pro rata. Molloy de Jur. Maritim. 260. If a part-owner of a ship refuse to join with the other owners in setting out of the ship, he shall not be entitled to his share of the freight; but by the course of the Admiralty, the other owners ought to give security if the ship perish in the voyage, to make good to the owner standing out, his share of the ship, Sir L. Jenkins, in a case of this nature, nature, certified that by the Law Marine and course of the Admiralty, the plaintiff was to have no share of the freight; and that it was so in all places, for otherwise there would be no navigation. Lex Mercat. See titles Admiralty, Freight, Insurance.

CHARTIS REDDENDIS. An ancient writ which lay against one that had charters of feoffment entrusted to his keeping, and refused to deliver them. Reg. Orig. 159.

CHASE, Fr. chasse.] In its general signification is a great quantity of woody ground lying open, and privileged for wild beasts and wild fowl: and the beasts of chase properly extend to the buck, doe, fox, martin and roe, and in common and legal sense to all the beasts of the forest. Co. Lit. 233.

A chase differs from a park in that it is not inclosed; and also in that a man may have a chase in another man's ground, as well as in his own: being indeed the liberty of keeping beasts of chase or royal game therein, protected even from the owner of the land, with a power of hunting them thereon. 2 Comm. 38.

But if one have a chase within a forest, and he kill or hunt any stag or red deer, or other beasts of the forest, he is fineable. 1 Jones's Rep. 278.

A chase is of a middle nature between a forest and a park, being commonly less than a forest, and not endowed with so many liberties, as the courts of attachment, swainmote, and justice-seat; though of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity both of keepers, and wild beasts or game, than a park.

A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest in its proper and true nature cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath a greater compass, and more variety of game, and officers likewise. Compt. in his Jurisd. fol. 148, says a forest cannot be in the hands of a subject, but it forthwith loseth its name, and becomes a chase: but fol. 197, he says, a subject may be lord and owner of a forest, which though it seems a contradiction, yet both sayings are in some sort true; for the king may give or alienate a forest to a subject, so as when it is once in the subject, it loseth the true property of a forest, because the courts called the justice-seat, swainmote, &c. do forthwith vanish, none being able to make a Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the forest, but the King; yet it may be granted in so large a manner, as there may be attachment, swain mote, and a court equivalent to a justice-seat Manwood, part 2 c. 3, 4.

A forest and a chase may have different officers and laws: every forest is a chase, Et quiddam amplius; but any chase is not a forest. A chase is ad communem legem, and not to be guided by the forest laws; and it is the same of parks. 4 Inst. 314. A man may have a free chase as belonging to his manor in his own woods, as well as a warren and a park in his own grounds; for a chase, warren and park are collateral inheritances, and not issuing out of the soil; and therefore if a person hath a chase in other men's grounds, and after purchaseth the grounds, the chase remaineth. Ibid. 318. If a man have freehold in a free chase, he may cut his timber and wood growing upon it, without view or licence of any; though it is not so of a forest: but if he cut so much that there is not sufficient for covert, and to maintain the game, he shall be punished at the suit of the king; and so if a common person hath a chase in another's soil, the owner of the soil cannot destroy all the covert, but ought to leave sufficient thereof, and also browfewood, as hath been accustomed. 11 Rep. 22. And it has been adjudged, that within such chase, the owner of the soil by prescription may have common for his sheep, and warren for his conies, but he cannot surcharge with more than has been usual, nor make coney-burrows in other places than hath been used. Ibid. If a free chase be inclosed, it is said to be a good cause of seizure into the king's hands.

It is not lawful to make a chase, park or warren, without licence from the king under the broad seal. See titles Forest, Game, Park.

CHASOR, An hunting horse — Debet int mibi unum chasorem, &c. Leg. Will. 1. cap. 22. And in another chapter it is written cacorem.

CHASPELLAINE, A noble woman: quasi castella domina.

CHASTITY. The Roman law (ff. 48, 8, 1.) justifies homicide in defence of the chastity either of one's self or relations; and so also, according to Selden (de Legib. Hebræor. l. 4 c. 3.) stood the law in the Jewish republick. The English law likewise justifies a woman, killing one who attempts to ravish her. (Bac. Elem. 34: 1 Hrwk. P. C. 71.) So the husband or father may justify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by consent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6.

And without doubt the forcibly attempting a crime, of a still more detestable nature, may be equally resisted by the death of the unnatural aggressor. For the one uniform principle, that runs through our own and all other laws, seems to be this; that where a crime, in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. 181.—See title Murder, Adultery.

CHATTELS, or CATALS, catalla] All goods moveable and immoveable, except such as are in nature of freehold, or parcel of it. The Nomans call moveable goods only, chattels; but this word by the common law extends to all moveable and immoveable goods. and the Civilians denominate not only what we call chattels, but also land, bona. But no estate of inheritance or freehold, can be termed in our law goods and chattels; though a lease for years may pass as goods.

Chattels are either personal or real. personal, as gold, silver, plate, jewels, household stuff, goods and wares in a shop, corn sown on the ground, carts, ploughs, coaches, saddles, &c. Cattle, &c. as horses, oxen, kine, bullocks, sheep, pigs, and all tame fowls and birds, swans, turkeys, geese, poultry, &c. and these are called personal in two respects, one because they belong immediately to the person of a man; and the other, for that being any way injuriously withheld from us, we have no means to recover them but by personal action.

Chattels-real, saith Coke, (1 Inst. 118) are such as concern or favour of the realty; as terms for years of land, the next presentation to a church, estates by assent merchant, statute staple, elegerit, or the like. And these are called real chattels, as being interests issuing out of, or annexed to real estates, of which they have one quality, viz. immobility, which denominates them real, but want the other, viz. a sufficient, legal, indeterminate terminate duration; and this want it is that constitutes them chattels. The utmost period for which they can last; is fixed and determinate, either for such a space of time certain, or till such a particular sum of money be raised out of such a particular income; so that they are not equal in the eye of the law to the lowest estate of freehold, a lease for another's life. 2 Comm. 386.

But deeds relating to a freehold, obligations, &c. which are things in action, are not reckoned under goods and chattels; though if writings are pawned, they may be chattels; and money hath been accounted not to be goods or chattels; nor are hawks or hounds, such being feræ nature. 8 Rep. 33: Ten. de Ley 103: Kitch. 32.

A collar of SS. garter of gold, buttons, &c. belonging to the dress of a knight of the garter, are not jewels to pass by that name in personal estate, but ensigns of honour. Dyer 59. As to devises of chattels with remainder over. See title Devise.

Chattels personal are, immediately upon the death of the testator, in the actual possession of the executor, as the law will adjudge, though they are at never so great a distance from him; chattels real, as leases for years of houses, lands, &c. are not in the possession of the executor till he makes an entry, or hath recovered the same; except in case of a lease for years of tithes, where no entry can be made. 1 Nelf. Abr. 437.

Leases for years, though for a thousand years, leases at will, estates of tenants by elegit, &c. are chattels, and shall go to the executor: all obligations, bills, statutes, recognisances and judgments, shall be as a chattel in the executors, &c. Bro. Obl. 18: F. N. B. 120.

But if one be seised of land in fee on which trees and grass grow, the heir shall have these, and not the executor; for they are not chattels till they are cut and severed, but parcel of the inheritance. 4 Rep. 63: Dyer 273. The game of a park with the park, fish in the pond, and doves in the house with the house, go to the heir, &c. and are not chattels: though if pigeons, or deer, are tame, or kept alive in a room; or if fish be in a trunk, &c. they go to the executors as chattels. Noy 124: 11 Rep. 50: Keilw. 88—See titles Heir, Executor.

An owner of chattels is said to be possessed of them; as of freehold the term is, that a person is seised of the same.

CHAUD-MEDLEY, See title Chance-Medley.

CHAUMPERT, A kind of tenure mentioned Pat. 35 Ed. 3. To the hospital of Bowes, in the isle of Guernsey. Blount.

CHAUNTER, A singer in a cathedral. See Chanter.

CHAUNTRY-RENTS, Are rents paid to the crown by the servants or purchasers of chauntry-lands. See Stat. 22 Ch. 2 c. 6.

CHEATS, Are deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty; as by playing with false dice; or by causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from those in which it was written; or by persuading a woman to execute writings to another as her trustee, upon an intended marriage, which in truth contained no such thing, but only a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment; or by suppressing a will; and such like. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71.

1 Changing corn by a miller, and returning bad corn in the stead, is punishable by indictment, being an offence against the publick. 1 Seff. Ca. 217.—So to run a foot race fraudulently, and by a previous understanding with the seeming competitor to win money. 6 Mod. 42.—So if an indentured apprentice enters for a soldier, and having received the bounty, is discharged on his master's demanding him, he may be indicted. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71. § 3. n.—But selling beer short of the just and due measure, is not indictable as a cheat. 1 Will. 301: Say. 146: 1 Black. Rep. 274.—Nor selling gum of one denomination for that of another. Sayer. 205.—Nor selling wrought gold, as and for gold of the true standard; the offender not being a goldsmith. Corw. 323.

The distinction laid down as proper to be attended to in all cases of the kind, is this.—That in such impositions or deceits, where common prudence may guard persons against their suffering from them, the offence is not indictable; but the party is left to his civil remedy for redress of the injury done him: but where false weights and measures are used, or false tokens produced, or such methods taken to cheat and deceive, as people cannot by any ordinary care or prudence be guarded against, there it is an offence indictable. Burr. 1125.

By Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 1. sect. 2, If any person falsely and deceitfully get into his hands or possession any money or other things of any other persons by colour of any false token, &c. being convicted he shall have such punishment by imprisonment, setting upon the pillory, or by any corporal pain (except pains of death) as shall be adjudged by the persons before whom he shall be convicted.

Lord Coke observes hereupon, that for this offence the offender cannot be fined, but corporal pain only inflicted. 3 Inst. 133.—But in 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71. § 6, it is said that a person has been fined 500*l.* for this offence.

In indictments on this stat. the false token made use of must be set forth. Sta. 1127.—A counterfeit pass has been held such. Dalt. 91.—or a pretended power to discharge soldiers. 1 Latch. 202.

By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, Persons convicted of obtaining money or goods by false pretences, or of sending threatening letters in order to extort money or goods, may be punished by fine and imprisonment, or by pillory, whipping, or transportation.—In indictment on this stat. it must appear what the false pretences were. 2 Term Rep. 581.

As there are frauds which may be relieved civilly, and not punished criminally, (with the complaints whereof the courts of equity do generally abound), so there are other frauds, which in a special case may not be helped civilly, and yet shall be punished criminally. Thus, if a minor goes about the town, and pretending to be of age, defrauds many persons, by taking credit for a considerable quantity of goods, and then insisting on his nonage; the persons injured cannot recover the value of their goods, but they may indict and punish him for a common cheat. Barl. 100: 1 *Hawk. CHESTER See generally title County-Palatine.—Where felony, &c. is committed by any inhabitant of the Palatine of Chester, in another county, process shall be made to the exigent where the offence was done, and if the offender then fly into the county of Chester, the outlawry shall be certified to the officers there. 1 H. 4. c. 18. The sessions for the county palatine of Chester, is to be kept twice in the year, at Michaelmas and Easter: and justices of peace, &c. in Chester shall be nominated by the Lord Chancellor. Stats. 32 H. 8. c. 43: 33 H. 8. c. 13. Recognizances of statutes-merchant may be acknowledged, and fines levied before the mayor of Chester, &c. for lands lying there. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 31. But no writ of protection shall be granted in the county palatine.

CHEVAGE, chevageum, from the Fr. chef, caput.] A tribute or sum of money formerly paid by such as held lands in villenage to their lords in acknowledgment, and was a kind of head or poll money. Of which Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 10, says thus; Chevageum dicitur recognitio in signum subjectionis & dominii de capite suo. Lambard writes this word chevage; but it is more properly chusage: and anciently the Jews, whilst they were admitted to live in England, paid chevage or poll money to the king, as appears by Pat. 8 Ed. 1. par. 1. It seems also to be used for a sum of money, yearly given to a man of power for his protection, as a chief lord or leader: but Lord Coke says, that in this signification it is a great misprision for a subject to take sums of money, or other gifts yearly of any, in name of chevage, because they take upon them to be their chief heads or leaders, Co. Lit. 140. Spelman in v. Chevageum says, it is a duty paid in Hales, profructibus manandis.

CHEVANTIA, A loan or advance of money upon credit; Fr. chevance. Goods, Stock. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 69.

CHEVERIL, chevenillus.] A young cock, or cockling. Pat. 15 H. 3.

CHEVISANCE, from the Fr. chevis, i. e. Fleur à chef or quelque chose, to come to the head or end of a business.] An agreement or composition made; an end or order let down between a creditor or debtor; or sometimes an indirect gain in point of usury, &c. In some ancient statutes it is often mentioned, and seems commonly used for an unlawful bargain or contract. In the Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 7, (See title Bankrupts.) it is used simply, in the sense explained by Duglesne, for making Contracts.

CHEVITIÆ, and CHEVISCÆ, Heads of ploughed lands. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. f. 116.

CHIEF-RENTS, The rents of freeholders of manors often so called, i. e. reditus capitales.—They are also denominated quit-rent, quiti reditus; because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. 2 Comm. 42. See tit. Rents.

CHIEF PLEDGE, See title Huddborough.

CHIEF (TENANTS in). Tenants in capite, holding immediately under the king, in right of his crown and dignity. See titles Capite, Tenure.

CHILDREN, As to devises to, See title Devise: See also titles Descend, Heir, Limitation, Poor, Posthumous Child, &c.

VOL. I.

CHILDWIT, Sax.] A fine or penalty of a bond-woman unlawfully begotten with child. Cow I says, it signifieth a power to take a fine of your bond-woman gotten with child without your consent: and within the manor of Writtle in Com. Essex, every reputed father of a base child pays to the lord for a fine 3s. 4d. where it seems to extend as well to free as bond-women; and the custom is there called childwit to this day. See title Bastard.

CHIMIN, Fr. chemin; via.] In law phrase is a way; which is of two sorts; the King's highway, and a private way.

The King's Highway, (chiminus regius) is that in which the King's subjects and all others under his protection, have free liberty to pass; though the property of the soil where the way lies, belongs to some private person.

A private way is that in which one man or more have liberty to pass, through the ground of another, by prescription or charter; and this is divided into chimin in gro and chimin appendant.

Chimin in gro is where a person holds a way principally and solely in itself.

Chimin appendant is that way which a man hath as appurtenant to some other thing: as if he rent a close or pasture, with covenant for ingress and egress through some other ground in which otherwise he might not pass. Kitch. 117: Co. Lit. 56:—See titles Highway; Trespas; Way.

CHIMINAGE, (chiminagium). Toll due by custom for having a way through a forest; and in ancient records it is sometimes called pedagium. Crompt. Jur. fd. 189: Co. Lit. 56: See Chart. Forest. cap. 14.

CHIMNEY-MONEY, Otherwise called hearth-money. A duty to the crown imposed by Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 2, of 2s. for every hearth in a house. Now long since repealed.

CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS. By Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 48, churchwardens and overseers with the consent of two justices may bind boys of eight years old or upwards; and who, themselves or their parents are chargeable to the parish, or who shall beg; or with the consent of their parents; to be apprentices to chimney sweepers until they are sixteen years old. §. 1.

The form of the indenture is settled by a schedule annexed to the statute.—In that the master covenants to find the boy with decent clothing—to permit him to attend public worship; and to observe the statute in the several particulars mentioned.—All other indentures and agreements are declared void; and any chimney sweeper keeping an apprentice under eight years old is to forfeit not more than 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.* for each. §. 4.

One justice is authorized to settle all complaints of ill usage by the masters, or ill behaviour in the boys. §. 6.

No Chimney-sweeper shall keep more than six apprentices at once; the master's name and place of abode are to be inscribed on a brass plate in the front of a leather cap to be provided by the master for each apprentice, to be worn by the boy when on duty. For every apprentice above six, and for neglecting to provide their caps the master is to forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.* §. 7.

If the master shall mis-use or evil-treat his apprentice, or be guilty of the breach of any of the covenants in his indenture he shall forfeit, not more than 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.* §. 8.

The statute containing the foregoing and other humane regulations was obtained by the exertions of the benevolent Mr Jonas Hanway; to whom the Publick and the Poor are indebted for many laudable charities.

CHIRCHGEMOT, CHIRGEMOT, KIRK MOTE.] Chirgemot (Sax.) forum ecclesiasticum.—Leg. Hen. 1. c. 8. 4 Inst. 321.—A Synod—It is used for a meeting in a church or vestry. Blount.

CHIROGRAPH, chirographum, or scriptum chirographum.] Any public instrument or gift of conveyance, attested by the subscription and crosses of witnesses, was in the time of the Saxons called chirographum; which being somewhat changed in form and manner by the Normans, was by them stiled charta: in following times, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made their deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counter-part, and in the middle, between the two copies, they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied or cut asunder in an indented manner, the sheet or skin of parchment; which being delivered to the two parties concerned, were proved authentick by matching with and answering to one another: and when this prudent custom had for some time prevailed, then the word chirographum was appropriated to such bipartite writings or indentures.

Anciently when they made a chirograph or deed, which required a counter part, they ingrossed it twice upon one piece of parchment contrariwise, leaving a space between, in which they wrote in great letters the word CHIROGRAPH; and then cut the parchment in two, sometimes even and sometimes with indenture, through the midst of the word: this was afterwards called dividenda, because the parchment was so divided or cut; and it is said the first use of these chirographs was in Henry the Third's time.

Chirograph was of old used for a fine; the manner of ingrossing whereof, and cutting the parchment in two pieces, is still observed in the Chirographer's office: but as to deeds, that was formerly called a Chirograph, which was subscribed by the proper hand writing of the vendor or debtor, and delivered to the vendee or creditor: and it differed from syngraphus, which was in this manner, viz. Both parties, as well the creditor as debtor, wrote their names and the sum of money borrowed, on paper, &c. and the word SYNGRAPHUS in capital letters in the middle thereof, which letters were cut in the middle, and one part given to each party, that upon comparing them (if any dispute should arise) they might put an end to the difference. The chirographs of deeds have sometimes concluded thus.—hi in hujus rei testimonium huc scripto, in modum chirographi confecti, et utrimque sigilla nostra apposimus. The chirographs were called charte divise, scripta per chirographos divisa, charte per alphabetum divise; as the chirographs of all fines are at this time. Kennel's Antiq. 177: Mon. Angl. tom 2 p. 54.

CHIROGRAPHICR OF FINES, chirographus finium & concordiarum, of the Greek Χειρόγραφον, a compound of Χειρ, manus a hand, and γράφω scribo, I write; A writing of a man's hand.] That Officer in the Common Pleas who ingrosseth fines, acknowledged in that court into a perpetual record, after they are examined and passed in the other offices, and that writes and delivers the indentures of them to the party: and this officer makes out two indentures, one for the buyer, another for the seller; and also makes one other indented piece, containing the effect of the fine, which he delivers to the custos breviarum, which is called the foot of the fine. The chirographer likewise, or his deputy, proclaims all the fines in the court every term, according to the statute, and endorses the proclamations upon the back side of the foot thereof; and always keeps the writ of covenant, and note of the fine: the chirographer shall take but 4 s. fee for a fine, on pain to forfeit his office, &c. Stats. 2 H. 4. c. 8: 23 Eliz. c. 3. 2 Inst. 468.

CHIVALRY, servitium militare, from the Fr. chevalier.] A tenure of lands by knights service; whereby the tenant was bound to perform service in war unto the king, or the mesne lord of whom he held by that tenure.—See title Tenures.

Chivalry was of two kinds, either regal, held only of the King, or common, held of a common person: that which might be held only of the King was called Servitium or serjeantia, and was again divided into grand and petit serjeanty; the grand serjeanty was where one held lands of the King by service, which he ought to do in his own person, as to bear the King's banner or spear, to lead his host, or to find a man at arms to fight, &c. Petit serjeanty was when a man held lands of the King to yield him annually some small thing towards his wars, as a sword, dagger, bow, &c.—See title Serjeanty.

CHOCOLATE, See Coffee.

CHOP-CHURCH, ecclesiarum permutatio.] Is a word mentioned in a statute of King Hen. 6. by the sense of which, it was in those days a kind of trade, and by the judges declared to be lawful: but Brooke in his Abridgment says, it was only permissible by law: it was without a doubt a nick-name given to those that used to change benefices; as to a chop and change is a common expression. 9 Hen. 6. cap. 65. Vide Littera missa omnibus episcopis, &c. contra Choppe-Churches, anno 1391. Spelm. de Con. vol. 2. p. 642.

CHORAL, choralis.] Signifies any person that by virtue of any of the orders of the clergy, was in ancient time admitted to sit and serve God in the choire; Dugdale in his History of St. Paul's Church says, that there were formerly six Picars Choral belonging to that church.

CHOREPISCOPI, See Suffragan.

CHOSE, Fr. A thing.] Used in the common law with divers epithets; as chose local, chose transitory, and chose in action. Chose local is such a thing as is annexed to a place, as a mill, and the like: and chose transitory, is that thing which is moveable, and may be taken away, or carried from place to place: chose in action is a thing incorporeal, and only a right; as an annuity, obligation for debt, &c. And generally all cautes of suit for any debt, duty, or wrong, are to be accounted chose in action: and it seems chose in action may be also called chose in jusse, because it hath no real existence or being, nor can properly be said to be in our possession. Bro. title Chose in Action: 1 Lil. Abr. 264.

A person

CHOSE.

A person disposes me of land, or takes away my goods ; my right or title of entry into the lands, or action and suit for it, and so for the goods, is a chose in action: so a debt on an obligation, and power and right of action to sue for the same. 1 Brownl. 33. And a condition and power of re entry into land upon a feoffment, gift or grant, before the performance of the condition, is of the nature of a chose in action. Co. Lit. 214: 6 Rep. 50: Dyer 244. If one have an advowson, when the church becomes void, the presentation is but as a chose in action, and not grantable, but it is otherwise before the church is void. Dyer 296. Where a man hath a judgment against another for money, or a statute, these are chofes in action. An annuity in fee to a man and his heirs, is grantable over: but it has been held, that an annuity is a chose in action, and not grantable: 5 Rep. 89: Fitz. Grant, 45. A chose in action cannot be transferred over; nor is it devisable: nor can a chose in action be a satisfaction, as one bond cannot be pleaded to be given in satisfaction for another: but in equity chofes in action may be assignable; and the King's grant of a chose in action is good. Co. Jac. 170, 371: Chanc. Rep. 169.

Charters, where the owner of the land hath them in possession, are grantable: a possibility of an interest or estate in a term for years, is near to a chose in action, and therefore may not be granted; but a possibility, joined with an interest, may be a grantable chattel. Co. Lit. 265: 4 Rep. 66: Moor Ca. 1128. And this the law doth provide, to avoid multiplicity of suits, and the subversion of justice, which would follow if these things were grantable from one man to another. Dyer 30: Plowd. 185.

But by release chofes in action may be released and discharged for ever; but then it must be to parties and privies in the estate, &c. for no stranger may take advantage of things in action; save only in some special cases; Co. Lit. 214: Yelv. 9, 85.—See title Assignment.

CHRISM, A consecration of oil and balsam consecrated by the bishop, and used in the Papish ceremonies of baptism, confirmation, and sometimes ordination.

CHRISMALE, Chrismal, chrifom, the face-cloth, or piece of linen laid over the child's head at baptism, which in ancient times was a perquisite due to the parish priest. Statut. Egid. Epif. Salisbur. An. 1256.

CHRISMATIS DENARII, Chrifom pence, money paid to the diocesan, or his suffragan, by the parochial clergy, for the chrifom consecrated by them about Easter, for the holy uses of the year ensuing. This customary payment being made in Lent near Easter, was in some places called Quadragesimals, and in others Paschals and Easter-pence. The bishop's exaction of it was condemned by Pope Pius XI. for simony and extortion; and thereupon the custom was released by some of our English bishops.—See Cartular. Mon. de Bernedy, MS. Cotton.

tian faith, met together for religious worship. A Church to be adjudged such in law must have administration of the sacraments and sepulture, annexed to it. If the king founds a church, he may exempt it from the ordinary's jurisdiction; but it is otherwise in case of a subject.

The manner of founding churches in ancient times was, after the founders had made their applications to the bishop of the diocese, and had his licence, the bishop or his commissioners set up a cross, and let forth the church-yard where the church was to be built; and then the founders might proceed in the building of the church, and when the church was finished, the bishop was to consecrate it; and then, and not before, the sacraments were to be administered in it. Stallingsfleet's Ecclesiast. Cases. But by the common law and custom of this realm, any person who is a good christian, may build a church without licence from the bishop, so as it be not prejudicial to any ancient churches; though the law takes no notice of it as a church, till consecrated by the bishop, which is the reason why church and no church, &c. is to be tried and certified by the bishop. And in some cases, though a church has been consecrated, it must be consecrated again; as in case any murder, adultery, or fornication be committed in it, whereby it is defiled; or if the church be destroyed by fire, &c.

The ancient ceremonies in consecrating the ground on which the church was intended to be built, and of the church itself after it was built, were thus: when the materials were provided for building, the bishop came in his robes to the place, &c. and having prayed, he then perfumed the ground with incense, and the people sung a collect in praise of that saint to whom the church was dedicated; then the corner stone was brought to the bishop, which he crossed, and laid for the foundation: and a great feast was made on that day, or on the saint's day to which it was dedicated; but the form of consecration was left to the discretion of the bishop, as it is at this day.

A Church in general consists of three principal parts, that is, the belfrey or steeple, the body of the church with the isles, and the chancel: and not only the frechold of the whole church, but of the church-yard, are in the parson or rector; and the parson may have an action of trespass against any one that shall commit any trespass in the church or church-yard; as in the breaking of seats annexed to the church, or the windows, taking away the leads, or any of the materials of the church, cutting the trees in the church-yard, &c. But church-wardens may by custom have a fee for burying in the church; the church-yard is a common place of burial for all the parishioners. Fent. 274: Keb. 504, 523.—But see Co. Jac. 367: Gibf. 453: and post Church-wardens, III. 2.

And it seems that actions for taking away the seats must be brought in the name of the church-wardens, the parishioners being at the expence of them. Rajm. 246: 12 Co. 105: 3 Com Dig. title Esglesi (F. 3.)

If a man erect a pew in a church, or hang up a bell, &c. therein, they thereby become church goods, though not expressly given to the church; and he may not afterwards remove them. Shaw. P. L. 79. The parson only is to give licence to bury in the church; but for defacing a monument in a church, &c. the builder or heir of the deceased may have an action. Co. Jac. 367. And a man may be indicted for digging up the graves of persons buried, and taking away their burial dresses, &c.

CHURCH

The property whereof remains in the party who was the owner when used, and it is said an offender was found guilty of felony in this case, but had his clergy. Co. Lit. 113.

Though the parson hath the freehold of the church and church-yard, he hath not the fee-simple, which is always in abeyance; but in some respects the parson hath a fee-simple qualified. Lit. 644, 645. The chancel of the church is to be repaired by the parson, unless there be a custom to the contrary; and for these repairs, the parson may cut down trees in the church-yard, but not otherwise. See Stat. 35 Ed. 1. ft. 2, Ne Recton proflernat, &c. The churchwardens are to see that the body of the church and steeple are in repair; but not any isle, &c. which any person claims by prescription, to him or his house: concerning which repairs the Canons require every person who hath authority to hold ecclesiastical visitation to view their churches within their jurisdictions once in three years, either in person, or cause it to be done; and they are to certify the defects to the ordinary, and the names of those who ought to repair them; and these repairs must be done by the churchwardens, at the charge of the parishioners. Can. 86: 1 Mod. 236. See post title Church-wardens, III. 2.

By the Common law, parishioners of every parish are bound to repair the church: but by the canon law, the parson is obliged to do it; and so it is in foreign countries. 1 Salk. 164. In London the parishioners repair both the church and the chancel. The Spiritual Court may compel the parishioners to repair the church, and excommunicate every one of them till it be repaired; but those that are willing to contribute shall be absolved till the greater part agree to a tax, when the excommunication is to be taken off; but the Spiritual Court cannot assess them towards it. 1 Mod. 194: 1 Ventr. 367. For though this Court hath power to oblige the parishioners to repair by ecclesiastical censures; yet they cannot appoint in what sum, or set a rate, for that must be settled by the churchwardens, &c. 2 Mod. 8.

If a church be down, and the parish is increased, the greater part of the parish may raise a tax for the necessary enlarging it, as well as the repairing thereof, &c. 1 Mod. 237. But in some of our books it is said, that if a church falls down, the parishioners are not obliged to rebuild it; though they ought to keep it in due repair. 1 Ventr. 35.—On re-building of churches, it is now usual to apply for, and obtain briefs, on the petition of the parishioners, to collect the charitable contributions of well-disposed christians, to assist them in the expence. See post title Church-wardens, III. 2.

For church ornaments, utensils, &c. the charge is upon the personal estates of the parishioners; and for this reason persons must be charged for these, where they live: but though generally lands ought not to be taxed for ornaments, yet by special custom, both lands and houses may be liable to it. 2 Inst. 489: Cro. Eliz. 843: Healey 131. It has been resolved that no man shall be charged for his land to contribute to the church reckonings, if he doth nor reside in the same parish. Moor 554.

By Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21, churches not above six pounds a year, in the King's books, by assent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, may be united: and by Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 3, in cities and corporations, &c. churches may be united by the bishop, patrons, and chief ma-

For completing of St. Paul's Church, and repairing Westminster Abbey, a duty of 2 s. per chaldron on coals was granted; and the church-yard is to be inclosed, and no persons build thereon, except for the use of the church. 1 Ann. ft. 2. c. 12.

Fifty new churches are to be built in or near London and Westminster, for the building whereof a like duty is granted upon coals, and commissioners appointed to purchase lands, ascertain bounds, &c. The rectors of which churches were to be appointed by the crown, and the first church-wardens and vestrymen, &c. to be elected by the commissioners. Stat. 9 Ann. cap. 22. and see Stat. 10 Ann. c. 11. A duty is also granted on coals imported into London, to be appropriated for maintaining of ministers for the fifty new churches. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 23.

No man shall cover his head in the church in time of divine service, except he have some infirmity, and then with a cap; and all persons are to kneel and stand, &c. as directed by the Common Prayer during service. Can. 18.

No ill language is to be used, or noise made in churches or church yards; and persons striking, or laying violent hands on others there, are to be excommunicated; and striking with a weapon, or drawing a weapon with intent to strike, shall lose one of their ears: and a man may not lawfully return blows in his own defence in these cases. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 4: 1 Hawk. P. No fairs or markets shall be kept in church-yards. Stat. 13 E. 1. ft. 2. c. 6.

CHURCH-WARDENS.

Anciently styled Church-Reeves or Ecclesie Guardiani.] Officers instituted to protect the edifice of the church; to superintend the ceremonies of public worship; to promote the observance of religious duties; to form and execute parochial regulations; and to become, as occasion may require, the legal representatives of the body of the parish.

The office was originally confined to such matters only as concerned the Church, considered materially as an edifice, building, or place of public worship; and the duty of suppressing profaneness and immorality was intrusted to two persons annually chosen by the parishioners, as assistants to the church-wardens, who, from their power of inquiring into offences, detrimental to the interests of religion, and of presenting the offenders to the next provincial council, or episcopal synod, were called quest-men or synods-men, which last appellation has been converted into the name of sides men. But great part of the duty of these testes synodales, or ancillary officers, is now devolved upon the church-wardens; the sphere of whose duty has, since the establishment of the Overseers of the poor, been considerably enlarged; and is also diverted into various channels by many modern acts of parliament. See Paroch. Antiq. 649, for a more particular account of the origin and progress of these Sides-men.

Under

CHURCH-WARDENS I. II.

Under this head it will be proper to consider,

- I. 1. Of the Election of Churchwardens, 2. Of Exemptions from being elected.
- II. Of their Interest in the Things belonging to the Church.
- III. 1. Of their Power; and 2. Duty.
- IV. Of their Accounts.

I. They are generally chosen by the joint consent of the parishioners and minister; but by custom, (on which the right of choosing these officers entirely depends, 2 Atk. 650; 2 Str. 1246) the minister may choose one, and the parishioners another; or the parishioners alone may elect both, 1 Vent. 267. But where the custom of a parish does not take place, the election shall be according to the directions of the canons of the church: Can. 89, 90: which direct that all church-wardens or questmen in every parish, shall be chosen by the joint consent of the minister and the parishioners, if it may be; but if they cannot agree upon such a choice, then the minister shall choose one, and the parishioners another: and without such a joint or several choice, none shall take upon them to be church-wardens. Gibf. Cod. 241, 2: 1 Str. 145.

If the Parson or Vicar, who has, by custom, a right to choose one church-warden, be under sentence of deprivation, the right of choosing both reverts to the parishioners. Canb. 118.

The parson cannot intermeddle in the choice of that churchwarden which it is the right of the parishioners by custom to elect. 2 Str. 1045.—Under the word Parson a Curate is included. 2 Str. 1240.

In most of the parishes in London, the parishioners choose both church-wardens by custom; but in all parishes erected under St 9 An. c. 22, the canon shall take place; (unless the act, in virtue of which any church was erected, shall have specially provided that the parishioners shall choose both;) inasmuch as no custom can be pleaded in such new parishes. Gibf. 215. Co. Lit. 113: 1 Ro. Abr. 339: Cro. Jac. 532. 1 Comm 77.

In the election of church-wardens by the parishioners, the majority of those who meet at the Vestry, upon a written notice given for that purpose, shall bind the rest of the parish. Lane 21.

By custom also, the choice of church wardens may be in a select vestry, or a particular number of the parishioners, and not in the body of the parishioners at large. Hard. 370: 1 Mod. 181. See this Dict. title Vestry.

In some cases the lord of the manor precribeth for the appointment of church-wardens: and this shall not be tried in the Ecclesiastical Court, although it be a prescription of what appertains to a spiritual thing. God. 153: 2 Inff. 653.

The validity of the custom of choosing church-wardens is to be decided, like all other customs of the realm, by the courts of common law, and not by the spiritual Court. Cro. Car. 552: 6 Mod 89: 2 Ld. Raym. 1008. 3 Salk. 88: 1 Bac. Ab. 371.—So also the legitimacy of the votes given on the election is to be determined by the Common law. Burr. 1420.—But the Spiritual Court may become the means of trying the validity of the election by a return of 'not elected',—not duly elected, or any other return that answers the writ, and affords an opportunity of trying the right in an action for a false return. 1 Ld.

Raym. 138: Str. 610: 2 Ld. Raym. 1379, 1405: 2 Salk. 433: 5 Mod. 325: Comp. 413.

The parishioners are also sole judges of what description of persons they think proper to choose as church-wardens; the Spiritual Court therefore cannot in any case controul or examine into the propriety of the election. 1 Salk. 166: See also the authorities immediately preceding.—And the parishioners may, for misbehaviour, remove them. 13 Co. 70: Com. Dig. 3, tit. Esglise (F. 1).—An indictment also lies against them for corruption and extortion in their office. 1 Sid. 307.

The court of King's Bench will not grant a mandamus to the church-wardens, to call a vestry to elect their successors. Str. 686. Sed vid. Str. 51.—Nor will the Court grant a quo warranto to try the validity of an election to the office. 4 Term Rep. 382.

They are sworn into their offices by the Archdeacon or Ordinary of the diocese, and if he refuse, a mandamus shall issue to compel him. Cro. Car. 551: 5 Com Dig. tit. Mandamus (A.) and the authorities there cited, and without fec. 1 Salk. 330. But the oath must be general, 'to execute their duty truly and faithfully'—Hard. 364: and under Stats. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5: 1 Jac. 1. c. 9: & 21 Jac. 1. c. 7, to execute the laws against drunkenness. See post III. 2.

If a church-warden properly appointed, refuse to take the oath, he may be excommunicated. Gibf. Cod. 961: 1 Mod. 194. and he must not execute the office till he is sworn. Gibf. 243: Shaw. P. L. 70.

2. All peers of the realm, by reason of their dignity, are exempted from the office. Gibf. 215. So are all clergymen, by reason of their order. 6 Mod. 140: 2 Str. 1107: 1 Ld. Raym. 265.—Members of Parliament by reason of their privilege. Gibf. Cod. 215 —Practising Barristers—and such only, as it seems.—Attornies. Com. Dig. tit. Attorney (B. 16.) Clerks in Court. 1 Ro. Rep. 368, but see Mar. 30 —Physicians, Surgeons, Apothecaries, Aldermen, Dissenters, Dissenting Teachers, Prosecutors of Felons, Militia-men.—See tit. Constable, II. 2.

No person living out of the parish, although he occupies lands within the parish, may be chosen church-warden; because he cannot take notice of absences from church, nor disorders in it, for the due presenting of them. Gibf. 215.

II. Church-Wardens are a corporation by custom, to sue and be sued for the goods of the church; and they may purchase goods, but not lands, except it be in London, by custom Jones 439: Cro. Car. 532, 552: 4 Vin. 525. n: 1 Ld. Raym. 337. Co. Lit. 3.

In the city of London, by special custom, the church-wardens, with the minister, make a corporation for lands as well as goods; and may as such, hold, purchase and take lands for the use of the church, &c. And there is also a custom in London, that the minister is there excused from repairing the chancel of the church. 2 Cro. 325. Co. Lit. 3: 1 Rel. Ab. 330. Churchwardens may have appeal of robbery for stealing the goods of the church. 1 Rel. Ab. 393: Cro. Eliz. 179.—And they may also purchase goods for the use of the parish. Mar. 22, 67: Cro. Car. 552: 3 Bull. 264: Yelv. 173 —They may also take money or things (by legacy, gift, &c.) for the benefit of the church 2 P. Wms. 125. And they may dispose of the goods of the church, with the consent of the parishioners. 1 Ro. Ab. 393: 1 Vent. 89: Cro. Jac. 234: 4 Vin. 526.

But

CHURCH-WARDENS III.

But the churchwardens (except in London) have no right to, or interest in the freehold and inheritance of the church, which alone belongs to the parson or incumbent. Comp. Incumb. 381: 1 Bac. Abr. 372: 1 Vent. 127: 4 Vin. 527.

They may bring an appeal of robbery for goods of the church feloniously stolen—T. B. vol. 11. p. 27.—and ejectment for land leased to them for years. Runnington's Ejectments 59: 3 Com. Dig. Esgliffe (F. 3)

If they waste the goods of the church, the new churchwardens may have actions against them, or call them to account; though the parishioners cannot have an action against them for wasting the church goods, for they must make new churchwardens, who must prosecute the former, Esc. 1 Dan v. Abr. 788: 2 Cro. 145: Bio. Account 1.

They have a certain special property in the organ, bells, parish-books, bible, chalice, surplice, &c. belonging to the church; of which they have the custody on behalf of the parish, whose property they really are; for the taking away, or for any damage done any of these, the churchwardens may bring an action at law, and therefore the parson cannot sue for them in the Spiritual Court. 1 Bac. Abr. 372: 1 Ro. Rep. 255.—See Cro. Eliz. 179: 1 Vent. 89: 7 Mod. 116.

But they have not, virtute officii, the custody of the title deeds of the advowson, though they are kept in a chest in the church. 4 Term Rep. 351.

III. 1. Church-wardens have power and authority throughout the parish, though it extends into different hundreds and counties; being, though temporal officers, employed in ecclesiastical affairs, and must therefore follow the ecclesiastical division of the kingdom. Shaw. P. L. 86.

They have, with the consent of the minister, the placing the parishioners in the seats of the body of the church, appointing gallery-keepers, &c. reserving to the Ordinary a power to correct the same: and in London, the churchwardens have this authority in themselves.

Particular persons may prescribe to have a seat, as belonging to them by reason of their estates, as being an ancient messuage, &c. and the seats having been constantly repaired by them: also one may prescribe to any use in the church, to sit, and to bury there, always repairing the same. 3 Inst. 202: Cro. Jac. 366. If the Ordinary displaces a person claiming a seat in a church by prescription, a prohibition shall be granted, Esc. 12 Rep. 106. The parson impropriate has a right to the chief seat in the chancel; but by prescription another parishioner may have it. Noy's Rep.

Besides their ordinary power, the churchwardens have the care of the benefice during its vacancy: and as soon as there is any avoidance, they are to apply to the Chancellor of the diocese for a sequestration; which being granted, they are to manage all the profits and expences of the benefice for him that succeeds, plough and sow his glebes, gather in tithes, thrash out and sell corn, repair houses, &c. and they must see that the church be duly served by a curate approved by the bishop, whom they are to pay out of the profits of the benefice. 2 Inst. 489: Shaw. P. L. 99: Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12.

The churchwardens have not originally power to make any rate themselves, exclusive of the parishioners, their duty being only to summon the parishioners, to a vestry, who are to meet for that purpose; and, when they are assembled, a rate made by the majority present shall bind the whole parish, although the churchwardens voted against it. Comp. Incumb. 389: 1 Vent. 367: 1 Bac. Abr. 373: 3 Term Rep. 592.

But if the churchwardens give the parishioners due notice, that they intend to meet for the purpose of making a rate to repair the church, and the parishioners refuse to come, or being assembled, refuse to make any rate, they may make one without their concurrence; for they are liable to be punished in the ecclesiastical courts for not repairing the church, Degge 172: 1 Vent. 367: 1 Mod. 79, 194, 237:—See further on this subject, title Vestry.

A taxation by a pound-rate is the most equitable way, which if refused to be paid, should be proceeded for in the Ecclesiastical Court; and Quakers are subject to such church rate, recoverable as their tithes, Wood's Inst. b. 1. c. 7: Gibb. 219: Degge 171.

2. Their Duty is extensive and various; the heads of it are therefore here ranged alphabetically.

Apprentices.—See this Dict. tit. Apprentices, Chimney-Sweepers.

Bastards.—The church-wardens, are bound to provide for such for whose sustenance the parish have made no provision; and this without an order of justices. Hays v. Bryant, Trin. 29 Geo. 3. in C. P.

Belfry.—Church-wardens ought to keep the keys of, and take care the bells are not rung without proper cause. Can. 88.

Briefs.—Church-wardens are by Stat. 4 An. c. 14, to collect the charity-money upon briefs; which are letters-patent issuing out of Chancery, to re-build churches, restore loss by fire, &c. which are to be read in churches; and the sums collected, &c. to be indorsed on the briefs in words at length, and signed by the minister and churchwardens; after which they shall be delivered, with the money collected to the persons undertaking them, in a certain time, under the penalty of 20*l.* A register is to be kept of all money collected, &c. Also the undertakers in two months after the receipts of the money, and notice to sufferers, are to account before a Master in Chancery, appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Burial.—The consent of the church-wardens must be had for burying a person in a different parish from that in which he dies.—It is their duty not to suffer suicides, or excommunicated persons to be buried in the church or church-yard, without licence from the bishop.—By Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3, they are to apply to the magistrates to convict offenders for not burying in woollen.—See also post, Register.

Butter and Cheese.—The penalties under Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 26, for reforming abuses in, are payable to the church-wardens of the parish where the offence committed.

Chimney-Sweepers. See that title in this Dict.

Church.—Church-wardens or quest-men are to take care it be well aired, the windows glazed, the floors well paved, &c. If church-wardens erect or add a new gallery, &c. they must have the consent of the parishioners, and a licence of the Ordinary, but not for occasional repairs. 2 Inst. 489: 1 Mod. 273. See ante III. 1. They must also take care to have in the church a large bible, a book of common prayer, a book of homilies, a font of stone, a decent communion table; with bread and wine for the communion, a table-cloth, carpet, and flagon, plate,

CHURCH-WARDENS IV.

plate, and bowl of silver, gold or pewter. Can. 20: Y. B. 8 H. 5. p. 4.: Doct. & Stud. 118: Deg. 151.—Church-wardens also are to sign certificates of persons taking the sacrament, to qualify for offices. They are to see that the ten commandments are set up at the East end of the church, and other chosen sentences upon the walls, with a reading-desk and a pulpit, and a chest for alms, all at the charge of the parish. It is also the duty of church-wardens to prevent any irreverence or indecency from being committed in the church; and therefore they may pull off a person's hat in the church, or even turn him out if he attempts to disturb the congregation. The church being under the care of the church wardens, they may refuse to open it at the instance of any person, except the parson, or any one acting under him. 1 Sand. 13: 1 Lev. 196. 1 Sid. 301: 3 Salk. 37: 12 Mod. 433: Can. 85—They are not to suffer any stranger to preach, unless he appears qualified, by producing a licence—and such preacher is to register his name, and the day when he preached, in a book. Can. 50, 52. The pulpit is exclusively the right of the parson of the parish, and the church wardens are punishable if they shut the door against him; and his consent is necessary to a stranger's preaching. 3 Salk. 87: 12 Mod. 433. See further this Dictionary title Church.

Church yards—By the canons of the church it is ordained that the church wardens, or quest-men, shall take care that the church-yards be well and sufficiently repaired, sound, and maintained with walls, rails, or pales, as have been in each place accustomed, at their charges, unto whom the same, by law, appertaineth; they are also to see that the church be well kept and repaired: and by a constitution of Archbishop Winchelsea, this charge is to be at the expence of the parishioners. 2 Inst. 489 (But one who has land adjoining to the church-yard may by custom be bound to keep the fences in repair)—Church-wardens shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers, church ales, drinkings, temporal courts or leets, lay-juries, musters, or any profane usage to be kept in the church or church yard.—Nor shall they suffer any idle persons to abide either in the church-yard or the church-porch during the time of divine service or preaching, but shall cause them to come in or to depart—So also, by the common law, church-wardens may justify the removal of tumultuous persons from the church-yard to prevent them from disturbing the congregation whilst the minister is performing the rites of burial. 1 Mod. 168, and by the canon law may prevent an excommunicated person from even entering into the church-yard at any time or on any pretence.

Conventicles—Church-wardens are to levy the penalties by warrant of a justice, under Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 1.

Corn—See Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 8.

County Rate—See Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29.

Drunkenness—Church-wardens are to receive the penalties under Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 5. 21 Geo. 2. c. 7. and 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. See this Dict. title Constable.

Fest days—See Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5.

Fine—See this Dict. title Fine.

Game—Church wardens are to receive the penalties under Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

Greenwich Hospital—Church wardens are to sign certificates of out-pensioners under Stat. 3 Geo. 3. c. 16.

Hawkers and Pedlars—Church-wardens are to apprehend; and receive the penalties under Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27: and 9 Geo. 2. c. 23.

Militia—See the Militia-Act 26 Geo. 3. c. 107.

Non-conformists—Churchwardens to levy the penalty of 12*d.* on persons not coming to church each Sunday, under Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2.

Parson—Church wardens are to observe whether he reads the thirty-nine articles twice a year, and the canons once in the year, preaches every Sunday good doctrine, reads the Common Prayer, celebrates the sacraments, preaches in his gown, visits the sick, catechises children, marries according to law, &c.

Parishioners; Church-wardens to see if they come to church, and duly attend the worship of God; if baptism be neglected; women not church'd; persons marrying in prohibited degrees, or without banns or licence; alma-houses or schools abused; legacies given to pious uses; &c. Can. 117: Cro. Car. 291: 1 Vent. 114.

Poor—Church-wardens are to act in conjunction with the overseers; every church-warden being an overseer, but not à contrà—See this Dict. title Overseer, Poor.

Presentments—Church-wardens, by their oaths, are to present, or certify to the bishop or his officers, all things presentable by the ecclesiastical law, which relate to the church, to the minister, and to the parishioners. The articles which are delivered to church-wardens for their guidance in this respect, are, for the most part, founded on the book of canons, and on rubrics of the common prayer. They are also bound by the 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. to present tippling or drunkenness, and by 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. recusants. They need not take a fresh oath upon each presentment they make, nor are they obliged to make presentments oftener than once a year; but they may do it as often as they please, except there is a custom in the parish to the contrary; and, upon default or neglect in the church wardens, the minister may present; but such presentment ought to be upon oath. Can. 117: Cro. Car. 285, 291. 1 Vent. 86, 114. and see 1 Vent. 127: 1 Saund. 13. 1 Sid. 463.

Rates—See ante III. 1.

Recusants—See Presentments, Non-conformists.

Registers—Church wardens shall provide a box wherein to keep the parish register, with three locks and three keys; two of the keys to be kept by them, and one by the minister: and every Sunday they shall see that the minister enter therein all the christenings, weddings, and burials that have happened the week before; and at the bottom of every page, they shall, with the minister, subscribe their names: and they shall, within a month after the twenty-fifth day of March, yearly, transmit to the bishop a copy thereof for the year before, subscribed as above. By Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 67, upon the entry of any burial, marriage, birth, or christening in the register of any parish, precinct, or place, a stamp duty of 3*d.* shall be paid; and therefore the church-wardens and overseers, or one of them, are directed to provide a book for this purpose, with proper stamps for each entry, and to pay for the same, and for the stamps contained therein, out of the rates under their management; and to receive back the monies which shall be so paid from the persons authorized to demand and receive the said duties.

Sunday—Church-wardens to levy penalties for profaning; under Stats. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. and 29 Car. 2. c. 7.

IV At the end of the year the Church-wardens are to yield just accounts to the minister and parishioners, and deliver deliver what remains in their hands to the parishioners, or to new church-wardens: in case they refuse, they may be presented at the next visitation, or the new officers may by process call them to account before the Ordinary, or sue them by writ of account at Common law. Shaw. P. L. 76: 12 Mol. 9: 1 Buc. Abr. 375: Bio. Account 71. But in laying out their money, they are punishable for fraud only, not indiscretion. Gibb. 196: 1 Burn's Just. 349: Shaw. P. L. 76. If their receipts fall short of their disbursements, the succeeding church-wardens may pay them the balance, and place it to their account. 1 Roll. Abr. 121: Can. 89, 109, &c. And the Court of Chancery on application will make an order for the purpose. 2 Eq. Ab. 303: Pre. Ch. 43, but see 4 Vin. (8vo) 529.

By the Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11, In all actions to be brought in the courts of Westminster, or at the assizes, for money mis-spent by church-wardens, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be taken and admitted.

Church-wardens are comprehended within the purview of the Stats. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5, and 21 Jac. 1. cap. 12, as to pleading the general issue to actions brought against them, and as to double costs when they have judgment.

But in an action on the case against a church-warden for a false and malicious presentment, though there be judgment for him, yet he shall not have double costs; for the statute does not extend to spiritual affairs. Cro. Car. 285, 467: 1 Sid. 463: 1 Vent. 86: 2 Hazak. P. C. 61: Hardw. 125.

The Spiritual Court can only order the church-wardens' accounts to be audited, but cannot make a rate to reimburse them, because they are not obliged to lay out money before they receive it. Hardw. 381: 2 Str. 974: Cro. Car. 285, 286.

But a custom that the church-wardens shall, before the end of their year, give notice to the parishioners to audit their accounts, and that a general rate shall be made, for the purpose of reimbursing them all money advanced, is good. 2 Andr. 32.

If there be a select committee or vestry elected by custom, and the church-wardens exhibit their accounts to such committee, who allow the same, this shall discharge them from being proceeded against in the Spiritual Court. 2 Lutw. 1027. So of allowance at a vestry in general. Burb. 247, 289: 1 Vent. 357: 1 Sid. 281: Raim. 4: 8: 2 Barn. K. B. 421: Andr. 11. And if the Spiritual Court take any step whatever after the accounts are delivered in, it is an excess of jurisdiction for which a prohibition will be granted, even after sentence. 3 Term Rep. 3.

Justices of peace have no jurisdiction over church-wardens with respect to their accounts as church-wardens. 1 Keb. 574: 4 Vin. (8vo) 532.

CHURCHESSET, or churchset, churchset.] A Saxon word used in Domesday, which is interpreted quasi semina ecclesiae, corn paid to the church. Fleta says, it signifies a certain measure of wheat, which in times past every man on St. Martin's day gave to holy church, as well in the times of the Bishops as of the English; yet many great persons, after coming of the Roman, gave that contribution according to the ancient law of Moses, in the name of first fruits; as in the writ of King Cnutus sent to the Pope is particularly contained, in which they call it churchset. Selden's Hist. Tithe, p. 216.

CHURCH-SCOT, Customary oblations paid to the parish-priest; from which duties the religious sometimes purchased an exemption for themselves and their tenants.

CHURLE, ceorle, carl. Was in the Saxon times a tenant at will, of free condition, who held some land of the Thanes, on condition of rents and services: which ceorles were of two sorts; one that hired the lord's tenementary estate, like our farmers; the other that tilled and manured the demesnes, (yielding work and not rent,) and were thereupon called his sokmen or ploughmen. Spelm.

CINQUE PORTS, quinque portus.] Those Havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought to be vigilantly guarded and preserved against invasion: in which respect they have an especial governor, called Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and divers privileges granted them, as a peculiar jurisdiction; their warden having not only the authority of an admiral amongst them, but sending out writs in his own name, &c. 4 Inst. 222.

Cambden says, that Kent is accounted the key of England; and that William, called The Conqueror, was the first that made a constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the cinque ports, which he did to bring that country under a stricter submission to his government; but King John was the first who granted the privileges to those ports, which they still enjoy: however, it was upon condition that they should provide a certain number of ships at their own charge for forty days, as often as the king should have occasion for them in the wars, he being then under a necessity of having a navy for passing into Normandy, to recover that dukedom which he had lost. And this service the Barons of the Cinque Ports acknowledged and performed, upon the king's summons, attended with their ships the time limited at their proper costs, and staying as long after as the king pleased at his own charge. Sommer of Roman Ports in Kent. See this Dic. tit. Navy.

The Cinque Ports, as we now account them are, Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Winchelsea, and Rye; and to these we may add Hythe and Hastings, which are reckoned as part or members of the Cinque Ports: though by the first institution it is said that Winchelsea and Rye were added as members, and that the others were the Cinque Ports: there are also several other towns adjoining that have the privileges of the ports. These Cinque Ports have certain franchises to hold pleas, &c. and the king's writs do not run there; but on a judgment in any of the king's courts, if the defendant hath no good, &c. except in the ports, the plaintiff may get the records certified into Chancery, and from thence sent by mandamus to the Lord Warden to make execution. 4 Inst. 231: 3 Leon. 3.

The constable of Dover castle is Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. And there are several courts within the Cinque Ports; one before the constable, others within the ports themselves, before the mayors and jurats; another, which is called curia quinque portuum apud Shepway: there is likewise a court of Chancery, in the Cinque Ports, to decide matters of equity; but no original writs issue thence. 1 Dawd. Abr. 793. the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports is general, extending to personal, real, and mix'd actions: and if any erroneous judgment is given in the Cinque Ports before any of the mayors and jurats, error lies according to the custom, by bill in nature of error, before the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, in his court of Shipway. And in these cases the mayor and jurors may be fined, and the mayor removed, &c. 4 Inst. 334: Crompt. Jurisd. 139.—and error lies from the court of Shipway to the court of K. B. Jenk. 71: 1 Sid. 356.

It has been observed that the Cinque Ports are not jura regalia, like counties palatine, but are parcel of the county of Kent: so that if a writ be brought against one for land within the Cinque Ports, and he appears and pleads to it, and judgment is given against him in the Common Pleas, this judgment shall bind him; for the land is not exempted out of the county, and the tenant may waive the benefit of his privilege. Wood's Inst. 519.

The Cinque Ports cannot award process of outlawry. Cro. Eliz. 910. And a quod minus lies to the Cinque Ports. ibid. 911. If a man is imprisoned at Dover by the Lord Warden, an habeas corpus may be issued; for the privilege that the king's writ lies not there is intended between party and party, and there can be no such privilege against the king; and an habeas corpus is a prerogative writ, by which the king demands an account of the liberty of the subject. Cro. Jac. 543; 1 Nelf. Abr. 447.

Circuorari lies to the Cinque Ports, to remove indictments; and the jurisdiction that brev. dom. regis non currit is only in civil causes between party and party. 2 Hawth. P. C. c. 27. § 24.

CIRCA, A watch; from which circulator.

CIRCADA, A tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archdeacon for visiting the churches. Du Fresne.

CIRCEMOT, Vide Churchgemot.

CIRCUIITY OF ACTION, circuitus actionis.] A longer course of proceeding to recover a thing sued for than is needful: as if a person grant a rent-charge of 10 l. per annum out of his manor of B. and after the grantee disseiseth the grantor of the same manor, who brings an assize and recovers the land, and 20 l. damages, which being paid, the grantee brings his action for 10 l. of his rent due during the time of the disseisin, which he must have had if no disseisin had been: this is called circuity of action because as the grantor was to receive 20 l. damages, and pay 10 l. rent, he might have received but 10 l. only for damages, and the grantee might have kept the other 10 l. in his hands by way of retainer for his rent, and so saved his action, which appears to be needless. Termes de Ley. See title Action.

CIRCUITS, Certain divisions of the kingdom appointed for the Judges to go twice a year, for administering of justice, in the several counties. These circuits are made in the respective vacations, after Hilary and Trinity terms. See titles Affise, Nisi Prius.

The several counties of England are divided into six circuits, viz. 1. MIDLAND; containing the counties of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, Warwick—2. NORFOLK; Bucks., Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk—3. HOME; Hertford, Essex, Kent, Sussex, Surry—4. OXFORD; Berks, Oxford, Hertford, Salop, Gloucester, Monmouth, Stafford, Worcester—5. WESTERN; Southampton, Wilts, Dorset, Cornwall, Devon, Somerset—6. NORTHERN; York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Lancashire.

CIRCUMSPECTE AGA'IS, Is the title of a statute made anno 13 Ed. 1. Stat. 4, relating to prohibitions, prescribing certain cases to the judges, wherein the king's prohibition lies not. 2 Inst. 187. See title Prohibition.

CITY.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. See title Evidence.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS, By-standers; a word of art signifying the supplying or making up the number of jurors, if any impanelled appear not, or appearing are challenged by either party, by adding to them so many of those that are present, or standing-by (talles de circumstantibus) that are qualified as will serve the turn. See Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 6. and Stat. 5. Edw. c. 25, for Wales. See also title Jury.

CITATION, citatio.] A summons to appear, applied particularly to process in the spiritual court. The ecclesiastical courts proceed according to the course of the civil and canon laws, by citation, libet, &c. A person is not generally to be cited to appear out of the diocese, or peculiar jurisdiction where he lives; unless it be by the archbishop, in default of the Ordinary; where the Ordinary is party to the suit, in cases of appeal, &c. and by law a defendant may be sued where he lives, though it is for subtracting tithes in another diocese, &c. 1 Nelf. 449. By the Stat. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 9, Every archbishop may cite any person dwelling in any bishop's diocese within his province for heresy, &c. if the bishop or other Ordinary consents; or if the bishop or Ordinary, or judge, do not do his duty in punishing the offence. Where persons are cited out of their diocese, and live out of the jurisdiction of the bishop, a prohibition or consulation may be granted: but where persons live in the diocese, if when they are cited they do not appear, they are to be excommunicated, &c. The above statute was made to maintain the jurisdiction of inferior dioceses; and if any person is cited out of the diocese, &c. where the civil or canon law doth not allow it, the party grieved shall have double damages. If one defame another within the peculiar of the archbishop, he may be punished there; although he dwell in any remote place out of the archbishop's peculiar. Godb. 190.—See title Courts Ecclesiastical.

CITY, civitas.] According to Cowel is a town corporate, which hath a bishop and cathedral church, which is called civitas, oppidum, and urbs; civitas, in regard it is governed by justice and order of magistracy; oppidum, for that it contains a great number of inhabitants; and urbs, because it is in due form begirt about with walls. But Crompton, in his Juridictions, where he reckons up the cities, leaveth out Ely, although it hath a bishop and cathedral church: and puts in Westminster, though it hath not at present a bishop: and Sir Edward Coke makes Cambridge a city; yet there is no mention that it was ever an episcopal see. Indeed it appears by the Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 10, that there was a bishop of Westminster; see tit. Bishops; since which in Stat. 17 Edw. cap. 5, it is termed a city or borough: and notwithstanding what Coke observes of Cambridge, in the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 4, Cambridge is called only a town.

Kingdoms have been said to contain as many cities as they have sees of archbishops and bishops: but according to Blount, City is a word which hath obtained since the Conquest; for in the time of the Saxons there were no cities, but all great towns were called burghs, and even London was then styled London-Bourge; as the capital of Scotland is now called Edinburgh. And long after the conquest the word city is used promiscuously with the word burgh, as in the charter of Leicester it is called both civitas and burgus; which shews that those writers were mistaken, that tell us every city was or is a bishop's see. And tho' the word city signifies with us such a town corporate as hath usually a bishop and cathedral church; yet it is not always so.

A City, says Blackstone, is a town incorporated, which is or hath been the see of a bishop; and though the bishoprick be dissolved, as at Westminster, yet still it remaineth a city. 1 Comm. 114.

It appears, however, that Westminster retained the name of city, not because it had been a bishop's see, but because it was expressly created such, in the letters-patent by King H. VIII. erecting it into a bishoprick—See Burnet's Reform. Ap. ix. There was a similar clause in favour of the other five new created cities, Chester, Peterborough, Oxford, Gloucester and Bristol, the charter for Christ is in Gib. Cod. 1449; and that for Oxford in 14 Rym. Fœd. 754. Lord Coke seems anxious to rank Cambridge among the cities. Mr. Woddeson late Vinerian professor (see his lectures i. 302,) has produced a decisive authority that cities and bishops' sees had not originally any necessary connection with each other. It is that of Ingulpbus, who relates that at the great council assembled in 1072, to settle the claim of precedence between the two archbishops, it was decreed that bishops' sees should be transferred from towns to cities.

The accidental coincidence of the same number of bishops and cities would naturally produce the supposition that they were connected together as a necessary cause and effect; it is certainly a strong confirmation of the above authority that the same distinction is not paid to bishops' sees in Ireland.

Mr. Hargrave in his notes to 1 Inst. 110. proves that although Westminster is a city and has sent citizens to parliament from the time of Ed. VI. it never was incorporated; and this is a striking instance in contradiction of the learned opinions there referred to, viz. that the King could not grant within time of memory to any place the right of sending members to parliament without first creating that place a corporation—1 Comm. edit. 1793. in n—See also title Parliament, Bishops, Borough, &c.

CITIZENS of London, See title London.

CIVIL LAW, Is defined to be that law which every particular nation, commonwealth or city, has established peculiarly for itself: jus civile est, quod quisque populus sibi constituit. Just. Inst. Now more properly distinguished by the name of municipal law: the term Civil Law being chiefly applied to that which the old Romans used, compiled from the Laws of Nature and of Nations. The Roman law was founded first, upon the regal constitutions of their ancient kings; next upon the twelve tables of the Decemviri; then upon the laws or statutes enacted by the Senate or People; the edicts of the Prætor and the Responsa Prudentum, or opinions of learned lawyers; and lastly, upon the imperial decrees or constitutions of successive Emperors.—These had by degrees grown to an enormous bulk; but the inconvenience arising therefrom was in part remedied, by the collections of three private lawyers, Gregorius, Hermogenes and Papinian; and afterwards by the Emperor Theodosius the younger, by whose orders a Code was compiled A. D. 438, being a methodical collection of all the imperial constitutions then in force: which Theodosian Code was the only book of civil law received as authentick in the Western part of Europe, 'till many centuries after—For Justinian commanded only in the Eastern remains of the Empire; and it was under his auspices that the present body of Civil laws was compiled and finished by Trebonian, about the year 533.

This consists of,—1. The Institutes; which contain the elements or first principles of the Roman Law in 4 books.—2. The Digests or Pandects in 50 books; containing the opinions and writings of eminent lawyers, digested in a systematical method.—3. A New code or collection of imperial constitutions in 12 books; the lapse of a century having rendered the former code of Theodosius imperfect.—4. The Novels or new constitutions posterior in time to the other books, and amounting to a supplement to the code containing new decrees of successive Emperors, as new questions happened to arise.—These form the body of the Roman law or Corpus Juris Civilis, as published about the time of Justinian; which however soon fell into neglect and oblivion till about the year 1130, when a copy of the Digests was found at Amalfi in Italy; which accident, concurring with the policy of the Roman ecclesiastics, suddenly gave a new vogue and authority to the Civil law, and introduced it into several nations. 1 Comm. 80, 81.

The Digest or Pandects, was collected from the works and commentaries of the ancient lawyers, some whereof lived before the coming of our Saviour: The whole Digest is divided into seven parts: the first part contains the elements of the law, as what is justice, right, &c. The second part treats of judges and judgments: The third part of personal action, &c. The fourth part of contracts, pawns and pledges: The fifth part of wills, testaments, &c. The sixth part of the possession of goods: The seventh part of obligations, crimes, punishments, &c. The Institutes contain a system of the whole body of law, and are an epitome of the Digest divided into four books; but sometimes they correct the Digest: they are called Institutes, because they are for instruction, and shew an easy way to the obtaining a knowledge of the Civil law: but they are not so distinct and comprehensive as they might be, nor so useful at this time as they were at first. The Novels or Authenticks were published at several times without any method: they are termed Novels as they are new laws, and Authenticks, being authentically translated from the Greek into the Latin tongue; and the whole volume is divided into nine Collations, Constitutions or sections; and they again into 168 Novels, which also are distributed into certain chapters: the first collation relates to heirs, executors, &c. The second, the state of the church: the third is against bawds: the fourth concerns marriages, &c. The fifth forbids the alienation of the possessions of the church: the sixth shews the legitimacy of children, &c. The seventh determines who shall be witnesses: the eighth ordains wills to be good, though imperfect, &c. And the ninth contains matter of succession in goods, &c. Di. A.

To those tomes of the Civil law we may add the Book of Feuds, which contains the customs and services that the subject or vassal oweth to his prince or lord, for such lands or fees as he holdeth of him. The Constitutions of the Emperor, were either by a rescript, which was the letter of the Emperor in answer to particular persons who enquired the law of him; or by edict, which the Emperor established of his own accord, that it might be generally observed by every subject; or by decree, which the Emperor pronounced between plaintiff and defendant, upon hearing hearing a particular cause. The power of issuing forth rescripts, edicts and decrees, was given to the prince by the lex regia, wherein the people of Rome wholly submitted themselves to the government of one person, viz. Julius Cæsar, after the defeat of Pompey, &c. And by this submission the prince could not only make laws, but was esteemed above all coercive power of them. Diſt.

How far the Civil law is adopted and of force in this kingdom. See title Canon Law.

Before the Reformation, decrees were as frequent in the Canon law as in the Civil law—Many were graduates in utroque jure or utriusque juris.] U. D. or juris utriusque doctor, is still common in Foreign Universities. But Henry VIII, in the 27th year of his reign when he had renounced the authority of the Pope, issued a mandate to the University of Cambridge, to prohibit lectures and the granting degrees in Canon law in that University. Stat. Acad. p. 137.—It is probable that at the same time Oxford received a similar prohibition, and that degrees in canon law have ever since been discontinued in England. 1 Comm. 392. in n.

CIVIL LIST. See title King.

TO CLACK WOOL, Is to cut off the sheep's mark, which makes it weigh lighter; as to force wool, signifies to clip off the upper and hairy part thereof; and to band it, is to cut the head and neck from the rest of the fleece. Stat. 8 H. 6. cap. 22.

CLADES, Clida, clea, cleia, from the Brit. clie, and the Irish clia.] A wattle or hurdle; and a hurdle for penning or folding of sheep is still in some counties of England called a clay. Parsch. Antiq. p. 575.

CLARENDON, Constitutions of: certain constitutions, made in the reign of Hen. II. A. D. 1164, in a great council held at Clarendon, whereby the King checked the power of the Pope, and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the total exemption they claimed from the secular jurisdiction. 4 Comm. 422.

CLARETUM, A liquor made of wine and honey, clarified or made clear by decoction, &c. which the Germans, French, and English, called bippocras: and it was from this, the red wines of France were called claret.—Guald. Camb. apud Wharton. Ang. Sax. Par. 2. p. 480.

CLAIM, clameum.] A challenge of interest in any thing that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own possession, as claim by charter, by descent, &c.

In Plow. Com. 359 (a), Dyer C. J. is said to have defined claim to be, a challenge of the ownership or property that one hath not in possession, but which is detained from him by wrong.

CLAIM may be either verbal, where one doth by words claim and challenge the thing that is so out of his possession: or it is by an action brought, &c. and sometimes it relates to lands, and sometimes to goods and chattels. Lit. Sect. 420. Where any thing is wrongfully detained from a person, this claim is to be made; and the party making it, may thereby avoid descents of lands, disseisins, &c. and preserve his title, which otherwise would be in danger of being lost. Co. Lit. 250. A man who hath present right or title to enter, must make a claim; and in case of reversions, &c. one may make a claim where he hath right, but cannot enter on the lands: when a person dares not make an entry on land, for fear of being beaten or other injury, he may approach as near as he can to the land, and claim the same; and that shall be sufficient to vest the seisin in him. 1 Inst. 450. See title Entry.

If nothing doth hinder a man, having a right to land, from entering or making his claim; there he must do so, before he shall be said to be in possession of it, or can grant it over to another: but where the party who hath right, is in possession already, and where an entry or claim cannot be made, it is otherwise. 1 Rep. 157. A claim will devert an estate out of another, when the party must enter into some part of the land; but if it be only to bring him into possession, he may do it in view. By claim of lands in most cases is intended a claim with an entry into part of the lands, or by a near approach to it. Co. Lit. 252, 254: Poph. 67. One in reversion after an estate for years, or after a statute-merchant, staple, or elegit, may enter and make a claim to prevent a descent, or avoid a collateral warranty. And claim of a remainder by force of a condition must be upon the land, or it will not be sufficient. Co. Lit. 202.

If a man seised of lands in right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee on condition, and the husband dieth, and then the condition is broken, and the heir enters; in this case the wife need not claim to get possession of her estate, for the law doth vest it in her without any claim. Co. Lit. 202: 8 Rep. 43.

The claim of the particular tenant, shall be good for him in reversion or remainder; and of him in reversion, &c. for particular tenant: so claim of a copyholder, will be good for the lord, &c. But if tenant for years, in a court of record claim the fee of his land, it is a forfeiture of his estate. Plowd. 359: Co. Lit. 251. A claim may be made by the party himself; and sometimes by his servants or deputy: and a guardian in socage, &c. may make a claim, or enter, in the name of the infant that hath right, without any commandment. Co. Lit. 245.

Claim or entry should be made as soon as may be; and by the Common law it is to be within a year and a day after the disseisin, &c. and if the party who hath unjustly gained the estate, do afterwards occupy the land, in some cases an assize, trespass or forcible entry may be had against him. Lit. Sect. 426, 430.

If a fine is levied of lands, strangers to it are to enter and make a claim within five years, or be barred: infants after their age, feme coverts after the death of their husbands, &c. have the like time, by Stat. 1 R. 3. cap. 7. See title Fines.

CONTINUAL CLAIM, is where a man hath right and title to enter into any lands or tenements, whereof another is seised in fee, or in fee tail; if he who hath title to enter makes continual claim to the lands or tenements before the dying seised of him, who holdeth the tenements, then though such tenant die thereof seised, and the lands or tenements descend to his heir, yet may he who hath made such continual claim, or his heir, enter into the lands or tenements so descended, by reason of the continual claim made, notwithstanding the descent. So, (Si come) in case a man be disseised, and the disseisee makes continual claim to the tenements in the life of the disseisor, although the disseisor dieth seised in fee, and the land descend to his heir, yet may the disseisee enter upon the possession of the heir, notwithstanding the descent. Litt. § 414.

CLAIM.

But such claim must always be made within the year and the day before the death of the person holding the land; for if such tenant do not die seised within a year and a day, after such claim made, and yet he that hath right dares not enter, he must make another claim, within the year and the day after the first claim, and so toties quoties, that he may be sure his claim shall always have been made within a year and a day before the death of the tenant; and hence it seems it is called Continual Claim.—See further title Entry; as also title Descent.

By Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 43, Five years must elapse without entry or continual claim, in order that a descent on the disseisor's death should take away the entry of the disseisee, or his heir; but after the five years, the disseisee must make continual claim as before the statute. And by Stat. 4 An. c. 16. § 16, no claim (or entry) shall be of effect to avoid a fine, unless an action shall be commenced thereon within a year, and prosecuted with effect. See titles Fine, Entry, Disseisin, &c.—And for further particulars, See 1 Inst. 150. and n.

CLAIM OF LIBERTY, A suit or petition to the king in the court of Exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the king's Attorney General. Co. Ent. 93.

CLAMEA ADMITTENDA IN ITINERE PER ATTORNATUM. An ancient writ by which the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit a person's claim by attorney who was employed in the king's service, and could not come in his own person. Reg. Orig. 19.

CLAP-BOARD, Is a board cut in order to make casks or vessels; which shall contain three feet and two inches at least in length: and for every six ton of beer exported, the same cask, or as good, or 200 of clap-boards is to be imported. See title Navigation Acts.

CLERGY.

Clerus.] Signifies the assembly or body of clerks or ecclesiasticks, being taken for the whole number of those who are de clero Domini, of our Lord's lot or share, as the tribe of Levi was in Judæa, and are separate from the noise and bustle of the world, that they may have leisure to spend their time in the duties of the Christian religion.

The Clergy in general, were heretofore divided into regular and secular: those being regular which lived under certain rules, being of some religious order, and were called men of religion, or The Religious, such as all Abbots, Priors, Monks, &c. The secular were those that lived not under any certain rules of the religious orders; as Bishops, Deans, Parsons, &c.—Now, the word Clergy comprehends all persons in boly orders, and in ecclesiastical offices, viz. Archbishops, Bishops, Deans and Chapters, Archdeacons, Rural Deans, Parsons, (who are either Rectors, or Vicars) and Curates,—to which may be added Parish Clerks, who formerly frequently were, and yet sometimes are, in orders.—As to the law more peculiarly respecting each of these, See the several titles, particularly title Parson.

This venerable body of men have several privileges allowed them by our municipal laws, and had formerly much greater, which were abridged at the time of the reformation, on account of the ill use which the Popish clergy had endeavoured to make of them: for the laws having exempted them from almost every personal duty, they attempted a total exemption from every secular tie. The personal exemptions however for the most part continue, a clergyman cannot be compelled to serve on a jury, nor to appear at a Court Lect, or view of frankpledge, which almost every other person is obliged to do. 2 Inst. 4. (See title Court Lect). But if a layman is summoned on a jury, and before the trial takes orders, he shall, notwithstanding, appear and be sworn. 4 Leon. 190. A clergyman cannot be chosen to any temporal office, as bailiff, reeve, constable, or the like, in regard of his own continual attendance on the sacred function. Finch. L. 88. During his attendance on divine service he is privileged from arrests in civil suits; for a reasonable time, cundo, redeundo & morando, to perform service. Stats. 50 E. 3. c. 5. 1 R. 2. c. 16. 12 Co. 100.—In cases of felony he shall have benefit of his clergy, without being branded; and may likewise have it more than once. See post, Clergy, benefit of.—Clergymen also have certain disabilities, it is doubted how far they are capable of sitting as members of the House of Commons. See post, title Parliament.—By Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, the Clergy are not (in general) allowed to take any lands or teneaments to farm, on pain of 10*l.* per month, and total avoidance of the lease; unless where they have not sufficient glebe, and the land is taken for the necessary expenses of their household. Stat. § 8.—Nor, on like penalty malty to keep any tail-house, or brew-house.—Nor may they engage in any trade, or sell merchandize, on forfeiture of treble value. But see title Bankrupt.

By the statute called Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. c. 3. If any person lay violent hands on a clerk, the amends for the peace broken (1) shall be before the king (that is by indictment,) and the assailant may (2) also be sued before the bishop, that excommunication or bodily penance may be imposed; which if the offender will redeem by money, it may (3) be sued for before the bishop. See 4 Comm. 217.

Although the Clergy claimed an exemption from all secular jurisdiction, yet Mat. Paris tells us, that soon after William the First had conquered Harold, he subjected the bishopricks and abbeyes who held per baroniam, that they should be no longer free from military service; and for that purpose he in an arbitrary manner registered how many soldiers every bishoprick and abbey should provide, and send to him and his successors in time of war; and having placed these registers of ecclesiastical servitude in his treasury, those who were aggrieved, departed out of the realm: but the clergy were not, till then, exempted from all secular service; because by the laws of King Edgar they were bound to obey the secular magistrate in three cases, viz. Upon any expedition to the wars, and to contribute to the building and repairing of bridges, and of castles for the defence of the kingdom. It is probable that by expedition to the wars, it was not at that time intended they should personally serve, but contribute towards the charge: one they must do, as appears by the petition to the king, anno 1267. viz. Ut omnes clerici tenentes per baroniam vel feudum laicum, personaliter armati procederent contra regis adversarios, vel tantum ser. itum in expeditione regis invenirent, quantum pertineret ad tantam terram vel tenementum. But their answer was, that they ought not to fight with the military bat with the spiritual sword, that is with prayers and tears; that they were to maintain peace and not war, and that their baronies were founded on charity; for which reason they ought not to perform any military service. Blount.

That the Clergy had greater privileges and exemptions at common law than the laity is certain; for they are confirmed to them by Magna Charta, and other ancient statutes; but these privileges are in a great measure lost, the clergy being included under general words in later statutes; so that clergymen are liable to all public charges imposed by act of parliament, where they are not particularly excepted as above stated. Their bodies are not to be taken upon statutes-merchant or staple, &c. for the writ to take the body of the consor is si laicus sit; and if the sheriff or any other officer arrest a clergyman upon any such process, it is said an action of false imprisonment lies against him that does it, or the clergyman arrested may have a superfedeas out of Chancery. 2 Inst. 4.

In action of trespass, account, &c. against a person in holy orders, wherein process of caus lies, if the sheriff return that the defendant is clericus beneficiatus nullam habens laicam feudum ubi summoneri potest; in this case the plaintiff cannot have a caus to arrest his body; but the writ ought to issue to the bishop, to compel him to appear, &c. But on execution had against such clergymen, a sequestration shall be had of the profits of his benefice. 2 Inst. 4: Dege 157.

The foregoing are all the privileges remaining on civil accounts: though by the common law, they were to be free from the payment of tolls, in all fairs, and markets, as well for all the goods gotten upon their church livings, as for all goods and merchandises by them bought to be spent upon their rectories; and they had several other exemptions, &c.

CLERGY, BENEFIT OF.

This being, as Blackstone observes, a title of no small curiosity as well as use; the learned commentator's chapter on that subject, (4 Comm. 365,) is here abridged; with such additions thereto as seemed requisite; in which enquiry is made,

- I. Into its Original; and various Changes.
- II. To whom it is now to be allowed.
- III. In what Cases.
- IV. The Consequences of allowing it.

I. CLERGY, the privilegium clericale, or in common speech The Benefit of Clergy, had its original from the pious regard paid by Christian princes to the church in its infant state; and the ill use which the Popish ecclesiastics soon made of that pious regard. The exemptions which they granted to the Church were principally of two kinds: 1. Exemption of places, consecrated to religious duties, from criminal arrests, which was the foundation of sanctuaries: 2. Exemption of the persons of clergymen from criminal process before the secular judge, in a few particular cases; which was the true original and meaning of the privilegium clericale.

In England however, a total exemption of the clergy from secular jurisdiction could never be thoroughly effected, though often endeavoured by the clergy: Keilw. 180: See Stat. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 2: and therefore, though the ancient privilegium clericale was in some capital cases, yet it was not universally allowed. And in those particular cases, the use was for the bishop or Ordinary to demand his clerks to be remitted out of the king's courts as soon as they were indicted: concerning the allowance of which demand there was for many years a great uncertainty; (2 Hal. P. C. 377;) till at length it was finally settled, in the reign of Henry VI. that the prisoner should first be arraigned; and might either then claim his benefit of clergy, by way of declinatory plea; or, after conviction, by way of arresting judgment. This latter way is most usually practised, as it is more to the satisfaction of the court to have the crime previously ascertained by confession, or the verdict of a jury; and also it is more advantageous to the prisoner himself, who may possibly be acquitted, and so need not the benefit of his clergy at all.

Originally the law was held, that no man should be admitted to the privilege of clergy, but such as had the habitus et consuetudinem clericalem. 2 Hal. P. C. 372: M. Paris. A. D. 1259. But in process of time, a much wider and more comprehensive criterion was established: every one that could read, (a mark of great learning in those days of ignorance and superstition,) being accounted a clerk, or clericus, and allowed the benefit of clerkship, though neither initiated in holy orders, nor trimmed with the clerical tonsure. But when learning, by means of the invention of printing, and other concurrent causes, began to be more generally disseminated than formerly; and reading was no longer a competent proof of clerkship, or being in holy orders; it was found that as many laymen as divines were admitted to the privilegium clericale: and therefore by Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 13, a distinction was once more drawn between mere lay scholars, and clerks that were really in orders. And, though it was thought reasonable still to mitigate the severity of the law with regard to the former, yet they were not put upon the same footing with actual clergy; being subjected to a slight degree of punishment, and not allowed to claim the clerical privilege more than once. Accordingly the Stat. directs, that no person, once admitted to the benefit of clergy, shall be admitted thereto a second time, unless he produces his orders: and in order to distinguish their persons, all laymen who are allowed this privilege shall be burnt with a hot iron in the brawn of the left thumb. This distinction between learned laymen, and real clerks in orders, was abolished for a time by the Stats. 28 Hen. 8. c. 1, and 32 Hen. 8. c. 3; but it is held, (Hob. 294; 2 Hal. P. C. 375.) to have been virtually restored by st. 1 Edw. 6. c. 12: a high statute also enacts that Lords of Parliament, and peers of the realm, having place and voice in parliament, may have the benefit of their peerage, equivalent to that of clergy, for the first offence, (although they cannot read, and without being burnt in the hand) for all offences then clergyable to commoners; and also for the crimes of house breaking, highway-robbery, horse-stealing, and robbing of churches.

After this burning, the laity, and before it, the real clergy, were discharged from the sentence of the law in the king's court, and delivered over to the Ordinary, to be dealt with, according to the ecclesiastical canons. Whereupon the Ordinary proceeded to make a purgation of the offender by a new canonical trial, by the oath of the offender and that of twelve compurgators, although he had been previously convicted by his country, or perhaps by his own confession. Staunf. P. C. 138 b. See also 3 P. Wms. 447; Hob. 289, 291.

But this purgation opening a door to a scandalous profligation of oaths, and other abuses, It was enacted by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, that for the avoiding of such perjuries and abuses, after the offender has been allowed his clergy, he shall not be delivered to the Ordinary as formerly; but, upon such allowance, and burning in the hand, he shall forthwith be enlarged and delivered out of prison; with proviso that the judge may, if he thinks fit, continue the offender in gaol for any time not exceeding a year. And thus the law continued for above a century, unaltered; except only that the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 6, allowed, that women convicted of simple larcenies, under the value of 10*s*. should (not properly have the benefit of clergy, for they were not called upon to read; but) be burned in the hand, whipped, put in the stocks, or imprisoned for any time not exceeding a year. And a similar indulgence by Stats. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9: 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24, was extended to women guilty of any clergyable felony whatsoever; who were allowed to claim the benefit of the statute once, in like manner as Men might claim the benefit of clergy, and to be discharged upon being burned in the hand, and imprisoned for any time not exceeding a year. The punishment of burning in the hand was changed by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23, into burning in the left cheek, near the nose; but this provision was repealed by Stat. 5 Ann. c. 6; and till that period, all women, all peers of parliament, and peeresses, and all male commoners who could read were discharged in all clergyable felonies; the males absolutely, if clerks in orders; and other commoners, both male and female upon branding; and peers and peeresses without branding; for the first offence; yet all liable (except peers and peeresses,) at the discretion of the judge, to imprisonment not exceeding a year. And those men who could not read, if under the degree of peerage, were hanged.

But by the said Stat. 5 Ann. c. 6, it was enacted, that the benefit of clergy should be granted to all those who were entitled to ask it, without requiring them to read. And it was further enacted by the same statute, that when any person is convicted of any theft or larceny, and burnt in the hand for the same, according to the ancient law, he shall also at the discretion of the judge, be committed to the house of correction, or public work-house, to be there kept to hard labour for any time not less than six months, and not exceeding two years; with a power of inflicting a double confinement in case of the party's escape from the first. And by Stats. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11: 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, when any persons shall be convicted of any larceny either grand or petit, or any felonious stealing or taking of money or goods, either from the person, or the house of another, or in any other manner, and who by the law shall be entitled to the benefit of clergy, and liable only to burning in the hand, or whipping, the court may instead thereof, direct such offenders to be transported; and by the Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 74, offenders liable to transportation, may in lieu thereof be employed, if males, (except in the case of petty larceny) in hard labour, for the benefit of some publick navigation, and in all cases might be confined to hard labour in certain penitentiary houses, then in contemplation to be erected; but this latter plan of the penitentiary houses was never carried into execution. See further titles Felons, Transportation. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 58. § 10.

By the same Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 74, instead of burning in the hand, the Court in all clergyable felonies may impose a pecuniary fine, or (except in the case of manslaughter) may order the offender to be once or oftener, but not more than thrice, either publicly or privately whipped; and in the latter case, certain provisions are added to prevent collusion or abuse. The offender so fined or whipped, to be equally liable to subsequent detainer or imprisonment.

II. 1. ALL Clerks in orders, are without any branding, and of course without any transportation, fine, or whipping, (for those are only substituted in lieu of the other,) to be admitted to this privilege, or benefit of clergy, and immediately discharged; and this as often as they offend. 2 Hal. P. C. 375.

2. All Lords of Parliament, and peers of the realm, having place and voice in parliament, by Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12; (which is likewise held to extend to peeresses; Duchess of Kingston's case, 11 State Tr. 198;) shall be discharged in all clergyable, and other felonies, provided for by the act, without any burning in the hand, or or imprisonment, or other punishment substituted in its stead, in the same manner as real clerks convicted; but this only for the first offence.

3. All the Commons of the realm, not in orders, whether male or female, shall for the first offence be discharged of the capital punishment of felonies, within the benefit of clergy, upon being burnt in the hand, whipped, or fined, or suffering the discretionary imprisonment before stated; or in case of larceny, upon being transported for seven years, if the court shall think proper.

It is a privilege peculiar only to the Clergy, that sentence of death can never be passed upon them for any number of man slaughters, bigamies, simple larcenies, or other clergyable offences; but a layman, even a peer, may be ousted of clergy, and will be subject to the judgment of death, upon a second conviction of a clergyable offence. Thus if a layman has once been convicted of manslaughter, upon production of the conviction, he may afterwards suffer death for bigamy, or any other clergyable felony; which would not therefore be a capital crime to another person not so circumstanced. See post as to the Counter-plea.

It has been said that Jews, and other infidels and heretics, were not capable of the benefit of clergy, till after the Stat. 5 An. c. 6; as being under a legal incapacity for orders. 2 Hal. P. C. 373; 2 Harw. P. C. c. 33. § 5: Fost 306. But it does not seem that this was ever ruled for law, since the re-introduction of the Jews into England, in the time of the usurpation by Cromwell. For if that were the case, the Jews are still in the same predicament; which every day's experience contradicts: the Stat of An. having made no alteration in this respect, it only dispensing with the necessity of reading. 4 Comm. 373.

But a person having once had benefit of clergy, shall not be ousted of his clergy, by the bare mark in his hand, or by a parol averment, without the record testifying it, or a transcript thereof, according to the following statutes. 2 H. H. 373.

By Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 14. The Clerk of the crown, or of the peace, or of assize, shall certify a transcript briefly of the tenor of the indictment, outlawry, or conviction, and attainder, into the King's Bench in forty days: and the clerk of the crown, when the judges of assize, or justices of the peace write to him for the names of such persons, shall certify the same, with the causes of the conviction or attainder.

Another method is given by the Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9. s. 7; which enacts, that the clerk of the crown, clerk of the peace, or clerk of assize, where a person admitted to clergy under that act shall be convicted, shall at the request of the prosecutor, or any other on the king's behalf, certify a transcript briefly and in few words, containing the effect and tenor of the indictment and conviction, of his having the benefit of clergy, and the addition of the party, and the certainty of the felony and conviction, to the judges where such person shall be indicted for any subsequent offence.

Also it seems, that if the party deny that he is the same person, issue must be joined upon it, and it must be found upon trial that he is the same person, before he can be ousted of clergy. 2 H. H. 373.

Against the defendant's prayer of clergy, the prosecutor may file a COUNTER-PLEA; alledging some fact, which in law deprives the defendant of the privilege he claims.

It is a good counter-plea to the prayer of clergy, that the offender is not entitled to the benefit of the statute, because he was before convicted of an offence, and thereupon prayed the benefit of the statute, which was allowed to him; alledging the truth of the fact and praying the judgment of the court, that he may die according to law; which fact is to be tried by the record in pursuance of the Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 14, above stated. Staunf. 135.—Divers other counter-pleas also, by which an offender may be deprived of clergy, may be framed from a consideration of the persons to whom it is allowed or denied by the common law; and of the circumstances under which that allowance or denial of it has been placed by divers statutes. Ib. 138.

The use of this counter-plea however, had long become obsolete, and out of practice; no traces of it appearing in any of the books since Staunford's time; who was Chief Justice of K. B. temp. Eliz. But the daring practices of some money-coiners occasioned its revival; and in the case of R. v. Marston Rabbitt, and Mary Child, convicted for coining at the Old Bailey, in September sessions 1783, before Alburtis J. a counter-plea of record was filed on the part of the prosecution; alledging that the convicts had been before allowed the benefit of the statute, &c. And they were thereby ousted of their clergy. Leach's Harw. P. C. ii. c. 33. § 19. n.

III. Privilege of Clergy was not indulged at common law, either in high treason, or in petit larceny, nor in any mere misdemeanors; and therefore it may be laid down for a rule, that it was only allowable in petit treasons, and capital felonies: which for the most part became legally entitled to this indulgence by the Stat. de Clero, 25 E. 3. st. 3. c. 4, which provides, "that clerks convicted for treasons or felonies, touching other persons, than the king himself, shall have the privilege of Holy Church." But yet it was not allowable in all felonies whatsoever: for in some it was denied even by the common law, viz. infidatio viarum, or lying in wait for one on the highway; depopulatio agrorum, or destroying and ravaging a country; (2 Hal. P. C. 333; but in these two cases it was expressly remedied by Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 2, as to clerks only;) and combustio domorum, or arson, the burning of houses. 1 Hal. P. C. 346: all which are a kind of hostile acts, and in some degree border on treason. And further, all these identical crimes, together with petit treason, and very many other acts of felony, are ousted of clergy by particular acts of parliament.

All the statutes for excluding clergy, are in fact nothing else but the restoring of the law to the same rigor of capital punishment in the first offence, that was exerted before the privilegium clericale was at all indulged; and so tender is the law of inflicting capital punishment, in the first instance, for any inferior felony, that notwithstanding, by the marine law, as declared in Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15, benefit of clergy is not allowed in any case whatever; yet when offences are committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction, which would be clergyable if committed by land, the constant course is to acquit and discharge the prisoner. Moor 756: Fost 288.

As there is no necessity that the Ordinary should demand the benefit of the clergy for a clerk; so neither is there there any that the prisoner himself should demand it, where it sufficiently appears to the court that he hath a right to it, in respect of his being in orders, &c. In which case, if the prisoner does not demand it, it is left to the discretion of the judge, either to allow, or not allow it him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 112.

Clergy may be demanded after judgment given against a person, whether of death, &c. and even under the gallows, if there be a proper judge there, who has power to allow it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 111.

To conclude this head of inquiry, it may be observed.—
1. That in all felonies, whether new created or by common law, clergy is now allowable, unless taken away by express words of an act of parliament. 2 Hal. P. C. 330.—
2. That where clergy is taken away from the principal, it is not of course taken away from the accessory; unless he be also particularly included in the words of the statute. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 26. And where clergy is taken away expressly by any statute, the offence must be laid in the indictment to be against that very statute, and the words of it, or the offender shall have his clergy. Kel. 104 H. P. C. 231.—
3. That when the benefit of clergy is taken away from the offence (as in case of murder, robbery, rape, &c.) a principal in the second degree, being present aiding and abetting the crime, is excluded from his clergy equally with him that is principal in the first degree: but.—
4. That where it is only taken away from the person committing the offence, (as in the case of stabbing, or larceny in a dwelling house, or privately stealing from the person,) his aiders and abettors are not excluded; as such statutes are to be taken literally. 1 Hal. P. C. 529: Foster 356, 7.

IV. The consequences are such as affect the present interest and future credit and capacity of the party, as having been once a felon, but now purged from that guilt by the privilege of clergy, which operates as a kind of statute pardon.

1. By this conviction, the offender forfeits all his goods to the king; which being once vested in the crown, shall not afterwards be restored to the offender. 2 Hal. P. C. 388.—
2. After conviction, and till he receives the judgment of the law by branding, or some of its substitutes, or else is pardoned by the king, he is to all intents and purposes a felon, and subject to all the disabilities and other incidents of a felon. 3 P. Wms. 487.—
3. After burning, or its substitute, or pardon, he is discharged for ever of that, and all other clergyable felonies before committed; but not of felonies, from which benefit of clergy is excluded; and this by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 4. and 18 Eliz. c. 7.—
4. By the burning, or its substitute, or the pardon of it, he is restored to all capacities and credits, and the possession of his lands, as if he had never been convicted. 2 Hal. P. C. 389: 5 Rep. 110.—
5. What is said with regard to the advantages of commoners and laymen, subsequent to the burning in the hand, is equally applicable to all peers and clergymen, although never branded at all, or subjected to other punishment in its stead. 2 Hal. P. C. 389, 390.

It is holden, that after a man is admitted to his clergy, he is actionable to call him felon; because his offence being pardoned by the statute, all the infamy and other consequences of it are discharged. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 132.

CLERK.

As to what felonies are within, and what without clergy. See title Felons, and more particularly the Index to 1 Hawk. P. C.

CLERICO ADMITTENDO, See Admittendo Clerico.

CLERICO INFRA SACROS ORDINES CONSTITUTO, NON ELIGENDO IN OFFICIUM, A writ directed to those who have thrust a bailiwick, or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him. Reg. Orig. 143.

CLERICO CAPTO PER STATUTUM MERCATORUM, &c. A writ for the delivery of a clerk out of prison, who is taken and imprisoned upon the breach of a statute merchant. Reg. Orig. 147. See ante title Clergy.

CLERICO CONVICTO COMMISSO GAOLA IN DEFECTU ORDINARIJ DELIBERANDO, An ancient writ that lay for the delivery of a clerk to his ordinary, that was formerly convicted of felony, by reason his ordinary did not challenge him according to the privileges of clerks. Reg. Orig. 69. See ante title Clergy.

CLERK, clericus.] The law term for a clergyman, and by which all of them who have not taken a degree are designated in deeds, &c. In the most general signification, is one that belongs to the holy ministry of the church; under which, where the Canon law hath full power, are not only comprehended sacerdotes and diaconi, but also subdiaconi, lectores, acolyti, exorciste and ostiani: but the word has been anciently used for a secular priest; in opposition to a religious or regular. Paroch. Antiq. 171. And is said to be properly a minister or priest, one who is more peculiarly called in forum Domini. Blount.

CLERK, In another sense denotes a person who practises his pen in any court, or otherwise; of which clerks there are various kinds, in several offices, &c.—The Clergy, in the early ages, as they engrossed almost every other branch of learning, so were they peculiarly remarkable for their proficiency in the study of the law. Nullus clericus nisi causidicus, is the character given of them soon after the Conquest by William of Malmshury. The judges therefore were usually created out of the sacred order; and all the inferior offices were supplied by the lower clergy, which has occasioned their successors to be denominated clerks to this day. 1 Comm. 17.

CLERK OF THE ACTS. An officer in the Navy Office, whose business it is to record all orders, contracts, bills, warrants, &c. transacted by the Lord High Admiral, or Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and Commissioners of the Navy. See Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11.

CLERK OF AFFIDAVITS, In the court of Chancery, is an officer that files all affidavits made use of in court.

CLERK OF THE ASSIZE, Is he that writes all things judicially done by the justices of assizes in their circuits. Crompt. Jurisd. 227. This officer is associated to the judge in commissions of assize, to take assizes, &c.—Clerk of the assize shall not be counsel with any person on the circuit. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. § 5.—To certify the names of felons convicted. See title Clergy, benefit of, II.—How punished for concealing, &c. any indictment, recognizance, fine or forfeiture. Stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 22. § 9. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 12.—See title Escheat, Sheriff—To take but 2 s. for drawing an indictment, and nothing if defective. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. §§ 7, 8.—Fineable for falsely recording appearances of persons returned on a jury. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 3. See title Jury.

CLERK—OF THE BAILS—HANAPER

CLERK OF THE BAILS, An officer belonging to the court of King's Bench. He files the bail pieces taken in that court, and attends for that purpose.

CLERK OF THE CHEQUE, An officer in the King's court, so called because he hath the check and controlment of the yeomen of the guard, and all other ordinary yeomen belonging either to the King, Queen or Prince; giving leave, or allowing their absence in attendance, or diminishing their wages for the same: he also by himself or deputy takes the view of those that are to watch in the court, and hath the setting of the watch. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. Also there is an officer of the same name in the King's dock yards at Plymouth, Deptford, Woolwich, Chatham, &c.

CLERK CONTROLLER OF THE KING'S HOUSE, Whereof there are two: An officer in the King's court, that hath authority to allow or disallow charges and demands of Pursuivants, Messengers of the Green Cloth, &c. He hath likewise the oversight of all defects and mis-carriages of any of the inferior officers: and hath a right to sit in the counting-house, with the superior officers, viz. the Lord Steward, Treasurer, Controller, and Cofferer of the Household, for correcting any disorders. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12.

CLERK OF THE CROWN, clericus coronæ] An officer in the King's Bench, whose function is to frame, read and record all indictments against offenders there arraigned or indicted of any public crime. And when divers persons are jointly indicted, the Clerk of the crown shall take but one fee, viz. 2 s. for them all Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 10. He is otherwise termed Clerk of the Crown office, and exhibits informations, by order of the court, for divers offences. See title Information.

CLERK OF THE CROWN IN CHANCERY, An officer in that court who continually attends the Lord Chancellor in person or by deputy: he writes and prepares for the Great Seal, special matters of State by commission, or the like, either immediately from his majesty's orders, or by order of his council, as well ordinary as extraordinary, viz. commissions of lieutenancy, of justices of assize, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, and of the peace, with their writs of association, &c. Also all general pardons, at the King's coronation; or in parliament, where he sits in the Lords' house in parliament time; and into his office the writs of parliament, with the names of knights and burgesses elected thereupon, are to be returned and filed. He hath likewise the making out of all special pardons: and writs of execution upon bonds of statute-staple forfeited; which was annexed to this office in the reign of Queen Mary, in consideration of his chargeable attendance.

CLERK OF THE DECLARATIONS, An officer of the court of King's Bench, that files all declarations in causes there depending, after they are ingrossed, &c.

CLERK OF THE DELIVERIES, An officer in the Tower of London, who exercises his office in taking of indentures for all stores, ammunition, &c. issued from thence.

CLERK OF THE ERRORS, clericus errorum.] In the court of Commons Pleas, transcribes and certifies into the King's Bench the tenor of the records of the cause or action upon which the writ of error, made by the cursitor, is brought there to be heard and determined. The Clerk of the Errors in the King's Bench, likewise transcribes and certifies the records of causes, in that court, into the Exchequer, if the cause of action were by bill: if by original, the Lord Chief Justice certifies the record into the House of Peers in Parliament, by taking the transcript from the Clerk of the Errors, and delivering it to the Lord Chancellor, there to be determined, according to the Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 8, and 31 Eliz. c. 1. The Clerk of the errors in the Exchequer also transcribes the records, certified thither out of the King's Bench, and prepares them for judgment in the court of Exchequer Chamber, to be given by the justices of C. B. and Barons there. Stats. 16 Car. 2 c. 2. 20 Car. 2. c. 4. See title Error.

CLERK OF THE ESSOINS, An officer belonging to the Court of Common Pleas, who keeps the essoin rolls; and the essoin roll is a record of that court: he has the providing of parchment, and cutting it out into rolls, marking the numbers thereon; and the delivery out of all the rolls to every officer of the court; the receiving of them again when they are written, and the binding and making up the whole bundles of every term: which he doth as servant of the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice of C. B. is at the charge of the parchment of all the rolls, for which he is allowed; as is also the Chief Justice of B. R. besides the penny for the seal of every writ of privilege and outlawry, the seventh penny taken for the seal of every writ in court under the green wax, or petit seal; the said Lord Chief Justices having annexed to their offices or places, the custody of the said seals belonging to each court.

CLERK OF THE ESTREATS, clericus extraforum.] A clerk or officer belonging to the Exchequer, who every Term receives the estreats out of the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer's Office, and writes them out to be levied for the King: and he makes schedules of such sums estreated as are to be discharged. See title Estreat.

CLERK OF THE HANAPER, or HAMPER, An officer in Chancery, whose office is to receive all the money due to the King, for the seals of charters, patents, commissions and writs; as also fees due to the officers for enrolling and examining the same. He is obliged to attendance on the Lord Chancellor daily in the term time, and at all times of sealing, having with him leather bags, wherein are put all charters, &c. After they are sealed, those bags, being sealed up with the Lord Chancellor's private seal, are delivered to the Controller of the Hanaper, who, upon receipt of them, enters the effect of them in a book, &c. This hanaper represents what the Romans termed fiscum, which contained the Emperor's treasure; and the Exchequer was anciently so called, because in eo reconderentur hanapi & scutæ cæteraque vasa quæ in censum & tributum persolvi solebant; or it may be for that the yearly tribute which princes received was in hampers or large vessels full of money. There being an arrear of 10,590 l. 12 s. 11 d. of several ancient fees and salaries, &c. payable out of this office; and there being a remainder of 13,698 l. 1 s. 11 d. of the six penny stamp duty on writs-granted for relief of the suitors of the court of Chancery; it was enacted by the Stat. 23 G. 2. c. 25, that thenceout the 10,590 l. 12 s. 11 d. should be paid to the creditors of this office. That the said duty should be made perpetual; and thereout 3000 l. per annum should be paid to the Clerk of the Hanaper, that the residue of the 13,698 l. 1 s. 11 d. should be laid out in government securities, and the interest paid to the Clerk of the Hanaper, who should pay 1,20*l.* to the Master of the Rolls. And that in case the revenue of this office be augmented, should be more than sufficient to pay all fees, salaries, &c. the clerk should account for the surplus.

CLERK OF THE INROLLMENTS. An officer of the Common Pleas, that inrolls and exemplifies all fines and recoveries, and returns writs of entry, summons and seisin, &c.

CLERK OF THE JURIES, clericus juratorum] An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who makes out the writs of habeas corpus and distringas, for the appearance of juries; either in that court, or at the assizes, after the jury or panel is returned upon the venire facias: he also enters into the rolls the awarding of these writs; and makes all the continuances, from the going out of the habeas corpus until the verdict is given.

CLERK OF THE MARKET, clericus mercati hospitii regis] Is an officer of the King's house, to whom it belongs to take charge of the King's measures, and keep the standards of them, which are examples of all measures throughout the land; as of ells, yards, quarts, gallons, &c. And of weights, bushels, &c. And to see that all weights and measures in every place be answerable to the said standard: as to which office see Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 8. 9, 10, &c. Touching this officer's duty, there are also divers statutes, as 13 R. 2. cap. 4; and 16 R. 2. c. 3; by which every clerk of the market is to have weights and measures with him when he makes assay of weights, &c. mark'd according to the standard; and to seal weights and measures, under penalties.

The Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 19, enacts, That clerks of the market of the King's or Prince's household, shall only execute their offices within the verge; and head officers are to act in corporations, &c. The clerks of markets have generally power to hold a court, to which end they may issue out process to sheriffs and bailiffs to bring a jury before them; and give a charge, take presentments of such as keep or use false weights and measures; and may set a fine upon the offenders, &c. 4 Inst. 274. But if they take any other fee or reward than what is allowed by statute, &c. or impose any fines without legal trial; or otherwise misdemean themselves, they shall forfeit 5*l.* for the first offence, 10*l.* for the second, and 20*l.* for the third offence, on conviction before a justice of peace, &c. The court of the Clerk of the market is incident to every fair and market in the kingdom, to punish misdemeanors therein; as a court of Ple percurie is to determine all disputes relating to private or civil property. It is the most inferior court of criminal jurisdiction in the kingdom. 4 Comm 275. See also Stat. 22 C. 2. c. 8: 23 C. 2. c. 12, and title Weights and Measures.

CLERK MARSHAL OF THE KING'S HOUSE, An officer that attends the Marshal in his court, and records all his proceedings.

CLERK OF THE NICHILS, OR NIBILS, clericus nihilorum.] An officer of the court of Exchequer, who makes a roll of all such sums as are nibiled by the sheriffs upon their estreats of green wax; and delivers the same into the Remembrancer's Office, to have execution done upon it for the king. See Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 13.—Nibils are issues by way of fine or amercement.

CLERK OF THE ORDINANCE, An officer in the Tower, who registers all orders touching the King's ordinance.

CLERK OF THE OUTLAWRIES, clericus utlagatiarum.] An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, being the servant or deputy to the King's Attorney General, for making out writs of capias utlagatum, after outlawry; the King's Attorney's name being to every one of those writs.

CLERK OF THE PAPER OFFICE, An officer in the court of King's Bench, that makes up the paper-books of special pleadings and demurrers in that court.

CLERK OF THE PAPERS, An officer in the Common Pleas; who hath the custody of the papers of the warden of the Fleet, enters commitments and discharges of prisoners, delivers out day-rules, &c.

CLERK OF A PARISH, See title Parish Clerk.

CLERK OF THE PARLIAMENT ROLLS, clericus rotulorum parliamenti.] An officer who records all things done in the high court of parliament, and ingrosseth them in parchment rolls, for their better preservation to posterity: of these officers there are two, one in the Lords' House, and another in the House of Commons.

CLERK OF THE PATENTS, Or of the letters patent under the Great Seal of England; an office erected 18 Jac. 1.

CLERK OF THE PEACE, Clericus pacis.] An officer belonging to the sessions of the peace: his duty is to read indictments, inrol the proceedings, and draw the process; he keeps the counter-part of the indenture of armour; records the proclamation of rates for servants wages; has the custody of the register-book of licences given to badgers of corn; of persons licensed to kill game, &c. And he registers the estates of papists and others not taking the oaths. Also he certifies into the King's Bench transcripts of indictments, outlawries, attainders and convictions, had before the justices of peace, within the time limited. See title Clergy, benefit of.—And as to his duty respecting Estreats, see title Estreats.

The Custos Rotulorum of the county hath the appointment of the clerk of the peace, who may execute his office by deputy, to be approved of by the Custos Rotulorum to hold the office during good behaviour, See Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 1: 1 W. & M. c. 21.

The following is the form of the oath prescribed by Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21, to be taken by the clerk of the peace in open sessions before he enters on his office.

I C.P. do swear, that I have not [paid] nor will pay any sum or sums of money, or other reward whatsoever, nor given any bond or other assurance to pay any money, fee or profit, directly or indirectly, to any person or persons whomsoever for [my] nomination and appointment.

So help me God.

He is also to take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy and abjuration, and perform such requisites as other persons who qualify for offices.

By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. § 14, No Clerk of the peace, or his deputy, shall act as solicitor, attorney or agent at the sessions where he acts as clerk or deputy, on penalty of 50*l.* with treble costs.

Burn in his Justice, title Clerk of the Peace, hints how necessary it is that all his fees should be regulated.

CLERK—OF PEACE—OF WAR

If a Clerk-of-the-peace misdemean himself, the justices of peace in quarter sessions have power to discharge him; and the Custos Rotularum is to chuse another, resident in the county, or on his default the sessions may appoint one: the place is not to be sold, on pain of forfeiting double the value of the sum given by each party, and disability to enjoy their respective offices, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 21.

CLERK OF THE PELL, clericus pellis] A clerk belonging to the Exchequer, whose office is to enter every teller's bill into a parchment roll or skin, called pellis receptorum, and also to make another roll of payments, which is termed pellis exituum; wherein he sets down by what warrant the money was paid; mentioned in the Stat. 22 & 33 Car. 2 c. 22.

CLERK OF THE PETTY BAG, clericus parva bagæ.] An officer of the court of Chancery. There are three of these officers, of whom the Master of the Rolls is the chief. Their office is to record the return of all inquisitions out of every shire; to make out patents of customers, gaugers, controllers, &c. all congéd d'elres for bishops, the summons of the nobility, and burgessees to parliament; commissions directed to knights and others of every shire, for assising subsidies and taxes: all offices found post mortem are brought to the clerks of the petty bag to be filed; and by them are entered all pleadings of the Chancery concerning the validity of patents or other things which pass the Great Seal, they also make forth liberates upon extents of statutes-staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, and all elegits upon them; and all suits for or against any privileged person are prosecuted in their office, &c.

CLERK OF THE PIPE, clericus pipæ.] An officer in the Exchequer who having the accounts of debts due to the King, delivered and drawn out of the Remembrancer's Offices, charges them down in the great roll, and is called Clerk of the pipe from the shape of that roll, which is put together like a pipe he also writes out warrants to the sheriff to levy the said debts upon the goods and chattels of the debtors; and if they have no goods, then he draws them down to the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, to write estreats against their lands. The ancient revenue of the crown stands in charge to him, and he sees the same answered by the farmers and sheriffs: he makes a charge to all sheriffs of their summons of the pipe, and green wax, and takes care it be answered on their accounts. And he hath the drawing and ingrossing of all leases of the king's lands; having a secondary and several clerks under him. In the reign of King Hen. VI. this officer was called Ingrossator magni rotuli. See Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE PLEAS, clericus placitorum] An officer in the court of Exchequer, in whose office all the officers of the court, upon special privilege belonging unto them, ought to sue or be sued in any action, &c. The clerk of the pleas has under him a great many clerks, who are attorneys in all suits commenced or depending in the Court of Exchequer.

CLERKS OF THE PRIVY SEAL, clericus privati sigilli.] These are four of the officers which attend the Lord Privy Seal: or if there be no Lord Privy Seal, the Principal Secretary of State; writing and making out all things that are sent by warrant from the Signet to the Privy Seal, and which are to be passed to the Great Seal: also they make out privy seals, upon a special occasion of his Majesty's affairs, for loan of money, and the like. He that is now called Lord Privy Seal, seems to have been in ancient times called Clerk of the privy seal; but notwithstanding to have been reckoned in the number of the great officers of the realm. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 11: 27 H. 8. c. 11.

CLERK OF THE REMEMBRANCE. An officer in the Exchequer, who is to sit against the Clerk of the pipe, to see the discharges made in the pipe, &c. Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 4. The Clerk of the pipe and Remembrancer, shall be sworn to make a schedule of persons discharged in their offices. Stat. 5 Ric. 2. §. 1. c. 15.

CLERK OF THE ROLLS, An officer of the Chancery, that makes search for, and copies deeds, offices, &c.

CLERK OF THE RULES, In the court of King's Bench, is he who draws up and enters all the rules and orders made in court: and gives rules of course on divers writs: this officer is mentioned in Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE SEWERS, An officer belonging to the commissioners of sewers, who writes and records their proceedings, which they transact by virtue of their commissions, and the authority given them by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 9. See title Sewers.

CLERK OF THE SIGNET, clericus signeti.] An officer continually attendant on his Majesty's Principal Secretary, who hath the custody of the privy signet, as well for sealing his Majesty's private letters, as such grants as pass the King's hand by bill signed: and of these clerks or officers there are four that attend in their course, and have their diet at the Secretary's table. The fees of the clerk of the signet, and privy seal, are limited particularly by statute, with a penalty annexed for taking any thing more. See 27 H. 8. c. 11.

CLERK OF THE KING'S SILVER, clericus argenti regis.] An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, to whom every fine is brought after it hath passed the office of the custos breviarum, and by whom the effect of the writ of covenant is entered into a paper-book; according to which all the fines of that term are recorded in the rolls of the court. After the King's silver is entered, it is accounted a fine in law, and not before. See title Fine.

CLERK OF THE SUPERSEDEASES, An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who makes out writs of superseadeas, upon a defendant's appearing to the exigent on an outlawry, whereby the sheriff is forbidden to return the exigent. See title Outlawry.

CLERK OF THE TREASURY, clericus thesaurarii.] An officer of the Common Pleas, who hath the charge of keeping the records of the court, and makes out all the records of Nisi prius; also he makes all exemplifications of records being in the Treasury; and he hath the fees due for all searches. He is the servant of the Chief Justice, and removeable at pleasure; whereas all other officers of the court are for life: there is a Secondary, or Under clerk of the Treasury, for assistance, who hath some fees and allowances: and likewise an under-keeper, that always keeps one key of the Treasury door, and the chief clerk of the secondary, another; so that the one cannot come in without the other.

CLERK OF THE KING'S GREAT WARDROBE, An officer of the King's household, that keeps an account or inventory of all things belonging to the royal wardrobe. Stat. 1 E. 4. c. 1.

CLERK OF THE WARRANTS, clericus warrantorum.] An officer belonging to the Common Pleas Court, who enters

CLOCKS AND WATCHES Dial-plates and cases not to be exported without the movement. St. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 28. sect. 2.—Makers shall engrave their names on clocks and watches. St. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 28. sect. 2.—Penalties on workmen, &c. imbezilling materials of clocks and watches, St. 27 Geo. 2. c. 7. See title Manufacturers.

CLOERE, A prison or dungeon; it is conjectured to be of British original: the dungeon or inner prison of Wallingford castle, temp. H. 2. was called cloere brien, i. e. carcer brieni, &c. Hence seems to come the Lat. cloaca, which was anciently the closest ward or nastiest part of the prison: the old cloacerius is interpreted carceris custos: and the present cloacerius, or keeper of a sakes, is an office in some religious houses abroad, imposed on an offending brother, or by him chosen as an exercise of humility and mortification. Coael.

CLOSE ROLLS AND CLOSE WRITS, Grants of lands, &c. from the Crown, are contained in charters or letters patent, that is open letters, litteras patentis, so called because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the Great Seal pendant at the bottom, and are usually addressed by the King to all his subjects at large. And therein they differ from other letters of the King, sealed also with his Great Seal, but directed to particular persons, and for particular purposes, which therefore, not being fit for public inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, litteræ clausæ; and are recorded in the close-rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent-rolls. 2 Comm. 346.

CLOSH, Was an unlawful game forbidden by Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 3, and 33 H. 8. c. 9. It is said to have been the same with our nine-pins; and is called clash-ayles by St. 33 H. 8. c. 9. At this time it is allowed, and called bawles, or kittles. See title Gaming.

COACH, curius.] A convenience well known. For the regulating of hackney coaches and chairs in London, there are several statutes, viz. 9 An. c. 23, made perpetual by 3 Geo. 1. c. 7, and enlarged as to the number of coaches, by 11 Geo. 3. c. 24; so as to make the whole number, to be licensed, 1000, and enlarged also as to chairs, by 10 An. c. 19, and 12 Geo. 1. c. 12, making the whole number of those 400.

The other statutes now in force are, 12 An. st. 1. c. 14: 1 Geo. 1. c. 57: 30 Geo. 2. c. 22: (See Caris) 4 Geo. 3. c. 36:

c. 36: 7 Geo. 3. c. 44: 10 Geo. 3. c. 44: 21 Geo. 3. c. 24 and 28: 12 Geo. 3. c. 49: 24 Geo. 3. ft. 2. c. 27: 26 Geo. 3. c. 72: 32 Geo. 3. c. 47.

The following is a general abstract of the united effect of these several acts.

Five Commissioners are appointed to license and regulate them. And the proprietor of each coach pays 10s. per week every month. Each coach is to be numbered on both sides, not to be altered, on penalty of 5*l*. A like penalty on driving or letting to hire a coach without licence.—Mourning coaches and hearses are within the act.—The horses must be 14 hands high.—Coachmen compellable to go in the day ten miles, but after dark two miles and a half on turnpike roads.—To have check strings, on penalty of 5*s*.—The rates are as follows, (December 1793.)

By way { For one mile and quarter, or less 1*s*. 0*d*.
From that to two miles - 1 6

And then 6*d*. for each additional half-mile entered upon.
By time { Three quarters of an hour, or less 1*s*. 0*d*.
Between that and an hour - 1 6
One hour and twenty minutes 2 0

And then 6*d*. for each additional twenty minutes entered upon.

For a day of twelve hours 14*s*. 6*d*. and 6*d*. for each twenty minutes over.

A coachman refusing to go, or exacting more than his fare, to forfeit from 10*s*. to 3*l*; and by misbehaviour or impudence, incurs the same penalty, and his licence may be revoked, or he committed to the house of correction. Persons refusing to pay the fare, or defacing the coach, may be compelled by a justice to make satisfaction. There are several usual stands, but a coach may stand in any street thirty feet wide, at the road, (except St. James's Street and Pall mall).—The penalties are recoverable before the aldermen of the city, and justices of peace, as well as before the Commissioners.

STAGE COACHES, By Stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 57, and 30 Geo. 3. c. 36, Drivers of stage coaches are not to admit more than one outside passenger on the box, and four on the roof of the coach, on penalty of 5*s*. for each passenger, at every turnpike gate.—Some other wholesome regulations are also made by these acts, but which like other good laws are seldom enforced.

As to the liability of masters, &c. of coaches as common carriers. See title Carrier.

DUTIES. By Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 47, there shall be paid for every four wheeled coach, landau, &c. kept for private use, or to let to hire, (except hackney coaches) a tax of 7*l*. per an. (and by 29 Geo. 3. c. 49, 20*s*. more,) in the whole 8*l*. for the first carriage.—9*l*. for the second, by 29 Geo. 3. c. 43.—And where three or more are kept, 8*l*. for the first, and 10*l*. for all others. And by said Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 47, for every two or three-wheeled carriage 3*l*. 10*s*. per annum.

COACH MAKERS, The wares of coachmakers shall be searched, by persons appointed by the saddlers' company. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22.—By Stats. 25 Geo. 3. c. 49: 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, Every maker of coaches, chariots, chaises, &c. must take out annual licences from the Excise office, and to pay a duty of 20*s*. for every four-wheeled carriage, and 10*s*. for every two-wheeled carriage, built by them for sale.

COALS.

COADJUTOR, Lat.] A fellow-helper or assistant, particularly applied to one appointed to assist a Bishop, being grown old and infirm, so as not to be able to perform his duty.

COAL-MINES, Maliciously setting fire to coal-mines, or to any delph of coal, is felony, 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. sec. 6. See title Black-Act, Felony.

COALS. By Stats. 7 E. 6. c. 7: 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 2; [made perpetual by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 36. § 2.] and 17 Geo. 2. c. 35, The sack of coals is to contain four bushels of clean coals: and sea coals brought into the river Thames, and sold, shall be after the rate of thirty-six bushels to the chaldron: and one hundred and twelve punds the hundred, &c. The Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen in London, and justices of the peace of the several counties, or three of them, are empowered to set the price of all coals to be sold by retail; and if any person shall refuse to sell for such prices, they may appoint officers to enter any wharfs or places where coals are kept, and cause the coals to be sold at the prices appointed. The Stat. 12 An. ft. 2. c. 17, regulates the contents of the coal bushel, which is to hold one Winchester bushel, and one quart of water. By Stats. 9 H. 5. ft. 1. c. 10: 30 Car. 2. c. 8: 6 & 7 Will. 3. c. 10: 11 Geo. 2. c. 15: 15 Geo. 3. c. 27: and 31 Geo. 3. c. 36, Commissioners are ordained for the measuring and marking of keels, and boats, &c. for carrying coals; and vessels carrying coals before measured and marked, shall be forfeited, &c. For the duties and draw-backs on coals and culm, see Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13: 9 An. cc. 6, 22, 28: 8 Geo. 1. c. 14: 14 Geo. 2. c. 41: 22 Geo. 2. c. 37: 31 Geo. 2. c. 15: 33 Geo. 2. c. 15: and 27 Geo. 3. c. 32.

For the duty on coals in London, See Stats. 9 An. c. 28: and 5 Geo. 1. c. 9; the duties payable under which, of 3*s* per chaldron, are made perpetual by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 4. and 1 Geo. 2. ft. 2. c. 8.—See also Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, as to the 1*s*. duty under Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 3. § 36.

By Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 18, one mariner is allowed to each 50 ton of shipping employed in the coal trade in time of war, protected from being impressed.

By Stat. 9 An. c. 28, Contracts between coal-owners and masters of ships, &c. for restraining the buying of coals are void; and the parties to forfeit 100*l*. And selling coals for other sorts than they are, shall forfeit 50*l*. Not above fifty laden colliers are to continue in the port of Newcastle, &c. And work-people in the mines there shall not be employed who are hired by others, under the penalty of 5*l*.

By Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 26, containing several regulations as to lightermen and coal buyers, and explained by ft. 11 Geo. 2. c. 15, Coal-sacks shall be sealed and marked at Guildhall, &c. on pain of 20*s*. Also sellers of coals are to keep a lawful bushel, and put three bushels to each sack, which bushel and other measures shall be edged with iron, and sealed; and using others, or altering them, incurs a forfeiture of 50*l*. &c. The penalties above 5*l*. recoverable by action of debt, &c. and under that sum before justices of peace.

By Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 30, Owners or masters of ships shall not enhance the price of coals in the river of Thames, by keeping of turn in delivering of coals there, under the penalty of 100*l*. &c.

Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 21, Inflicts penalty of treble damages on persons damaging or destroying coal-works.

See

COALS.

See the Stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 22, now in force, as to the loading coal ships, at Newcastle and Sunderland in turn, according to lists to be made there.

By the Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 23, (in force by 17 Geo. 3. c. 13, till the 1st of June, 1798,) The Land Coal Meter's Office for London, and between the Tower and Lincolns-Inn, is established and regulated. And the duty of that officer, and the labouring coal-meters in measuring coals is ascertained. And by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 83, further regulations are made as to the Coal meters sacks, which when sealed are to be four feet four inches long, and twenty-six inches broad. Penalties are imposed on the labouring meters and drivers for misbehaviour, and the mode of re-measurement settled, if required by the consumer.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 14, A Land Coal Meter's Office is appointed for the parishes of Putney, Wandsworth, Battersea, Lambeth, Rotherhithe, and several parishes in Southwark, to continue for twenty-one years. And by c. 108, of the said session, a like office is appointed for the city and liberty of Westminster, till June 1795. The regulations of former acts are adopted and modified by these latter, according to their several districts.

Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 53, was passed to indemnify the London coal buyers against certain penalties, which they had literally incurred under Stats. 9 An. c. 28, and 3 Geo. 2. c. 26, and also for the purpose of putting an end to the Society at the Coal Exchange, formed to regulate (i. e. to monopolize) the trade; subjecting all persons, above five, in number entering into covenant or partnerships, to punishment by indictment or information in B. R.

COAT-ARMOUR, Coats of arms were not introduced into seals, nor indeed into any other use, till about the reign of Richard the First, who brought them from the Crossade in the Holy Land; where they were first invented and painted on the shields of the knights, to distinguish the variety of persons of every Christian nation who resorted thither, and who could not, when clad in complete steel, be otherwise known or ascertained. 2 Comm. 306.

It is the business of the Court military, or the Court of Chivalry, according to Sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial ensigns, bearings, crests, supporters, pennons, &c. and also rights of place or precedence, where the king's patent or act of parliament, (which cannot be over-ruled by this court,) have not already determined it. 3 Comm. 105.

COCHERINGS, An exaction or tribute in Ireland, now reduced to chief rents. See Bonaght.

COCHINEAL, The importation of cochineal from ports in Spain declared lawful. Stat. 6 An. c. 33. Any persons may import cochineal into this kingdom, in ships belonging to Great Britain, or other country in amity, from any place whatsoever, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 18. See title Navigation Acts.

COCKET, cockettum.] A seal belonging to the king's custom house: or rather a scroll of parchment sealed, and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandises are customed; which parchment is otherwise called litteræ de cocketto, or litteræ testamentales de cocketto. Stat. 1 Hen. 6. c. 15; Reg. Orig. 179, 192.—See also Mad. Exc. vol. 1. c. 18. The word cockettum or cocker, is also taken for the custom-house or office where goods to be transported were first entered, and paid their custom, and had a cocker or certificate of discharge: and cocketta lana is wool duly entered and cocketted, or authorized to be transported. Mem. in Scac. 23 Ed. 1.

Cocket is likewise used for a sort of measure, Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 9. Panis vero integer quadrantalibus frumenti ponderabit unum cocket & dimidium: and it is made use of for a distinction of bread, in the statute of bread and ale, 51 H. 3. stat. 1. ord. pro pistor: where mention is made of wastel bread, cocket bread, bread of trect, and bread of common wheat; the wastel bread being what we now call the finest bread, or French bread; the cocket bread the second sort of white bread; bread of trect, and of common wheat, brown, or boufchoid bread, &c. See Bread.

COCKSETUS, A boatman, cockswain or coxon. Corvel.
COCULA, A cogue, or little drinking cup, in form of a small boat, used especially at sea, and still retained in a cogue [cag or kegue] of brandy. These drinking cups are also used in taverns to drink new sherry, and other white wines which look foul in a glass.

CODICIL, codicillus, from codex, a book, a writing.] A schedule or supplement to a will, where any thing is omitted which the testator would add, or where he would explain, alter or retract what he hath done. See titles Will, De. iſe.

COFFEE, TEA, CHOCOLATE, and COCOA NUTS.

The duties on these articles form a branch of the public revenue, under the head of Customs and Excise; and like all other subjects of those jurisdictions, are liable to a variety of penal regulations by acts of parliament, necessary to prevent the numerous frauds and evasions daily endeavoured to be practised, to the impoverishment of Government, and the injury of the fair trader. See titles Excise, Customs, and also title Navigation Acts.—The following general features are all which the compass of this Dictionary allows to be noticed.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, all former custom and excise duties are repealed; and new duties, (less than the former ones) imposed.—The sales of tea at the East-India house are regulated by Stats. 18 Geo. 2. c. 26; 13 Geo. 3. c. 44; by the latter of which re-exportation by the Company to America is allowed.—By Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10, chocolate and cocoa paste are prohibited to be imported.—And cocoa nut shells without the nuts, by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 12.—The importation of coffee must be in bags, &c. containing 1 cwt. each at least.—The entry and warehousing, removing, and re-exportation of tea, coffee and cocoa nuts, is regulated by Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10; 11 Geo. 1. c. 30; 5 Geo. 3. c. 43; 21 Geo. 3. c. 55; 22 Geo. 3. c. 68; 23 Geo. 3. c. 70; 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.—By Stats. 15 Geo. 2. c. 11; 20 Geo. 3. c. 35, retail dealers must take out an annual licence.—And all houses for manufacturing and sale, must be entered at the Excise Office; See Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10; 18 Geo. 2. c. 26; 12 Geo. 3. c. 46.—And the houses of all dealers to be marked, “Dealer in Coffee, Tea, &c.” Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 69.—Under the said Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10; and Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30, officers may enter houses to search if goods are concealed; but in this case, if an officer by a false or mistaken suggestion obtains a search-warrant (as it is called) from the Commissioners, he is personally answerable in an action of trespass, if no goods are found. Boscock v. Saunders, Bl. Rep. 912.

To prevent frauds in manufacturing these articles, the Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10; 11 Geo. 1. c. 30, make divers provisions as to coffee.—Stats. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30:

4 Geo. 2. c. 14; 17 Geo. 3. c. 29, as to tenants. Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10; 32 Geo. 2. c. 10. 11 Geo. 1. c. 10, as to tenants; the making of which latter for private families, is also regulated by Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10 § 23, 24, 25.

The Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35 § 20, prohibits the retailing tea without a permit; or by pedlars even with one. And by Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28, dealers in cocoa nuts, must not sell less than 28 lb at a time.

COFFRA, A coffer, chest, or trunk. Munimenta Hospitalis SS. Trinit. de Pontefracti, MS. fol. 40.

COFFERER OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, Is a principal officer of the King's house, next under the Controller, who, in the counting house, and elsewhere, hath a special charge and oversight of other officers of the household, to all which he pays their wages: this officer passes his accounts in the Exchequer. See Stat. 39 Edw. 1. c. 7.

COGGLE, A small fishing boat, upon the coasts of Yorkshire: and cogs, (cogones) are a kind of little ships, or vessels, used in the rivers Ouse and Humber. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 18.—See Mat. Paris, anno 1066. And hence the cogmen, boatmen or seamen, who after shipwreck or losses by sea, travelled and wandered about to defraud the people by begging and stealing, till they were restrained by divers good laws. Du Fresne.

COGNATI, Relations by the mother, as the agnati are relations by the father.

COGNATIONE, A writ of Cousenage. See Cousenage.

COGNISANCE, or cognizance, Fr. connaissance, Lat. cognitio.] Is used diversely in our law: sometimes for an acknowledgment of a fine. See title Fine. In replevin, connaissance, or conscience, is the answer given by a defendant, who hath acted as bailliff, &c. to another, in making a distress. See titles Distress, Replevin.

The most usual sense in which this term is now used, is relative to the claim of Cognizance of Pleas. This is a privilege granted by the King to a city or town, to hold plea of all contracts, &c. within the liberty of the franchise; and when any man is impleaded for such matters in the courts of Westminster, the mayor, &c. of such franchise may ask cognizance of the plea, and demand that it shall be determined before them: but if the courts at Westminster are possessed of the plea before cognizance be demanded, it is then too late. Terms de Ley. See Stat. 9 H. 4. c. 5: 8 H. 6. c. 26: 3 Comm. 298: 4 Comm. 277.

Cognizance of Pleas extends not to assises; and when granted, the original shall not be removed: it lies not in quare impedit, for they cannot write to the bishop, nor of a plea out of the county court, which cannot award a return, &c. Jenk. Cent. 31, 34. This cognizance shall be demanded the first day: and if the defendant in a plea of land counterpleads the franchise, and the tenant joins with the claim of the franchise, and it is found against the franchise, the demandant shall recover the land; but if it be found against the demandant, the writ shall abate. Ibid. 18.

There are three sorts of inferior jurisdictions, one whereof is tenere placita, and this is the lowest sort; for it is only a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may sue there, or in the King's courts, if he will. The second is conscience of pleas, and by this a right is vested in the lord of the franchise to hold the plea, and he is the only person who can take advantage of it. The third sort is an exempt jurisdiction, as where the king grants to a great city, that the inhabitants thereof shall be sued within their city, and not elsewhere; this grant may be pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court of K. B. if there be a court within that city which can hold plea of the cause, and no body can take advantage of this privilege but a defendant; for if he will bring replevin, that will remove the cause, but he may waive it if he will, so that the privilege is only for his benefit. 3 Salk. 79, 80. pl. 4: Hill. 1 An. B. R. Crooke v. Smith.

King Hen. VIII. by letters patent of the 14th of his reign, and confirmed by parliament, granted to the University of Oxford conscience of pleas, in which a scholar or servant of a college should be party, ita quod iudicium de utroque banco se non intromittant. An attorney of C. B. sued a scholar, in C. B. for battery. By the court, this general grant does not extend to take away the special privilege of any court without special words. Lit. Rep. 304. Mich. 5 C. B. Oxford (University's) case.

If a scholar of Oxford or Cambridge be sued in Chancery for a special performance of a contract to lease lands in Middlesex, the University shall not have conscience, because they cannot sequester the lands. Gibb. Hist. of C. P. 194. cites 2 Vent. 363.

Conscience must be demanded before an imparlance, and the same term the writ is returnable, after the defendant appears; because, till he appears there is no cause in court, otherwise there would be a delay of justice; for if after imparlance, when the defendant has a day already allowed him, he would have two days, since when the conscience is allowed, the franchise prefixes a day to both parties to appear before them: and it is the lord's laches if he does not come soon enough not to delay the parties. Gibb. Hist. of C. P. 196.

Conscience was granted to the University of Oxford, (no cause being shewn to the contrary), in Easter Term, 9 Geo. 2. in the case of Woodcocke and Brooke. Hardw. 241.—See further under title Comits of the University.

Cognizance also signifies the badge of a waterman or servant, which is usually the giver's crest, whereby he is known to belong to this or that nobleman or gentleman. Dist.

COGNISOR AND COGNISEE. Cognisor, is he that passeth or acknowledgeth a fine of land, or tenements to another; and cognisee is he to whom the fine of the said lands, &c. is acknowledged. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 5.

COGNITIONES, Ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms. Mat. Paris 1250.

COGNITIONIBUS MITTENDIS, A writ to one of the King's justices of the Common Pleas, or other that hath power to take a fine, who having taken the fine defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it Regi Orig. 68.

COGNOVIT ACTIONEM, Is where a defendant acknowledges or confesses the plaintiff's cause against him to be just and true; and, before or after issue, suffers judgment to be entered against him without trial. And here the confession generally extends no further than to what is contained in the declaration; but if the defendant will confess more, he may. 1 Rel. 929: Hob. 178.

COGWARE, Is said to be a sort of coarse clothes, made in divers parts of England, of which mention is made in the Stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 10.

COHUAGIUM, A tribute paid by those who met promiscuously in the market or fair; cobua signifying a promiscuous multitude of men in a fair or market.—Quieti ab omni thelonia passagio, pontagio, cohuagio, pallagio, &c. Du Cange.

COIF, coifa.] A title given to Serjeants at law; who are called Serjeants of the coif, from the lawn coif they wear on their heads under their caps, when they are created. The use of it was anciently to cover tonsuram clericalem, otherwise called corona clericalis; because the crown of the head was close shaved, and a border of hair left round the lower part, which made it look like a crown. Blount. See title Clerk.

COIN, cuna pecunia.] Seems to come from the Fr. coin, i. e. angulus, a corner, whence it has been held, that the ancientest sort of coin was square with corners, and not round as it now is; it is any sort of money coined. Crompt. Jurisd. 220. Coin is a word collective, which contains in it all manner of the several stamps and species of money in any kingdom: and this is one of the royal prerogatives belonging to every sovereign prince, that he alone in his own dominions may order and dispose the quantity, value, and fashion of his coin. But the coin of one king is not current in the kingdom of another, unless it be at great loss; though our king by his prerogative may make any foreign coin lawful money of England at his pleasure, by proclamation. Terms de Ley. If a man binds himself by bond to pay one hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, and the person bound, the obligor, pays the obligee the money in French, Spanish, or other coin, made current either by act of parliament, or the king's proclamation, the obligation will be well performed. Co. Lit. 207. But it is said a payment in farthings, is not a good payment. 2 Inst. 517. See post.

When a person has accepted of money in payment from another, and put the same into his purse, it is at his peril after his allowance; and he shall not then take exception to it as bad, notwithstanding he presently reviews it. Terms de Ley.

Of Offences relating to the Coin.

Two offences respecting the coin, are made treason by the statute 25 E. III. c. 2: These are the actual counterfeiting the gold and silver coin of this Kingdom; or the importing such counterfeit money with an intent to utter it, knowing it to be false. But these not being found sufficient to restrain the evil practices of coiners and false moneyers, other statutes have been since made for that purpose.

By Stat. 1 Mar. 2. c. 6, if any person shall falsely forge or counterfeit any such kind of coin of gold or silver, as is not the proper coin of this realm, but shall be current within this realm by consent of the Crown; such offence shall be deemed high-treason. And by Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 11, if any person do bring into this realm such false or counterfeit foreign money, being current here, knowing the same to be false, with intent to utter the same in payment, they shall be deemed offenders in high treason. The money, referred to in these statutes, must be such as is absolutely current here, in all payments, by the King's proclamation; of which there is none at present, Portugal money being only taken by consent, as approaching the nearest to our standard, and falling in well enough with our devisions of money into pounds and shillings: therefore to counterfeit that is not high treason, but another inferior offence.

Clipping or defacing the genuine coin was not hitherto included in these statutes; but by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 11, clipping, washing, rounding, or filing for wicked gains' sake, any of the money of this realm, or other money suffered to be current here, shall be adjudged high treason; and by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 1, the same species of offence is described in other more general words; viz. impairing, diminishing, falsifying, scaling, and lightening, are made liable to the same penalties.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26, (made perpetual by 7 Ann. c. 25,) whoever, without proper authority, shall knowingly, make or mend, or assist in so doing, or shall buy, sell, conceal, hide, or knowingly have in his possession any implements of coinage specified in the act, or other tools or instruments proper only for the coinage of money; or shall convey the same out of the King's mint; he, together with his counsellors, procurers, aiders, and abettors, shall be guilty of high treason; which is much the severest branch of the coinage law. The statute farther enacts, that to mark any coin on the edges with letters, or otherwise, in imitation of those used in the mint: or to colour, gild, or case over any coin resembling the current coin, or even round blanks of base metal; shall be construed high treason. But all prosecutions on this act are to be commenced within three months after the commission of the offence: except those for making or mending any coining tool or instrument, or for the making letters on money round the edges; which are directed to be commenced within six months after the offence committed. See Stat. 7 Ann. c. 25.

And, lastly, by Stat. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28, if any person colours or alters any shilling or six-pence, either lawful or counterfeit, to make them respectively resemble a guinea or half guinea: or any half-penny or farthing to make them respectively resemble a shilling or six-pence; this is also high treason; but the offender shall be pardoned, in case (being out of prison) he discovers and convicts two other offenders of the same kind.

Offences relating to the coin, not amounting to treason, and under which may be ranked some inferior misdemeanors not amounting to felony, are thus declared by a series of statutes, here recited in the order of time.—By Stat. 27 E. 1. c. 3, none shall bring pollards, and crockards (which were foreign coins of base metal) into the realm, on pain of forfeiture of life and goods.—By Stat. 9 E. 3. 2, no sterling money shall be melted down, upon pain of forfeiture thereof.—By Stat. 17 E. 3, none shall be so hardy to bring false and ill money into the realm, on pain of forfeiture of life and members of the persons importing, and the searchers permitting such importation.—By Stat. 3 H. 5. 1, to make, coin, buy, or bring into the realm any gally-halfpence, suskins, or dotkins, in order to utter them, is felony: and knowingly to receive or pay them or blanks (Stat. 2 Hen. 6. c. 9.) incurs a forfeiture of an hundred shillings.—By Stat. 14 Eliz. c. 3, such as forge any foreign coin, although it be not made current here by proclamation, shall (with their aiders and abettors) be guilty of misprision of treason.—By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 31, the offence of melting down any current silver money, shall be punished with forfeiture of

of the same, and affix the double value; and the offender if a freeman, or any town, shall be disfranchised; if not, shall suffer six months' imprisonment.—By Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17, if any person buys or sells, or knowingly has in his custody, any clippings or shavings of the coin, he shall forfeit the same and £50; one moiety to the king, and the other to the informer; and he is branded in the cheek with the letter B. [But see note on Clergy.]—By Stat. 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 26, no person shall blanch, or whiten, copper for sale (which makes it resemble silver), nor buy or sell or offer for sale any malleable composition, which shall be heavier than silver, and look, touch, and wear like gold, but beneath the standard; nor shall any person receive or pay at a less rate than it imports to be of (which demonstrates a consciousness of its baseness, and a fraudulent design) any counterfeit or diminished milled money of this kingdom, not being cut in pieces; an operation which is expressly directed to be performed when any such money shall be produced in evidence, and which any person, to whom any gold or silver money is tendered, is empowered (by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 21; 13 Geo. 3. c. 71; and 14 Geo. 3. c. 70.) to perform at his own hazard; and all such persons so blanching, selling, &c. shall be guilty of felony, and may be prosecuted for the same at any time within three months after the offence committed.

But these precautions not being found sufficient to prevent the uttering of false or diminished money, which was only a misdemeanor at common law, it is enacted by Stat. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28, that if any person shall utter or tender in payment any counterfeit coin, knowing it to be so, he shall for the first offence be imprisoned six months, and find sureties for his good behaviour for six months more: for the second offence shall be imprisoned two years, and find sureties for two years longer; and, for the third offence, shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. Also if a person knowingly tenders in payment any counterfeit money, and at the same time has more in his custody; or shall, within ten days after, knowingly tender other false money; he shall be deemed a common utterer of counterfeit money; and shall for the first offence be imprisoned one year, and find sureties for his good behaviour two years longer; and for the second be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. By the same statute it is also enacted that if any person counterfeits the copper coin, he shall suffer two years' imprisonment, and find sureties for two years more. By Stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 40, persons counterfeiting copper halfpence or farthings, with their abettors; or buying, selling, receiving or putting off any counterfeit copper money (not being cut in pieces or melted down) at a less value than it imports to be of; shall be guilty of single felony. And by a temporary Stat. (14 Geo. III. c. 42), if any quantity of money exceeding the sum of five pounds, being or purporting to be the silver coin of this realm, but below the standard of the mint in weight or fineness, shall be imported into Great Britain or Ireland, the same shall be forfeited, in equal moieties, to the crown and prosecutor.

The Coining of money is in all States the act of the Sovereign Power: that its value may be known on inspection. And with regard to coinage in general, there are three things to be considered therein; the materials, the impression, and the denomination. With regard to the materials, Sir Matthew Hale lays it down (1 Hal. P. C. 577) that the money of England must either be of gold or silver; and none other was ever issued by the royal authority till 1672, when copper farthings and halfpence were coined by Charles II: and ordered by proclamation to be current in all payments, under the value of six pence, and no otherwise. But this copper coin is not upon the same footing with the other in many respects, particularly with regard to the offence of counterfeiting it, as has been already noticed. And as to the silver coin, it was enacted by Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 42, that no tender of payment in silver money, exceeding twenty-five pounds at one time, shall be a sufficient tender in law for more than its value by weight, at the rate of 5 s. 2 d. an ounce. This was a clause in a temporary act, which was continued till 1783, since which time it does not appear to have been revived.

As to the Impression, the stamping thereof is the unquestionable prerogative of the Crown: for, though divers bishops and monasteries had formerly the privilege of coining money, yet, as Sir Matthew Hale observes (1 Hal. P. C. 191), this was usually done by special grant from the king, or by prescription which supposes one; and therefore was derived from, and not in derogation of, the royal prerogative. Besides that they had only the profit of the coinage, and not the power of instituting either the impression or denomination; but had usually the stamp sent them from the Exchequer.

The Denomination, or the value for which the coin is to pass current, is likewise in the breast of the king; and, if any unusual pieces are coined, that value must be ascertained by proclamation. In order to fix the value, the weight and the fineness of the metal are to be taken into consideration together. When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true standard and called sterling or sterling metal; a name for which there are various reasons given, but none of them entirely satisfactory. See Spelm. Gloss. 203. Dugdale 3, 165. The most plausible opinion seems to be that adopted by those two etymologists, that the name was derived from the Esterlings or Kasterlings, as those Saxons were anciently called, who inhabited that district of Germany, now occupied by the Hans towns and their appendages; the earliest traders in modern Europe. Of this sterling or sterling metal all the coin of the kingdom must be made, by Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 13.—So that the King's prerogative seemeth not to extend to the debasing or enhancing the value of the coin, below or above the sterling value. 2 Inst. 577: though Sir Matthew Hale, (1 Hal. P. C. 194), appears to be of another opinion. The king may also by his proclamation, legitimate foreign coin, and make it current here; declaring at what value it shall be taken in payments. 1 H. P. C. 197. But this it seems ought to be by comparison with the standard of our own coin, otherwise the consent of parliament will be necessary. The king may also at any time decay, or cry down any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current. 1 Hal. P. C. 197.

This Standard hath been frequently varied in former times; but half for many years past been thus invariably settled. The pound Troy of gold, consisting of twenty-two carats (or 24th parts) fine, and two of alloy, is divided into forty-four guineas and an half of the present value of 21 s. each. And the pound Troy of silver, consisting of eleven ounces, and two penny weights five, and eighteen penny-weights alloy, is divided into sixty two shillings. See Fishes on English coins.

In the 7th year of King William III. an act was made for selling in all the old coins of the kingdom, and to melt it down and re-coin it; the deficiencies whereof were to be made good at the public charge: and in every hundred pound coined, 40 l. was to be shillings, and 10 l. six-pences, under certain penalties.

Persons bringing plate to the Mint to be coined, were to have the same weight of money delivered out, as an encouragement: and receivers general of taxes, &c. were to receive money at a large rate per ounce. Our guineas have been raised and fallen, as money has been scarce or plenty, several times by statute; and anno 3 Geo. 1. guineas were valued at 21 s. at which they now pass.

A duty of 10 s. per ton was imposed on wine, beer, and brandy imported, called the tonnage duty, granted for the expence of the King's coinage, but not to exceed 3000 l. per ann. Stat. 18 Car. 2. cap. 5. This duty for coinage hath been continued and advanced, from time to time by divers statutes; and by Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 14 (explained by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 23. § 64.) the Treasury is to apply 15,000 l. a-year to the expences of the mints in England and Scotland—Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 92, regulates the stamping of money weights, the fees for which are settled by Stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 30, at 1 d. for every 12 weights.

COLIBERTS, coliberti. Were tenants in socage; and particularly such villeins as were manumitted or made freemen. Domesday. But they had not an absolute freedom; for though they were better than servants, yet they had superior lords to whom they paid certain duties, and in that respect they might be called servants, though they were of middle condition, between freemen and servants, — Libertate carens colibertus dicitur esse. Du Cange.

COLLATERAL, collateralis. From the Lat. lateralis, sideways, or that which hangeth by the side, not direct: as collateral alliance is that which is made over and above the deed itself: collateral security, is where a deed is made of other land, besides those granted by the deed of mortgage: and if a man covenants with another, and enters into bond for performance of his covenant, the bond is a collateral assurance; because it is external, and without the nature and essence of the covenant. If a man hath liberty to pitch booths or standings, for a fair or market, in another person's ground, it is collateral to the ground. The private woods of a common person, within a forest, may not be cut down without the King's licence, it being a prerogative collateral to the soil. And to be subject to the feeding of the King's deer, is collateral to the soil of a forest. Crompt. Jurisd. 185; Manswood, p. 66.

COLLATERAL CONSANGUINITY, or KINDETH. Collateral relations agree with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor; but differ in this, that they do not descend from each other. Collateral kinsmen, therefore, are such as lineally spring from one and the same ancestor, who is the stirps or root; the stipes, trunk, or common stock, from whence these relations are branched out. 2 Comm. 204, see title Descent.

COLLATERAL DESCENT, and COLLATERAL WARRANTY. See Descent and Warranty.

COLLATERAL ISSUE, Is where a criminal contest pleads any matter, allowed by law, in bar of execution, as pregnancy, the King's pardon, an act of grace, or attainder, or perpetuity, &c. that he is not the same that was attained, &c. whereon issue is taken, which issue is to be tried, by a jury, factum.

COLLATIO BONGORUM. Is in law where a portion or money advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into benefit in order to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate at his death, according to the intent of the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 10: Abbr. Cas. Ed. 2. 254. See titles Fideicommissum, Entailment.

COLLATION to a BENEFICE, collatio beneficii. Signifies the bestowing of a benefice by the bishop, when he hath right of patronage. See title Advowson.

COLLATIONE FACTA UNI POST MORTEM ALTERIUS. A writ directed to the Justices of the Common Pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the King; who died during the suit between the King and the bishop's clerk: for judgment once passed for the King's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the King may bestow his presentation on another. Reg. Orig. 31.

COLLATIONE HEREDITATII. A writ whereby the King conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk. Reg. Orig. 303, 308.

COLLATION OF SEALS. This was when upon the same label, one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other.

COLLATIVE ADVOWSONS, See title Advowson.

COLLECTORS of money due to the King. Stat. 20 Car. 2. See Receivers.

COLLEGE, collegium. A particular corporation, company or society of men, having certain privileges founded by the King's licence: and for Colleges in reputation, see 4 Rep. 106. 108.

The establishment of Colleges or Universities, is a remarkable era in literary history. The schools in Cathedrals and Monasteries confined themselves chiefly to the teaching of grammar. There were only one or two masters employed in that office. But in colleges, professors were appointed to teach all the different parts of science. The first obscure mention of academical degrees in the University of Paris, (from which the other Universities in Europe have borrowed most of their customs and institutions), occurs. A. D. 1215. Vide Rohert's Hist. Emp. C. P. 10. 323.

See the power of visitors of Colleges well explained in Dr. Walker's case. Hardw. 212. See further titles Corporations, Leases, Universities.

COLLEGIATE CHURCH, Is that which consists of a Dean and secular canons; or more largely, it is a church built and endowed for a society, or body corporate, of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church. There were many of these societies distinguished from the religious or regulars, before the reformation; and some are established at this time; as Westminster, Windsor, Winchester, Southwell, Manchester, &c. See title Chapter; Dean.

COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI, (Letters ad.) In defect of representatives and creditors to administer to an intestate, &c. the Ordinary may commit administration to such discreet person as he approves of, or grant him these letters, to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to keep the goods in his safe custody, and to do other acts for the benefit of such as are entitled to the property of the deceased. 2 Comm. 505. See title Barren.

COLLOQUIUM, a colloquium. A talking together, or affirming of a thing, laid in declamation for words in actions of lander, &c. Mod. Caf. 223; Gooden 90.

COLLUSION, collusio. Is a deceitful agreement or contract between two or more persons; for the one to bring an action against the other, in some evil purpose, as to defraud a third person of his right, &c. This collusio is either apparent, when it shows itself on the face of the act; or, which is more common, it is secret, where done in the dark, or covered over with a show of honesty. And it is a thing the law abhors; wherefore, when found, it makes void all things dependant upon the same, though otherwise in themselves good. Co. Lit. 109, 360; Mund. 54. Collusio may sometimes be tried in the same action wherein the covin is, and sometimes in another action, as for lands aliened in mortmain by a quale jus; and where it is apparent there needs no proof of it; but when it is secret, it must be proved by witnesses, and found by a jury like other matters of fact. 9 Rep. 33. The statute of Westm. 2. 23 Ed. 1. c. 33, gives the writ quale jus, and inquiry in these cases: and there are several other statutes relating to deeds, made by collusio and fraud. The cases particularly mentioned by the statute of Westm. 2. are of quare impedit, assise, &c. which one corporation brings against another, with intent to recover the land or advowson, for which the writ is brought, held in mortmain, &c. See title Fraud.

COLONIES, See title Plantation.

COLONUS, An husbandman or villager, who was bound to pay yearly a certain tribute; or at certain times in the year to plough some part of the lord's land; and from hence comes the word clown.

COLOUR, color. Signifies a probable plea, but which is in fact false; and hath this end, to draw the trial of the cause from the jury to the judges: and therefore colour ought to be matter in law, or doubtful to the jury.

It is a rule in pleading, that no man be allowed to plead, specially, such a plea as amounts only to the general issue; but in such case he shall be driven to plead the general issue in terms, whereby the whole question is referred to a jury. But if a defendant, in an assise or action of trespass, be desirous to refer the validity of his title to the court rather than the jury, he may state his title specially, and at the same time give colour to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance or colour of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which the jury are not competent judges. As if his own true title be that he claims by feoffment with livery from A. by force of which he entered on the lands in question, he cannot plead this by itself, as this plea amounts to no more than the general issue. But he may allege this specially, provided he goes farther, and says, that the plaintiff claiming by colour of a prior deed of feoffment, without livery, entered, upon whom he entered: and may then refer himself to the judgment of the court, which of the two titles is the best in point of law. Dodder & Stud. 2. c. 53.

Every colour ought to have these qualities following: 1. It is to be doubtful to the lay gens, as in case of a deed of feoffment pleaded, and it is a doubt whether the land passeth by the feoffment, without livery, or not. 2. Colour ought to have continuance, though it wants effect. 3. It should be both color, that if it were effectual, would maintain the nature of the action; as in assise, so give colour of freehold, &c. 20 Rep. 88, 90 & 91. Colour must be such a thing, which is a good colour of title, and yet is not any title, Co. Jur. 122. If a man justifies his entry for such a cause as binds the plaintiff or his heirs for ever, he shall not give any colour: but if he pleads a defect in his title, he may give colour, because this binds the plaintiff, and not the right; so that when the matter of the plea bars the plaintiff of his right, no colour must be given. When the defendant entitles himself by the plaintiff, where a person pleads to the writ, or to the action of the writ, he who justifies for either, or where the defendant justifies as servant in all these cases no colour ought to be given. 10 Rep. 92; Lutw. 1343. Where the defendant doth not make a special title to himself, or any other, he ought to give colour to the plaintiff. Co. Lit. 76. In trespass for taking and carrying away twenty loads of wood, &c. the defendant says, that A. B. was possessed of them, ut de bonis propriis, and that the plaintiff claiming them by colour of a deed aliter made, took them, and the defendant repook them; and adjudged, that the colour given to the plaintiff, makes a good title to him, and confelleth the interest in him. 1 Lit. Abr. 275.

COLOUR or OFFICE, color officii. Is when an act is evilly done by the countenance of an office; and always taken in the worst sense, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and colour. Plowd. Comment. 64. See Bribery; Extortion.

COLPICES, culpicium, colpeius. Young poles, which being cut down, make leavers or litters; and in Warwickshire they are called colpices to this day. Blount.

COLPO, A small wax candle, a copo de cere. Hoveden says, that when the King of Scots came to the English Court, as long as he said there, he had every day, De liberatione triginta sol. Et duodecim vassillos dominicos, Et quadraginta grossas longos colpones de dominica candela regis. &c. anno 1194.

COMBARONES, The fellow barons, or commonalty of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1. & Ed. 2. But the title of barons of the Cinque Ports is now given to their representatives in parliament; and the word combaron is used for a fellow member, the baron and his combaron. See title Parliament.

COMBATERRÆ, From Sax. cumbe, Brit. lum, Eng. comb. A valley or low piece of ground or place between two hills; which is still so called in Devonshire and Cornwall: hence many villages in other parts of England have their names of comb, as Wickcomb, &c. from their situation. Kemmet's Gloss.

COMBAT, TRIAL BY, See Battle.

COMBINATIONS to do unlawful acts, are punishable before the unlawful act is executed; this is to prevent the consequence of combinations, and conspiracies, &c. 9 Rep. 57. See titles Confederacy, Conspiracy.

COMBUSTIO PECUNIÆ, The ancient way of trying mixt and corrupt money, by melting it down upon payments into the Exchequer. In the time of King Henry II. a constitution was made, called the trial by combustion; the practice of which differed little or nothing from the present method of assaying silver. But whether this examination of money by combustion, was to reduce an equation of money only of sterling, viz. a due proportion of allay with copper; or to reduce it to a fine pure silver without allay, doth not appear. On making the constitution for trial, it was considered, that though the money did answer numera et pondere, it might be defective in value; because mixed with copper or brass, &c. Vide Lownes's Essay upon Coins, p. 5. See title Coin.

COMITATUS. A county. Irgulphus tells us, That Kingland was first divided into counties by King Alfred; and counties into hundred, and these again into tithings; and Fertessue writes, that regnum Anglie per comitatus et regnum Francie per ballivatus distinguitur. It is also taken for a territory or jurisdiction of a particular place, as in Mat. Paris. anno 1234 and divers old charters. See titles County, Sheriff.

According to Lord Lutheham, in his History of Hen. II. lib. 2. fo. 217, (a) h county was anciently an earldom, so that, previous to the reign of King Stephen, there were not any titular earls, nor more earls than counties, though there might be fewer. As to the divisions of counties into hundreds and tithings, see Ld. Lit. l. 2. fo. 259 Alto see Bract. l. 3. c. 10.

COMITATUS COMMISSO. Is a writ of commission whereby a sheriff is authorized to take upon him the charge of the county. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITATUS ET CASTRO COMMISSO. A writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, is committed to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITIVA. A companion or fellow traveller; it is mentioned in Brompton, Regn. H. 2. And sometimes it signifies a troop or company of robbers: as in Walsingham, anno 1366.

COMMANDERY, præceptoria.] Was any manor or chief messuage, with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. Job, of Jerusalem in England; and he who had the government of such a manor or house was stiled the commander; who could not dispose of it but to the use of the priory, only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. New Eagle in Lincolnshire was and still is called the Commandery of Eagle, and did anciently belong to the said priory of St. Job: So Selbach in Pembrokeshire, and Shingay in Cambridgeshire, were commanderies in the time of the knights templars, says Camden: and these in many places of England are termed Temples, because they formerly belonged to the said templars. See Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 2. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. Job of Jerusalem, were given to King Hen. VIII by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 20; about the time of the dissolution of abbies and monasteries: so that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long since extinct.

COMMANDMENT, præceptum.] Is diversely taken; as the commandment of the King, when upon his own motion he had cast any man into prison. Commandment of the justices, absolute or ordinary; absolute, where upon their own authority they commit a person for contempt, &c. to prison, as a punishment; ordinary is when they commit one rather for safe custody, than for any punishment: and a man committed upon such an ordinary commandment is releasable. Strouds. P. C. 72, 73. Persons committed to prison by the special command of the King, were not formerly bailable by the court of King's Bench; but at this day the law is otherwise. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 36. See title Bail.

In another sense of this word, magistrates may command others to assist them in the execution of their offices, for the doing of justice; and so may a justice of peace to suppress riots, apprehend felons; an officer to keep the King's peace, &c. Bro. 3. A master may command his servant to drive another man's cattle out of his ground, to enter into lands, seize goods, distrain for rent, or do other things; if the thing be not a trespass to others. Fitz. lib. 1. The commandment of a thing is good, where he that commands hath power to do it: and a verbal command in most cases is sufficient; unless it be where it is given by a corporation, or when a sheriff's warrant is to a bailiff to arrest, &c. Bro. 288: Dyer 202.

Commandment is also used for the offence of him that willet another man to transgress the law, or do any thing contrary to it; and in the most common signification, it is taken where one willet another to do an unlawful act, as murder, theft, or the like: which the civilians called mandatum. Bract. lib. 3. c. 19. See title Accessory.

In forcible entries, &c. an infant or some covert may be guilty in respect of actual violence done by them in person; though not in regard to what shall be done by others at their command, because all such commands of theirs are void. Co. Lit. 357. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. § 35. See title Infant. In trespass, &c. the master shall be charged criminally for the act of the servant, done by his command; but servants shall not be excused for committing any crime, when they act by command of their masters, who have no authority over them to give such command. Dott. & Stud. c. 42. H. P. C. 66: Kel. 13. And if a master commands his servant to distrain, and he abuse the distress, the servant shall answer it to the party injured, &c. Kitch. 372. See title Servant.

COMMARCHIO. The confines of the land; from whence probably comes the word marches — Imprimis ut nosse et landimeris, commarchionibus. Du Cange.

COMMENDAM, eccl'ia commendata, vel eccl'ia ecclesie alicui commissa.] Is the holding of a benefice or church-living, which being void, is commended to the charge and care of some sufficient clerk, to be supplied until it may be conveniently provided of a pastor: and he to whom the church is commended, hath the profits thereof only for a certain time, and the nature of the church is not changed thereby, but is as a thing deposited in his hands in trust, who hath nothing but the custody of it, which may be revoked. When a parson is made bishop, there is a cession or voidance of his benefice, by the promotion; but if the King by special dispensation gives him power to retain his benefice, notwithstanding his promotion; he shall continue parson, and is said to hold it in Commendam. Hob. 144: Latch. 236. As the King is the means of avoidances on promotions to dignities, and the presentations whereon belong to him he often on the creation of bishops grants them licences to hold their benefices in commendam; but this is usually where the bishopricks are small, for the better support of the dignity of the bishop promoted: and it must be always before consecration; for afterwards it comes too late, because the benefice is then absolutely void. — A commendam, founded on the statute 25 H. 8. c. 21, is a dispensation from the supreme power, to hold or take an ecclesiastical living contra ius positum: and there are several sorts of commendans; as a commendam semicbris, which is for the benefit of

of the church without any regard to the commendatory, being only a provisional act of the Ordinary, for supplying the vacation of six months, in which time the patron is to present his clerk, and is but a sequestration of the cure and fruits until such time as the clerk is presented: a commendam retinere, which is for a bishop to retain benefices, on his preferment; and these commendams are granted on the King's mandate to the archbishop, expressing his consent, which continues the incumbency, so that there is no occasion for institution. A commendam recipere is to take a benefice de novo in the bishop's own gift, or in the gift of some other patron, whose consent must be obtained. Dyer, 228: 3 Lev. 381. Hob. 143: Danv. 79.

A commendam may be temporary for six or twelve months; two or three years, &c. or it may be perpetual, i. e. for life, when it is equal to a presentation, without institution or induction. But all dispensations beyond six months were only permissive at first, and granted to persons of merit: the commendam retinere is for one or two years, &c. and sometimes for three or six years, and doth not alter the estate which the incumbent had before, a commendam retinere, as long as the commendatary should live and continue bishop, hath been held good. Vaugh. 18

The commendam recipere must be for life, as other parsons and vicars enjoy their benefices; and as a patron cannot present to a full church, so neither can a commendam recipere be made to a church that is then full. Shoep. 414. A benefice cannot be commended by parts, any more than it may be presented unto by parts; as that one shall have the glebe, another the tithes, &c. Nor can a commendatary have a juris utrum, or take to him and his successors, sue or be sued, in a writ of annuity, &c. But a commendatary in perpetuum may be admitted to do it. 11 H 4.

These commendams are now in fact seldom or never granted to any but bishops; and in that case the bishop is made Commendatary of the benefice while he continues bishop of such diocese. as the object is to make an addition to a small bishoprick. and it would be unreasonable to grant it to a bishop for life, who might afterwards be translated to one of the richest sees—See the case of Commendam, Hob. 140: and Collier's Eccl. Hist. 2 710.

COMMENDATARY, commendatarius.] He that holdeth a church living or preferment in commendam.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS, Are such as are written by one bishop to another in behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese, travelling thither, that they may be received among the faithful: or that the clerk may be promoted; or necessities administered to others, &c. several forms of these letters may be seen in our historians, as in Bede, lib. 2 c. 18.

COMMENDATUS, One that lives under the protection of a great man. Spelm.—Commendati homines were persons who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any superior lord. for ancient homage was either predial, due for some tenure; or personal, which was by compulsion, as a sign of necessary subjection; or voluntary, with a desire of protection: and those, who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any men of power, were sometimes called homines ejus commendati: and sometimes only commendati, as often occurs in Domesday. Commendati dimidi were those who depended on two several lords, and paid one half of their homage to each: and sub-commendati were like under-tenants, under the command of persons that were dependants themselves on a superior lord: also there were dimidi sub-commendati, who bore a double relation to such depending lords. Domesday. This phrase seems to be still in use, in the usual compliment, Commend me to such a friend, &c. which is to let him know, I am his humble servant, Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 20

COMMERCE, commercium.] Traffick, trade or merchandize in buying and selling of goods.

There is a distinction between commerce and trade; the former relates to our dealings with foreign nations, or our colonies, &c. abroad; the other to our mutual traffick and dealings among ourselves at home.

No municipal laws can be sufficient to order and determine the very extensive and complicated affairs of traffick and merchandize. neither can they have a proper authority for this purpose: for as these are transactions carried on between subjects of independent states, the municipal laws of one will not be regarded by the other.—For this reason the affairs of commerce are regulated by a law of their own, called the Law-merchant or Lex mercatoria, which all nations agree in and take notice of. And in particular it is held to be part of the law of England, which decides the causes of merchants by the general rules which obtain in all commercial countries. See further title Marchant. See also title Bill of Exchange.

COMMISSARY, commissarius.] A title in the ecclesiastical law, belonging to one that exerciseth spiritual-jurisdiction, in places of a diocese which are so far from the episcopal city, that the chancellor cannot call the people to the bishop's principal consistory court, without then too great inconvenience. His commissary was ordained to supply the bishop's jurisdiction and office in the out-places of the diocese; or in such places as are peculiar to the bishop, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the archdeacon for where, either by prescription or composition, Archdeacons have jurisdiction within their arch-deaconries, as in most places they have, this commissary is superfluous and oftentimes vexatious, and ought not to be; yet in such cases, a commissary is sometimes appointed by the bishop, he taking prelation money of the archdeacon yearly pro exteriori jurisdictione, as it is ordinarily called. But this is held to be a wrong to archdeacon and the poorer sort of people. Convel's Interp. 4 Inst. 338.

There are also commissaries in time of war. Persons sent abroad to take care of the supply and distribution of provisions for the army.

COMMISSION, commissio.] The warrant or letters-patent, which all persons exercising jurisdiction either ordinary or extraordinary, have to authorize them to hear or determine any cause or action: as the commission of the Judges, &c. Commissio is with us as much as a legato with the civilians and this word is sometimes extended farther than to matters of judgment; as the commission of purveyance, &c. Commissions of inquiry shall be made to the justices of one bench or the other, &c. and to do lawful things, are grantable in many cases also most of the great officers, judicial and ministerial, of the realm, are made by commission. And by such commissions, treasons, felonies, and other offences, may be heard and determined, by this means likewise, oaths, cognitions of fines.

Shes, and answers, are taken, witnesses examined, offices found, &c. Bro. Ab. 12. Rep. 39—See Stat. 42 E. 3. c. 4. And most of these commissions are appointed by the King under the Great Seal of England: but a commission granted under the Great Seal may be determined by a Privy Seal; and by granting another new commission to do the same thing, the former commission determines; and on the death or demise of the King, the commissions of judges and officers generally cease. Bro. Commis. 2 Dyer 289. There was formerly a High-Commission Court founded on 1 Edw. c. 1, but it was abolished by Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 11; and 13 Car. 2. c. 2. Of commissions divers may be seen in the table of the Register of Writs. See also Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 9; 7 Hen. 4. c. 11; 6 An. c. 7. By which last act, § 27, it is provided that no greater number of commissioners shall be made for the execution of any office than had been previously usual.

COMMISSION OF ANTICIPATION Was a commission under the Great Seal to collect a tax or subsidy before the day. 15 H. 8.

COMMISSION OF ARREST, See title Militia.

COMMISSION OF ASSOCIATION. A commission to associate two or more learned persons with the justices in the several circuits and counties of Warr., &c. See title Affice, Circuit.

COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT, See title Bankrupt.

COMMISSION OF CHARITABLE USES, Goes out of the Chancery to the bishop and others, where lands given to charitable uses are misemployed, or there is any fraud or disputes concerning them, to enquire of and redress the abuse, &c. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4.—See titles Charitable Uses; Mortmain.

COMMISSION OF DELEGATES. Is a commission under the Great Seal to certain persons, usually two or three temporal lords, as many bishops, and two judges of the law, to sit upon an appeal to the King in the court of Chancery, where any sentence is given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. Now generally three of the common law judges, and two Civilians, sit as delegates.

COMMISSION TO ENQUIRE OF FAULTS AGAINST THE LAW, Was an ancient commission set forth on extraordinary occasions and corruptions.

COMMISSIONS OF THE PEACE, See title Justices of Peace.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY, A commission out of Chancery to enquire whether a person represented to be a lunatick be so or not; that if lunatick, the King may have the care of his estate, &c. See title Lunatick.

COMMISSION OF REBELLION, Otherwise called a writ of rebellion, issues when a man after proclamation made by the sheriff, upon a process out of the Chancery, on pain of his allegiance, to present himself to the court by a day assigned, makes default in his appearance: and this commission is directed to certain persons, to the end they, three, two, or one of them apprehend the party, or cause him to be apprehended as a rebel and contemner of the king's laws, wheresoever found within the kingdom, and bring or cause him to be brought to the court on a day therein assigned: this writ or commission goes forth after an attachment returned, non est inventus, Et. Termin de Ley.—See title Attachment, Chancery.

COMMISSION OF SEWERS, Is directed to certain persons to see drains and ditches well kept and maintained in the marshy and fenny parts of England, for the better conveyance of the water into the sea, and preserving the grafs upon the land. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 51; 23 Eliz. c. 9. See title Sewers.

COMMISSION OF TREATY WITH FOREIGN PRINCES, Is where leagues and treaties are made and transacted between states and kingdoms, by their ambassadors and ministers, for the mutual advantage of the kingdoms in alliance.

COMMISSION TO TAKE UP MEN FOR WAR, Was a commission to press or force men into the king's service. This power of impressing has been heretofore doubted, but the legality of it is now fully established. Vide Eyst. Rep. 154; 1 Comm. 419; Broadfoot's case, Comb. 245; Tubbi's case, Comp. 517.—See titles Martinet, Navy.

COMMISSIONER, commissarius.] He that hath a commission, letters patent, or other lawful warrant to examine any matters, or to execute any public office, &c. And some commissioners are to hear and determine offences, without any return made of their proceedings; and others to inquire and examine, and certify what is found. Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 9. Commissioners, by the common law, must pursue the authority of the commission, and perform the effect thereof; and they are to observe the antient rules of the courts whence they come; and if they do any thing for which they have not authority, it will be void. 2 Co. Rep. 25; Co. Lit. 157. The office of commissioners is to do what they are commanded; and it is necessarily implied, that they may do that also, without which what is commanded cannot be done: their authority, when appointed by any statute law, must be used as the statutes prescribe. 12 Rep. 32. If a commission is given to commissioners to execute a thing against law, they are not bound to accept or obey it: commissioners not receiving a commission may be discharged, upon oath before the Barons of the Exchequer, &c. and the king by superfideas out of Chancery, may discharge commissioners. Besides commissioners relating to judicial proceedings; there are Commissioners of the Treasury, of the Customs, wine-licences, alienations, &c. of which there are an infinite number.

COMMITTEE, Are those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, by some court, or by consent of parties to whom it belongs: as in parliament, a bill either consented to and passed, or denied, or neither, but being referred to the consideration of certain persons appointed by the House farther to examine it, they are thereupon called a committee. And when a parliament is called, and the speaker and members have taken the oaths, and the standing orders of the House are read, committees are appointed to sit on certain days, viz. the committee of privileges, of religion, of grievances, of courts of justice, and of trade; which are the standing committees. But though they are appointed by every new parliament, they do not all of them act, only the committee of privileges; and this being not of the whole House, is first called in the Speaker's chamber, from whence it is adjourned into the House, every one of the House having a vote therein, though not named, which makes the same usually very numerous: and any member may be present at any select committee; but is not to vote unless he be named. The chairman of the grand committee, who is always some leading member, sits in the clerk's place at the table, and writes the votes for and against the matter referred to them; and if the num-him be equal, he has a casting voice, otherwise he hath no vote in the committee; and after the chairman hath put the question for reporting to the House, if that be carried, he leaves the chair, and the Speaker being called to his chair, (who quits it in the beginning, and the mace is laid under the table) he is to go down to the bar, and to bring up his report to the table. After a bill is read a second time in the House of Commons, the question is put, whether it shall be committed to a committee of the whole house, or a private committee; and the committees meet in the Speaker's chamber, and report their opinion of the bill with the amendments, &c. And if there be any exceptions against the amendments reported, the bill may be recommitted, eight persons make a committee, which may be adjourned by five, See Lex Constitutionis 147, 150.—See title Parliament.

There is a Committee of the King, mentioned in West's Symb. tit. Chancery, sect. 144. And this hath been used, though improperly, for the widow of the king's tenant being dead, who is called the committee of the King, that is, one committed by the ancient law of the land to the king's care and protection. Kitch. fol. 160.

The Committee of a lunatick, idiot, &c. is the person to whom the care and custody of such lunatick is committed by the Court of Chancery. See title Lunatick.

Most Corporations have their committees of select members to perform the general routine of business. See title Corporation.

COMMITMENT.

The sending of a person to prison, by warrant or order, who hath been guilty of any crime.

Anciently more felons were committed to gaol without a mittimus in writing, than were with it; such were commitments by watchmen, constables, &c. See 1 H. H. 610.—But now since the Habeas-corpus act, a commitment in writing seems more necessary than formerly; otherwise a prisoner may be admitted to bail under that act, whatsoever his offence may have been. Burn's Justice, title Commitment.

I. What kind of Offenders may be committed; and by whom; and in what manner.

II. To what Prison they may be committed; and at whose Charge.

III. How they may be removed and discharged.

I. THERE is no doubt but that persons apprehended for offences which are not bailable, and also all persons who neglect to offer bail for offences which are bailable, must be committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 1.—It is said, that whosoever a justice of peace is empowered by any statute to bind a person over, or to cause him to do a certain thing, and such person being in his presence shall refuse to be bound, or to do such thing, the justice may commit him to the gaol to remain there till he shall comply. Id. ib. § 2.

It seems agreed by all the old books, that whosoever a constable or private person may justify the arresting another for a felony or treason, he may also justify the sending or bringing him to the common gaol; and that every private person hath as much authority in cases of this kind, as the sheriff, or any other officer; and may justify such imprisonment by his own authority, but not by the command of another. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 3.

But inasmuch as it is certain, that a person lawfully making such an arrest, may justify bringing the party to the constable, in order to be carried by him before a justice of peace; and inasmuch as the statutes of 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 13, and 2 & 3 P. & M. cap. 10, which direct in what manner persons brought before a justice of the peace for felony, shall be examined by him, in order to their being committed or bailed, seem clearly to suppose, that all such persons are to be brought before such justice for such purpose; and inasmuch as the statute of 31 Car. 2. c. 2, commonly called the Habeas-corpus act, seems to suppose that all persons, who are committed to prison, are there detained by virtue of some warrant in writing, which seems to be intended of a commitment by some magistrate, and the constant tenor of the late books, practice and opinions, are agreeable hereto; it is certainly most adviseable at this day, for any private person who arrests another for felony, to cause him to be brought, as soon as conveniently he may, before some justice of peace, that he may be committed or bailed by him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 3.

It is certain, that the Privy Council, or any one or two of them, or Secretary of State, may lawfully commit persons for treason, and for other offences against the State, as in all ages they have done. 2 Hawk. P. C. 117.

As to commitments by the Privy Council, two cases in Leonard, (1 Leon. 71; 2 Leon. 175.) pre-suppose some power for this purpose, without saying what; and the case in Anders. 297, plainly recognises such a power in High-Treason. But as to the jurisdiction of Privy Counsellors in other offences, it does not appear to have been either claimed or exercised. But see post, as to commitments by the Secretary of State for libel; the cases of Dorby, and Earbury; which Lord Camden said are established, and the Court has no right to overturn them. 11 S. F. 323.

As to commitments by the Secretary of State; In the case of Entick v. Carrington, C. B. Mich. 6 Geo. 3, upon a special verdict, respecting the validity of a Secretary of State's warrant to seize persons and papers in the case of libel, a very critical enquiry was made into the source of this power in that officer, in cases of libels and other State crimes. 2 Will. 275; 11 S. F. 317. 9.—It appears that the king being the principal conservator of the realm, the Secretary of State has so much of the royal authority transferred to him, as justifies commitment for these crimes, but not the seizure of papers.

The following instances of commitments by the Privy Council and Secretary of State, will further explain the nature of this power.—1. Howell, was committed in the 28 Eliz. and Hollyard in the 30th Eliz. by Secretary Wal-singham, Privy Counsellor; and it was determined that where the commitment is not by the whole council, the cause must be expressed in the warrant. 1 Leon. 71. 2 Leon. 175. sed vide Stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2; Lord Paym 65.—2. Anno 34 Eliz. the Judges remonstrated against the exercise of this power; and declared that all prisoners may be discharged, unless committed by the Queen's command, or by her whole council, or by one or two of them for High-treason. 1 And. 297.—3. Melvin was committed, an. 4 C. 1, by Secretary Conway, on suspicion of high-treason: but the Court thought the cause of the sus-

J. held good. Stia 3: 3 Vin, 516.—10. Lord Scarishead, and Duplin, and Havvy were committed, an. 2 Geo. 1, by Lord Townshend, Secretary of State, for treasonable practices, and admitted to bail 3 Vin, 534.—11. Barbary was arrested and committed by warrant from the Secretary of State, for being the author of a seditious libel, and his papers seized, and he continued on his recognizance, an. 7 Geo. 2. 8 Mod, 177: 11 S. T. 309.—12. Henley was committed, an. 31 Geo. 2, by the Earl of Holderness, Secretary of State, for high-treason, in adhering to the king's enemies. 1 Burr, 642.—13. Shebbean was committed, 31 Geo. 2, on two warrants from the Secretary of State, for a libel. 1 Burr, 460.—14. Wilkes was committed, an. 5 Geo. 3, by warrant from the Earl of Hallifax, Secretary of State, for a libel; but discharged by his privilege of parliament. 2 Will, 150: 11 S. T. 302.—15. Sayer was apprehended, 18 Geo. 3, by warrant from the Earl of Rochford, Secretary of State, for high treason, and bailed by Lord Mansfield. Black Rep, 1165.—See further title Bail II. and also title Arrest.

As to the manner of commitment, it is enacted by 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10, That justices of peace shall examine persons brought before them for felony, &c. or suspicion thereof, before they commit them to prison, and shall bind their accusers to give evidence against them. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16 § 11.

A Justice of the peace may detain a prisoner a reasonable time, in order to examine him; and it is said, that three days is a reasonable time for this purpose. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, § 12: Dalt. c. 125. 2 Inst, 52, 591.

Every commitment must be in writing, and under the hand and seal, and shew the authority, of him that made it, and the time and place, and must be directed to the keeper of the prison. It may be either in the king's name, and only tested by the justice, or in the justice's name. It may command the gaoler to keep the party in safe and close custody; for this being what he is obliged to do by law, it can be no fault to command him so to do. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16 § 13, 14, 15.

It ought to set forth the crime with convenient certainty, whether the commitment be by the Privy Council, or any other authority, otherwise the officer is not punishable by reason of such mittimus, for suffering the party to escape, and the court, before whom he is removed by habeas corpus, ought to discharge or bail him; and this doth not only hold where no cause at all is expressed in the commitment, but also where it is so loosely set forth, that the court cannot judge whether it were a reasonable ground for imprisonment or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, § 17. See titles Arrest; Bail.

A commitment for high treason or felony in general, without expressing the particular species, has been held good, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, § 16. But now, since the Habeas corpus act, it seems that such a general commitment is not good, and therefore where A. and B. were committed for aiding and abetting Sir James Montgomery to make his escape, who was committed by a warrant of a Secretary of State for high treason; on a Habeas corpus, they were admitted to bail, because it did not appear of what species of treason Sir James was guilty. Skinn, 596: 1 Salk, 347. S. C.

It is safe to set forth that the party is charged upon oath; but this is not necessary, for it hath been resolved, that a commitment for treason, or for suspicion of it, without setting forth any particular accusation or ground of the suspicion, is good 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, § 17. This resolution was in the case of Sir W. Wyndham, 2 Geo. 1, who was committed by the Secretary of State, for high-treason, generally. Stia, 2. 3 Vin, 515, at large. It was confirmed by Pratt, C. J. in Wilkes's case, committed by a similar warrant for a libel. 2 Will, 158: 11 S. T. 304. And Mr. J. Foster says, in cases wherein the justice of the peace hath jurisdiction, the legality of his warrant will never depend on the truth of the information whereon it is grounded. Curtis's Ca. 136.—See also Dalt. c. 125: Crompt, 233: 2 Inst, 52: Palm, 558. 1 Salk, 347: 5 Mod, 78: 10 Mod, 334: 1 H. P. C. § 82.

Every such mittimus ought to have a lawful conclusion, viz. that the party be safely kept till he be delivered by law, or by order of law, or by due course of law; or that he be kept till further order, (which shall be intended of the order of law) or to the like effect; and if the party be committed only for want of bail, it seems to be a good conclusion of the commitment, that he be kept till he find bail; but a commitment till the person who makes it shall take further order, seems not to be good, and it seems that the party committed by such or any other irregular mittimus may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, § 18.

Also a commitment grounded on an act of parliament ought to be conformable to the method prescribed by such statute; as where the churchwardens of Northampton were committed on the 43 Elizabeth. cap. 2, and the warrant concluded in the common form, viz. Until they be duly discharged according to law; but the statute appointing, that the party should then remain until he should account, for want of such conclusion they were discharged. Carth, 152, 153. And where a man is committed as a criminal, the conclusion must be, until he be delivered by due course of law; if he be committed for contumacy, it should be, until he comply.

II. All commitments must be to some prison within the realm of England. For,

By the Stat. 31 Car. 2. cap. 2, the Habeas corpus act, it is enacted, "That no subject of this realm, being an inhabitant or resident of this kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick upon Tweed, shall or may be sent prisoner into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, Tynier, COMMITMENT III.

Tangia, or into any parts, garrisons, islands, or places beyond the seas, which then were, or at any time after should be, within or without the dominions of his Majesty."

By Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 10, Sheriffs shall have the custody of the gaols as before that time they were wont to have, and they shall put in such under-keepers for whom they will answer. And this is confirmed by Stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 10. Also by Stat. 5 Hen. 4. cap. 10, it is enacted, "That none be imprisoned by the justice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, saving to lords, and others who have gaols, their franchise in this case." It seems that the King's grant, since the statute, 5 H. 4. c. 10, to private persons to have the custody of prisoners committed by justices of peace, is void. And it is said, that none can claim a prison as a franchise, unless he have also a gaol delivery. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 7. See Stat. 11 & 12 IV. 3. c. 19 § 3, made perpetual by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 19, to enable justices of peace to build and repair gaols in their respective counties, where a clause like that in Stat. 5 H. 4. c. 10, is inserted.

Also it hath been held, that regularly no one can justify the detaining a prisoner in custody out of the common gaol, unless there be some particular reason for so doing; as if the party be so dangerously sick, that it would apparently hazard his life to send him to the gaol; or there be evident danger of a rescous from rebels, &c. yet constant practice seems to authorize a commitment to a messenger; and it is said that it shall be intended to have been made in order for the carrying of the party to gaol. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 8 a.

And it is said, that if a constable bring a felon to gaol, and the gaoler refuse to receive him, the town where he is constable ought to keep him till the next gaol-delivery. H. P. C. 114. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16 § 9.

A prisoner in the custody of the King's messenger, on a warrant from the Secretary of State, who is brought into A. B. by Habeas corpus to be bailed, but has not his bail ready, cannot be committed to the same custody he came in, but must be committed to the custody of the marshal, which will prevent the necessity of suing out a new Habeas corpus; as he may be brought up from the prison of the court, by a rule of court, whenever he shall be prepared to give bail. 1 Burr. 460.

If a person arrested in one county for a crime done in it, fly into another county, and be retaken there, he may be committed by a justice of the first county to the gaol of such county. H. P. C. 93. But by the better opinion, if he had before any arrest fled into such county, he must be committed to the gaol thereof by a justice of such county. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 8. Dall. c. 118. Also it seems to be laid down as a rule by some books, that any offender may be committed to the gaol next to the place where he was taken, whether it lie in the same county or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 8.—See post. Stat. 24 Geo. 2 c. 55.

By Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 19, Vagrants and other criminals, offenders, and persons charged with small offences, may for such offences, or for want of sureties, be committed either to the common gaol, or house of correction, as the justices in their judgment shall think proper.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55, If a person is apprehended, upon a warrant indorsed, in another county, for an offence not bailable, or if he shall not there find bail, he shall be carried back into the first county, and be committed or, if bailable, bailed by the justices in such first county.

As to the charges of commitment, it is enacted by Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 10, that offenders committed are to bear their own charges, and the charges of those who are appointed to guard them; and if they refuse to pay, the charges may be levied by sale of their goods. And by Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, If they have no goods, &c. within the county where they are apprehended, the justices are to grant a warrant on the treasurer of the county for payment of the charges. But in Middlesex the same shall be paid by the overseers of the poor of the parish where the person was apprehended.

By the Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 3: The sheriff shall certify the names of all prisoners in his custody to the justices of gaol-delivery.

III. As prisoners ought to be committed at first to the proper prison, so ought they not to be removed thence, except in some special cases; and to this purpose it is enacted by 31 Car. 2 cap. 2; "That if any subject of this realm shall be committed to any prison, or in custody of any officer or officers whatsoever, for any criminal, or supposed criminal matter, that the said person shall not be removed from the said prison and custody into the custody of any other officer or officers; unless it be by Habeas corpus, or some other legal writ; or where the prisoner is delivered to the constable or other inferior officer, to carry such prisoner to some gaol; or where any person is sent by order of any judge of assize, or justice of the peace, to any common work-house, or house of correction, or where the prisoner is removed from one prison or place to another within the same county, in order to a trial or discharge by due course of law; or in case of sudden fire or infection, or other necessity; upon pain that he who makes out, signs, or countersigns, or obeys or executes such warrant, shall forfeit to the party grieved 100*l.* for the first offence, 200*l.* for the second, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 10.

A person legally committed for a crime, certainly appearing to have been done by some one or other, cannot be lawfully discharged by any other but by the King, till he be acquitted on his trial, or have an ignominia found by the grand jury, or none to prosecute him on a proclamation for that purpose, by the justices of gaol delivery. But if a person be committed on a bare suspicion, without any appeal or indictment, for a supposed crime, where afterwards it appears that there was none; as for the murder of a person thought to be dead, who afterwards is found to be alive; it hath been holden that he may be safely dismissed without any farther proceeding; for that he who suffers him to escape, is properly punishable only as an accessory, to his supposed offence; and it is impossible there should be an accessory where there can be no principal; and it would be hard to punish one for a contempt founded on a suspicion appearing in so uncontested a manner to be groundless. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 22. But the safest way for the gaoler, is to have the authority of some court, or magistrate, for discharging the prisoner.

If the words of a statute are not pursued in a commitment, the party shall be discharged by Habeas corpus. See titles Arrest, Bail, Imprisonment, Prisoners, &c.

COMMON. I.

COMMOIGNE, Fr.] A fellow monk; one that lives in the same convent. 3 Inst. 15.

COMMONALITY, populus, plebs, communitas.] In Art. super chartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 1, the words Sout le Commune d'Engleterre signify all the people of England. 2 Inst. 539. But this word is generally used for the middle sort of the king's subjects, such of the commons as are raised beyond the ordinary sort, and coming to have the managing of offices, by that means are one degree under burghesses, which are superior to them in order and authority; and companies incorporated are said to consist of masters, wardens, and commonality, the first two being the chief, and the others such as are usually called of the livery. The ordinary people, and freeholders, or at best knights and gentlemen, under the degree of baron, have been of late years called communitas regni, or tota terræ communitas; yet antiently, if we credit Brady, the barons and tenants in capite, or military men, were the community of the kingdom; and those only were reputed as such in our most ancient histories and records. Brady's Gloss. to his Introduction to Engl. Hist.

COMMON.

Communia.] A right or privilege, which one or more persons claim to take or use, in some part or portion of that which another man's lands, waters, woods, &c. do naturally produce; without having an absolute property in such land, waters, wood, &c. It is called an incorporeal right, which lies in grant, as if originally commencing on some agreement between lords and tenants, for some valuable purposes; which by age being formed into a prescription continues, although there be no deed or instrument in writing which proves the original contract or agreement. 4 Co. 37: 2 Inst. 65. 1 Vent 367.

I. Of the several Kinds of Commons.

II. The Interest of the Owner of the Soil; wherein, of Improvement and Inclosure.

III. The Commoners' Interest in the Soil; and herein, of Apportionment and Extinction.

I. There is not only common of pasture, but also common of fishery or fishery; common of stovers; common of barbary, which see under their several heads. The word common however, in its most usual acceptation, signifies common of pasture.—This is a right of feeding one's beasts on another's land: for in those waste ground usually called commons, the property of the soil is generally in the lord of the manor; as in common field, it is in the particular reverts. This kind of common is divided into common in gross, common appendant, common appurtenant, and common per cause de vicinage.

Common in gross is a liberty to have common alone, without any lands or tenements, in another person's land, granted by deed to a man and his heirs, or for life, &c. F. N. B. 31, 37. 4 Rep. 20.

Common appurtenant is a right belonging to a man's arable land, of putting beasts commonable into another's ground. And common appurtenant is belonging to an estate for all manner of beasts, or commonable or not commonable. 4 Rep. 37. Plowd. 161.

Common appurtenant is a right, in a manner confounded, as appears by Fitzherbert; and it is by him defined to be a liberty of common appertaining to, or depending on a freehold; which common must be taken with beasts commonable, as horses, oxen, kine, and sheep; and not with goats, hogs, and geese. But some make this difference, that common appurtenant may be severed from the land whereto it pertains; but not common appendant; which, according to Sir Edward Coke, had this beginning: when a lord enfeoffed another of arable land, to hold of him in soke, the feoffee, to maintain the service of his plough, had at first, by the courtesy or permission of the lord, common in his wastes for necessary beasts to eat and compost his land, and that for two causes; one, for that it was tacitly implied in the feoffment, by reason the feoffee cou'd not till or compost his land without cattle, and cattle could not be sustained without pasture; so by consequence the feoffee had, as a thing necessary and incident, common in the waste and lands of the lord: and this may be collected from the ancient books and statutes; and the second reason of this common was, for the maintenance and advantage of tillage, which is much regarded and favoured by the law. F. N. B. 180: 4 Rep. 37.

Common per cause de vicinage; common by reason of neighbourhood; is a liberty that the tenants of one lord in one town have to common with the tenants of another lord in another town. It is where the tenants of two lords have used, time out of mind, to have common promiscuously in both lordships lying together and open to one another. 8 Rep. 78. And those that challenge this kind of common, which is usually called intercommuni, may not put their cattle in the common of the other lord, for then they are distrainable; but they may turn them into their own fields, and if they stray into the neighbouring common, they must be suffered. Term de Ley. The inhabitants of one town or lordship may not put in as many beasts as they will, but with regard to the freehold of the inhabitants of the other: for otherwise it were no good neighbourhood, upon which all this depends. Ibid.

If one lord encloses the common, the other town cannot then common, but though the common of vicinage is gone, common appendant remains. 4 Rep. 38. 7 Rep. 5. Every common per cause de vicinage is a common appendant. 1 Danv. Abr. 719.

This is indeed only a permissive right intended to excuse what in strictness is a trespass in both, and to prevent a multiplicity of suits. And therefore either township may enclose and bar out the other, though they have intercommuni time out of mind. 2 Comm. 34.

Common appendant is only to ancient arable land, not to a house, meadow, pasture, &c. It is against the nature of common appendant to be appendant to meadow or pasture: but if in the beginning land be arable, and of late a house hath been built on some part of the land, and some acres are employed to meadow and pasture, in such case it is appendant, though it must be pleaded as appendant to the land, and not to the house, pasture, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 457. This may be common appendant, though it belongs to a manor, farm, or plough land: and common appendant is of common right, but it is not common appendant, unless it has been appendant time out of mind. 1 Danv. 746. It may be upon condition; be for all the year, or for a certain time, or for a certain number of beasts, &c. by usage. Though it ought to be for such cattle as plough and compost the land, to which it is appendant. Ibid. 797. Common appendant may be to common in a field after the corn is severed, till the ground is re-sown: so it may be to have common in a meadow after the hay is carried off the same, till Candlemas, &c. Yelv. 185.

This common, which is in its nature without number, by custom may be limited as to the beasts: common appurtenant ought always to be for those levant and couchant, and may be sans number. Plowd. 161. A man may prescribe to have common appurtenant for all manner of cattle, at every season in the year. 25 Aff. 8. Common by prescription for all manner of commonable cattle as belonging to a tenement, &c. must be for cattle levant and couchant upon the land, (which is so many as the land will maintain,) or it will not be good: and if a person grants common sans number, the grantee cannot put in so many cattle, but that the grantor may have sufficient common in the same land. 1 Danv. Abr. 798, 799. He who hath common appendant or appurtenant, can keep but a number of cattle proportionable to his land; for he can common with no more than the lands to which his common belongs is able to maintain. 3 Salk. 93. Common appurtenant may be to a house, pasture, &c. though common appendant cannot; but it ought to be prescribed for as against common right: and uncommonable cattle, as hogs, goats, &c. are appurtenant: this common may be created by grant at this day; so may not common appendant. 1 Inst. 122. 1 Rel. Abr. 398.

Common appurtenant for a certain number of beasts may be granted over. 1 Danv. 802.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 81. § 21, Rams are not to remain on commons from the 25th of August to the 25th of November.

II. THE property of the soil in the common is entirely in the lord; and the use of it, jointly in him and the commoners.

Lords of manors may depasture in commons where their tenants put in cattle; and a prescription to exclude the lord is against law. 1 Inst. 122.

The lord may agist the cattle of a stranger in the common by prescription: and he may license a stranger to put in his cattle, if he leaves sufficient room for the commoners. 1 Danv. 795: 2 Mod. 6. Also the lord may surcharge, &c. an overplus of the common: and if, where there is an overplus, the lord surcharges the common, the commoners are not to distrain his beasts; but must commence an action against the lord. F. N. B. 125. But it is said, if the lord of the soil put cattle into a close, contrary to custom, when it ought to lie fresh, a commoner may take the cattle damage feasant: otherwise it is a general rule that he cannot distrain the cattle of the lord. 1 Danv. 807.

The lord may distrain where the common is surcharged; and bring action of trespass for any trespass done in the common. 9 Rep. 113.

A lord may make a pond on the common: though the lord cannot dig pits for gravel or coal; the statutes of improvement extending only to inclosure. 3 Inst. 204: 9 Rep. 112: 1 Sid. 106. If the lord makes a warren on the common, the commoners may not kill the conies; but are to bring their action, for they may not be their own judges. 1 Rel. 90. 405.

By statute, 20 H. 3. c. 4, (Stat. of Merton), lords may approve against their tenants, viz. inclose part of the waste, &c. and thereby discharge it from being common, leaving common sufficient; and neighbours, as well as tenants claiming common of pasture, shall be bound by it.—If the lord encloses on the common, and leaves not common sufficient, the commoners may not only break down the inclosures; but may put in their cattle, although the lord ploughs and sows the land. 2 Inst. 88: 1 Rel. Abr. 406.

Where the tenants of the manor have a right to dig gravel on the wastes, or to take estovers, there the lord has no right under the statute of Merton, to enclose and approve the wastes of the manor.—Yet a custom in a manor that any person being desirous of inclosing, may apply to the court, &c. first obtaining the consent of the lord, does not abridge the lord's common-law right of inclosing without any such application, provided he leave common sufficient for the tenants. 2 Term Rep. 391, 2.

By Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 36, Owners of common, with the consent of the majority, in number and value, of the commoners; the majority of the commoners, with consent of the owners; or any persons with the consent of both, may inclose any part of a common for the growth of wood. If the wood is destroyed, the offender may be punished according to Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48: if not convicted in six months, the owner shall have satisfaction from the adjoining parishes, &c. as for fences overthrown by Stat. Westm. 2.—Persons cutting wood on commons shall incur the same penalty. And by Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 41, The recompence is to be paid to persons interested, in proportion to their interest. Tenants for life, or for years determinable on lives, may consent for their term; but that binds not, after determination of their estate.

III. A commoner hath only a special and limited interest in the soil, but yet he shall have such remedies as are commensurate to his right, and therefore may distrain beasts damage feasant, bring an action on the case, &c. but not being absolute owner of the soil, he cannot bring a general action of trespass for a trespass done upon the common. See Bridg. 10, 11: Godb. 123, 124: 2 Leon. 201, 202.

A commoner cannot regularly do any thing on the soil which tends to the melioration or improvement of the common, as cutting down of bushes, fern, &c. 1 Sid. 251: 12 Hen. 8. 2: 13 Hen. 8. 15. Therefore if a commoner every year in a flood is surrounded with water, the commoner cannot make a trench in the soil to avoid the water, because he has nothing to do with the soil, but only to take the grass with the mouth of the cattle. 1 Rel. Abr. 405: 2 Bulst. 116.—But see ante II. and post.

Every commoner may break the common, if it be inclosed; and although he does not put his cattle in at the time, yet his right of commonage shall excuse him from being a trespasser. Lit. Rep. 38: See 1 Rel. Abr. 406. That is, supposing the inclosure made by the lord, and that there is not sufficient common; or that the inclosure is made by any other person than the lord.

If a tenant of the freehold ploughs it, and sows it with corn, the commoner may put in his cattle, and therewith eat the corn growing upon the land; so if he lets his corn lie in the field beyond the usual time, the other commoners may, notwithstanding, put in their beasts. 2 Leon. 203, 203.

The commoner cannot use common but with his own proper cattle: but if he hath not any cattle to manure the land, land, he may borrow other cattle to manure it, and use the common with them; for by the loan, they are in a manner made his own cattle. 1 Dunv. 798. Grantee of common appurtenant, for a certain number of cattle, cannot common with the cattle of a stranger: he that hath common in gross, may put in a stranger's cattle, and use the common with such cattle. Ibid. 803. Common appurtenant or appurtenant, cannot be made common in gross; and approvement extends not to common in gross. 2 Inst. 86.

A Commoner may distrain beasts put into the common by a stranger, or every commoner may bring action of the case, where damage is received. 9 Rep. 11. But one commoner cannot distrain the cattle of another commoner, though he may those of a stranger, who hath no right to the common. 2 Lutw. 1238.

Wherever there is colour of right for putting in cattle, a commoner cannot distrain; where there is no colour he may: so he may distrain a stranger's cattle, but not those of a commoner, though he exceeds his number. Where writ of admeasurement lies, he cannot distrain — Quere, whether he may distrain cattle surcharged, where the right of common is for a number certain. 4 Burr. 2426: 1 Black. Rep. 673.

The usual remedies for surcharging the common, are either by distraining so many of the beasts as are above the number allowed, or else by an action of trespass; both which may be had by the lord: or lastly, by a special action on the case for damages, in which any commoner may be plaintiff. Freem. 273. But the ancient and most effectual method of proceeding, is by writ of admeasurement of pasture. This lies, either where a common appurtenant or in gross is certain as to number; or where a man has common appurtenant, or appurtenant to his land, the quantity of which common has never yet been ascertained. In either of these cases, as well the lord, as any of the commoners, is entitled to this writ of admeasurement; which is one of those writs, that are called vicontial (2 Inst. 369: Finch. L. 314,) being directed to the sheriff, (vicecomiti), and not to be returned to any superior court, till finally executed by him.

It recites a complaint, that the defendant hath surcharged, (superoneravit), the common: and therefore commands the sheriff to admeasure and apportion it; that the defendant may not have more than belongs to him, and that the plaintiff may have his rightful share. And upon this suit all the commoners shall be admeasured, as well those who have not, as those who have, surcharged the common; as well the plaintiff as defendant. F. N. B. 125.—The execution of this writ must be by a jury of twelve men, who are upon their oaths to ascertain, under the superintendence of the sheriff, what and how many cattle each commoner is entitled to feed. And the rule for this admeasurement is generally understood to be, that the commoner shall not turn more cattle upon the common, than are sufficient to manure and stock the land to which his right of common is annexed; or, as our ancient law expressed it, such cattle as only are levant and couchant upon his tenement; (Bro. Abr. 1: Prescription 28;) which being a thing uncertain before admeasurement, has frequently, though erroneously, occasioned this unmeasured right of common to be called a common without stint, or sans nombre, (Hendr. 117,) a thing, which though possible in law, does in fact very rarely exist. Lord Raym. 467.

If, after the admeasurement has thus ascertained the right, the same defendant surcharges the common again, the plaintiff may have a writ of second surcharge, (de secunda superoveratione), which is given by the Stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 8; and thereby the sheriff is directed to inquire by a jury, whether the defendant has in fact again surcharged the common, contrary to the tenor of the last admeasurement; and if he has, he shall then forfeit to the king the supernumerary cattle put in, and also shall pay damages to the plaintiff. F. N. B. 126: 2 Inst. 370.—This process seems highly equitable, for the first offence is held to be committed through mere inadvertence, and therefore there are no damages or forfeiture on the first writ, which was only to ascertain the right which was disputed: but the second offence is a wilful contempt and injustice; and therefore punished, very properly, with not only damages, but also forfeiture. And herein, the right, being once settled, is never again disputed; but only the fact is tried, whether there be any second surcharge or no: which gives this neglected proceeding a great advantage over the modern method by action on the case, wherein the quantum of common belonging to the defendant must be proved upon every fresh trial, for every repeated offence.

This injury, by surcharging, can, properly speaking, only happen where the common is appurtenant or appurtenant, and of course limited by law; or where, when in gross, it is expressly limited and certain; for where a man hath common in gross, sans nombre, or without stint, he cannot be a surcharger. However, even where a man is said to have common without stint, still there must be left sufficient for the lord's own beasts. 1 Rel. Abr. 399. For the law will not suppose that, at the original grant of the common, the lord meant to exclude himself.

There is yet another disturbance of common, when the owner of the land, or other person, so incloses or otherwise obstructs it, that the commoner is precluded from enjoying the benefit, to which he is by law entitled. This may be done either by erecting fences, or by driving the cattle off the land, or by ploughing up the soil of the common. Cro. Eliz. 198. Or it may be done by erecting a warren therein, and stocking it with rabbits in such quantities, that they devour the whole herbage, and thereby destroy the common. For in such case, though the commoner may not destroy the rabbits, yet the law looks upon this as an injurious disturbance of his right, and has given him his remedy by action against the owner. Cro. Jac. 195. This kind of disturbance does indeed amount to a disseisin, and if the commoner chuses to consider it in that light, the law has given him an assize of novel disseisin, against the lord, to recover the possession of his common. F. N. B. 179.—Or it has given a writ of quod permittat, against any stranger, as well as the owner of the land, in case of such a disturbance to the plaintiff as amounts to a total deprivation of his common; whereby the defendant shall be compelled to permit the plaintiff to enjoy his common as he ought. Finch. L. 275: F. N. B. 123. But if the commoner does not chuse to bring a real action to recover seisin, or to try the right, he may (which is the easier and more usual way) bring an action on the case for his damages, instead of an assize, or a quod permittat. Cro. Jac. 195: Sec 3 Comm. 238—240.

COMMON OF ESTOVERS.

If any commoner incloses, or builds, on the common, every commoner may have an action for the damage. Where turf is taken away from the common, the lord only is to bring the action: but it is said the commoners may have an action for the injury, by entering on the common, 1 Rol. Abr. 89, 398: 2 Leon. 201.

If a commoner who hath a freehold in his common be ousted of, or hindered therein, that he cannot have it so beneficially as he used to do; whether the interruption be by the lord or any stranger, he may have an assise against him: but if the commoner hath only an estate for years, then his remedy is by action on the case. And if it be only a small trespass, that is little or no loss to the commoner, but he hath common enough besides, the commoner may not bring any action. 4 Rep. 37. 8 Rep. 79: Dyer 316.

A commoner cannot dig clay on the common, which destroys the grass, and carrying it away doth damage to the ground: so that the other commoners cannot enjoy the common, in tantummodo as they ought Goob 344. Also a commoner may not cut bushes, dig trenches, &c. in the common, without a custom to do it. 1 Nels. 462. If he makes any thing de novo, he is a trespasser. he can do nothing to impair the common; but may reform a thing abused, fill up holes, &c. 1 Brownl 208.

A commoner may abate hedges erected on a common, for though the lord hath an interest in the soil, by abating the hedges, the commoner doth not meddle with it. 2 Mod. 65. Any man may by prescription have common and feeding for his cattle in the king's highway, although the soil doth belong to another. But the occupation of common by usurpation, will not give title to him that doth occupy it, unless he hath had it time beyond memory.

Upon agreement between two commoners to enclose a common, a party having interest not privy to the agreement, will not be bound; but one or two wilful persons shall not hinder the public good. Chan Rep 48. Commons must be driven yearly at Michaelmas, or within fifteen days after: infected horses, and stone horses under size, &c. are not to be put into commons, under forfeitures, by Stat 32 H 8 c 13. New erected cottages, though they have four acres of ground laid to them, ought not to have common in the waste. 2 Inst 740. In law proceedings, where there are two distinct commons, the two titles must be shewn: cattle are to be alleged commonable; and common ought to be in lands commonable and the place is to be set forth where the messuage and lands lie, &c. to which the common belongs. 1 Nels 462, 463.

Common appendant, because it is of common right, shall be apportioned by the commoner's purchase of part of the land in which he hath such common, but common appurtenant shall be extinct by the commoner's purchase of part of the land, in which, &c. Both common appendant and appurtenant shall be apportioned by alienation of part of the land to which the common is appendant or appurtenant. Co. Lit. 122. Hob. 235; 8 Co 78. Owen 122 4 Co. 37: Co. Eliz. 594.

A release of common in one acre, is an extinguishment of the whole common. See 4 Co. 37.

If A hath common in the lands of B as appurtenant to a messuage, and after B. enfeoffs A. of the said lands, whereby the common is extinguished; and then A. leases to B. the said messuage and lands, with all commons, &c. used or occupied with the said messuage, this is a good grant of a new common, for the time. Co. Eliz. 570. If several persons are seized of several parts of a common, and a commoner purchases the inheritance of one part, his entire common is extinct. 1 And. 159. When a man hath common appendant for a certain number of cattle, and to a certain parcel of land, if he sell part of it, the common is not extinguished; for the purchaser shall have common pro rata: but it is otherwise in common appurtenant. 8 Rep. 78: 1 Nels. 460. See Fitz. Abr. Com. per tot.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 81. In every parish where there are common field lands, all the arable lands lying in such fields, shall be cultivated by the occupiers, under such rules as 3-4ths of them in number and value, (with the consent of the land and tithe owners, [the latter not to receive any fines, only rents, § 23.]) shall appoint by writing under their hands: the expence to be born proportionably, § 1, 2, 4, 7.—Under the management of a field-master, or field-revee, to be appointed annually in May, § 3, 5, 6.

Persons having right of common, but not having land in such fields, and persons having sheep walks, may compound for such right, by written agreement, or may, with their consent, have parts allotted them to common upon. § 8, 9, 10. And the balks, blades and mires may be ploughed up, § 11—14.

Lords of manors with the consent of 3-4ths of the commoners, on the wastes and commons within their manors, may demise (for not more than four years) any part of such wastes, &c. not exceeding 1-12th part; and the clear rents reserved for the same, shall be applied in improving the residue of such wastes, § 14.

In every manor where there are stinted commons, in lieu of demising part thereof, assessments on the lords of such manors, and the owners and occupiers of such commons may be made, and the money employed in the improvement of the commons, under the direction of the majority, which (or in some instances 2-3d) may regulate the depasturing, opening, shutting-up, breaking and unstocking the commons, and the kind of cattle to be allowed the commoners, § 16—21.

All rights relative to commons, previous to this act, are saved except as against persons who become subject to regulations made under the Statute, § 27.

As to Common in general, See further Com. Dig. title Common.

COMMON OF ESTOVERS, or estovers, that is necessaries, from estoffi to furnish.] A liberty of taking necessary wood for the use or furniture of a house, or farm, from off another's estate. 2 Comm. 35. Or in the language of the law, for house-bote, plough bote, and hay bote. See title Bote. What botes are necessary, tenants may take, notwithstanding no mention be made thereof in their leases; but if a tenant take more house-bote than is needful, he may be punished for waste Tarrs de Ley. Tenant for life may take upon the land demised reasonable estovers, unless restrained by special covenant. and every tenant for years hath three kinds of estovers incident to his estate. 1 Inst. 41. When a house, having estovers appendant or appurtenant, is blown down by wind, if the owner rebuilds it in the same place and manner as before, his estovers shall continue so if he alters the rooms and chambers, without making new chimneys; but if he erect any new chimnies, he will not be allowed to spend any estovers in such new chimnies. 4 Rep. 87. 4 Leon.

COMMON - LAW

§13. If one have a dwelling house whereunto common of estovers doth belong, and the house by fire is burnt down, and a new one built near to the place, or in the place in another form, the estovers are gone: but if the old house be only some of it down, it is otherwise; and in all cases where the alterations to a house do no prejudice to the tenant or owner of the land or wood, the estovers will remain. F. N. B. 190. Where a man hath estovers for life, if the owner cut down all the wood, that there is none left for him, he may bring an assise of estovers; and if the tenant have but an estate for years, or at will, he may have an action on the case. Moor Ca 65: 9 Rep. 112. If the tenant who hath common of estovers, shall use them to any other purpose than he ought, he that owns the wood may bring trespass against him: as where one grants twenty loads of wood to be taken yearly in such a wood, ten loads to burn, and ten to repair pales; here he may cut and take the wood for the pales, though they need no amending, but then he must keep it for that use. 9 Rep. 113. F. N. B. 58, 159.

COMMON OF PISCARY, Is a liberty of fishing in another man's water. Common of piscary to exclude the owner of the soil, is contrary to law: though a person by prescription may have a separate right of fishing in such water, and the owner of the soil be excluded; for a man may grant the water, without passing the soil; and if one grant separatam piscariam, neither the soil nor the water pass, but only a right of fishing. 1 Inst. 4, 122, 164. 5 Rep. 34. See Fish and Fishery.

COMMON OF TURBARY, Is a licence to dig turf upon the ground of another, or in the lord's waste. This common is appendant or appurtenant to an house, and not to lands, for turfs are to be burnt in the house: and it may be in gross, but it does not give any right to the land, trees, or mines. It cannot exclude the owner of the soil. 1 Inst. 4, 122. 4 Rep. 37.

There is also a Common of digging for coals, minerals, stones and the like. All these bear a resemblance to common of pasture in many respects; though in one point they go much farther, common of pasture being only a right of feeding on the herbage or pasture of the soil which renews annually, but common of turbary and those just mentioned, are a right of carrying away the very soil itself. These several species of common do however all originally result from the same necessity as common of pasture: viz for the maintenance and carrying on of husbandry: common of piscary being given for the sustenance of the tenant's family; common of turbary and firebote for his fuel: and housebote, ploughbote, cartbote and hedgebote for repairing his house, his instruments of tillage, and the necessary fences of his grounds. 2 Comm. 34, 5.

COMMON BENCH, Bancus communis, from the Sax. banc bank, and thence metaphorically a bench, high seat or tribunal. The court of Common Pleas was anciently called Commun Bench, because the pleas of controversies between common persons were there tried and determined. Camd. Britan. 163. In law books and references the court of Common Pleas is written C. B. from communis Banco, (or C. P.) And the justices of that court are styled Justitiam etiam Banco. See title Common Pleas.

COMMON DAY OF PLEA IN LAND, Signifies an ordinary day in court, as Officium Hilariu, Quintidies Pasche, &c. It is mentioned in the Stat. 51 H. 3.

Stat. 2. and Stat. 3. Concerning general days in bar; see title Days in Bank.

COMMON FIELD LAND, See title Common.

COMMON FINE, finis communis.] A small sum of money, which the tenants within the liberty of some leets pay to the lords, called in divers places bread silver or bread pence, in others cert money; and was first granted to the lord, towards the charge of his purchase of the commute, whereby the tenants have the ease to do their suit within their own liberties, and are not compellable to go to the lord's turn in the manor of Sheepshead in the county of Leicester, every tenant pays 1d. per poll to the lord at the court held after Michaelmas, which is there called common fine. For this common fine the lord may distrain: but he cannot do it without a prescription. 11 Rep. 44. There is also common fine of the county. See Fleta, lib. 7. c. 48. and Stat. 3 Ed. 1 c. 18.

COMMONS HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT, Is the lower House of Parliament, so called, because the Commons of the realm, that is the knights, citizens, and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the Commons do sit there. Comp. jurisd. See title Parliament.

COMMON INTENDMENT, Is common meaning or understanding, according to the subject matter, not strained to any extraordinary or foreign sense: har to common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which is commonly an answer to the plaintiff's declaration. There are several cases in the law where common intendment, and intendment take place. and of common intendment a will shall not be supposed to be made by collusion. Co. Lit. 78, See Co. Lit. 303, a, b, &c.

COMMON LAW, Lex Communis] Is taken for the law of this kingdom simply, without any other laws; as it was generally holden before any statute was enacted in parliament to alter the same: and the King's courts of justice are called the Common Law Courts. The Common Law is grounded upon the general customs of the realm; and includes in it the law of nature, the law of God, and the principles and maxims of the law: it is founded upon reason; and is said to be the perfection of reason, acquired by long study, observation and experience, and refined by learned men in all ages. And it is the common birth-right, that the subject hath for the safe-guard and defence, not only of his goods, lands, and revenues; but of his wife and children, body, fame, and life also. Co. Lit. 97, 142. Treatise of Laws, p. 2.

According to Hale, the Common law of England, is the common rule for administering justice, within this kingdom, and asserts the King's royal prerogatives, and likewise the rights and liberties of the subject. It is generally that law, by which the determinations in the King's ordinary courts are guided; and this directs the course of descents of lands, the nature, extent and qualification of estates; and therein the manner and ceremonies of conveying them from one to another; with the forms, solemnities and obligation of contracts; the rules and directions for the expolition of deeds, and acts of parliament: the process, proceedings, judgments and executions of our courts of justice; also the limits and bounds of courts, and jurisdictions; the several kinds of temporal offences and punishments, and their application, &c. Hale's Hist. of the Common Law, pag. 24, 44, 45.

As to the rise of the Common law, this account is given by some ancient writers: After the decay of the Roman empire, three sorts of the German people invaded the Britons, viz. the Saxons, the Angles, and the Jutes; from the last sprung the Kentish men, and the inhabitants of the Isle of Wight; from the Saxons came the people called Engle, South, and West Saxons; and from the Angles, the East Angles, Mercians and Northumbrians. These people having different customs, they inclined to the different laws by which their ancestors were governed; but the customs of the West Saxons and Mercians, who dwelt in the midland counties, being preferred before the rest, were for that reason called jus Anglorum; and by these laws those people were governed for many ages: but the East Saxons having afterwards been subdued by the Danes, their customs were introduced, and a third law was substituted, which was called Danish law; as the other was then styled West-Saxon-law, &c. At length the Danes being overcome by the Normans, William called the Conqueror, upon consideration of all those laws and customs, abrogated some, and established others; to which he added some of his own country laws, which he judged most to conduce to the preservation of the peace: and this is what we now call the Common law.

But though we usually date our Common law from hence, this was not the original of the Common law; for Ethelbert, the First Christian King of this nation, made the first Saxon laws, which were published by the advice of some wise men of his council: and King Alfred who lived 300 years afterwards, collected all the Saxon laws into one book, and commanded them to be observed through the whole kingdom, which before only affected certain parts thereof; and it was therefore properly called the Common law, because it was common to the whole nation: and soon after it was called, the sole-right, i. e. the people's right.

Alfred was styled Anglicarum legum conditor: and when the Danes, on the conquest of the kingdom, had introduced their laws, they were afterwards destroyed; and Edward the Confessor out of the former laws composed a body of the Common law; wherefore he is called by our historians Anglicarum legum restitutor. Blount. In the reign of Edw. I. Britton wrote his learned book of the Common law of this realm; which was done by the King's command, and runs in his name, answerable to the Institutions of the Civil law, which Justinian assumes to himself, though composed by others. Samuel's Prerog. 6, 21. But Justinian ought to be entitled to the honour, as the Institutions were composed by his direction. This Britton is mentioned by Gwin to have been bishop of Hereford.

Bracton, a great lawyer, in the time of Hen. 3. wrote a very learned treatise of the Common law of England, held in great estimation; and he was said to be Lord Chief Justice of the kingdom. Also the famous and learned Glanville, Lord Chief Justice in the reign of Hen. 2. wrote a book of the Common law, which is said to be the most ancient composition extant on that subject. Besides these, in the time of Ed. 4. the renowned Lawyer Littleton wrote his excellent book of Engl's Tenures. In the reign of King James the First, the great oracle of the law, Sir Edward Coke, published his learned and laborious Institutes of our law, and commentary on Littleton. About the same time likewise Dr. Covel, a civilian, wrote a short Institute of our laws. In the reign of King George the First, Dr. Tho. Wood, a civilian and common lawyer, and at last a divine, wrote an Institute of the laws of England, which is something after the manner of the Institutes of the Civil law.

To conclude the whole of this head, the late learned Judge Blackstone, in the reign of George the Third, published his Commentaries on the Laws of England, the best analytic and most methodic system of our laws which ever was published. It is equally adapted for the use of students, and of those gentlemen who choose to acquire that knowledge of our laws, which is, in fact, essentially necessary for every one. See particularly those Commentaries, vol. 1. p. 637. and vol. 4. p. 411. on this subject.

COMMON PLEAS, communis placita.] Is one of the King's Courts now constantly held in Westminster Hall; but in ancient time was moveable, as appears by Magna Charta, cap. 11. Before this charter, of King John & Hen. III. there were but two courts, called the King's courts, viz. the King's Bench and the Exchequer, which were then styled Curia Domini Regis, and Aula Regis, because they followed the court of the King; and upon the grant of the great charter, the court of Common Pleas was erected and settled in one certain place, i. e. Westminster-hall; and after that, all the writs ran Quod sit coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. whereas before, the party was required by them to appear Coram me vel justiciariis meis, without any addition of place, &c. But Sir Edward Coke is of opinion in his preface to the eighth report, and 1 Inst. 71 b. that the court of Common Pleas existed as a distinct court before the Conquest; and was not created by Magna Charta, at which time there were Justicarii de Banco, &c. Though before this act, Common Pleas might have been held in Banco Regis; and all original writs were returnable there.

According to Madox the origin of the court of Common Pleas is of a much later date than that assigned by Lord Coke. He so far agrees with Lord Coke as to admit that the Magna Charta of Hen. III. rather confirmed than erected the Banc or Common Pleas; and that such a court was in being several years before the Magna Charta of 17 of King John, though it was then first made stationary; But in other respects Lord Coke and Mr. Madox differ widely; for the latter thinks that some time after the Conquest there was one great and supreme judicature, called the Curia Regis, which he supposes to have been of Norman, and not Anglo-Saxon original, and to have exercised jurisdiction over common as well as other pleas: that the Common Pleas and Exchequer were gradually separated from the Curia Regis, and became jurisdictions wholly distinct from it; and that the separation of the Common Pleas began in the reign of Richard I. or early in the reign of King John, and was completed by Hen. III. See Mat. Hist. Exc. 63, 539. fo. ed. 3 Comm. 37: 4 Inst. 99: 1 Inst. 71 b; and the note there.

Writs returnable in this court, are now coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. But original writs, &c. returnable in B. R. are, Coram nobis nisi inque fierimus in Anglia. The jurisdiction of the court of C. P. is general, and extends itself throughout England: it holds pleas of all civil causes at Common law, between subject and subject, in actions real, personal and mixed; and it seems to have been the only court for real causes. In personal and mixed actions it hath a concurrent jurisdiction with the the King's Bench; but it hath no cognisance of pleas of the crown; and Common Pleas are all pleas that are not such.

The court of Common Pleas does not possess any original jurisdiction; nor has it, like the court of King's Bench, any mode of proceeding in common cases peculiar to itself. Its authority is founded on original writs issuing out of the court of Chancery; which original writs are the King's mandates for the court to proceed in the determination of the causes mentioned therein. The reason of original writs issuing out of Chancery is, because when the courts were united, which was formerly the case, the Chancellor held the seal: therefore, when they were divided, he still keeping the seal, sealed all original writs. Gilb. H. C. P. 3.—In all personal actions therefore brought by and against common persons, the only way of proceeding in this court is by original.

There is indeed one other way of proceeding in this court, in common cases, which is sometimes used; and which is called proceeding by original quia clausum fregit. This method of proceeding is grounded, in point of law, upon the same kind of original writ as the usual proceeding by capias is, the only difference between them being in the mesne process after the original is sued out; or at least supposed to be.—Instead of the process to compel the appearance of the defendant being by capias against his person, it is in this case by summons and distress against his goods. In a word, it is the same as the ancient mode of proceeding in this court was before the general introduction of the capias. (See this Dict. title Capias)—The advantage and use of this mode of proceeding by original q. c. f. is where a defendant has effects which can be distrained, but he himself cannot be met with to be personally served; the process by capias requiring personal service, which is not required in the process by summons.

All actions belonging to this court, come hither either by original, as arrests and outlawries; or by privilege or attachment, for or against privileged persons; or out of inferior courts, not of record, by pone, recoadare, accedus ad emiam, writ of false judgment, &c. Actions popular, and actions penal, of debt, &c. upon any statute, are cognisable by this court: and besides having jurisdiction for punishment of its officers and ministers, the court of Common Pleas may grant prohibitions, to keep temperal and ecclesiastical courts within due bounds. 4 Inst. 99, 100, 118. In this Court are four Judges, created by letters patent; the seal of the court is committed to the custody of the Chief Justice.

The other officers of the Common Pleas are the Custos Breviarum, three Prothonotaries and their Secondaries, the Clerk of the Warrants, Clerk of the Effoins, fourteen Filers, four Exigents, a Clerk of the Juries, the Chirographer, Clerk of the King's Silver, the clerk of the Treasury, Clerk of the Seal, of Outlawries, and the Clerk of the Implemment of Fines and Recoveries, Clerk of the Errors, &c. The Custos Breviarum is the chief clerk in this court, who receives and keeps all writs returnable therein; and all records of Apprais, which are delivered to him by the clerks of the assize of every circuit, &c. and he files the rolls together, and carries them into the treasury of records; he also makes out exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records, &c. The Prothonotaries enter and enrol all declarations, pleadings, judgments,

&c. and they make out all judicial writs, writs of execution, writs of privilege, procedendo's, &c. The Secondaries are assistants to the Prothonotaries in the execution of their offices; and they take minutes, and draw up all orders and rules of court. The Filers, who have the several counties of England divided among them, make out all mesne process, as capias, alias, pluries, &c. between the original writ and the declaration: and they make all writs of view, &c. The Exigents, appointed for several counties, make out all exigents and proclamations in order to outlawry. The Clerk of the Warrants, enters all warrants of attorney; inrols deeds of bargain and sale, and estreats all issues. The Clerk of the Effoins, keeps the roll of the effoins, wherein he enters them, and non suits, &c. The Clerk of the Juries, makes out all writs of habeas corpora jurator, for juries to appear; and he enters the continuances till the verdict given. The Clerk of the Treasury keeps the records of the court, and makes exemplifications of records, copies of issues, judgments, &c. The Clerk of the Seals, seals all writs and mesne process; also writs of outlawry and superseades, and all patents. The Clerk of the Outlawries, makes out the writs of capias utlagatum. The Clerk of the Errors is for the allowance of writs of error, &c. The Clerk of the Implemments of fines and recoveries, returns all writs of covenant, writs of entry and leisin, and enrols and exemplifies fines, &c. The Clerk of the King's Silver enters the substance of the writ of covenant: and the Chirographer ingrosseth all fines, and delivers the indentures to the parties, &c.

To these officers may be added, a Proclamator; a Keeper of the court; Cryer; and Tipsstaffs; besides the Warden of the Fleet. There are also Attornies of this court, whose number is unlimited; and none may plead at the bar of the court, in Term-time, or sign any special pleadings, but Serjeants at law.

COMMON PRAYER, Preces Publicæ.] The liturgy or prayers used in our church. It is the particular duty of Clergymen every Sunday, &c. to use the public form of prayer, prescribed by the Book of common prayer: and if any incumbent be resident upon his living, as he ought to be, and keep a curate, he is obliged by the act of uniformity, once every month at least, to read the common prayers of the church, according as they are directed by the book of common prayer, in his parish church, in his own person; or he shall forfeit 5 l. for every time he fails therein. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. Also by that statute the book of common prayer is to be provided in every parish, under the penalty of 3 l. a month: and the common prayer must be read before every lecture; the whole appointed for the day, with all the circumstances, and ceremonies, &c. Ministers, before all sermons, are to move the people to join in a short prayer for the catholic church; and the whole congregation of Christian people, &c. for the King and Royal Family; the ministers of God's word, nobility, magistrates, and whole commons of the realm, &c. and conclude with the Lord's Prayer, Can. 55. Refusing to use the Common Prayer, or using any other open prayers, &c. is punishable by Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. See title: Church, Church warden, Parson, Service, and Sacrament.

COMMON WEAL, Is understood in our law to be bonum publicum, and is a thing much favoured; and therefore the law doth tolerate many things to be done for common common good, which otherwise might not be done; and hence it is, that monopolies are void in law; and that bonds and covenants to restrain free trade, tillage, or the like, are adjudged void. 11 Co. Rep. 50: Plowd. 25: Shep. Epit. 270.

COMMORANCY, commorantia, from commoro.] An abiding, dwelling or continuing in any place; as an inhabitant of a house in a vill, &c. And commorancy for a certain time, may make a settlement in a parish. Dalt. See title Poor.—Commorancy consists in usually lying in a certain place. 4 Comm. 273.

COMMORTH, or COMORTH, comortha.] From the Brit. cymorth, i. e. subsidium: a contribution which was gathered at marriages, and when young priests said or sung the first masses, &c. See Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 27. But Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 6, prohibits the levying any such in Wales, or the Marches, &c. Cowel.

COMMOTE, In Wales, is half a cantred or hundred, containing fifty villages. Stat. Wallie 12 Ed. 1. Wales was anciently divided into three provinces; and each of these were again subdivided into cantreds, and every cantred into commotes. Dodrige's Hist. Wal. fol. 2.—Commote also signifies a great seignior or lordship, and may include one, or divers manors. Co. Lit. 5.

COMMUNANCE. The commoners, or tenants and inhabitants, who had the right of common, or commoning in open field, &c. were formerly called the communance. Cowel.

COMMUNE CONCILIUM REGNI ANGLIÆ. The common council of the King and people assembled in parliament.

COMMUNIA PLACITA NON TENENDA IN SCACCARIO, An ancient writ directed to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer, forbidding them to hold plea between common persons (i. e. not debtors, to the King, who alone originally sued and were sued there,) in that court, where neither of the parties belong to the same. Reg. Orig. 187. But little obedience would perhaps be now paid to such a writ, was any officer to dare to issue it: for the court of Exchequer, seems by prescription, to have attained a concurrent jurisdiction in civil suits, with the other courts in Westminster-hall. See titles Courts, Exchequer.

COMPANION OF THE GARTER. Is one of the knights of that most noble order; at the head of which is the King, as Sovereign. See Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. and title Garter.

VOL. I.

COMPASS. An instrument used in navigation, by the direction and assistance whereof vessels are steered to the most distant parts of the world. It was invented soon after the close of the holy war, and thereby navigation was rendered more secure as well as more adventurous, the communication between remote nations was facilitated, and they were brought nearer to each other. See Rebriſ. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 v. 78. See title Longitude.

COMPELLATIVUM, An adversary or accuser. Leg. Athelstan.

COMPERTORIUM, A judicial inquest in the Civil law, made by delegates, or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

COMPOSITION, compositio.] An agreement or contract between a parson, patron and Ordinary, &c. for money or other thing in lieu of tithes. Land may be exempted from the payment of tithes, where compositions have been made: and real compositions for tithes are to be made by the concurrent consent of the parson, patron and Ordinary. Real compositions are distinguished from personal contracts; for a composition called a personal contract is only an agreement between the parson and the parishioners, to pay so much instead of tithes; and though such agreement is confirmed by the Ordinary, yet (if the parson is not a party) that doth not make it a real composition, because he ought to be a party to the deed of composition. March's Rep. 87. The compositions for tithes made by the consent of the parson, patron and Ordinary, by virtue of St. 13 Eliz. c. 10, shall not bind the successor, unless made for twenty-one years or three lives, as in case of leases of ecclesiastical corporations, &c. Compositions were at first for a valuable consideration, so that though, in process of time, upon the increase of the value of the lands such compositions do not amount to the value of the tithes, yet custom prevails, and from hence arises what we call a modus decimandi. Hob. 29. See further title Tithes.

The word composition hath likewise another meaning, i. e. dispositio litis. Compositions were in ancient times allowed for crimes and offences, even for murder.—An expedient employed by the civil magistrate, in order to see some bounds to the violence of private revenge. This custom may be traced back to the ancient Germans. Tacit. de Morib. Ger. c. 21: Lord Kaim's Hist. Law Tr. 1 p. 41, 42, &c.

COMPOSITIO MENSURARUM, Is the title of an ancient ordinance for measures, not printed.

COMPOSTUM. Dung, soil or compost laid on lands. Registr. Eccl. Cantuar. MS.

COMPOUNDING FELONY, or theft-bate. Is where the party robbed not only knows the felon, but also takes his goods again, or other amends upon agreement not to prosecute. It was formerly held to make a man an accessory; but is now punished only with fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 59. § 6.—To take any reward for helping a person to stolen goods, is made felony by Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11.—And to advertise a reward for the return of things stolen, incurs a forfeiture of 50 l. by Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 36. See titles Advertisement; and also Felony & Misprison.

COMPRINT, A surreptitious printing of another bookseller's copy, to make gain thereby, which was contrary to Common law, and is now restrained by statute. See title Literary Property.

COMPROMISE,

COMPROMISE, compromissum] A mutual promise of two or more parties at difference, to refer the ending of their controversy to arbitrators and W^{est} 3^o, it is the faculty or power of pronouncing sentence between persons at variance, given to arbitrators by the parties' private consent. W^{est} Symb Jet 1 Matters compromised, are also matters of law referred, or made an end of — See title Award

COMPURGATOR, One that by oath justifies another's innocence. Compurgators were introduced as evidence in the jurisprudence of the middle ages — Their number varied according to the importance of the subject in dispute, or the nature of the crime with which a person was charged. Du Cange loc. Juramentum, vol 3, p. 1599. See Oath, and 3 Comm 342 4 Comm 361, 407. — See also title Clergy.

COMPUTATION, computatio] The true account and construction of time, and to the end neither party to an agreement, &c. may do wrong to the other, nor the determination of time be left at large, it is to be taken according to the just judgment of the law. A deed dated the 20th day of August to hold from the day of the date, shall be construed to begin on the 21st day of August but if it be the habentium it be to hold from the making, or from thenceforth, it shall begin on the day delivered. 1 Inst. 46. 5 Rep. 1 If an indenture of lease dated the 4th day of July, made for three years from thenceforth, be delivered at four of the clock in the afternoon of the said 4th day of July, the lease shall end the 3d day of July in the third year. and the law in this computation rejects all fractions or divisions of the day See Day, Month, Year, Time, Age, &c. &c.

Computation of miles after the English manner, is allowing 5280 feet, or 1760 yards to each mile; and the same shall be reckoned not by straight lines, as a bird or arrow may fly, but according to the nearest and most usual way. Co. Eliz. 212 See M^{ile}.

COMPUISO, Lat] A writ to compel a bailiff, receiver or accountant, to yield up his accounts it is founded on the statute of H^{en} 2 cap 12. And also lies against guardians, &c. Reg. Orig. 135

CONCEALERS, concelatores, to call a concelator, as men a concealer, by an affidavit] Such as were used to find out concealed lands, i. e. such lands as are privately kept from the King by concealment, having nothing to shew for their title or estate therein See Stat. 39 E² cap 22 There are also concealers of crimes, and as to concealing the son, &c. see title Mystification

CONCESSI, I ha^e granted, A word of frequent use in conveyance, creating a covenant in law, and he (I have given,) makes a warranty Co. Lit. 384. This word is of a general extent, and said to amount to a grant, settlement, lease and release, &c. 2 Vautin 96.

CONCIONATORES, Common-council men, free-men, called to the hall or assembly, as 1 B^o 202 — Quidam inter eos concionatores apud London, &c. H^{ist} Hen² cap 16, &c. 46

CONCLUSION, conclusio] Is when a man by his own act upon record hath charged himself with a duty or other thing, or confessed any matter whereby he shall be concluded as if a sheriff returns that he hath taken the body upon capias, and hath not the body in court at the day of the return of the writ, by this return, the sheriff is concluded from plea of escape, &c. Terms de Ley. In another sense, this word conclusion signifies the end of any plea, replication, &c. and a plea to the writ is to conclude to the writ; a plea in bar, to conclude to the action, &c. See title Pleading — And as to the conclusion of Deeds, see title Deeds

CONCORD, concordia] Is an agreement made between two or more, upon a trespass committed; and is divided into Concord executory and Concord executed. Plowd. 5, 6, 8 These concords and agreements are by way of satisfaction for the trespass, &c. See titles Accord, Satisfaction.

Concord is also an agreement between parties, who intend the levying of a fine of lands one to the other, how and in what manner the lands shall pass it is the foundation and substance of the fine, taken and acknowledged by the party before one of the judges of C^o B. or by commissioners in the country. See title Fine

CONCUBARIA, A fold, pen, or place where cattle lie Co. B.

CONCUBERANT, Lying together Stat. 1 H⁷ cap 6.

CONCUBINAGE, concupiscentia] In common acceptance the keeping of a harlot or concubine but in a legal sense, it is used as an exception against her that sue for dower, alleging thereby that she was not a wife lawfully married to the party, in whose land she seeks to be endowed, but his concubine But c 107 B^o lib 4 tract. 6 cap 8 There was a concupiscentia allowed in Scripture to the Patriarchs, secundum legem naturalem, &c. Bloint.

These are otherwise called bars and lighthouses, directors and guiders. See Stat. 1 Jac¹ c 23

CONDITION.

Conditio] A restraint annexed to a thing so that by the non performance, the party to it shall receive prejudice and loss, and by the performance, commodity and advantage. It is a restriction of one's acts, qualifying or suspending the force, and making them uncertain whether they shall take effect or not. Also it is defined to be what is referred to an uncertain chance, which may happen or not happen 11^o 2 part 1. lib 2 fol 156

A Conditio is also defined to be a kind of law or bridle, annexed to one's act, serving to suspend the force, and making it uncertain whether it shall take effect or not it is a condition of equality, annexed to an act which either, at the option of the party, or by an effect, &c. may be created, defeated, or changed, upon an event in even. This differs from a limitation, which is the bound or compulsion of an estate, or the condition which shall continue 35^o 2 part 117. See title Limitation

A condition may be also considered as one of the terms upon which a grant may be made, in this sense a condition in a deed is a lais of condition on the happening of which the estate granted may be defeated. 2 Comm 239

CONDITION I. a.

Of Conditions there are divers kinds, viz. conditions in deed, or express; and in law, or implied; conditions precedent, and subsequent; conditions inherent, and collateral, &c.

A Condition in a deed or express, is that which is joined by express words to a feoffment, lease, or other grant; as if a man makes a lease of lands to another, reserving a rent to be paid at such a feast, upon condition if the lessee fail in payment, at the day, then it shall be lawful for the lessor to enter. Condition in law or implied is when a person grants another an office, as that of keeper of a park, steward, bailiff, &c. for term of life; here, though there be no condition expressed in the grant, yet the law makes one; which is, if the grantee do not justly execute all things belonging to the office, it shall be lawful for the grantor to enter and discharge him of his office, Lit. lib. 3 c. 5.

Condition Precedent is when a lease or estate is granted to one for life, upon condition that if the lessee pay to the lessor a certain sum at such a day, then he shall have fee simple; in this case the condition precedes the estate in fee, and on performance thereof gains the fee-simple. Condition subsequent is when a man grants to another his manor of Dole, &c. in fee, upon condition that the grantee shall pay to him at such a day such a certain sum, or that his estate shall cease: here the condition is subsequent, and following the estate, and upon the performance thereof continues and preserves the same: so that a condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or estate made upon condition by the performance of it; as a condition subsequent keeps and continues the estate by the performance of the condition. 1 Inst. 201, 327: Terms de Ley. If one agree with another to do such an act, and for the doing thereof the other shall pay to much money; here the doing the act is a condition precedent to the payment of the money, and the party shall not be compelled to pay till the act is done: but where a day is appointed for the payment of money, which day happens before the thing contracted for can be performed, there the money may be recovered before the thing is done; for here it appears that the party did not intend to make the performance of the thing a condition precedent. 3 Salk. 95. See post, I, IV.

Inherent Conditions are such as descend to the heir with the land granted, &c.

A Collateral Condition is that which is annexed to any collateral act.

Conditions are likewise affirmative, which consist of doing, negative, and consist of not doing: some are further said to be restrictive, for not doing a thing: and some compulsory, as that the lessee shall pay the rent, &c.

Also some conditions are single, to do one thing only; some copulative, to do divers things; and others disjunctive, where one thing of several is required to be done. Co. Lit. 201.—See further Shep. Touch. 117, &c.

As to certain estates on condition expressed or implied, See more particularly titles Mortgage, Statute-Merchant, Elegit.

Among these several kinds of conditions, the cases which most frequently occur fall under the distinctions of conditions precedent and subsequent. We shall therefore speak of them more at large under the following divisions; wherein shall be considered; in the first place, generally,

I. 1. Of Estates on Conditions implied; and 2. On Condition expressed.—Then more particularly,

II. To what Conditions may be annexed: what Conditions are good: and by what Words they may be created.

III. What shall be a good Performance of a Condition: and in what Manner the Breach of it may be taken Advantage of.

IV. Of Conditions precedent and subsequent.

I. 1. Estates upon condition implied in law, are where a grant of an estate has a condition annexed to it inseparably, from its essence and constitution; although no condition be expressed in words. As if a grant be made to a man of an office, generally, without adding other words; the law tacitly annexes hereto a secret condition, that the grantee shall duly execute his office; (Lit. § 378;) on breach of which condition it is lawful for the grantor, or his heirs, to oust him, and grant to another person. Lit. § 379 For, an office, either public or private, may be forfeited by mis-user or non-user, both of which are breaches of this implied condition.—By mis use or abuse: as if a judge takes a bribe, or a park-keeper kills deer without authority. By non-user, or neglect; which in public offices, that concern the administration of justice, or the Common-wealth, is of itself a direct and immediate cause of forfeiture; but non user of a private office is no cause of forfeiture, unless some special damage is proved to be occasioned thereby. Co. Lit. 233. For in the one case delay must necessarily be occasioned in the affairs of the public, which require a constant attention: but, private offices not requiring so regular and unintermitted a service, the temporary neglect of them is not necessarily productive of mischief, upon which account some special loss must be proved, in order to vacate these. Franchises also, being regal privileges in the hands of a subject, are held to be granted on the same condition of making a proper use of them, and therefore they may be lost and forfeited, like offices either by abuse or by neglect. 9 Rep. 50.

Upon the same principle proceed all the forfeitures which are given by law of life estates and others; for any acts done by the tenant himself, that are incompatible with the estate which he holds. As if tenant for life or years enfeoff a stranger in fee-simple: this, is, by the Common law, a forfeiture of then several estates; being a breach of the condition which the law annexes thereto, viz. that they shall not attempt to create a greater estate than they themselves are entitled to. Co. Lit. 215. So if any tenants for years, for life, or in fee, commit a felony; the King or other lord of the fee is entitled to have their tenements, because their estate is determined by the breach of the condition, “that they shall not commit felony” which the law tacitly annexes to every feudal donation.

2. An estate on condition expressed in the grant itself, is, where an estate is granted either in fee-simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged or be defeated, upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition. Co. Lit. 201.

These conditions are therefore either precedent or subsequent. Precedent are such as must happen or be performed before the estate can vest or be enlarged; subsequent are such, by the failure or non-performance of which an estate already vested, may be defeated. Thus, if an estate for life be limited to A upon his marriage with B, the marriage is a precedent condition, and till that happens no estate is vested in A. Shov. P. C. 83, &c.—Or if a man grant to his lessee for years, that upon payment of an hundred marks within the term he shall have the fee, this also is a condition precedent, and the fee simple passeth not till the hundred marks be paid, Co. Litt. 217.—But if a man grant an estate in fee simple, reserving to himself and his heirs a certain rent, and that, if such rent be not paid at the times limited, it shall be lawful for him or his heirs to re enter, and avoid the estate: in this case the grantee and his heirs have an estate upon condition subsequent, which is defeasible, if the condition be not strictly performed Litt. § 325. See post. IV.

To this class may also be referred all base fees and fee simples conditional at the common law. Thus an estate to a man and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale, is an estate on condition that he and his heirs continue tenants of that manor. And so, if a personal annuity be granted at this day to a man and the heirs of his body; as this is no tenement within the statute of West. 2. it remains as at common law, a fee simple on condition that the grantee has heirs of his body. Upon the same principle depend all determinable estates of freehold, as durante viduitate, &c. These are estates upon condition that the grantee do not marry and the like. And, on the breach of any of these subsequent conditions by the failure of the contingencies, by the grantee not continuing tenant of the manor of Dale, by not having heirs of his body: or by not continuing sole, the estates which were respectively vested in each grantee are wholly determined and void.

A distinction is however made between a condition in deed and a limitation, which Littleton § 380, 1 Inst. 234, denominates also a condition in law. For when an estate is so expressly confined and limited by the words of its creation, that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail, this is denominated a limitation: as when land is granted to a man so long as he is parson of Dale, or while he continues unmarried, or *until out of the rents and profits he have made 500*l. and the like, in such case the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens; (when he ceases to be parson, marries a wife, or has received the 500*l.*) and the next subsequent estate, which depends upon such determination, becomes immediately vested, without any act to be done by him who is next in expectancy. See 10 Rep. 41.—But when an estate is, strictly speaking, upon condition in deed (as if granted expressly upon condition to be void upon the payment of 40*l.* by the grantor, or so that the grantee continues unmarried, or provided he goes to York, &c.) the law permits it to endure beyond the time when such contingency happens, unless the grantor, or his heirs or assigns take advantage of the breach of the condition, and make either an entry or a claim, in order to avoid the estate. Litt. § 347 Stat. 3 Hen. VI. c. 34. See 10 Rep. 42. Yet, though strict words of condition be used in the creation of the estate, if on breach of the condition the estate be limited over to a third person, and does not immediately revert to the grantor or his representatives; (as if an estate be granted by A. to B. on condition that within two years B. intermarry with C.

and on failure thereof, then to D. and his heirs;) this the law construes to be a limitation and not a condition: 1 Vent. 202; because if it were a condition, then, upon the breach thereof, only A. or his representatives could avoid the estate by entry, and so D.'s remainder might be defeated by their neglecting to enter; but, when it is a limitation, the estate of B. determines, and that of D. commences, and he may enter on the lands, the instant that the failure happens. So also, if a man by his will devise lands to his heir at law, on condition that he pays a sum of money, and for non-payment, devise it over, this shall be considered as a limitation; otherwise no advantage could be taken of the non-payment, for none but the heir himself could have entered for a breach of condition. Cro. Eliz. 205; 1 Roll. 116. 411.

In all these instances, of limitations or conditions subsequent, it is to be observed, that so long as the condition either express or implied, either in deed or in law, remains unbroken, the grantee may have an estate of freehold; provided the estate upon which such condition is annexed be in itself of a freehold nature; as if the original grant express either an estate of inheritance, or for life, or no estate at all, which is constructively an estate for life. For the breach of these conditions being contingent and uncertain, this uncertainty preserves the freehold. Co. Litt. 42; because the estate is capable to last for ever, or at least for the life of the tenant, supposing the condition to remain unbroken. But where the estate is at the utmost, a chattel interest, which must determine at a time certain, and may determine sooner (as a grant for ninety-nine years, provided A. B. and C. or the survivor of them, shall so long live) this still continues a mere chattel and is not, by such its uncertainty, ranked among estates of freehold.

These express conditions, if they be impossible at the time of their creation, or afterwards become impossible by the act of God or the act of the feoffor himself, or if they be contrary to law, or repugnant to the nature of the estate, are void. In any of which cases, if they be conditions subsequent, that is, to be performed after the estate is vested, the estate shall become absolute in the tenant. As if a feoffment be made to a man in fee simple, on condition, that unless he goes to Rome in twenty-four hours; or unless he marries with A. B. by such a day; (within which time the woman dies, or the feoffor marries her himself) or unless he kills another; or in case he aliens in fee; that then and in any of such cases the estate shall be vacated and determine: here the condition is void, and the estate made absolute in the feoffee. For he hath by the grant the estate vested in him, which shall not be defeated afterwards, by a condition either impossible, illegal, or repugnant. Co. Litt. 206. But if the condition be precedent, or to be performed before the estate vests, as a grant to a man that, if he kills another or goes to Rome in a day, he shall have an estate in fee; here, the void condition being precedent, the estate which depends thereon is also void, and the grantee shall take nothing by the grant: for he hath no estate until the condition be performed. Ibid. 2 Comm. 152—7.

II. Conditions may be annexed to any estate, whether in fee simple, fee tail, for life or years: they run with the estate, and bind in the hands of whomsoever they come. Litt. Rep. 128. But a condition may not be made but

but on the part of the lessor, donor, &c. for no man may annex a condition to an estate, but he that doth create the estate itself. Conditions are good to enlarge or limit estates: There are four incidents, which conditions to create and increase an estate ought to have. 1. They should have a particular estate, as a foundation whereupon the increase of the greater estate shall be built. 2. Such particular estate shall continue in the lessee or grantee, until the increase happens. 3. It must vest at the time the contingency happens, or it shall never vest. 4. The particular estate and increase must take effect by the same deed, or by several deeds delivered at the same time. 8 Rep. 75.

Conditions to create estates shall be favourably construed: but conditions which tend to destroy, or restrain an estate, are to be taken strictly. A feoffment upon condition, that the feoffee shall not alien, is void: but a condition in a feoffment not to alien for a particular time, or to a particular person, may be good. Hib. 13. 261. And if a condition is, that tenant in tail shall not alien in fee, &c. or tenant for life or years not alien during the term, these conditions are good: where the reversion of an estate is in the donor, he may restrain an alienation by condition. 10 Rep. 39: 1 Inst. 222. If one make a gift in tail, on condition that the donee or his heirs shall not alien, this is good to some intents, and void to others: for if he make a feoffment in fee, or any other estate by which the reversion is discontinued tortiously, the donor may enter; but it is otherwise if he suffer a common recovery. 1 Inst. 223.

A liberty inseparable from an estate cannot be restrained; and therefore a condition that a tenant in tail shall not levy a fine, within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24, or suffer a recovery; or not make a lease within the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 36, is void and repugnant. But if the condition restrain levying a fine at common law, it may be good. 2 Danv. Abr. 22. A gift in tail, or in fee, upon condition that a feme shall not be endowed; or baron be tenant by the curtesy, is repugnant and void. So is a condition in a lease, &c. that the lessee shall not take the profits: and where a man grants a rent-charge out of land, provided it shall not charge the lands. Co. Litt. 146.

Conditions repugnant to the estate, impossible, &c. are void: and if they go before the estate, the estate and condition are void; if to follow it, the estate is absolute, and the condition void. 1 Inst. 206: 9 Rep. 128. But if at the time of entering into a condition, a thing be possible to be done and become afterwards impossible by the act of God, the estate of a feoffee (created by livery) shall not be avoided. 2 Mut. 204. See ante I. 2.

Where a condition is of two parts, one possible, and the other not so, it is a good condition for performing that part which is possible. Cro. Eliz. 780. Though if a condition is of two parts conjunctive, and one part becomes impossible, by the act of God, the person bound is not obliged to perform the other. 1 Rel. Abr. 446. l. 45: 2 Mut. 202, 203. If a condition be in the copulative, and is not possible to be performed, it is said it may be taken in the disjunctive. 1 Danv. Abr. 73.

Where an estate is to be wholly created upon a condition impossible to be performed, there the estate shall never come in esse. 1 Leon. c. 311. A woman makes a feoffment to a man that is married, upon condition that he shall marry her; this condition is not impossible, for the man's wife may die, and then he may marry her. 2 Danv. 25. A reversion may be granted in tail upon condition, that if the grantee pays so much, he shall have the fee. 8 Rep. 73. But if a man grants lands, &c. for years, upon condition that if the lessee pay 20s. within one year, that he shall have it for life: and that if he after the year pay 20s. he shall have the fee; though both sums are paid, he shall have but an estate for life: the estate for life, at the time of the grant, being only in contingency, and a possibility cannot increase upon a possibility, nor can the fee increase upon the estate for years. 8 Rep. 75.

If a lease be made to two, with condition to raise a fee, and one dies, the survivor may perform the condition, and have the fee; but if they make partition, the condition is destroyed. 8 Rep. 75, 76. If a feoffee grant the reversion of part of the land, on a lease for years, on which a rent upon condition is reserved, all the condition is confounded and gone; though if the lessee assign part, the condition remains, for he cannot discharge the estate of the condition. 2 Danv. Abr. 119. A man makes a feoffment upon condition, and after levies a fine to a stranger, the condition is gone. Ibid. 120. If a feoffee upon condition to infeoff another, infeoff a stranger; or if it be to re-infeoff the feoffor, and he grant the land to another person, upon condition to perform the condition, the condition is broken, because the feoffee hath disabled himself to do it: so where such feoffee, upon condition to re-infeoff, &c. takes a wife, that the land is subject to the dower of the wife; and so if the land is recovered, and execution sued out by another, the condition is broken. Co. Litt. 221: 1 Danv. 79.

If one disseise the feoffee, or any other who hath land by just title, and thereof infeoff a stranger on condition, and the land is lawfully recovered from him that hath the title; by this the condition is destroyed: and if a disseisor make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and after the disseisee doth enter upon the feoffee, this doth extinguish the condition. Perk. fect. 821. If the feoffee makes a feoffment of all or part of the land to the feoffor, before the condition is broken; the condition is gone forever: and if he make a lease for life or years only, then the condition will be suspended for that time. Co. Litt. 218. But it is otherwise where the feoffment or lease for life or years, are made to any other but the feoffor. Ibid. Where the condition of a feoffment is, that if the feoffor or his heir pay a certain sum of money to the feoffee such a day, and before that day the feoffor dieth without heir or if the feoffment be made by a woman on condition to pay her 10l. or that the feoffee infeoff her by a certain day, and they intermarry before the day, and the marriage doth continue till after it; in these cases the condition is gone. Perk. fect. 763, 764.

A condition that would take away the whole effect of a grant is void; and so it is if it be contrary to the express words of it. Conditions against law are void; but what may be prohibited by law, may be prohibited by deed. 1 Inst. 206, 220. He that taketh an estate in remainder, is bound by condition in a deed, though he doth not seal it.

Conditions in restraint of marriage have not generally been favoured, as contrary to sound policy; but where a legacy has been given over to another, there the condition has always been held good; and it seems that such conditions, sons as only reasonably restrain children from imprudent marriages will be always supported.—That is to say, where they operate only as particular, not as universal restrictions. In the case of Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. R. 431, &c. it was determined after very long arguments, that a condition annexed to a legacy, that the legatee should not marry under twenty-one, without consent of her mother, (or rather that the legacy should vest previous to twenty-one, if the legatee married with such consent,) was a valid condition.—And upon marriage without such consent, it was determined to go to the mother under a gift of a general residue—See the first paragraph of Div. III. of this title.—And the cases of Peyton v. Bury, 2 P. Wms. 626, and the following cases cited in Mr. Cox's note there, viz. Bellasis v. Ermine, 1 C. C. 22; Fry v. Porter, 1 C. Bingham*, 3 Atk. 314; 1 Willf. 137; Long v. Davis, 4 Burr. 2052; Hemings v. Munchley, 1 Bro. C. R. 303.—That where a legacy is given on consideration that the legatee should not marry without consent, and there is no devise over, the condition is void, See 4 Burr. 2055; Com. Rep. 739, and the cases there cited.—The case of Scott v. Tyler above-mentioned, and Amos v. Horner, 1 Eq. Ab. 112, p. 9, have determined that a bequest of the residue, notwithstanding some contradictory authorities, is equivalent to a limitation over; where the condition is precedent and never performed.—As to the invalidity of a legacy in perfect restraint of marriage see Knapp v. Nevers, Amb. 662; and Elton v. Elton, 1 Willf. 159. And the rule of the ecclesiastical law is, that where a portion is given in consideration that a daughter should never marry, the condition is void, Savinb.—See also Rosi's notes on Com. Rep. 728, and the cases there cited; and at large on this subject, Fonblaque's Treatise of Equity i. 245, &c. and this Dict. title Marriage.

The word "If" will not always make a condition; but sometimes it makes a limitation, as where a lease is made for years, if A. B. lives so long. And this is contrary to a condition; for a stranger may take advantage of an estate determined thereby, &c. Co. Lit. 236; Dyer 300. Sub conditione is the most proper word to make a condition: proviso is as good a word, when not dependant upon another sentence; but in some cases, the word proviso may make no condition, but be only a qualification or explanation of a covenant. 2 Danv. 1, 2. And neither the word proviso, nor any other, makes a condition, unless it is restrictive. Plowd. 34; 1 Nelf. 466.

Regularly the word "for" does not import a condition, though it has the force of a condition when the thing granted is executory, and the consideration of the grant is a service, or some such thing, for which there is no remedy; but the stopping the thing granted; as in the case of an annuity granted pro consilio, or for executing the office of a steward of a court, or the service of a captain or keeper of a fort, here the failure of giving counsel, or performing the service, is a kind of eviction of that which is to be done for the annuity, the grantor having no means either to exact the counsel, or recompence for it, but by stopping the annuity; and in these cases the condition is not precedent, and therefore the performance thereof need not be averred when the annuity is demanded. Per Hobart Ch. J. Hob. 41. Mich. 10 Jac. in the case of Cowper v. Andewes.

As the intent of the testator chiefly governs in wills, such construction is always made of the words, as will best support his intent, and therefore these words ad faciendum, faciundo, ea intentione, ad effectum, &c. in a will create a condition. Co. Lit. 204 a. See titles Devise, Will.

A grant to one to the intent he shall do so and so, is no condition, but a trust and confidence. Dyer 138. Some words in a lease do not make a condition but a covenant, upon which the lessor may bring his action. A lease being the deed of lessor and lessee, every word is spoken by both; and a condition may be therein, though it sounds in covenant. 1 Nelf. 464. A covenant not to grant, sell, &c. may be a condition; and covenant that, paying the rent, the lessee shall enjoy the land, is conditional. 2 Danv. 2. 6. Where words are indefinite, and proper to denote an estate, they shall be taken to have the force of a condition. Palm 503.

III. A condition may be well performed, when it is done as near to the intent as may be: for if the condition of a feoffment be that the feoffee shall make an estate back to the feoffor and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor; in this case, if the feoffor die before, the estate shall be made to the wife without impeachment of waste, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the wife, &c. Co. Lit. 219; 8 Rep. 69. If a condition be performed in substance and effect, it is good although it differs in words; as where it is to deliver letters-patent, and the party bound having lost them, delivers an exemplification, &c. 2 Danv. 40. Though payment of the money before the day, is payment at the day, in performance of a condition; yet a feoffor, &c. cannot re-enter, and revest his old estate by force of the condition, till the day whereon the condition gives him power to re-enter. Ibid. 121. If a man seised of land in right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee on condition, and dies; if the heir of the feoffor enters for the condition broken, and defeats the feoffment, his estate vanishes, and presently it is vested in the wife. Co. Lit. 202. And if a person seised of land, as heir on the part of his mother, makes a feoffment on condition and dieth; though the heir on the part of the father, who is heir at Common law, may enter for the condition broken, the heir of the part of the mother shall enter upon him, and enjoy the land. Ibid. 12.

Where there is a condition in a feoffment or lease, that if no distress can be found, the feoffor, &c. shall re-enter; if the place is not open to the distress, as if there be only a cupboard in the house, which is locked, &c. it is all one as if there was no distress there, and the feoffor, &c. may enter. 2 Danv. 46. When a rent is to be paid upon condition at a certain day, the lessor cannot enter for the condition broken, before demand of the rent. Ibid. 98. And the lessor ought to demand the rent at the day, or the condition shall not be broken by the non-payment of the rent. A re-entry may be given on a feoffment, feoffment, &c. though none be reserved: if one make a lease for life or feoffment upon condition, that if the feoffee or lessee does such an act, the estate shall be void: now although the estate cannot be void before entry, this is a good condition, and shall give an entry to the lessor, &c. by implication. 1 Roll. Abr. 408. A lease for life on condition, being a freehold, cannot cease without entry; but if it be a lease for years, the lease is void ipso facto, on breach of the condition without any entry. 1 Inst. 214. If a lease for years is, that, on breach of the condition, the term shall cease, the term is ended without entry; but where the words are, that the lease shall be void, it is otherwise. Cro. Car. 511: 3 Rep. 64. Regularly, where one will take advantage of a condition, if he may enter, he must do it; and if he cannot enter, he must make a claim. Co. Lit. 218. Where on condition broken, lessor brings an assumpsit, entry is not necessary; if tenant defends, he is bound by the rule, to confess entry.

No one can reserve the power or benefit of re-entry, on breach of a condition to any other but himself, his heirs, executors, &c. parties and privies, in right and representation: privies in law, grantees of reversions, &c. are to have no advantage by it. But by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 23. Grantees of reversions may take advantage against lessors, &c. by action. 1 Inst. 214, 215: Plowd. 175. Where one doth enter for a condition broken, it generally makes the estate void ab initio, and the party comes in of his first estate; and he shall have the land in the same manner it was when he parted with it; and his possession at the time of making the condition; therefore he shall avoid all subsequent charges on the lands. 4 Rep. 120: Plowd. 186: Co. Lit. 233. If one enters on a condition performed, he shall avoid all incumbrances upon the land after the condition made: and a condition when broken, or performed, &c. will defeat the whole estate. So that if there be a lease for life, remainder in fee, on condition that the lessee for life shall pay 20*l.* to the lessor; if he pay not this money, the estate in remainder will be avoided also. Dyer 127: 8 Rep. 90. But this may be otherwise by special limitation to an use: and if tenant for life, and he in remainder join in a feoffment on condition, that if, &c. then the tenant for life shall re-enter, this may be good without defeating the whole estate; though regularly a condition may not avoid part of an estate, and leave another part entire, nor can the estate be void as to some persons, and good as to others. 8 Rep. 150: 1 Inst. 214.

Lessee for life makes a feoffment on condition, and enters for the condition broken; by this he shall be re-entred to his estate for life, and reduce the reversion to the lessor; and the rent due to the lessor shall be revived: but in this case the lessee will not be in the same course as he was before, for his estate is subject to a forfeiture, though he be tenant for life still. Roll. 474: Shep. Abr. 405.

Tenants by the curtesy, tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, tenant in dower, for life, or years, &c. hold their estates subject to a condition in law, not to grant a greater estate than they have, nor to commit waste, &c. 1 Inst. 233. And estates made by deed to infants, and feme covert, upon condition, shall bind them, because the charge is on the land. 2 Dowr. 30. A release of all a man's right may be upon condition; a lessee may surrender upon condition; a contract may be upon condition, &c. But a parson cannot resign upon condition, any more than be admitted upon condition: and a condition cannot be released on condition. 9 Rep. 85.

No person shall defeat any estate of freehold upon condition without shewing the deed wherein the condition is contained: but of chattels real or personal, &c. a man may plead that such grants or leases were made upon condition without shewing the deeds; and in the case of a condition to avoid a freehold, though it may not be pleaded without the deed, it may be given in evidence to a jury, and they may find the matter at large. Lit. 374: 5 Rep. 40. A condition may be apportioned by act of law, or of the lessee. 4 Rep. 120. But a man cannot by his own act divide, or apportion a condition, which goes to the destruction of an estate. 1 Nelf. Abr. 474. A condition in a will is a thing odious in law, which shall not be created without sufficient words. 2 Lev. 40. A devise to the heir at law, provided he pay to A. B. 20*l.* is a void condition, because there is no person to take advantage of the non-performance. 1 Lutw. 797. Yet conditional devises, as well of lands as of goods, are allowed by our law, and not being performed, the heir or executors shall take advantage of them. 1 Nelf. 467.

Where there are negative and affirmative conditions, the pleader must shew, not only that he has not broke the negative ones, but also that he has performed the affirmative ones. Fletcher v. Richardson, Hardw. 322.

As to relief against the breach of conditions. Some say that in all cases of penalty or forfeiture that lie in compensation, Equity will relieve; for where they can make compensation, no harm is done. So that although an express time be appointed for the performance of a condition, the judge may, after that day is past, allow a reasonable space to the party, making reparation for the damage, if it be not very great, nor the substance of the covenant destroyed by it. See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. i. 337, and the cases there cited.

The substantial distinction which governs the interference of Courts of Equity in cases of conditions broken, is not whether the condition be precedent or subsequent, but whether compensation can or cannot be made: and therefore, where A. conveyed lands to B. &c. upon trust, that if C. the son of A. within six months after the death of A. should secure to trustees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after such security given to convey to C. and his heirs; and until the time for giving such security in trust for the eldest son of C. and in default of such security, to convey to such eldest son and his heirs; C. died before such security given: yet this condition precedent being only in the nature of a penalty, the intent of the trust shall be regarded, which was to secure 500*l.* to the younger children. 1 Wils. v. Crjmes, 1 C. C. 89: See Cheswick v. B. Howell, Finch. 173: Pitcairne v. Birse, Fin. b. 403: Woodman v. Blake, 2 Fenn. 222: Bartie v. Falkland, 2 Fenn. 359: Heyward v. Abrell, 1 Eqn. 222: Bland v. M'dilton, 2 C. C. 1: Francis's Machine, p. 49.

But though Equity will, under some circumstances, relieve against the breach of a condition precedent, where damages are certain; yet it seems, that they will not where the damages accrued are contingent, and cannot be estimated. Sweet v. Anderson, 5 Fin. 93. pl. 15. See Treatise of Equity, pp. 209, 37, 391.

CONDITION IV.

IV. There are no precise technical words required in a deed, to make a stipulation a condition precedent or subsequent; neither does it depend on the circumstance whether the clause is placed prior or posterior in the deed, so that it operates as a proviso or covenant; for the same words have been construed to operate as either the one or the other according to the nature of the transaction, per Ashburnst Justice, 1 Term Rep. 645.—Further, as to the nature of conditions precedent and subsequent, See 3 Atk. 364: 2 P. Wms. 419, 626: 1 Vern. 83: 3 C. C. 130: 3 Lev. 132: Framm on Cont. Rem.: 2 Burr. 899: 4 Burr. 1930: 1 Will. 105, 136: 2 Bro. C. R. 67: and Ib. 431, 489, as to a condition annexed to a legacy, that the legatee should marry with consent of her mother, which was held to be valid. In 1 Eq. Ab. 108, it is said that conditions precedent are such as are annexed to estates, and must be punctually performed before the estate can vest. A condition subsequent, is when the estate is executed; but the continuance of such estate depends on the breach or performance of the condition. The two most material points of discussion respecting the doctrine and different operations at law, and in equity, of conditions precedent and subsequent arise, 1. From cases where conditions are annexed to devises, making them void on the marriage of the devisee without consent: See ante II. and title Marriage: And 2. From cases arising on the vesting of portions and legacies made payable at a future time. See titles Devise, Legacy, Portions.

Conditions precedent are such as must be punctually performed before the estate can vest; but on a condition subsequent, the estate is immediately executed: yet the continuance of such estate dependeth on the breach or performance of the condition. Co. Lit. 218: Eq. Abr. 108. As if I grant, that if A. will go to such a place, about my business, that he shall have such an estate, or that he shall have 10*l.* &c. this is a condition precedent. 1 Rel. Abr. 414. So if I retain a man for 40*s.* to go with me to Rome, this is a condition precedent, for the duty commences by going to Rome. 1 Rel. Abr. 914. So if a man, by will devises certain legacies, and then devises all the residue of his estate to his executor, after debts, legacies, &c. paid and discharged, this is a condition precedent; so that the executor cannot have the residue of the estate before the debts and legacies are discharged. 1 Rel. Abr. 415: 1 Jones 327: Cro. Car. 335.

But if a man devises a term to A. and that if his wife suffers the devisee to enjoy it for three years, that she shall have all his goods as executrix; but if she disturbs A. then he makes B. executor, and dies, his wife is executrix presently; for though in grants the estate shall not vest till the condition precedent is performed, yet it is otherwise in a will, which must be guided by the intent of the parties; and this shall not be construed as a condition precedent, but only as a condition to abridge the power of being executrix, if she perform it not. Cro. Eliz. 219.

Where the one promise is the consideration of the other, and where the performance and not the promise is, must be gathered from the words and nature of the agreement, and depends intirely thereupon; for, if there was a positive promise that one should release his equity of redemption, and on the other side, that the other would pay 7*l.* then the one might bring his action without any averment of performance; but where the agreement is, that the plaintiff should release his equity of redemption, in consideration whereof the defendant was to pay him 7*l.* (so that the release is the consideration, and therefore, being executory, it is a condition precedent, which must be averred. 12 Mod. 455, 460. Thorp v. Thorp.)

If there be a day set for the payment of money, or doing the thing which one promises, agrees or covenants to do for another thing, and that day happens to incur before the time, the thing for which the promise, agreement or covenant is made, is to be performed by the tenor of the agreement; there, though the words be, that the party shall pay the money, or do the thing for such a thing, or in consideration of such a thing; after the day is past the other shall have action for the money, or other thing, though the thing for which the promise, agreement, or covenant was made, be not performed; for it would be repugnant there to make it a condition precedent; and therefore they are in that case left to mutual remedies, on which, by the express words of the agreement, they have depended. Per Holt Ch. Justice. 12 Mod. 461: Pasch. 13 W. 3. Thorp v. Thorp.

M. agrees to give A. so much for the use of a coach and horses for a year, and A. agreed further with M. to keep the coach in repair; it was averred the coach and horses were delivered to M. but nothing of the repair; and Holt Ch. Justice held upon this evidence, that repairing was not a condition precedent, and therefore need not be averred. Per Holt Ch. Justice at Guildhall, and judgment pro quacunte. 12 Mod. 503: Pasch. 13 Will. 3. Atkinson v. Morris.

But if the agreement had been that A. had agreed to give M. a coach and horses for a year, and to repair the coach, and that for that M. promised so much money, then the repairing had been a condition precedent necessary to be averred. Per Holt Ch. Justice. 12 Mod. 503: Pasch. 13 W. 3. in S. C.

Condition that A. shall do, and for the doing B. shall pay, is a condition precedent, but time fixed for payment will verify the condition; per Holt Ch. Justice. 1 Salk. 171. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. B. R. Thorp v. Thorp.—See this Dist. title Award.

If A. makes a lease for five years to B. upon condition, that if B. pays him 10*l.* within two years, that then he shall have a fee-simple in the lands, and make livery and seisin to B. this passes the freehold immediately, and B. has a fee conditional; because if the freehold was not to vest in B. till the condition performed, it would be difficult to determine in whom the freehold lay; for conditions may be inserted in such deeds as are perfected privately, which might prove greatly prejudicial to strangers. Lit. sect. 350: Co. Lit. 216, 217.

But in case of a lease for life, with such a condition, the freehold passes not before the condition performed; because the livery may presently work upon the freehold. But if a man grants an advowson, &c. (which lie in grant) for years, upon such condition, the grantee shall have no fee till the condition performed. Co. Lit. 217.

If A. leases to B. for years, upon condition, that if B. pays money to A. or his heirs, at a day, that B. shall have the fee, and before the day A. is attainted of treason and executed; now though the condition became impossible by the act and offence of A. yet B. shall not have a fee, because a precedent condition to increase an estate must be performed; and if it becomes impossible, no estate shall rise. Co. Lit. 210. Alto in equity, with respect respect to conditions precedent and subsequent, the prevailing distinction seems to be, to relieve against the breach or non-performance, not so much whether the condition be precedent or subsequent, as whether a compensation can be made. 1 Fern. 79, 167. As if A. conveys lands to B. &c. and their heirs, upon trust, that if C. the son of A. within six months after the death of A. should secure to the trustees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after such security given, to convey to C. and his heirs, and until the time for giving such security, in trust for the eldest son of C. and in default of such security, to convey to such eldest son and his heirs, if C. dies before any such security given, yet this condition, though precedent, being only in nature of a penalty, the intent of the trust shall be regarded, which was to secure 500*l.* for the younger children. 1 Chan. Ca. 89.

If a feme covert, having power by will to devise lands, devises them to her executors, to pay 500*l.* out of them to her son; provided, that if the father gives not a sufficient release of certain goods to her executors, that then the devise of the 500*l.* should be void, and go to the executors; and after her death a release is tendered to the father, and he refuses, yet upon making the release after, the money shall be paid to the son; for it was said to be the standing rule of the court, that a forfeiture should not bind, where a thing may be done after, or a compensation made for it; as where the condition is to pay money, &c. and though it is generally binding, where there is a devise over, yet here, it being to go to the executors, it is no more than the law implies. 2 Ventr. 252.

CONFEDERACY, confederatio.] Is when two or more combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act. And false confederacy between divers persons shall be punished, though nothing be put in execution; but this confederacy, punishable by law before it is executed, ought to have these incidents; first, it must be declared by some matter of prosecution, as by making of bonds, or promises the one to the other; secondly, it should be malicious, as for unjust revenge; thirdly, it ought to be false against an innocent person; and lastly, it is to be out of court voluntarily. Terms de Ley. Where a writ of conspiracy doth not lie, the confederacy is punishable; and inquiry shall be made of conspirators and confederators, who bind themselves together, &c. See post, title Conspiracy.

Vol. I.

CONFESSION.

CONFESSION, confessio.] Is where a prisoner is indicted of treason or felony, and brought to the bar to be arraigned; and his indictment being read to him, the court demands what he can say thereto; then he either confesses the offence, and the indictment to be true, or pleads Not guilty, &c.

Confession may be made in two kinds, and to two several ends: the one is, that the criminal may confess the offence whereof he is indicted openly in the court, before the judge, and submit himself to the censure and judgment of the law; which confession is the most certain answer, and best satisfaction that may be given to the judge to condemn the offender; so that it proceeds freely of his own accord, without any threats or extremity used; for if the confession arise from any of these causes, it ought not to be recorded: as a woman indicted for the felonious taking of a thing from another, being thereof arraigned, confessed the felony, and said that she did it by commandment of her husband; the judges in pity would not record her confession, but caused her to plead Not guilty to the felony; whereupon the jury found that she did the fact by compulsion of her husband, against her will, for which cause she was discharged. 27 Affix. pl. 50.

The other kind of confession is, when the prisoner confesses the indictment to be true, and that he hath committed the offence whereof he is indicted, and then becomes an approver, or accuser of others, who are guilty of the same offence whereof he is indicted, or other offences with him; and then prays the judge to have a coroner assigned him, to whom he may make relation of those offences and the full circumstances thereof. See title Necessary.

There was also a third sort of confession, formerly made by an offender in felony, not in court before the judge, but before the coroner in a church, or other privileged place, upon which the offender, by the ancient law of the land, was to abjure the realm. 3 Inff. 129.—See title Abjuration.

Confession is likewise in civil cases, where the defendant confesses the plaintiff's action to be good: by which confession there may be a mitigation of a fine against the penalty of a statute; though not after verdict. Finch. 387: 2 Keb. 408.

There is also a confession indirectly implied, as well as directly expressed in criminal cases; as if the defendant, in a case not capital, doth not directly own himself guilty of the crime, but by submitting to a fine owns his guilt; whereupon the judge may accept of his submission to the King's mercy. Lamb. lib. 4. c. 9. By this indirect confession, the defendant shall not be barred to plead Not guilty to an action, &c. for the same fact: the entry of it is, that the defendant puts himself on the King's mercy. And of the direct confession, that he acknowledges the indictment. And this last confession carries with it so strong a presumption of guilt, that being entered on record, on indictment of trespass, it estops the defendant to plead Not guilty to an action brought afterwards against him for the same matter; but such entry of a confession of an indictment of a capital crime, it is said, will not estop a defendant to plead Not guilty to an appeal, it being in case of life. And where a person upon his arraignment actually confesses himself guilty, or unadvisedly discloses the special manner of the fact, supposing that it worth not amount to felony, where it doth; the judges, upon pro-able circumstances, that such confession may proceed from fear, weakness, or ignorance, may refuse such a confession, and suffer the party to plead Not guilty. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 2.

A confession may be received, and the plea of Not guilty be withdrawn, though recorded. Kel. 11. The confession of the defendant, whether taken upon an examination before justices of peace, in pursuance of the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. or 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10, upon an offender's being bailed or committed for felony; or taken by the Common law, upon an examination before a Secretary of State, or other magistrate, for treason or other crimes, is allowed to be given in evidence against the party confessing; but not against others. Also two witnesses of a confession of high treason, upon an examination before a justice of peace, were sufficient to convict the person so confessing, within the meaning of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12, and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 11, which required two witnesses in high treason; unless the offender should willingly confess, &c. But the Stat. 7 & 8. cap. 3, requires two witnesses, except the party shall willingly without violence confess, &c. in open court. 21 ass. P. C. r 46. § 3.—See title Evidence.

It has been held, that wherever a man's confession is made use of against him, it must all be taken together, and not by parcels. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 5. And no confession shall, before final judgment deprive the defendant, of the privilege of taking exceptions in arrest of judgment, to faults apparent in the record. Ibid. c. 32. § 4. A demurrer amounts to a confession of the indictment as laid, so far, that if the indictment be good, judgment and execution shall go against the prisoner. Bro. 86: S. P. C. 150: H. P. C. 246. And in criminal cases, not capital, if the defendant demur to an indictment, &c. whether in abatement, or otherwise, the court will not give judgment against him to answer over, but final judgment. 2 Hawk. c. 32. § 7.—See title Abatement. Where a prisoner confesses the fact, the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him. Confessus in iudicio pro judicato habetur. 11 Rep. 30: 4 Inst. 66.—See further, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32, and this Dict. title Evidence.

CONFESSOR, Lat. confessor, confessorarius.] Hath relation to private confession of sins, in order to absolution: and the priest who received the auricular confession, had the title of confessor, though improperly; for he is rather the confessor, being the person to whom the confession is made. His receiving the confession of a penitent, was in old English to shrove or shrive; whence comes the word beshrived, or looking like a confessed or shrived person, on whom was imposed some uneasy penance. The most solemn time of confessing was the day before Lent, which from thence is still called Shrove-Tuesday. Covel.—See title Papists.

CONFIRMATION, confirmatio, from the verb confirmare, firmum facere.] A conveyance of an estate, or right in esse, that one hath in or to lands, &c. to another that hath the possession thereof, or some estate therein; whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable; or a particular estate is increased, or a possession made perfect. 1 Inst. 275: See Shep. Touch. 311. It is a strengthening of an estate formerly made, which is voidable, though not presently void: as for example; a bishop grants his chancellorship by patent, for term of the patentee's life; this is no void grant, but voidable by the bishop's death, except it be strengthened by the confirmation of the dean and chapter.

Confirmation, is also defined to be the approbation or assent to an estate already created; which as far as is in the confirmer's power, makes it good and valid: so that the confirmation doth not regularly create an estate, but yet such words may be mingled in the confirmation as may create and enlarge an estate: but that is by force of such words as are foreign to the business of confirmation, and by their own force and power, tend to create the estate. Gilb. Ten. 75.

A Confirmation is of a nature nearly allied to a release; the words of making it are these, Have given, granted, ratified, approved, and confirmed. Litt. § 515, 531.

The words dedi & concessi, are as strong as the word confirmavi, for they amount to a grant of the right of the person in possession; and if he has any right, I can never after impeach his estate. Gilb. Ten. 79. See further what words shall enure as a confirmation in Vin. Abr. title Confirmation (X.)

Madex in p. 19. of the Dissert. annexed to the Formul. Angl. says, that most ancient Confirmations made after the conquest, often run like feoffments; and are distinguishable from them, chiefly by some words importing a former feoffment or grant.

In ancient times, when feoffees were frequently disfeised of their lands upon some suggestion or other, charters of confirmation seem to have been in great request. For in the early times after the conquest, so many confirmations may be met with, successively made to the same persons, or their heirs or successors, of the same lands and possessions, that it looks as if they did not think themselves secure in their possessions against the King, or the great lords who were their feoffors, or in whose fees their lands lay, unless they had repeated confirmations, from them, their heirs or successors. And these Confirmations very anciently seem to have been some times made, either by precept or writ from the King, or other lords, to put the feoffees, or their heirs or successors into seisin, after they had been disfeised, or to keep them in their seisin undisturbed, or else by charter of express Confirmation. Shep. Touch. edit. 1791 p. 314. in n. And on this subject of confirmation in general, see Sheppard's whole chapter.

Confirmation, aut est perficiens, crescens aut diminuens. Perficiens, as it feoffee upon condition make a feoffment, and the feoffor confirm the estate of the second feoffee: Crescens, that doth always enlarge the estate of a tenant; as tenant for years, to hold for life, &c. Diminuens, as when the lord of whom the land is holden, confirms the estate of his tenant, to hold by a less rent. 9 Rep. 142.

The lord may diminish the services of his tenant by confirmation; but not reserve new services, so long as the former estate in the tenancy continues: and therefore if he confirm to the tenant, to yield him a hawk, &c. yearly, it is void. Lit. sect. 539: 1 Co. Inst. 296. Leases for years may be confirmed for part of the term, or part of the land, &c. But it is otherwise of an estate of freehold, which being entire, cannot be confirmed for part of the estate. 5 Rep. 81. There may be a confirmation implied by law, as well as express by deed; where the law by construction makes a confirmation of a grant made to another purpose: and a confirmation may enlarge large an estate, from an estate held at will to term of years; or a greater estate; from an estate for years to an estate for life; from an estate for life, to an estate in tail, or in fee; and from an estate in tail to an estate in fee-simple. 1 Inst. 305; 9 Rep. 142; Dyer 253. But if the confirmation be made to lessee for life or years, of his term or estate, and not of the land, this doth not increase the estate, though if the lessor confirm the land, to have and to hold the land to the lessee and his heirs, 'this will enlarge the estate, and so of the rest. Co. Lit. 299; Plowd. 48.

In every good confirmation, there must be a precedent rightful or wrongful estate in him to whom made, or he must have the possession of the thing as a foundation for the confirmation to work upon; the confirmor must have such an estate and property in the land, that he may be thereby enabled to confirm the estate of the confirmee; the precedent estate must continue till the confirmation come, so that the estate to be increased comes into it; and it is required that both these estates be lawful. Co. Lit. 296; 1 Rep. 146; Dyer 109; 5 Rep. 15. If one have common of pasture in another's land, and he confirms the estate of the tenant of the land, nothing passes of the common, but it remains as it was before: so if a man have a rent out of the land, and he doth confirm the estate which the tenant hath in the land, the rent remaineth. Lit. sect. 537.

Tenant for life makes a lease for years to a man, and after leases the land to another person for years; and he in reversion confirms the last lease, and after that the first lease, this is not good: the second lessee hath an interest before by the confirmation of him in reversion. But in a like case, confirmation of the first lease, after the second was confirmed, was held good: for the lease takes no interest by the confirmation, but only to make it durable and effectual. Moor, c. 180; 1 Inst. 296; Plowd. 10.

If a disseisor confirm the land to the disseisor but for one hour, one week, a year, or for life, &c. it is a good confirmation of the estate for ever: and if he confirms the estate of the disseisor without any word of heirs, he hath a fee simple; and if a disseisor make a gift in tail, and the disseisor doth confirm the estate of the donee, it shall enure to the whole estate: also if the disseisor enfeoffs A. and B. and the heirs of B. and the disseisor confirms the estate of B. for his life; this shall extend to his companion, and for the whole fee-simple. Co. Lit. 291, 297, 299.

But where the estate is divided, it is otherwise; as if there be an estate for life, the remainder over, there the confirmation may be of either of the estates: and if the lessee of a disseisor of a lease for twenty years, make a lease for ten years; the disseisor may confirm to one of them, and not to the other. 1 Cro 472; 5 Rep. 81. If a disseisor or any other make a lease for years to begin at a day to come, a confirmation to the lessee before the lease begins will not be good; for there is no estate in him. Co. Lit. 296.

The tenant in tail of land hath a reversion in fee expectant; in this case, the confirmation of the estate-tail will not extend to the reversion. And if my disseisor make a lease for life, the remainder in fee, and I confirm the estate of the tenant for life; this shall not confirm the estate of him in remainder: but if I confirm the remainder estate, without any confirmation to tenant for life, it shall enure to him also. Co. Lit. 297, 298. If lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and the donor confirms their estate in the lands, to have and to hold to them two and their heirs; this shall be construed a joint estate for their lives, and after they shall have several inheritances. Co. Lit. 299. Tenant in tail, or for life, of land, lets it for years, if after he makes a confirmation of the land to the lessee for years, to hold to him and his heirs for ever, the lessee hath only an estate for the life of the tenant in tail, &c. and therein his lease for years is extinct. Lit. sect. 606.

A freehold for life, and term for years, it is said, cannot stand together of the same land, in the same person. 1 Nels. Abr. 480. If a feme lessee for years marries, and the lessor confirms the estate of husband and wife, to hold for their lives, by such a confirmation the term will be drowned; and the husband and wife are jointenants for their lives. Co. Lit. 300. But if the feme were lessee for life, then by the confirmation to husband and wife for their lives, the husband holdeth only in right of his wife for her life; but shall take a remainder for his life. Ibid. 299. Confirmation to lessee for life, and a stranger to hold for their lives, is void, for there is no privity; but it is otherwise, if for years. 2 Darv. Abr. 141. If tenant for life grant a rent-charge, &c. to one and his heirs, he in reversion is to confirm it, otherwise it is good only for the life of tenant for life. Lit. 529. A tenant for life, and remainder-man in fee, join in a lease, this shall be taken to be the lease of tenant for life, during his life, and confirmation of him in remainder: though after the death of tenant for life, it is the lease of him in remainder, and confirmation of tenant for life. 6 Rep. 15; 1 Nels. Abr. 481.

If lessee for years, without impeachment for waste, accepts a confirmation of his estate for life; by this he hath lost the privilege annexed to his estate for years. 8 Rep. 76. Acceptance of rent in some cases makes a confirmation of a lease: As if a man leases for life, reserving rent upon a condition of re entry; if after the condition is broken, by non-payment of the rent, the lessor distrains for the said rent, this act shall be a confirmation of the lease, so as he cannot enter. 2 Darv. 128, 129.

What a person may defeat by his entry, he may make good by his confirmation. Co. Lit. 300. But none can confirm, unless he hath a right at the time of the grant; he that hath but a right in reversion cannot enlarge the estate of a lessee. 2 Darv. 140, 141. And where a person hath but interesse termini, he hath no estate in him, upon which a confirmation may enure. Co. Lit. 290.

As confirmation is to bind the right of him who makes it, but not alter the nature of the estate of him to whom made, it shall not discharge a condition. Poph. 51. If A. enfeoffs B. upon condition, and after A. confirms the estate of B. yet the condition remains: though if B. had enfeoffed C. so that the estate of C. had been only subject to the condition in another deed, and after A. had confirmed the estate of C. this would have extinguished the condition, which was annexed to the estate of B. 1 Rep. 147. A confirmation will take away a condition annexed by law and by confirmation, a condition after broken in a deed of feoffment is extinguished. 1 Co. Rep. 146. Confirmations may make a defeasible estate good; but cannot work upon an estate that is void in law. Co. Lit. 295.

CONFISCATE, or CONFISCATED. From the Lat. confiscare, and that from seiscus, which signifies metonymically the Emperor's treasure: and as the Romans say, such goods as are forfeited to the Emperor's treasury for any offence are bona confiscata, to we say of those that are forfeited to our King's Exchequer. And the title to have these goods is given to the King by the law, when they are not claimed by some other: as if a man be indicted for stealing the goods of another person, when they are in truth his own proper goods, and when the goods are brought into court against him, and he is asked what he says to the said goods, if he disclaims them, he shall lose the goods, although that afterwards he be ac-

CONJURATION, an ancient ceremony of the complicit made by persons standing in a circle, or public harm: but was more especially used for the pur-ing (as was supposed) persons suspected with the devil, or some evil spirit, to know any secret, or whether they pose. The difference between conjuratio and incantatio was said to be, that a person using the art, endeavoured by prayers and invocations to compel the devil to say or do what he commanded him; the magus dealt rather by friendly and voluntary conference, or agreement with the devil or familiar, to have his desires served, in him of blood or other gift offered. Both differed from incanta-ment or forcery; because the latter were supposed to be personal conferences with the devil, and the former were but medicines and ceremonial forms of words usually called charms, without apparition. Covent.

Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Courts lib. 6. c. 9. says, that conjurers are those who, by force of certain magical words, endeavour to raise the devil, and oblige him to execute their commands. Witchers are such who by way of conference bargain with an evil spirit, to do what they desire of him: and Sorcerers are those, who by the use of certain superstitious words, or by the means of images, &c. are said to produce strange effects, above the ordinary course of nature. All which were anciently punished in the same manner as heretics, by the writ de haeretico comburendo, after a sentence in the ecclesiastical court: and they might be condemned to the pillory,
&c. upon an indictment at Common law. 3 Inst. 44:

CONSERVATOR, Law. A protector, preserver, or maintainer; or a standing arbitrator, chosen and appointed as a guarantee to compose and adjust differences that should arise between two parties. St. Paroch. Antiq. 2. 513.

CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE, conservator vel custos pacis. Is he that hath an especial charge to see the king's peace kept: and of these cons. Lambard saith, that before the reign of Ed. III. who first created Justices of the Peace, there were divers persons that by the common law had interest in keeping the peace; some whereof had that charge by tenure, as holding lands of the king by this service, &c. And others as incident to their offices which they bore, and so included in the same, that they were nevertheless called by the name of their office only: also some had it simply, as of itself, and were therefore named custodes pacis, wardens or conservators of the peace. The Chamberlain of Chester is a conservator of the peace in that county, by virtue of his office. 4 Inst. 212. Sheriffs of counties at common law are conservators of the peace; and constables, by the common law were conservators, but some say they were only subordinate to the conservators of the peace, as they are now to the justice.

The King's Majesty is, by his office and dignity royal, the principal conservator of the peace within all his dominions; and may give authority to any other to see the peace kept, and to punish such as break it: hence it is usually called the King's peace. The Lord Chancellor or Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord High Steward of England, the Lord Marshal, and Lord High Constable of England, (when any such officers are in being) and all the Justices of the court of King's Bench, (by virtue of their offices,) and the Master of the Rolls, (by prescription,) are general conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it: the other judges are only so in their own courts. The coroner is also a conservator of the peace within his own county; as is also the sheriff, and both of them may take a recognizance or security for the peace. Constables, tythingmen, and the like, are also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdictions; and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them till they find sureties for their keeping it. 1 Comm. 350. See title Justices of Peace, Commitment.

duarum.] Was an officer appointed by the king's letters patent, whose charge was to inquire of all offences done against the king's truce and safe-conducts upon the main sea, out of the liberties of the cinque ports, as the admirals customably were wont to do, and such other things as are declared in Stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 12. 6. Two men learned in the law were joined to conservators of the truce as associates; and masters of ships sworn not to attempt any thing against the truce, &c. And letters of request and of marque were to be granted when trade was broken at sea to make restitution. Stat. 4. H. 5. c. 7: See title Truce.

There was anciently a Conservator of the privileges of the Hospitallers and Templars. West. 2. c. 43. And the Corporation of the great level of the fens consists of a governor, six bailiffs, twenty conservators, and commonalty. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 17.

CONSIDERATIO CURIE, is often mentioned in law pleadings, and where matters are determined by the court. Idem consideratum est per curiam, i. e. Therefore it is considered and adjudged by the court; consideratio curie is the judgment of the court.

CONSIDERATION, consideratio. The material cause, quid or pro quo, of any contract, without which it will not be effectual or binding. This consideration is either expressed; as when a man bargains to give so much, for a thing bought; or to sell his land for 100 l. or grants it in exchange for other lands; or where I promise that if one will marry my daughter or build me a house, &c. I will give him a certain sum of money; or one agrees for a certain sum to do a thing. Or it is implied, when the law itself enforces a consideration; as where a person comes to an inn, and there staying eats and drinks, and takes lodging for himself and horse, the law presumes he intends to pay for both, though there be no express contract for it; and therefore if he discharge not the house, the host may stay his horse; and so if a taylor makes a garment for another, and there is no express agreement what he shall have for it; he may keep the clothes till he is paid, or sue the party for the same. 5 Rep. 19: Plowd. 308: Dyer 30, 337.

Considerations may be considered either as relating to contracts generally or to deeds in particular; and further relating thereto, See titles Assumpsit, Deed.

As to contracts, a consideration may be defined to be the reason which moves the contracting party to enter into the contract.—This consideration must be a thing lawful in itself, or else the contract is void. A good consideration is that of blood or natural affection between near relations; the satisfaction accruing from which, the law esteems an equivalent for whatever benefit may move from one relation to another. 3 Rep. 83: 1 Inst. 271: 1 Rep. 176. This consideration may sometimes however be set aside, and the contract become void, when it tends in its consequences to defraud creditors or other third persons of their just rights. But a contract for any valuable consideration, as for marriage; for money, for work done, or for other reciprocal contracts can never be impeached at law; and if it be of a sufficient adequate value is never set aside in equity: for the person contracted with has then given an equivalent in recompence and is therefore as much an owner, or a creditor as any other person. 2 Com. 444: Noy's Max. 87: Hob. 230. See titles Fraud; Fraudulent Conveyance.

CONSIDERATION

These valuable considerations are divided by the Civilians into four species—De ut des—Facio ut facias—Facio ut des—De ut facias, the bare mention of which is here sufficient.

A consideration of any sort or other is so absolutely necessary to the forming of a contract that a nudum pactum or bare agreement to do or pay any thing on one side without any compensation on the other, is totally void in law: and a man cannot be compelled to perform it. Dr. & St. d. 2. c. 24. As if one man promises to give another 100*l.* here there is nothing contracted for or given on one side, and therefore there is nothing binding on the other. And however a man may or may not be bound to perform it in honour or conscience, which the municipal laws do not take upon them to decide, certainly those laws will not compel the execution of what he had no visible inducement to engage for: and therefore our law has adopted the maxim of the civil law ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. But any degree of reciprocity will prevent the pact from being nude: nay even if the promise be founded on a strict moral obligation (as a promise to pay a just debt, though barred by the statute of limitations) it is no longer nudum pactum. And as this rule was principally established to avoid the inconvenience that would arise from setting up mere verbal promises, for which no good reason could be assigned, it therefore does not hold in some cases where such promise is authentically proved by written documents. 2 Comm. 445, 6.—Blackstone instances voluntary bonds and notes—as to which latter, see Fonblanque's observations in Treat. Eq. 334, 7.

Deeds also must be founded upon good and sufficient consideration, not upon an usurious contract. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8.—Nor upon fraud or collusion either to deceive purchasers, bona fide, or just and lawful creditors: Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5: 27 Eliz. c. 4.—Any of which bad considerations will vacate the deed and subject such persons as put the same in ure, to forfeitures, and often to imprisonments. A deed also, or other grant made without any consideration is, as it were of no effect: for it is construed to enure or to be effectual, only to the use of the grantor himself. Perk. §. 533. The consideration of deeds also, like that of contracts, may be either a good or valuable one—Deeds made upon good consideration only, are considered as merely voluntary, and are frequently set aside in favour of creditors, and bona fide purchasers. 2 Comm. 296. See further title Deeds.

A consideration ought to be matter of profit and benefit to him to whom it is done; by reason of the charge or trouble of him who doth it. Cro. Car. 8. If a person hath disbursed several sums for another, without his request, and afterwards such other says, that in consideration he hath paid the said sums for him, he promises to pay them: this is no consideration, because it was executed before. But it will be otherwise, if the sums were paid at the request of the other. Moor 220: Cro. Eliz. 282. A mere voluntary curesy will not be a good consideration of a promise: but the value and proportion of the consideration is not material, to maintain an action; for a shilling or a penny, is as much binding as 100*l.* Though in these cases, the jury will, give damages proportionably to the loss. Hob. 5: 10 Rep. 76.

A consideration that is void in part, is void in the whole: and if two considerations be alledged, and one of them is found false by the jury, the action fails. Hob.

CONSPIRACY

1061 Cro. Eliz. 248. But if there be a double consideration, for the granting of a promise, for the benefit whereof an action is brought; though one of the considerations be not good, yet if the other be good, and the promise broken, the action will lie upon that benefit: the non consideration is enough to support the promise. 1 Lill. Abr. c. 4. A consideration shall be lawful, to ground an assumpsit, 2 Lill. Abr. 108. Where considerations are valuable, and consist of two or more parts, then the performance of every part ought to be shown. Cro. Eliz. 579. In case a deed of gift must be made of lands, or a fine and recovery, be passed, and no consideration is expressed in the deed, or for the doing thereof, it shall be intended by the law, that it was made in trust, for the use of the donor or donors; for it shall be presumed he would not part with his land without a consideration; and yet the deed shall be construed to operate for nothing, and that which is most reasonable. 1 Lill. Abr. 109.

CONSIGN, Is a word used by merchants, where goods are assigned, delivered over, or transmitted from beyond sea or elsewhere to a factor, &c. Lex Mercat. See titles Merchant, Factor.

CONSILIUM, dies consilii. A time allowed for one accused to make his defence, and answer the charge of the accuser—it is now used for a speedy day appointed to argue a demurrer; which the court grants after the demurrer joined, on reading the record of the cause, &c.

CONSIMILI CASU, writ of entry is. A writ of entry. This and the writ in casu proventus lay not at common law, but are given by statute Glac. 6. Ed. 2. c. 7. and 13 Ed. 1. c. 24. for the reversioner after alienation; but during the life of the tenant in dower, or other tenant for life. See F. N. B. 205, 206: 3 Comm. 183. n.

CONSISTOR, A magistrate so called, scilicet Rogero de Gant, Willielmo consistori Cestriae, &c. Blount.

CONSISTORY, consistorium. Signifies as much as praetorium, or tribunal: it is commonly used for a council-house of ecclesiastical persons, or place of justice in the spiritual court; a session or assembly of prelates. And every archbishop and bishop of every diocese hath a consistory court, held before his chancellor, or commissary in his cathedral church, or other convenient place of his diocese, for ecclesiastical causes, 4 Infr. 338. The bishop's chancellor is the judge of this court, (supposed to be skilled in the civil and canon law, and in places of the diocese, far remote from the bishop's consistory, the bishop appoints a commissary (commissarius foraneus) to judge in all causes within a certain district, and a registrar to enter his decrees, &c. 2 Rot. Abr. 286: Seld. Hyst. of Tuben. 423, 414. From the sentence of this consistory court an appeal lies by virtue of Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 22. to the archbishop of each province respectively.

CONSOLIDATION, consolidatio. Is used for the uniting of two benefices into one. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21. Which union is to be by the assent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, &c. and to be of small churches lying near together. Vide titles Church, Union. This word is taken from the civil law, where it signifies properly an uniting of the possession, occupancy or profit of lands, &c. with the property. See also Extinguishment, Infuance.

CONSPIRACY, conspiratio. This word was formerly used almost exclusively, for an agreement of two or more persons falsely to indict one, or to procure him to be indicted of felony; who after acquittal, shall have writ of conspiracy. See 33 Edw. 1. Stat. 2 : 7 Hen. 5. : 18 Hen. 6. c. 12. See post title Conspirator. Now, it is no less commonly used for the unlawful combination of journeymen to raise their wages, or to refuse working. Except on certain regulated conditions; an offence particularly provided for by Stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15 : (revised, continued and confirmed by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 19, now expired;) which enacts among other things, that if any artificer do conspire, that they shall not do their works but at a certain price; or shall not take upon them to finish that another hath begun; or shall do but a certain work in a day; or shall not work but at certain times, every person so conspiring, shall forfeit for the first offence 10*l.* or be imprisoned 30 days; for the second 20*l.* or be pilloried; and for the third 40*l.* or be pilloried, lose an ear and become infamous. — This Stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15, appears to be yet in force, though not frequently resorted to for remedy in this case; the proceeding being usually by indictment for conspiracy.

By the Common law there can be no doubt that all confederates whatsoever, wrongfully to prejudice a third person are highly criminal. 1 Hawk. J. C. c. 72. § 2. — See further Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. particularly §§ 18, 19, 20. and this Dict. titles Labourers; Servants.

Journymen confederating and refusing to work unless for certain wages, may be indicted for a conspiracy; notwithstanding the statutes which regulate their work and wages do not direct this mode of prosecution; for this offence consists in the conspiring and not in the refusal, and all conspiracies are illegal though the subject matter of them may be lawful. See the case of The Tub-women v. The London Brewers, 8 Mod. 11, 320. — So also a bare conspiracy to do a lawful act to an unlawful end is a crime; though no act be done in consequence thereof. 8 Mod. 321. — The fact of conspiring need not be proved on the trial, but may be collected by the jury from collateral circumstances. 1 Black. Rep. 392 : Sira. 144. And if the parties concur in doing the act, although they were not previously acquainted with each other, it is conspiracy. Lord Mansfield in the case of the prisoners in the King's Bench. Hil. T. 26 Gl. 3. — 1 Marsh. P. C. c. 72. § 1. in v.

Writ of conspiracy lies for him that is indicted of a trespass, and acquitted, though it was not felony; also upon an indictment for a riot. 2 Mod. 306 : 5 Mod. 405. Where a man is falsely indicted of any crime, which may prejudice his fame or reputation; and though it doth not import slander, if it endangers his liberty, or if the indictment be injurious to his property. &c. writ of conspiracy lieth. 3 Salk. 97. But though a conspiracy to charge falsely be indictable, yet the party ought to shew himself to be innocent; and the writ of conspiracy lies not without an acquittal. Mod. Caf. 137, 185, 186. Not only writ of conspiracy; which is a civil action at the suit of the party; but also action on the case in the nature of a writ of conspiracy, doth lie for a false and malicious accusation of any crime, whether capital or not capital, even of high treason; and this though the bill of indictment is found ignoramus, or it does not go so far as an indictment. And the same damages may be recovered in such action, as in a writ of conspiracy, where the party is lawfully acquitted by verdict. 1 Roll. Abr. 111, 112 : 9 Rep. 56 : See Gill. Ca. 185 : 10 Mod. 148, 214 : Salk. 155. An action on the case is preferable, as being more in use, and the proceedings easier, and not attended with such niceties as the writ of conspiracy. See titles Malicious Prosecution; Action.

If one falsely and maliciously procure another to be arrested; and brought before a justice of peace to be examined concerning a felony, &c. on purpose to vex and disgrace him; and put him to charges and trouble, although he is not indicted for the same, yet he may have an action on the case, in which he need not aver that he was lawfully acquitted, as he ought to do in a writ of conspiracy; but he must aver that the accusation was false & malicious, which words are necessary in the declaration; and it must appear that there was no ground for it. And as an action on the case may be prosecuted against one person, where the writ of conspiracy is indictable, doth not lie but against two, this action is much commonly brought. 1 Danv. Abr. 203, 213 : 1 Roll. Abr. 562, 563.

Conspirators may be indicted at the suit of the King; and at the Common law, may may prefer an indictment against conspirators, who only conspire together, and nothing is executed: though the conspiracy ought to be declared by some act, or promise to stand, by one another, &c. But a bare conspiracy will not maintain a writ of conspiracy, at the suit of the party, because he is not damaged by it; though it is a ground for an indictment. 9 Rep. 56 : 2 Roll. Abr. 77. If the defendants can show any foundation or probable cause of suspicion, they shall be discharged; and if a man hath good cause of suspicion that a person is guilty of felony, and causes him to be indicted, in prosecution of justice, action of conspiracy will not lie; but is so otherwise if the prosecutor imposes the crime of felony, where no felony was committed. 1 Roll. Abr. 115 : 4 Rep. 438.

An action lies not against a justice of peace, who sends out his warrant upon a false accusation; but it lies if he makes it out without any accusation. 1 Leit. 187. Conspiracies ought to be out of court; for if a prosecution be ordered in a course of justice, and witnesses appear against a party, &c. there shall be no punishment; and if persons acted only as jurors in a criminal matter, or judges in open court, there is no ground for prosecution. 8 P. C. 173 : 12 Rep. 24. If all the defendants but one are acquitted on indictment for conspiracy, that one may be acquitted also; because one person alone cannot be indicted for this crime; and husband and wife, being but one person, may not be indicted alone for a conspiracy. 2 Roll. Abr. 703. The acquittal of one person is the acquittal of another, upon indictment of conspiracy. 9 Mod. 220, (221) where only two are indicted, and it is shewd or proved that they conspired with others, unknown. Though where one is found guilty, according to the opinion of the Lord Chief Justice Hale, if the other doth not come in upon process, or if he dies pending the suit, judgment shall be had against the other. 1 Fep. 154. Writ of conspiracy was brought against two persons, and one found Not guilty; the other shall not have judgment; but in action on the case, it had been good. Gr. Eliz. 707. Any action on the case in the nature of a conspiracy may be brought against one only. 1 Hawk. P. C. 122 : 3. If the parties are found guilty of the conspiracy, upon an indictment of felony, at the King's suit; the judgment is, that they shall lose their Frank law (which disables them to be put upon any jury, to be sworn as witnesses, or to appear in person in any of the King's court) and that their lands, goods, and chattels be seized as forfeited, and their bodies committed to prison; which is called a Bill of Attainder. 2 Inst. 123. 222. Comp. Inst. 156. 1 Inst. 217. 22. There has been no instance of the villainous indictment since the reign of Edward III. The usual mode of punishment at present is, by pillory, fine, imprisonment, and surety for good behaviour. See 1 Inst. 227. 228. 229. CONSPIRATORS, conspiratores. By Stat. 33 E. 1. c. 1. are defined to be those that do bind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that every of them shall aid the other falsely and maliciously to indict persons, or falsely to move or maintain pleas, &c. And such as retain men in the country, with rapiers, or fees, to maintain their malicious enterprises, which extends as well to the takers as the givers, and the wards and bailiffs of great lords, who, by their office or power undertake to bear and maintain quarrels, pleas or debates, that concern other parties than such as relate to the state of their lords or themselves. 2 Inst. 384. 385. And such as conspirators, false informers, and imbracers of inquests, the King hath provided a writ in the Chancery; and the justices of either bench and justices of assize, shall, on every plaint awarded inquest thereupon. Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 3. c. 10. From the description of conspirators, in several of our old law books, conspiracy is taken generally, and confounded with maintenance and champerty; see those titles. Besides these, there are conspirators in treason; by plotting against the Government, &c. See title Treason.

CONSTABLE.

On this subject, recourse has been had to a very useful, accurate and ingenious performance on "The Office of a Constable"; [8vo Pamphlet 1791] which appears, tho' published without the author's name, to come from the pen of a gentleman intimately versed in English antiquities; and to whom the Publick are indebted for many, more amusing and other equally instructive, performances.—If it should be objected, that a little too much asperity is attached to some of his remarks on this subject, he may plead in his excuse, that as in the body natural, so also in the body politic, where lenitives have been applied in vain, it is sometimes painfully necessary to recur to corrosives. The effect of this kind of observations, is, it is hoped, preserved in the following abridgment; though the "hard words, jealousies, and fears" are conveyed in gentler language.

CONSTABLE.

The Origin of the word Constable, erroneously thought to be in the Saxon language, is undoubtedly to be found in the name of the Ruffian Emperor; who was so called, as his title imports, no more than superintendent of the imperial matters; or, in other words, the Emperor's Master of the Horse; but having in process of time obtained the command of the army, his name, (corrupted into constabularius and constabularius; see Spelman.) began to signify a commander; and with this signification appears to have been introduced into England at the Norman Conquest; or perhaps sooner.

THE CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND, or Lord High Constable, was anciently an office of the highest dignity and importance in the realm. He was the leader of the King's armies; and had the cognizance of all contracts and other matters touching war or peace. 1 R. 2. c. 1. c. 2.—and see Madox's History of the Exchequer, p. 27. He sat as Judge with the Earl Marshal having precedence of him in the court of Chivalry;—and he is by some of our books also called Marshal.—See title Marshal.

This office, which appears to have been granted by William the Conqueror, to Walter Earl of Gloucester, or according to others to William Fitzosborne or Roger de Mortimer, became hereditary in two different families, as annexed to the earldoms of Hereford; and in that right after a lapse of near two centuries, was revived by judgment of law, in the person of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham; who, being attainted of high treason, an. 13 H. 8. this office became forfeited to the crown. Since this period there has been no Lord High Constable, except pro tempore at a Coronation, or on other solemn occasions.

CONSTABLES OF CASTLES, were keepers or governors of the castles of the King, or of Great Barons, and who were frequently hereditary, or by feudal tenure; such were the Constables of the Tower, the Constable of London, or Baynard's Castle, and Constables of the castles of Dover, Wexham, Cliffe, &c. &c. some of which offices though not now hereditary, are remaining to this day. There are the constables intended in Magna Charta, c. 17. 20. and who, in the Stat. of Westminster, 1. 3. c. 1. are called Constables of Fees; and there considered as keepers of prisons; a constant part indeed of all ancient charters. See 2 Inst. 31. The statutes of 5 H. 4. c. 1. reciting the oppressions of these constables, and enacting that none be imprisoned but in the common gaol, seems to have put an end to a race of tyrants, who by their misconduct had rendered themselves odious to the people.

A Constable of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Dialogus Scaccarii, l. 1. c. 5.—in the Stat. de distributione Scaccarii, 11 H. 3. c. 5.—in Mesa, l. 2. c. 31.—and in Madox's History of that Court, p. 27.

The Constable of the Staple is also mentioned in some old statutes. See 17 E. 3. c. 8. 13 E. 3. c. 9. 23 H. 8. c. 6.

THE CONSTABLE OF THE HUNDRED, or the High, Chief or Head Constable (as he is otherwise called) is next to be spoken of. By the Stat. of Winchester, 13 Ed. 1. c. 6. it is ordained that in every hundred or franchise there shall be chosen two constables to make the view of armour, and to present the defaults of armour, and of the suits of towns and of highways, &c.

CONSTABLE.

Lambard (on Constables, p. 3) Coke (4 Inst. 267) and Hule (2 P. C. 96) all agree in declaring that Constables of the hundred were first introduced by this statute. (And see Cro. Eliz. 375). And though it has been asserted that they were officers and conservators of the peace at Common law, and that the Stat. of Winton only enlarged their authority, yet no evidence has hitherto been produced to that purpose.—See Sulk. 175, 381: 11 Mod. 215: 2 Ld. Raym. 1193, 5.—The first mention made of the High Constable in any statute subsequent to that of Winton, is in Stat. 3 E. 4. c. 1.

Nothing, however, can be more certain than that the Constable of the hundred, or High Constable, whether he be allowed an officer at the Common law, or not, was instituted long before the Stat. of Winton. This curious fact is ascertained by a writ or mandate of 36 H. 8, preserved in the Adversaria to Watts's edition of Matthew Paris, and from which cc. 4 & 6 of the Stat. of Winton are evidently taken; though it has hitherto escaped the notice of every writer or speaker upon the subject. By this writ it is provided, “that in every hundred there should be constituted a CHIEF CONSTABLE, at whose mandate all those of his hundred sworn arms, should assemble and be observant to him, for the doing of those things which belong to the conservation of the king's peace.” No mention of this officer, it is believed, can be any where found prior to the date of this instrument; which perhaps may no more determine the question as to his original creation than the Stat. of Winton. Be this as it will, the discovery ought at least to reach those who are desirous of explaining the antiquities of our law, to look into matters of record, and to trust very little to opinion.

THE CONSTABLE OF THE VILL (or Petty Constable, as he is frequently called, to distinguish him from the officer last mentioned) is he who is generally understood by the term Constable, when mentioned without any peculiar addition.

THIS CONSTABLE has been repeatedly acknowledged by the law, to be “one of the most ancient officers in the realm for the conservation of the peace,” Popb. 13: 4 Inst. 265. It must be confessed, however, that no mention of him by this identical name, is any where found to occur anterior to the writ or mandate of King Henry III., already mentioned; whereby it is also provided, that in every village or township, there should be constituted a constable or two, according to the number of the inhabitants. But it is pretty certain that Lord Coke's idea is right, and that This officer is as old as the institution of the frank-pledge, usually attributed to King ALFRED, and was in fact originally the senior or chief pledge of the tithing or decima. See the Stats. 2 E. 3. c. 3: 20 H. 6. c. 14: 28 H. 8. c. 10.

Thus it appears that the ordinance of Hen. III., far from instituting the office, merely enlarged the number of officers, placing them in towns and villages, instead of franchises; since it might frequently happen, that a manor of great extent, had only a single constable for several townships; a case exactly similar, indeed, sometimes occurring at this day, where a township, comprehending several hamlets, equally populous it may be with itself, has only one constable for the whole. [For a constablewick cannot be created at this day, unless by act of parliament. 1 Mod. 13.]

We find the Constable beginning to be familiarly known by that name, in the time of King Edward I.; but not previously. In some articles of enquiry at the Eyre, perhaps, or Trailbailon, certainly in the time of Edward I., are items in which this officer is mentioned. Coll. Madox. Mus. Brit. iii, 285.—He seems also to be meant in the two chapters of the Eyre, as given in Flota, lib. 1. c. 20. §§ 126, 133.

He is named in the Stat. of 2 E. 3. c. 3, for the first time; as also in those of 4 E. 3. c. 10: 5 E. 3. c. 14: 25 E. 3. §. 1. c. 6: and 36 E. 3. §. 1. c. 2; and in several statutes now repealed or obsolete, in the reigns of R. 2, H. 4, and H. 6: 1 H. 7. c. 7. &c.

Notwithstanding any thing that has been said or omitted in the course of this enquiry, it seems highly probable that, at the Common law, and before the mandate of Henry III., the Constable of the hundred, and the Constable of the manor were officers of the same nature and authority, originating at the same time, and differing only as to the extent of their several districts; in short, that they bore to each other the same analogy as subsisted between the bailiff of the hundred and the bailiff of the manor. It follows that the constable of the hundred neither possessed nor could have exercised any more authority within the precinct of the latter, than the constable of one manor possessed or could have exercised in another; the manor being to all intents and purposes exempt from, and excluded out of the hundred.

Lord Bacon observes, that though the High Constable's authority hath the more ample circuit “yet I do not find, says he, that the petty constable is subordinate to the high constable, or to be ordered or commanded by him.” Those cases wherein it has been adjudged, that the being subject to a particular lger, shall not excuse a man from serving the office of constable of the hundred, seem therefore to have been decided upon a wrong principle. See 3 Kb. 197, 230, 1: Freem. 348: 11 Mod. 215.

All this is spoken with an exception, not of acts of parliament only, but also of the powers and pretensions exercised or asserted by the Quarter Sessions, which latter has now usurped to much and so long, with respect to the election and controul, both of the constable of the hundred and the constable of the vill, that it is become difficult, if not impossible, to determine, with any degree of precision, the actual rights of either.

In considering the powers and duties of this important officer, we may divide our researches, according to the treatise already quoted, under the following heads.

- I. 1. His Quality, and 2. Qualifications.
- II. 1. His Election; and 2. Who are exempted.
- III. His Power and Authority.
- IV. His Duty. [These two are in many instances co-extensive, and are therefore carefully to be compared together].
- V. His Protection, Indemnity, and Allowances; and lastly,
- VI. His Responsibility and Punishment.

But first it may be necessary to state a few particulars as to the HIGH CONSTABLE, or Constable of the hundred or manor division; who is as much the officer of the justice of the peace as the Constable of the vill. For. 128. He is elected at the leet or tithing of the hundred, or by justice of the peace. 1 Ro. Ab. 535: Baili. 174: 3 Kb.

CONSTABLE I. & II.

107. And by Stat. 29 Geo. II. c. 25. § 8, 9, in Westminster a High Constable is to be elected annually by the Dean or High Steward or his deputy at a court leet. ~~As to his power~~—he may hold petty or statute sessions (for hiring servants) according to ancient usage. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. But it is doubtful whether he can arrest for breach, or take surety, of the peace. 1 Salk. 381; Cro. Eliz. 375, 6.—He is said to be an officer within the annual mutiny act, for billeting of soldiers; and liable to the penalties thereby inflicted for mal-practice in so doing; and he may occasionally make a deputy, whose acts in his principal's absence, will be good. 1 Blackst. 350: 3 Burr. 1262; but see the act § 1.—Under Stat. 4 E. 4. c. 1, 39 Eliz. c. 20, and 13 Geo. 1. c. 23. He may determine complaints of clothiers, and see after abuses mentioned in those acts.—His Duty is.—To present those who harbour strangers for whom they will not answer. 13 Ed. 1. c. 6.—To deliver lists of persons qualified to serve on juries. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25; and see 3 & 4 Ann. c. 18.—On receiving notice of any robbery to make fresh suit and hue and cry after the felons, and to defend actions against the hundred by those robbed. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. Bullst. 174: 1 Salk. 150.—He shall be discharged from serving the office of collector of the poor's rate during his office. 2 Jones 46.

I. THE CONSTABLE was ordained in p. p. s. felon and to keep the peace, of which he is a conservator by the Common law 10 E. 4. 18. Crompt. J. 201: 4 Inst. 265.

His office is therefore, First, original or primitive as conservator of the peace; and Secondly, ministerial and relative to justices of the peace, coroners, sheriffs, &c. who e precepts he is to execute. 1 Hale P. C. 88.

He is however an officer only for his own precinct, and cannot execute a warrant directed to the constable of the vill, or to all constables, generally, of that particular jurisdiction; for he is a constable no where else; nor is he compellible to do it, though the warrant be directed to him by name; but he may, if he will, and to indeed may any other person 1 Hale P. But if the offence shall not be bailable, or the offender shall not give bail, the constable shall carry the offender before a justice of the county where the offence was committed.

He is an officer of the court of Quarter-Sessions, over whom they have power. Comb. 201.

2. The Common law requires, that every constable should be idoneus homo, i. e. apt and fit to execute the said office; and he is said in law to be idoneus, who has these three things, honesty, knowledge and ability: honesty to execute his office truly, without malice, affection or partiality; knowledge to know what he ought duly to do; and ability as well in estate as body, that he may intend and execute his office when need is, diligently; and not for impotence or poverty neglect it. 8 Rep. 41 b. And if one be elected constable who is not idoneus, he by the law may be discharged of his office, and another who is idoneus appointed in his place.

He must be an inhabitant of the place for which he is chosen. 12 Mod. 256.

He ought not to be the keeper of a publick house. 6 Mod 42—And this is made an express disqualification in Westminster, by Stat. 29 Geo. II. c. 25.

II. 1. THE CONSTABLE is chosen by the Common law, at the leet; or, where there is no leet, at the tourn; sometimes by the suitors and sometimes by the Steward; and now in many towns and parishes by the parishioners; all according to ancient and particular usage. If he be present when chosen, he is to take the oath in court; if absent, he may be sworn before a (single) justice of the peace. But in the latter case he ought to have special notice of his election, and a time and place should be appointed for his taking the oath, [well and truly to serve the office]. 4 Inst. 265: 2 Salk 502: Comb 416: 2 Jones 212: Salk. 175: Ll Raym. 70, 1: 2 Stra. 1119, 1149: 5 Mod. 130, 1: 2 Harak. Constables of London, (which city is divided into twenty six wards, and every ward into precincts, in each whereof is a constable), are nominated by the inhabitants of each precinct on St. Thomas's day, and confirmed, or otherwise, at the court of wardmote; and after they are confirmed, they are sworn into their offices at a court of Aldermen, on the next Monday after Twelfth day; their oath is long and particular, and goes to duties now seldom performed, but regulated by articles of the wardmote inquest, which directs the several matters to be observed by the constable; who is in the nature of a general superintendant of the morals of the inhabitants; and he ought to notice all new-comers, who if of bad character, may be required to give security for their good behaviour, or be imprisoned; and see Carth. 129, 138.—Every Constable may execute warrants through the whole city.

In case a Constable die, or quit the precinct, two justices may make and swear a new one, till the lord of the manor shall hold a court leet, or till the next quarter sessions, who may either approve of the constable so made, or appoint another. Also, if he continue above a year in office, the quarter sessions may discharge him, and put another in his place until the lord shall hold a court. But justices of the peace, either in or out of the quarter sessions, cannot in any other case discharge a constable chosen in the leet. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12: Comb. 328. But he may upon complaint arrest the party, and bring him before a justice of peace, (which indeed is always the safest way) to find surety. Cro. El. 375: Bro. Lit. Faux Imp. 6: 2 *Hale P. And he may imprison the offender till the injured party is out of danger. 2 Hale P. C. 82, 90, 4: Crompt. J. P. 141: Brownl. 211: 1 Bulst. 146.—The Constable may officially imprison for a time to prevent felony; as if he see two with weapons drawn ready to fight: or if a man in a fury be purposed to kill, maim, or beat another. He may also arrest and imprison one for a felonious intent, as if a man bring a helpless infant into a field or elsewhere, and leave it to perish for want, and the constable see this himself. Moore 284: Poph. 13. Though no felony has actually been committed, constable and his assistants are justified in arresting on a voen charge of felony. Doug. 359, 360, and in this case constable may discharge the person suspected. *C. rant, but should keep it for his own justification.—See Stat. 24 Geo. 1. c. 44; 1 Sult. 281; 2 Ld. Raym. 1196.

The Constable is the proper officer to a justice of peace, and bound to execute his lawful warrants; and therefore where a statute authorizes a justice to convict a person of any crime, and to levy the penalty, &c. without saying to whom such warrant shall be directed, the constable is the officer to execute the warrant, and must obey it. 5 Mod. 130; 1 Salk. 351. Constable must at his peril take notice that his warrant is by one in the commission of the peace. 12 Mod. 347. and that the matter is within the justice's jurisdiction. 2 Hack. P. C. c. 13, § 11.—And if guilty of misdemeanour in executing a lawful warrant, he becomes a trespasser. 12 Mod. 344.—But a warrant properly penned, (even though the magistrate who issue it should exceed his jurisdiction,) will by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, at all events indemnify the officer who executes it ministerially. 4 Comm. 788.

13. Watch.—Constable hath power ex officio to keep a watch for the purpose to raise or pursue hue and cry upon robberies committed, by the statute of Winton. c. 1; to search for lodgers in suburbs of cities that are suspicious persons, which is to be done every week, or at least once in fifteen days, by the same statute c. 4; for such as ride or go armed, by the statute of 2 E. 3. c. 3; for night walkers and persons suspicious, either by night or day, by the statute of 5 E. 3. c. 4. And it is in his power to hold such watches as often as he pleases, and the watchmen are his ministers and assistants, and are under the same protection with him, and may act as he doth, and regularly he ought to be in company with them in their walk and watch. 2 Hale P. C. 97.

A watchman hath a double protection of the law, viz. 1. As an assistant to the constable when he is present or in the watch. 2. Purely as a watchman set by order of law; and the law takes notice of his authority; and the killing of a watchman in the execution of his office is murder. 2 H. P. C. at sup.—If an inhabitant refuse to watch in his turn, constable may set him in the stocks. 3 Lev. 208.—See Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 90, for regulating the nightly watch and duty of constables in Windsor; 10 Geo. 2. c. 22, for London, and other acts only of very local importance, and which those who are to act under should diligently consult. See this Dict. title Watchmen.

Physicians, College of. By Stats. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5; and 32 H. 8. c. 40, In the city of London, constable is to be assisting to them in putting their laws in execution.

Plague. See ante III.

Poor's Rate. Under Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 12, the weekly rate for the relief of the poor is to be assessed, in case the parishioners disagree, by the churchwardens and constables, who are in either case to levy the rate; and by § 35, the churchwardens and constables of every parish are to collect the sums rated, and pay the same over to the High-Constable. And see Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. and this Dict. title Poor.

Postage. Under Stat. 9 An. c. 10, to levy money due for postage of letters under 5*l.* § 30.

Presentments. Constable is at the quarter-sessions to make presentment of all things against the peace, and belonging to his office. Dalt. J. P. 474: Fitz. J. P. 6. And they are usually summoned by the sheriff to attend the quarter-sessions and assist to make presentments; which seems justified by no express law, though perhaps by usage.

Riot. Constables are to suppress, and they may ex officio commit offenders, &c. See Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 5. and this Dict. title Riot.

Robbery. See Huc and Cry.

Scavengers' rates in London shall be made by constables and churchwardens under Stat. 2 W. & M. ji. c. 8.

Seals. Under a presentment in theleet and the steward's warrant, constable and his assistant may put them in the cucking stool. Moore 847.

Servants. See III. Constable to assist in levying duty on, under Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 43.

Soldiers. Constables are to quarter soldiers in inns, ale-houses, victualling houses, &c. Not to receive any reward to excuse quartering them. To give in lists to the justices, of the houses and persons obliged to quarter soldiers, and to provide carriages for troops on their march. See the annual statutes concerning Soldiers, and ante III.

Statutes, or Acts of Parliament; constables are called upon to assist in the execution of these, on almost innumerable occasions.

Sunday. Constable is to enforce acts 1 C. 1. c. 1, and 29 C. 2. c. 7, against the profanation of. See this Dict. title Idleness.

Swearing. By Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21, Constable is to levy the penalty for profane swearing; which is 1*s.* for a servant, labourer, &c. 2*s.* for others under the degree of a gentleman; and 5*s.* for a gentleman; and as the crime is repeated, the penalty is to be doubled.

Tinners' party, of lead, iron, copper, &c. Constable, watchmen and beadies are to apprehend. Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Trinkets. Constable to assist in enforcing the act 13 Geo. 3. c. 84.

Vagrants. Constables to assist in enforcing the laws against. See this Dict. title Vagrants.

Warrants of Justices. It is part, and a great part of constable's duty to execute these, which are issued under an amazing variety of acts of parliament; in all which cases constable's office is chiefly ministerial. See ante III.

Watch. See ante III.

Weavers. Kidderminster, constables to assist, by Stats. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 8.

Weights. Under Stats. 8 H. 8. c. 5, and 16 C. 1. c. 19, constables, being head officers of places, shall have in their custody sealed weights, &c. under penalties: persons buying or selling by false weights or measures, forfeit 5*s.* leviable by constables.

Wreck. Under Stat. 12 An. ji. 2. c. 18, Constables may call together assistance to save ships from wreck; and see this Dict. title Wreck.

V. IF A CONSTABLE doth not his duty, he may be indicted and fined by the justices of peace; on the other hand, he is protected by law, in the execution of his duty.

It has been already mentioned that he shall have aid of the county to pacify affrays.

By Stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5, If any action is brought against a constable, for any thing done by virtue of his office, he, and also all others who in his aid, or by his command, shall do any thing concerning his office, may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence, and if he recovers he shall have double costs. But this must be certified on the record by the judge. 2 Vint. 45: Doug. 294.—And see Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21, against profane swearing, which gives treble costs.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, No action shall be brought against any constable, or other officer, or any person acting by his order, and in his aid, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant of a justice of peace, until demand of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected by the space of six days; and in case after such demand, and compliance therewith, any action shall be brought against such constable, &c. without making the justice a defendant; then on producing and proving such warrant, the jury shall give a verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice; and if such action be brought jointly against such justice, and also against such constable, &c. then on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such constable, &c. and if the verdict shall be given against the justice, the plaintiff shall recover his costs against him, to be taxed so as to include costs plaintiff shall be liable to pay to such defendant, &c. No action shall be brought against any constable, &c. unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed.—This statute extends only to actions of tort. See Bullen's N. P. 24.

The charges of sending malefactors to jail, were at Common law to be borne by the vill, in which they were apprehended. 1 Hals. P. C. 96. But now under Stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 10, and 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, where a malefactor has not sufficient property in the county where he is taken, on application by the constable or officer conveying him, a justice of peace may on oath examine into and ascertain ascertain the reasonable expenses to be allowed; and by warrant without fee, order the treasurer of the county to pay the same, except in Midshire, where such expenses are to be paid by the overseers of the place where the offender was taken.

If in the execution of his office, and acting within his own district, after competent notice that he is constable, he, or any that come to his assistance, be killed, it is murder; although the party killing do not know his person. 1 Hale P. C. 9, 459 460, 1 2 Ld. Raym. 1300 But see Leach's cases in Crown Law 211.

If two men are combating, and the constable come to part them and is hurt, he shall have action of trespass, and if he hurt them, they shall not have action against him. And so of those who aid him, every man who is assisting to the constable in the execution of his office having the same protection that the law gives to the constable. Crompt. J. P. 130 2 Hale P. C. 97.

If he be removed without just cause, the court of King's Bench will by rule of court order him to be restored to his place. Burgh 174.

A justice of peace's warrant is a sufficient justification of a constable in a matter within his jurisdiction of such justice. Stra 711 See ante III. 12.

By Stat. 18 G. 3 c. 19, every constable is every three months, and within fourteen days after he goes out of office, to deliver to the overseers of the poor an account entered in a book, kept for the purpose, and signed by him, of all sums by him expended and received on account of the parish, &c. which overseers are within fourteen days to lay the same before the inhabitants, and, if approved, are to pay the money due out of the poor rates, but, if disallowed, are to deliver the book back to the constable, who may produce it before a justice of peace, giving reasonable notice to the overseers, which justice is to examine the account, determine objections, settle the sum due, and enter it in, and sign the account, and the overseers are to pay such sum out of the poor's rate, but may appeal (giving notice) to the quarter-sessions.

VI. A CONSTABLE arresting one possessed of money, who dies, is chargeable with the money. And so where he takes from a felon money of which he had robbed another, even though he should be afterwards robbed of it himself. Osw. 121.

Neglecting a duty incumbent on him, either by Common law, or by statute, he is for his default indictable. 1 Salk 381: 2 Ro. Ke. 78.

If he will not return his warrant, or certify what he has done under it, he may be fined 6 Mod. 83 1 Salk 381, but see 5 Mod. 16 Gib. 192.

If he wilfully lets a felon escape out of the stocks, and go at large, it is felony. 1 Hale P. C. 596. And it seems generally agreed, that all voluntary escapes in the office, amount to the same crime as the offender was guilty of, whether treason or felony. 2 Harc. P. C. c. 19 § 22 & seq.

It is a misdemeanour in him to discharge an offender brought to the watch-house by a watchman in the night. 2 Burr. 867 But see III. 2.

He is liable to various pecuniary and sometimes personal punishments, on neglecting the duty imposed on him by several statutes.

THE CONSTABLE'S OATH.

YOU shall swear, that you will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King in the office of Constable for the township of C. within this manor, [or district & county] for the year now next ensuing, or until you shall be thereof discharged by due course of law. You shall see the King's peace kept, and keep all such peace as are usually accustomed and ought to be kept, and you shall well and truly to and execute all other things belonging to the said office according to the best of your knowledge.

So help you God.

FORM OF AN OBLIGATION to be taken by a Constable for keeping the Peace.

KNOW ALL MEN by these presents, That I A. B. of C. in the county of D. do hereby make, substitute and appoint E. F. yeoman, constable of the township of C. [or manor, &c.] of C. as of old, in the sum of forty pounds to wit the said L. L. or his lawful attorney, executor, administrators or assigns to receive and to be well and faithfully made, I bind myself, my heir, executor, and administrators, firmly by these presents, that each my seal. Dated this — of —, in the 30th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith and so forth, and in the year of our Lord 1795.

THE CONDITION of the above obligation is such, That if the said constable shall faithfully perform his duty, as of old, in the sum of forty pounds to wit the said L. L. or his lawful attorney, executor, administrators or assigns to receive and to be well and faithfully made, I bind myself, my heir, executor, and administrators, firmly by these presents, that each my seal. Dated this — of —, in the 30th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith and so forth, and in the year of our Lord 1795.

Signed, sealed and delivered }

OATH of the APPRAISERS of Goods distrained for Rent; to be administered by the CONSTABLE.

YOU shall swear that you will faithfully appraise and value the goods now taken in distress, and mentioned in the inventory to you shewn, as between buyer and seller, according to the best of your skill and understanding.

So help you God.

APPOINTMENT of a DEPUTY.

I A. B. Constable of C. in the county of D. do hereby make, substitute and appoint E. F. of the same place, yeoman, my true and lawful Deputy in the office aforesaid, as long as I shall hold the same; or thus, during the continuance of my will and pleasure, [or for any particular purpose] dated, &c.

For a command or PROCLAMATION for RIOTERS to disperse, See title RIOT.

CONSTAT,

CONSTAT.

CONSTAT, Lat.] The name of a certificate, which the clerk of the pipe, and auditors of the Exchequer, make at the request of any person who intends to plead or move in that court, for the discharge of any thing: and the effect of it, is the certifying writ constat (appears) upon record, touching the matter in question. See Stats 3 & 4 Ed. 6 c. 4. 13 Eliz. c. 6. A constat is held to be superior to an ordinary certificate, because it contains nothing but what is evident on record. And the exemplification under the great seal, of the enrolment of any letters patent, is called a constat. Co. Lit. 225.

CONSTRUCTIVE TREASON. The Stat. 25 Ed. 3 c. 2, was made to define treason, and prevent the subject from being condemned for constructive treason. See title Treason.

CONSUEUDINARIUS, A ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices, or the customs of abbeys and monasteries: it is mentioned in Brampton.

CONSUEUDINIBUS ET SERVICIIS, Is a writ of right close, which lies against the tenant that deforcest his lord of the rent or service due to him. Reg. Orig. 159 F N B 151. When the writ is brought by the party in the right only, he shall count of the seisin of his ancestor, and the writ be in the debit, but when he counts of his own seisin, then the writ is in the debit et sol't, &c. And if the party say in the writ ut in redditibus et annuatim, these words prove that the demandant himself was seised of the services; and then if he count in such writ of seisin of his ancestors and not of his own seisin, the writ shall abate: that if he will bring a writ of customs and services of the seisin of his ancestors, he ought to leave these words ut in redditibus, &c. out of the writ.

Where a person brings a writ of customs and services against any tenant, and by count demands homage, the writ ought to make special mention thereof; as ut in homagio, &c. or the writ shall abate. New Nat. Brev. 338 F N B 151. If this writ be brought against tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee, there the tenant may pray in aid of him in the remainder, &c.

CONSUL, Lat.] In our law books signifies an earl. Bract. l. 1 c. c. tells us, that comes is derived from consul, as consul is derived from consulendo: and in the laws of Edward the Confessor, mention is made of consules and consules. Blount—Consuls among the ancient Romans, were chief officers, of which two were yearly chosen, to govern the city of Rome. Those who now pass under the name of Consuls residing in England sent from foreign nations, and in foreign ports sent from England, are merchants, or persons of eminence and knowledge, appointed to take care of the affairs and interests of merchants. See Lex Mercat.

CONSULTA ECCLESIA, A church full, or provided for. Corv.

CONSULTATION, consultatio.] A writ whereby a cause having been removed by Prohibition from the Ecclesiastical court, to the King's court, is returned thither again, for if the judges of the King's court, upon comparing the libel with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false, or not proved, and therefore the cause to be wrongfully called from the Ecclesiastical court, then upon this consultation or deliberation they decree it to be returned; whereupon the writ in this case obtained, is called a Consultation. Reg. Orig. 44, &c. Statute of Writ of Consultations, 24 Ed. 1.

VOL. I.

CONTEMPT.

This writ is in nature of a procedendo; but properly a consultation ought not to be granted, but in case where a man cannot recover at the Common law, in the King's courts. New Nat. Br. 119. Causes of which the Ecclesiastical or Spiritual courts have jurisdiction, are of administrations, admissions of clerks, adultery, appeals in ecclesiastical causes, apostasy, general bawdery, blasphemy, solicitation of chastity, dilapidations and church repairs, celebration of divine service, divorces, fornication, heresy, incest, institution of clerks, marriage rites, oblations, obventions, ordinations, commutation of penance, pensions, procurations, schism, simony, tithes, probate of wills, &c. and where a suit is in the Ecclesiastical court, for any of these causes, or the like, and not mixed with any temporal thing, if a suggestion is made for a prohibition, a consultatio shall be awarded. 5 Rep. 9.

To move for a prohibition in another court, after motion in the Chancery, &c. on the same libel which is granted, is merely vexatious, for which a consultation shall be hid. Cro. Eliz. 277. Where a consultation is granted upon the right of the thing in question, there a new prohibition shall never be granted on the same libel; but where granted upon any default of the prohibition, in form, &c. there a prohibition may be granted upon the same libel again. 1 Nels. Abi. 485. See title Prohibition.

CONTEMPT, contemptus.] A disobedience to the rules, orders or process of a Court, which hath power to punish such offence; and one may be imprisoned for a contempt done in court; but not for a contempt out of court, or a private abuse. Cro. Eliz. 689. But for contempt out of court, an attachment may be granted. Attachment also lies against one for contempt to the court, to bring in the offender to answer on interrogatories, &c. and if he cannot acquit himself, he shall be fined. 1 Lill 305. If a sheriff, being required to return a writ directed to him, doth not return the writ, it is a contempt: and this word is used for a kind of misdemeanor, by doing what one is forbidden; or not doing what he is commanded. 12 Rep. 36. And as this is sometimes a greater, and sometimes a lesser offence, so it is punished with greater or less punishment, by fine, and sometimes imprisonment. Dyer 128, 177. 1 Bull. 85.

If a defendant in Chancery on service of a subpoena, does not appear within the time limited by the rules of the court, and plead, demur or answer to the bill against him, he is then said to be in contempt, and the respective processes of contempt are in successive order awarded against him. These are attachment; attachment with proclamations; a commission of rebellion; and finally a sequestration. 3 Comm 443.

An attachment of contempt may issue against a bishop, or other peer: but for not returning a fiat facias de bonis ecclesiasticis, it is proper to move against the chancellor, commissary, or official. Rex v. Bishop of St. Asaph, 1 Wils. 332.

It is a contempt to institute a suit fictitiously, though the demand is real, either to hurt any person, or to get the opinion of the court. Coxe v. Phillips, Hardv. 237, 239.—See further title Attachment; and 4 Comm 263.

Contempts against the King's prerogative; are by refusing to assist him for the good of the publick, either in his councils, by advice, if called upon; or in his wars, by personal service, for defence of the realm, against a rebellion or invasion. 1 Harw. P. C. c. 22.

P p

Under

CONTEMPT.

Under this class may be ranked the neglecting to join the passé comitatus, or power of the county, being thereunto required by the sheriff or justices according to the Stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 8; (see title Riots;) which is a duty incumbent upon all that are 15 years of age, under the degree of nobility and able to travel Lamb. Eliz. 315.

Contempts against the prerogative may also be by preferring the interests of a foreign potentate to those of our own; or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence, in favour of such extrinsic power; as by taking a penſion from any foreign prince without the consent of the King. 3 Inst. 144.—Or by disobeying the king's lawful commands; whether by writs issuing out of his courts of justice, or by a summons to attend his privy council; or by letters from the king to a subject, commanding him to return from beyond the sea; (for disobedience to which his lands shall be seized till he doth return, and himself afterwards punished;) or by his writ of ne exeat regno or proclamation commanding the subject to stay at home.

Disobedience to any of these commands is a high imprisonment and contempt; and so, lastly, is disobedience to any act of parliament, where no particular penalty is assigned; for then it is punishable, like the rest of these contempts, by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the King's Courts of justice. 4 Comm. 122: See also 1 Harok. P. C. c. 22, 23, 24: 'And this Dict. titles Oaths, King.

CONTENEMENT, contenementum.] Is said to signify a man's countenance or credit, which he hath together with, and by reason of, his freehold: in which sense, it is used in the Stat. of 1 Ed. 3. and other statutes: and Spelman in his Glossary says, contenementum est aſſimulatio et conditio forma, qua quis in repub. ſuſſiſtit. But contenement is more properly that, which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeable to their several qualities, or states of life. See Magna Charta, c. 14: and Glanvil. lib. 9. c. 8. and this Dict. tit. Disſeſs.

CONTINGENT LEGACY, See title Legacy.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER, Contingent or executory remainders (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 3 Rep. 20: 2 Comm. 169: And see 10 Rep. 85: See this Dict. titles Estate, Limitation, Remainder; and also title Executory Devise.

CONTINGENT USE, Is a use limited in a conveyance of land, which may or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such use: a use in contingency is such which by possibility may happen in possession, reversion or remainder. 1 Rep. 121.

CONTINUAL CLAIM, See title Claim.

CONTINUANCE, Is the continuing of a cause in court, by an entry upon the records there for that purpose. There is a continuance of the assise, &c. And continuance of a writ or action is from one term to another, in case where the sheriff hath not returned a former writ, issued out in the said action. Kitch. 262. Continuances and cessions are amendable upon the roll, at any time before judgment: they are the acts of the court, and at Common law they may amend their own acts before judgment, though in another term; but their judgments are only amendable in the same term wherein they are given. 3 Lev. 431. Upon an Original, a term or two or three terms may be mesne between the teste and the return; and this shall be a good continuance; for the defendant is not at any prejudice by it, and the plaintiff may give a day to the defendant beyond the common day, if he will.

But a continuance by capias ought to be made from term to term, and there cannot be any mesne term, because the defendant ought not to stay so long in prison. 2 Danv. Abr. 150. If a man recover upon demurrer, or by default, &c. and a writ of inquiry of damages is awarded, there ought to be continuances between the first and second judgment, otherwise it will be a discontinuance; for the first is but an award, and not compleat, till the second judgment, upon the return of the writ of inquiry of damages. Ibid. 153. If the plaintiff be nonsuit, by which the defendant is to recover costs; if the plaintiff will not enter his continuances, on purpose to save the costs, the defendant shall be suffered to enter them. Co. Jac. 316, 317. The course of the Court of King's Bench is to enter no continuance upon the roll, till after issue or demurrer, and then to enter the continuance of all upon the back, before judgment: and if it is not entered, it is error. Trin. 16 Jac. B. R. Vide titles Discontinuance, Process.

CONTINUANDO, A word used in a special declaration of trespass, when the plaintiff would recover damages for several trespasses in the same action: and to avoid multiplicity of suits, a man may in one action of trespass recover damages for many trespasses, laying the first to be done with a continuo is to the whole time, in which the rest of the trespasses were done; which is in this form, Continuando (by continuing the trespass aforesaid, &c. from the day aforesaid, &c.) until such a day, including the last trespass. Terms de Lay.

In trespass with a continuo of divers things, though of some of these things there could be no continuo, yet it shall be good for those things for which the continuo could be, and not for the others: but if the continuo had been particularly of such things whereof a continuo could not be, then it had been nought. 3 Lev. 94. Every day's trespass is said to be a several trespass; tho' a continuo may not be of men's continuing a trespass day and night, for some time together; for mankind must take some rest: where cattle do trespass upon ground, they are continually trespassing night and day, and therefore the continuo in that case is good. 1 Lill. Abr. 307. Trespass for breaking an house with a continuo, is good; and until a re-entry is made, the continuation of the possession, is a continuing of the trespass. Lutw. 1342. See title Trespass.

CONTRABAND GOODS, From contra, and the Ital. banda, an edict or proclamation.] Are those which are prohibited by act of parliament, or the King's proclamation to be imported into, or exported out of this into any other nation. See titles Navigation-Acts: Customs.

CONTRACCAUSATOR, A criminal, or one prosecuted for a crime: this word is mentioned in Leg. H. 1. cap. 61.

CONTRACT, contractus.] A covenant or agreement between two or more persons, with a lawful consideration or cause, West. Symb. part 1. As if a man sells his horse or other thing to another, for a sum of money; or covenants in consideration of 20*l.* to make him a lease of a farm, &c. these are good contracts, because there is a quid pro quo, or one thing for another: but if a person make promise to me, that I shall have 20*s.* and that he will be debtor to me therefore, and after I demand the 20*s.* and he will not give it me, yet I shall never have any action to recover this 20*s.* because this promise was no contract, but a bare promise, or nudum pactum; though if any thing were given for the 20*s.* it it were but to the value of a penny, then it had been a good contract. See title Confidation.

Every contract doth imply in itself an assumpsit in law, to perform the same; for a contract would be to no purpose, if there were no means to enforce the performance thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 308. Where an action is brought upon a contract, and the plaintiff mistakes the sum agreed upon, he will fail in his action: but if he brings his action on the promise in law, which arises from the debt, there, although he mistakes the sum, he shall recover. Alley 29. See titles Action, Assumpsit.

There is a diversity where a day of payment is limited on a contract, and where not; for where it is limited, the contract is good presently, and an action lies upon it, without payment. but in the other not: If a man buys 20 yards of cloth, &c. the contract is void, if he do not pay the money presently; but if day of payment be given, there the one may have an action for the money, and the other trower for the cloth. Dyer 30, 293. Where a seller says to a buyer, he will sell his horse for so much, and the buyer says he will give it; if he presently tell out the money it is a contract; but if he do not, it is no contract. Nov's Mtr 87: Hob 41. The property of any thing sold is in the buyer immediately by the contract; though regularly it must be delivered to the buyer, before the seller can bring his action for the money. Nov 88. If one contract to buy a horse or other thing of me, and no money is paid, or earnest given, nor day set for payment thereof, nor the thing delivered; in these cases, no action will lie for the money, or the thing sold, but it may be sold to another. Plowd. 128, 309.

All contracts are to be certain, perfect and compleat: For an agreement to give so much for a thing as it shall be reasonably worth, is void for uncertainty; so a promise to pay money in a short time, &c. or to give so much, if he likes the thing when he sees it. Dyer 91: 1 Bull 192. But if I contract with another to give him 10*l.* for such a thing, if I like it on seeing the same, this bargain is said to be perfect at my pleasure: though I may not take the thing before I have paid the money; if I do, the seller may have trespass against me; and if he sell it to another, I may bring an action on the case against him. Nov 104. If a contract be to have for cattle sold 10*l.* if the buyer do a certain thing, or else to have 20*l.* it is a good contract, and certain enough. And if I agree with a person to give him so much for his horse, as J. S. shall judge him worth, when he hath judged it, the contract is compleat, and an action will lie on it; and the buyer shall have a reasonable time to demand the judgment of J. S. But if he dies before the judgment is given, the contract is determined. Perk. Just. 112, 114: Shep. Abr 294.

In contracts, the time is to be regarded, in and from which the contract is made: the words shall be taken in the common and usual sense, as they are taken in that place where spoken; and the law doth not so much look upon the form of words, as on the substance and mind of the parties therein. 5 Rep. 83: 1 Bull. 175. A contract for goods may be made as well by word of mouth, as by deed in writing; and where it is in writing only, not sealed and delivered, it is all one as by word. But if the contract be by writing sealed and delivered, and is turned into a deed, then it is of another nature; and in this case generally the action on the verbal contract is gone, and some other action lies for breach thereof. Plowd. 130, 309: Dyer 90.

Contracts, not to be performed in a year, are to be in writing, signed by the party, &c. or no action may be brought on them: but if no day is set, or the time is uncertain, they may be good without it. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. And by the same statute, no contract for the sale of goods for 10*l.* or upwards, shall be good, unless the buyer receive part of the goods sold; or give something in earnest to bind the contract; or some note thereof be made in writing, signed by the person charged with the contract, &c. See title Frauds; Agreement III, IV.

If two persons come to a draper, and one says, let this man have so much cloth, and I will pay you; there the sale is to the undertaker only, though the delivery is to another by his appointment: but if a contract be made with A. B. and the vendor scruples to let the goods go without money, and C. D. comes to him and desires him to let A. B. have the goods, and undertakes that he shall pay him for them, that will be a promise within the statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3, and ought to be in writing. Mod. Caf. 249.

A contract made and entered into upon good consideration, may for good considerations be dissolved. See Agreement and Sale. As to Usurious Contracts, See title Usury.

CONTRAFACCTION, contrafactio.] A counterfeiting; contrafactio sigilli regis, a counterfeiting the King's seal Blount.

CONTRA FORMAM COLLATIONIS, A writ that lay where a man had given lands in perpetual alms, to any late houses of religion, as to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of any hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, &c. If they aliened the land, to the disherison of the house and church, then the donor or his heirs, should bring this writ to recover the lands. It was had against the abbot or his successor; not against the alienee, though he were tenant of the land: and was founded upon the statute of Westm. 2. c. 1: Reg. Orig. 238: F. N. B. 210.

CONTRA FORMAM FIOFFAMENTI, A writ that lay for the heir of a tenant enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who was afterwards distrained for more services than were mentioned in the charter. Reg. Orig. 176: Old Nat. Br. 162.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.] The usual conclusion of every indictment, &c. laid on an offence created by statute.

It one statute be relative to another, as where the former makes the offence, the latter adds a penalty, the indictment ought to conclude contra formam statutorum. 2 Hale's Pl. C. 1, 3, c. p. 24.

Where there are several statutes, and it does not appear on which the information is founded, the concluding contra formam statuti is ill. Cro. Jac. 142. pl. 19. Broughton v. Moor, cited as adjudged in Talbot & al'. Where one act makes the offence, and another gives the penalty, an information must be contra formam statutorum; in the case of Talbot and Sheldon, indicted for recusancy contra formam statuti, 23 Eliz. c. 1. and the judgment reversed because the penalty was demanded; for the 10 Eliz. made the offence, and the 23d gave the penalty: but, if the information had been for the offence only, it had been good; per Coke. Ow. 135. Trin 9 Jac See 5 Vin. Abr. 552, 556.—See further titles Statuti, Indictment.

CONTRAMANDATIO PLACITI, A respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer; or a countermand of what was formerly ordered. Leg. H. 1. c. 59.

CONTRAMANDATUM, Is said to be a lawful excuse which the defendant in a suit by attorney alledgeth for himself, to shew that the plaintiff hath no cause of complaint. Blount.

CONTRAPOSITIO, A plea or answer. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 34.

CONTRARIENTS, In the reign of King Edw. 2. Thomas Earl of Lancaster taking part with the Barons against the King, it was not thought fit, in respect of their great power, to call them rebels or traitors, but contrarients: and hence we have a record of those times, called Rotulum Contrariantium.

CONTRATENERE, To with-hold. Si quis decimas contrateneat. Leg. Alfredi apud Brompton, c. 9.

CONTRIBULES, contribuales, kindred or cousins. Lamb. p. 75.

CONTRIBUTION, contributio.] Is where every one pays his share, or contributes his part to any thing. One parcener shall have contribution against another; one ben have contribution against another ben, in equal degree: and one purchaser shall have contribution against another. Also consors in a statute shall be equally charged, and not one of them solely extended. 3 Rep. 12, 13, &c. On a statute or recognisance, there is a contribution and stay till the full age of the heir, &c. and this doth extend to the lessee for life or years, of the consor, who has part of the land liable, and the heir within age the residue; for the land of every one of them ought to be charged equally, because the whole is liable to the judgment; and this cannot be, if during the nonage, the burden shall fall upon one only. Jenk. Cent. 36. If lands are mortgaged, and then devised to one person for life, with remainder to another; both devisees shall make contribution to payment of the mortgage-money. Chan. Caf. 224, 271.—See title Mortgage.

Where goods are cast into the sea, for the safe-guard of a ship, or other goods, &c. aboard in a tempest; there is a contribution among merchants, towards the loss of the owners. See title Insurance. And where a robbery is committed on the highway, and damages are recovered against one or a few persons, in an action against the bundred, the rest of the inhabitants shall make contribution to the same. 27 Eliz. c. 13. See title Robbery.

CONTRIBUTIO FACIENDA, A writ that lieth where there are tenants in common, that are bound to do one thing, and one is put to the whole burden; as where they jointly hold a mill pro indiviso, and take the profits equally, and the mill falling into decay, one of them will not repair the mill; now the other shall have a writ to compel him to contribute to the reparations. And if there be three coparceners of land, that owe suit to the lord's court, and the eldest performs the whole; then may she have this writ to compel the other to make their contribution. So where one suit is required for land, and that land being sold to divers persons, suit is demanded of them all, or some of them by distress, as entirely as if all the land were still in one. Reg. Orig. 175: F. N. B. 162.
